On Duty received recently a postal card from a worker who had been detailed for a very important and difficult trip. Said postal contained but ten lines, and yet in it this ready-witted worker had stated the situation, presented some difficulties that had come up, explained how they had been adjusted, told her plan, and closed with these words: "Will keep you informed of all my movements." It was so good to find so much put into small space, clearly said and soon over, that involuntarily I wrote across the top of her communication "the blessed postal card." It is important that leaders should hear often from all parts of the field, but I verily believe that if we could have more of our questions and answers by postal card it would not only save much of money outgo, but what is far more important, it would utilize that precious diamond dust called "time" to far better purpose, and conserve the energies of those who write and those who read.

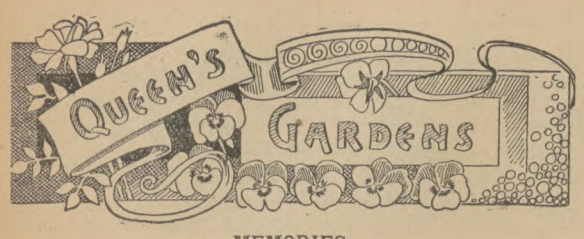
***

Miss M. S. Hill, president of the Friday Club, 628 Dearborn Ave., Chicago, has thought out a happy method of helping to build "The Children's Home" at the Worlds' Fair. It is to be a beautiful rendezvous for the little folks, a place where they can have a happy time and be entertained and instructed, and where the smallest can be taken care of while their parents and guardians view the wonders of the great show. Women are expected to collect the money with which this building is to be erected, and Miss Hill and her club are engaged in securing from distinguished men and women the world over, the contribution of autograph sentiments dedicated to little children. These are to be printed in fac simile, and bound in artistic form, copies to be sold for the benefit of the Children's Home. Miss Hill asks "for a phrase, a paragraph, even a line; a sketch, be it ever so small, a dash of the pencil or brush, some thoughts in music, if only a few chords."

***

In a private letter to friends, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, from whom every white-ribboner is always glad to hear, writes in her usual off-hand way, making most interesting points, which I venture to quote: "We are always having a very busy time. This mighty London is like a great maelstrom that sucks one in and hurls one around in a steadily increasing circle of work or pleasure, whichever one prefers. There does not seem to be an hour in the day when there is not something most important or most interesting to be done, and as to meetings, the very air seems impregnated with them and every home seems open to them. Drawing room meetings are held in the interest of every conceivable object, and cards of invitations to us flow in like a stream that never runs dry. As a result of this, I have been constantly occupied in the meetings of others when I was not having meetings of my own. I can hardly believe that I have permitted myself to speak so often, but it is very difficult to resist the urgent entreaties and the plausible reasonings that make each 'opening,' seem to be the one above all others on which one ought to enter. I shall not, however, bore you with accounts of my meetings; suffice it to say that I am just the same as ever and have the same old story to tell. I give temperance talks by the way, in order to help on the reform that seems to me one of the most urgent and vital of our age, but what I love to do, and what I consider my special work is to try and get people to know God. I love to think that this was my dear father's constant exhortation. Over and over again he would say, 'Hannah, if thy preaching does not bring people to an acquaintance with God it will not amount to a row of pins.' I am sure his constant reiteration of this counsel has had a great deal to do with my feeling, for, to my mind, the central verse of the holy Bible is this: 'Acquaint now thyself with Him and be at peace.' 'This is life eternal to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent.'"

On Duty.



MEMORIES.

BY AMBER.

Before me lies an old book, engraved in gilt letters, "Leaves of Affection." The binding is frayed, the leaves somewhat dog-eared, and the general appearance of the volume indicates a rough passage. It is a school-girl's autograph collection, and the dates run back into the sixties. Nearly thirty years ago the owner of this little volume wrote in the stiff, round hand so much in vogue with the past generation the following pretty sentiment on the fly-leaf of what was then a brave, new book:

"'Twill be sweet in after years
When my eyes are filled with tears,
When my weary heart is sore
With the woes of life's grim war,
And my heavy spirits seek Solitude to think and weep,
'Twill be sweet indeed for me
Then to soothe my misery
By the words herein engraved
And the dear names here displayed."

The girl was very young when she wrote these lines, and if I remember rightly had not attained the dignity of her first long dress. Her flaxen hair was worn in a braid, and the bread and butter marks outnumbered the tear stains on her jolly round face. As she read the lines over to the admiring friends of the long-ago time, how they laughed together in their sleeves at thought of any after years that should fill her eyes with tears, of any sore heart for her, precipitated by hand-to-hand conflict in life's "grim war."

But the years have fled away as years have had the fashion of flying ever since Father Time set his autograph to the calendar; and yesterday in overlooking an old trunk away out in a peculiarly ill-kept wood shed, a gaunt middle aged woman, with hair strained tight off her battle-scarred face, ran across this book, and sat right down upon an overturned rag bag and wept aloud at the memories that came to life with each faded leaf's turning.

"Tears?" I should think there had been tears, whole rivers of them, shed for sorrows that have darkened the air like crow's pinions. "Grim war?" So much of it that from the crown of her head to the toe of her foot she is scarred like a honey-comb, and yet, so far, she has run up no flag of truce nor called for any quarter.

Let me see; the first name recorded brings back from the past pretty Miss Amy Sewall, the dear little teacher who used to pray with the bad girls instead of scold them, and for whom any one of us would have laid down our lives to save from sorrow.

"God forbid," writes she, "that you, dear child, be found at last outside the great garner into which angels shall shout the 'Harvest Home.'"

A moment's pause for thought, as this faded leaf flutters through my fingers, is insufficient to decide the question as to whether the "dear child" is inside or outside the harvest car at the present writing. Perhaps her chances will fall among the gleanings which some belated harvester shall scurry up with a rake, and pitch in with the harvest after nightfall.

Here is the name of Joe Colburn. How I wish her eyes might fall upon the words I write to-night, so that she could send me a message back from the land of silence whither she drifted so long ago. The merriest madcap girl that ever sparkled a black eye beneath silken lashes or turned an ankle in a romping race. Whether she be dead or alive, I know not, but even heaven will be a cheerier place to tarry in with bright spirit as an angel comrade.

And here is jolly Hannah's faded mark. I wonder if in the corner of the world whither fate drifted her, as the current of a river floats a leaf to strand it on a stone, she ever thinks of the days when her blithe laugh rang through the old dormitory halls.

Hannah was a darling, and could I see her to-night, standing before me in the pink satin bonnet that she used to wear on top of her bright brown hair, I would cheerfully forfeit one hundred dollars of the fortune that time is bringing me in his belated boat.

"It is a glorious thing to resist temptation, but a safe thing to avoid it," wrote Hiram himself, the father confessor and head of us all. The old man has been in his grave this many a year, but if reports be true, the latter part of his life was devoted to neither resisting nor avoiding temptation.

Here is the autograph of Lottie Lathrop. I can hardly decipher the words, but I think the sentiment of her verse, like all the rest, breathes pure and undying affection. How Lottie used to sing when she took the tenor in the song, "There'll be no more sorrow there," just at the time for evening prayers, when the big school room was dim with shadows, and the autumn winds were harping an accompaniment in the branches of the pines that made somber the seminary grounds. It used to seem to me as though heaven was only a stone's throw away, and I would lean my head on my desk and cry to be there. Poor Lottie married early, and died young with a broken heart. Her husband put her happiness and his own pride, with both their fortunes, into a whisky glass and drained the contents. He went to prison for forgery and she to her grave.

"Jennie Burr" is the next name recorded. She was another singer, and that is all I can remember of her, excepting a figure like a willow bough, and a pair of gentle eyes that rarely smiled.

And "Little Mollie"—I think the child meant it when she wrote, "My darling, I have loved you from the first, and shall love you always"; but love with some gentle little people is like the flavor of molasses candy, sweet while it lasts, but soon forgotten.

"Work on earth and rest in heaven," wrote sweet Flavia Capin. Well, I have fulfilled the first part of the injunction, Flavia dear, and am waiting for the last.

Ah, well! one cannot sit forever on an overturned rag bag and weep over the days that are no more. So the woman closed the old book tenderly and took up the threads again, to weave the stern realities of a prosaic present. But God blessed these memories to her, and a glimmer of the sunshine of those earlier days had lfet its radiance on her care-worn brow.

COLORADO.

CONVENTION ECHOES.

The thriving village of Rocky Ford, that was but one vast plain five years ago, now numbers nearly 1,000 inhabitants, who opened their hearts and homes for the entertainment of the state convention, September 16 to 19. Places of larger growth would have hesitated to care for the fifty-six delegates, besides many visitors. The session, too, was of unusual length, taking in the Sabbath, for the first time in the history of Colorado.

Our president, Mrs. Eva Higgins, exercised the same gentleness and equipoise of nature that has characterized her entire administration, and "her countenance is made beautiful by the soul's shining through it."

The convention opened with devotional exercises, and the first business was the appointment of the several committees, viz., credentials, on constitution, resolutions, plan of work and presentation of the prize banners.

The treasurer's report showed the total receipts to be $1,591.70, the total expenses, $1,399.20, leaving a balance; but there is an indebtedness that will be canceled by the unions pledging a certain amount per member.

There are seventy unions, numbering 1,100 members in the state, and in the corresponding secretary's report it was stated that the Denver Central W. C. T. U. has the largest local membership (124) and has paid into the state treasury $106.50, carrying on fourteen departments of work.

A drinking fountain has been erected by the North Denver union, in memory of Mrs. Mary F. Shields, Colorado's first president, at a cost of $160.

There was some sacrifice made on the part of this union to accomplish this, pro bono publico, as they are small in number. May they remember it is said in Holy Writ, "Surely blessing I will bless thee," and never falter or shrink from any present duty. At Rocky Ford a union was organized but one short year ago, and now numbers sixty-five members, and the sum of $305 has been raised.

A most promising Loyal Temperance Legion is there that is doing nobly, commencing with thirty-eight members who have increased to sixty five, under the leadership of Mrs. Irvine. There are three grades, the Kindergarten, Juvenile and Senior, the eldest members ranging from fifteen to eighteen years of age. They conduct the flower mission, and sixteen graduates received a diploma for perfection in the temperance lessons. A committee was appointed to procure a hand painted banner to be presented to this Legion, as they justly deserve the prize, and bear the honors for this year. At the evening meetings of the convention the delightful music rendered by these youthful workers was one of the attractive features and greatly enjoyed by all.

The Legion at Bessemer, organized with sixty members, now numbers one hundred; six companies formed; fifty-one meetings held. They have given five entertainments, and have fifty-two dollars in the treasury. A public fountain was placed in a suitable location and dedicated with appropriate ceremonies.

There are two woman's exchanges in the state, at Pueblo and Denver. The former, a new enterprise that has paid $2,000 to its consignors and served one hundred meals each day, so that it is on a paying basis. In Denver a business of $53,000 was transacted during the year. The week of the Triennial Conclave of the Knights Templar in August was one of rich benefit, as 10,000 visitors were served at that time, reflecting credit upon the management. Boulder W. C. T. U. has pledged $100 to the Temple as their tablet, and they are in a flourishing condition.

Reports were heard from local unions, the districts and counties and superintendents, but space forbids special mention; yet all

"Sow with a generous hand and Pause not for toil or pain."

It was decided to place two tablets in the Temple to be named for Mrs. Eva Higgins, the present president, and Mrs. C. D. H. Thompson, former president of Colorado. One hundred dollars has been sent by the treasurer for the state tablet. A model mothers' meeting was conducted by Mrs. E. K. Reynolds, of Pueblo, who touched upon the points of training of children, hygiene and heredity. The absence of Mrs. Mary Jewett Telford, long identified with the temperance work, who is detained by illness in the East, was much regretted, and the corresponding secretary was instructed to convey the sympathy of the convention and hopes for a speedy restoration to health. The state paper, The Bulletin, was presented by the editor, Miss Winifred Spaulding, and an edition of 1,400 has been issued during the year. The assessment of twenty-five cents per member was continued for its support.

The annual address of the president was forcible and logical for prohibition. She has spoken before 127 audiences in different parts of the state. More money has been raised than ever before by the local unions, and over 500 subscriptions to The Union Signal. Longmont, Montrose and Leadville possess their own headquarters, realizing,

"Be it ever so humble,
There's no place like home."

Several of the National lecturers have visited the state: Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, Miss Ida Clothier, and Mrs. Maud Green. Mrs. Woodbridge gave twenty-three addresses, Rev. Henrietta Moore has delivered sixteen, and Dr. Mary Allen twelve, while Mrs. Clara Hoffman added zest to the convention by her timely suggestions and wise counsels. Her first address on "The Model Woman," was to the point, and well received. She also spoke at the fair grounds on Sunday afternoon on "The Dominant Issue."

Memorial services were held for Madam Willard on Sunday evening, that were impressive and affecting, the program being prepared by a committee, of which Mrs. Wallace, of Boulder, was chairman. The ministers of the various churches were present, and gave greeting as well as aided by their presence during the session. Addresses of welcome were given by Mr. Kellogg in the absence of the mayor, and by the pastor of the Presbyterian church, Rev. A. D. Mayo, and for the W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Clara Green, of Rocky Ford. The Loyal Temperance Legion added an appropriate song of welcome, and responses were given by the presidents of the Northern and Southern districts. The Cottage Home in Denver for unfortunates has admitted sixty-two girls. The receipts were $1,911.23; expenses, $1,863.19, and the cash balance, $48.04.

The election of officers for Colorado, resulted in the reelection of all, viz.: President, Mrs. Eva Higgins, of La Veta; vice-president, Mrs. M. E. Brazee; corresponding secretary, Miss Winifred Spaulding; recording secretary; Mrs. Ella Gittings; treasurer, Mrs. C. M. Shapleigh.

The following were chosen delegates to the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Denver: Mrs. S. M. W. Likens, Denver, alternate; Mrs. J. H. Furness, Boulder; Mrs. J. S. Sperry, Pueblo; alternate, Mrs. Fairbanks, Montrose; Mrs. Pickett, alternate, Mrs. T. M. Wallace, Boulder.

The annual sermon was by Mrs. A. A. Cameron, of Denver, on "The Relation of the Church to Temperance," and it was very helpful.

Mrs. Maud Green and Miss Ida Clothier were present on Sunday, and gave addresses in the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. The prize banners were awarded to the W at Loveland, and the Y at Longmont.

The pleasurable duty of contributing each month to The Union Signal as well as other demands that pertain to the press department accorded by vote of the convention is begun with the prayer,

"No idler let me be,
But in thy service heart and hand employ,
Prepared to do thy bidding cheerfully—
Be this my highest and my holiest joy."

Sarah Lee Teetor,
State Reporter, Denver.

MAINE.

THE STATE ELECTION.

Our biennial state election has just been held, and our "men people" are drawing a few long breaths before continuing preparations for November 8. This election derives special interest from the fact that it was our first trial of the Australian ballot system. It seems to have given such general satisfaction that it is quite amusing to read in a New York paper that it worked so badly here that measures are already being taken for its repeal. The amendment to the constitution requiring that future voters shall be able to read and write, received a much lighter vote than it deserved, but carried. Five parties were in the field, Prohibition, Republican, Democratic, People's and Union Labor; and yet there were many stay-at-homes. For instance, according to the Lewiston Journal, four hundred registered Republicans failed to put in an appearance at the polls in that city. Whether they were uneasy in their consciences, or were in a state of transition, is not for the feminine mind to decide. According to the Kennebec Journal (Republican) the prohibition vote of Maine increased about twenty-five per cent.

One of the most exciting contests was over the reëlection of Sheriff Cram who, though originally elected by the Cumberland county Republicans, has faithfully and impartially enforced the prohibitory law throughout the county and notably in Portland, which—though under control of the same party—had, previous to his election, become a disgrace to the state. Thus the theory that "prohibition cannot be enforced in large cities, and if it is, the officer cannot be elected," is completely exploded. I am sorry to admit, however, that Sheriff Cram's majority was not as large as it ought to have been; was, indeed, much smaller than that of the other Republican candidates in the county, indicating that several hundred rum-sympathizers in his party had bolted. But the plucky sheriff was prepared for that; in a letter to Mrs. Stevens shortly before election he declared that he would rather be defeated by their opposition than elected by their votes. In fact, it was the Prohibition party vote which saved him from defeat, for the Prohibitionists nominated no rival candidate for sheriff, giving him their entire strength and the influence of their state paper, The Portland Herald. In this instance they feel that they have fallen into no trap, for he has not only promised well but has actually done well. The white-ribboners of the county lent their influence, extended their good will, and offered their prayers for Sheriff Cram, yet strangely enough, have not been called "partisan." How different some things are from others!

The next governor and a majority of the legislature will be Republican. The Prohibition party made large gains, many prominent Democrats and Republicans having come to them since two years ago. The friends and admirers of Gen. Neal Dow will be interested to know that the first vote in ward six, Portland, under the new ballot law, was cast by him. It is hardly necessary to add that it was a Prohibition party vote. Your correspondent had the pleasure of hearing Gen. Dow speak a few weeks ago at a Sunday evening meeting arranged by the Lewiston Good Templars, and he is now booked for the Dominion Alliance convention in Montreal.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

The state union occupied a day at the Fryburg Chautauqua and the Free Baptist meetings at Ocean Park, and South China W. C. T. U. at the camp ground there. We have received a very valuable accession in the person of Mrs. Emeline Burlingame Cheney, formerly president of Rhode Island W. C. T. U. and editor of the Outlook, who recently became the wife of Rev. Dr. Cheney, president of Bates College. Mrs. Cheney has lost nothing of her old-time temperance zeal and we are more than glad to welcome her into our state sisterhood. She was one of the speakers at Ocean Park and South China.

The department of peace and arbitration is gradually gaining a firmer hold upon the minds of the people. New superintendents are constantly being voluntarily appointed by the local unions. We occasionally hear of a sermon preached or of a graduating essay written without invitation upon the subject. The World's and National superintendent of this department, Mrs. H. J. Bailey, resides in Maine, and can thus assist the state superintendent in many ways. A protest by one in our National department has recently been sent to the chairman of a board of education of one of our cities where the girls of the high school had petitioned for a military organization authorized by the school board. Their request was not granted. Whether or no the protest had anything to do with the refusal we cannot tell.

Temperance work at fairs is just now absorbing the minds of many of our most enterprising unions. For six years the Lewiston and Auburn unions have conducted restaurants on the state fair grounds where they not only exert an influence for morality and distribute literature, but greatly improve the state of their treasuries. This year the Auburn union employed a young man who has been addicted to drink but is now trying to lead a different life. He says it is the first state fair week for years that he has not been drunk if out of jail. At the close of this fair he told the ladies that he could say he had not tasted liquor. Last Fourth of July the same man offered his services at a lawn party held by the union at the court house. He said it was the only place where he felt sure of being safe from temptation. So, dear sisters, we see how much we may do, if we only will, to make our great holidays more holy days.

The Cherryfield union, too, has a fine building on their county fair ground where a district conference was lately held. In the morning Miss Margaret Hunter, who last May gave a greatly praised memorial address, superintended the raising of a flag. A hearty Chautauqua salute was given as the hand of an L. T. L. boy guided it into place.

Many new unions have been formed since last state convention, and our New England sisters would do well to look to their laurels if they are unwilling that the prize banner should be captured by Maine a third time.

MARY L. FRENCH,
State Reporter, Auburn.

MISSOURI.

FAITHFUL WORKERS.

"New occasions teach new duties,
Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward,
Who would keep abreast of truth."

During the past month your Missouri reporter has had the pleasure of visiting many Minnesota homes where the white ribbon and the great cause for "God and home and humanity" reigned supreme. Many words of praise were spoken of our beloved president, Mrs. Hoffman, by leading workers in Minnesota who heard her lecture there the past summer.

Warren county held a most interesting county convention in Hickory Grove. Mrs. Millie M. Lewis lectured to a crowded house at night. Visitors were present from three counties. A gold medal contest was held, the medal being awarded to Stephen Woodhull, who expects to be one of the contestants for the grand gold medal at the state convention in Springfield.

Mary Clement Leavitt addressed large audiences at Columbia and Centralia.

Miss E. P. Babb hopes to visit every union in the district before our state convention, and is energetically at work.

Butler has a band of faithful workers. They have boxes for literature kept well filled in various public places in the city and a committee on evangelistic work, who hold Sabbath afternoon prayer meetings with families who do not attend church. They go from house to house reading the Scripture and asking these people to live for Christ. They visit the jail and talk and pray with the inmates. At the teachers' normal a petition was circulated among those attending, asking them to pledge themselves to teach in every possible way the evil effects of alcoholic liquors and narcotics on the human system, mentally, morally and physically. This petition was signed by most of the teachers present. Let other counties do likewise.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter has just completed a successful month's work in the third district. She gave twenty five meetings. Promising Y's were organized at Grant City and at West Kidder. Many new members were added to old unions.

The second district held their seventh annual convention and reports indicated marked progress, the membership being two hundred and seventy-five. Fifty-four dollars and eighty-eight cents were paid as state dues and forty dollars for district dues and pledges. Mrs. Alice Williams' lecture delighted the large audience that listened to her. Miss Gilbert, superintendent of the Chillicothe industrial home for girls, gave an instructive talk relating to work in the home. A medal contest was held and all pronounced this an instructive convention.

Mrs. Libbie Anthony, of Jefferson City, addressed large audiences at Poplar Bluff, Charleston, Jackson and Cape Girardeau, organizing colored unions at the three latter places, and created temperance sentiment wherever she spoke.

Charleston, Dexter, and Poplar Bluff were honored by visits from our round-the-world missionary, Mrs. Leavitt. Large audiences greeted her at each place. At Dexter a reception was given her at the home of Mrs. Lou W. Carter on the afternoon of Mrs. Leavitt's arrival. Fifty ladies were present whom Mrs. Leavitt addressed on "The Condition of Women in Foreign Lands." Light refreshments were served and nine new members were added to the union.

Mrs. Sallie Langston, president of Howell county, has lately organized a union in a county settlement called Valley Church. She is an energetic worker.

The Thayer Y served refreshments afternoon and evening at a political picnic. At night they had a social in a beautifully decorated hall, which was enjoyed by all present. The success of this union is largely due to their energetic president, Miss Mamie Owen.

Dexter recently held a national tea at the opera house. The decorations were beautiful and appropriate. Music was furnished by the L. T. L. and refreshments were served in a dainty manner.

Silver medal contests have been held at Charleston, Poplar Bluff and Jackson with great success.

Newton county W. C. T. U. convention was indeed one of interest. Able papers were read and discussed with a great deal of enthusiasm. Excellent music was furnished. Lunch was served in the church parlors to the delegates and visitors and was enjoyed by all. The Good Templars assisted in the welcome address, and this city is enjoying a steady growing temperance sentiment. At Bolivar the L. T. L., under the able leadership of Mrs. Emma Affleck, gave an entertainment called "The Fairy Folks' Harvest Home," to a full house. The mite boxes were opened at the close of the entertainment and found to contain eight dollars and fifty-four cents. The owner of the box containing the largest amount was presented with a silver model of the Temple.

Bonne Terre has just held her annual meeting and a review of all the work done the past year was reported by the various workers. The small shreds were here put together and made into a complete whole. Nine departments are successfully carried on. The total receipts were $201.46, total expenditure $183.89. Forty-eight mite-boxes are being filled, over 9,000 pages of literature have been distributed, and many subscribers secured for our temperance papers. The total enrollment in the L. T. L. is 205. Six churches use unfermented wine. Under the head of parlor work many enjoyable entertainments have been held. The social purity work showed four mothers' meetings and much literature distributed. One column has been kept filled in the Bonne Terre Register. And thus, "In His Name" this union has accomplished much.

MRS. MARY E. JONES,
State Reporter, Humansville.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

Monroe county union, through its "Summer Resort Committee" has for some years been considering the establishment of a summer retreat on the lake, where people could go for rest and health seeking. Now it is an accomplished fact. They have secured a lovely cottage at Windsor Beach, on the shore of Lake Ontario, and scarcely six miles from Rochester, with ample grounds and shade. They have erected a large tent for picnics and other gatherings, and some smaller tents for other purposes, while at the cottage, which has been christened "Rest Cottage"; they are receiving guests. The place is decidedly attractive and is being well patronized. The national colors are flung to the breeze, while just above them a pretty streamer announces that the place belongs to the W. C. T. U.

Their first difficulty has been to secure a competent manager, as the season was so far advanced, but who ever heard of a W. C. T. U. enterprise failing for want of a woman? The ladies of the committee, Mrs. D. D. Simmons, of Gates, and Miss S. J. Vosburgh, of Rochester, are "holding the fort" themselves, until a suitable manager can be secured, and they are doing it splendidly, though at a great sacrifice of comfort, strength, time and money.

The enterprise is heartily welcomed by cottagers, real estate owners, and the best people generally. No saloons are there to trouble or annoy, and the place is clean and pure. Mrs. Simmons is also chairman of the fair committee, and with Mrs. Davis is making arrangements for an address on W. C. T. U. day. Monroe county women may well feel that they are making some effective advances against the adversary.

Allegany county held its annual convention in the M. E. church at Rushford, and notwithstanding the heat, between sixty and seventy delegates and visitors found their way to that quiet town. The county president, Mrs. V. A. Willard, called the meeting to order, and conducted the convention in a most orderly manner. Her annual address was full of earnest words and good suggestions.

The question of how to interest mothers in mothers' meetings was discussed and proved very helpful. Excellent methods for training the children were also talked over, and an urgent appeal was made that scientific temperance instruction receive more attention in the future; also that women attend the school meetings and vote. Supper was served on the lawn of Mrs. A. M. Taylor, and proved to be a social success. In the evening, Mrs.

The second day was given to reports of departments, and election of officers, the latter resulting in the reelection of the old officers. In the evening a Demorest medal contest was held, being the fifth in this county.

SUMMER CAMPS AND ASSEMBLIES.

The school of methods held at Keuka in connection with the Assembly, was well attended throughout. White ribbon women were present from seven different counties. Mrs. M. M. Allen conducted a conference upon narcotics, after which juvenile work was presented by Mrs. Baker, of Elmira, and physical culture by Mrs. Bertha Morris Smith, of Elmira.

On W. C. T. U. day the morning was given up to school of methods, non alcoholics in medicines being first taken up. This was followed by a thoughtful and well written paper on the most effective method of conducting a W. C. T. U. in a small village. The subject of coffee houses was presented by the state superintendent, Mrs. S. W. Stoddard, and Elmira's new hotel, which was mentioned in my last letter, was talked of—also coffee houses running successfully at Binghamton, and several other places in the state. The other departments came in for a share of attention. Mrs. Lathrap, of Michigan, was present and took part in several of the discussions, and in the afternoon gave her grand lecture on "Woman and Reform." The closing subject was soldiers and sailors, and was presented by Mrs. Mary D. Ferguson, of Syracuse, state superintendent, and before dispersing, arrangements were made for W. C. T. U. work at the next assembly, Mrs. Allen boing again chosen as chairman of the committee.

W. C. T. U. day at Cuba Camp was very interesting. An elocutionary contest was held in the forenoon with prizes of ten, five, three and two dollars. In the afternoon and evening Mrs. Marion B. Baxter did her best to convince the people that prohibition by legal enactment was the hope of our country, and that woman's vote would hasten the hour when our prayers would be answered and our hopes realized.

At Ontario Outing Park, in Niagara county, an unusually fine program was carried out during the two weeks from August 3 to 16 inclusive. Each morning was devoted to a school of methods in charge of the county superintendent, Mrs. E. G. Dietrick, who conducted the meetings in a very able manner. The different departments were taken up in turn by the county superintendents, while each meeting was also made a sort of parliamentary drill, and much benefit was derived.

On W. C. T. U. day, Mrs. Emily U. Burgess gave two excellent addresses, and with music, recitation, flowers, and banners, it was a gala day. The boarding and lodging privileges, as in former years, were in the hands of the county W. C. T. U., under the leadership of the county president, Mrs. Ruth A. Frost. A new building has been erected during the year, which takes the place of the tents formerly used, and was found to be much more convenient. The first floor has a sitting room (office), a large dining hall, and a convenient kitchen, while the second floor is used for sleeping rooms, and new conveniences will be added each year, making a pleasant and comfortable place to spend two weeks during the summer.

The White-Ribbon Bulletin, official organ of Oswego county W. C. T. U., has just reached me. W. C. T. U. day was held at Dempster Camp, August 18, with Mrs. M. N. Van Benschoten as speaker in the afternoon and Miss E. U. Yates, of Maine, for the evening. W. C. T. U. day is also observed at other assemblies, but no report has been sent me.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

Through the persevering and untiring efforts of Mrs. Phebe J. Adams, of Moravia, Tompkins county is again organized and in line. A meeting was held in the First Baptist church at Ithaca for this purpose, and was largely attended. There are nine unions in the county, and seven of them were represented. A splendid set of officers was elected, and nine department superintendents appointed. A meeting of the Y's was also called, and there is a fair prospect of their re-organization. The attendance at this meeting was large during the day and greatly increased at the evening meeting, when Mrs. Adams delivered a fine address, to the pleasure and profit of all present. Mrs. Adams has recently passed through deep waters of sorrow in the death of her eldest son, but the promise, "my grace is sufficient for you" has not failed her, and even though pressed down by grief, she has bravely gone on with this work, and God has blessed her efforts. Tompkins county will now go forward with energy, and already plans for future work are being formed.

A fine Y has been organized at Candor, Tioga county, through the efforts of Miss S. E. Margetts, one of our most energetic young women, and we look for good things from this Y.

FRANCES W. GRAHAM,
State Reporter, Lockport.

EASTERN WASHINGTON.

EXECUTIVE MEETING.

In response to a call from our state president, Mrs. Amanda Strong, a quorum of the executive committee met at Oakesdale, Sept. 14. Mrs. Anna C. Singer, who was elected president at the May convention, was obliged to resign on account of continued illness. This was a source of deep regret to all W. C. T. U's throughout Eastern Washington.

In accordance with Art. IX of the state constitution, the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Amanda Strong, became president. Mrs. Strong is most heartily welcomed to this office. She is well known to our women, having been long in the temperance work and a member of the executive committee for several consecutive years. She attended one National convention besides having traveled, in doing missionary work, over most of the state. She goes out immediately to visit the unions each in turn. Much good will be accomplished by these visits.

The office of corresponding secretary being left vacant the committee elected Mrs. Jennie L. Green.

A plan for a state paper was presented and adopted.

The committee also decided to have a suffrage petition circulated.

Different lines of work were thoroughly discussed and some plans for the year adopted.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE southern assembly and W. C. T. U. school of methods has established an assembly journal, published monthly at Chattanooga, Tenn., and edited by Mrs. M. L. Wells, president. The corner-stone of a permanent assembly building, to cost $12,000 was laid in July.

MISS ELIZABETH GREENWOOD, World's and National evangelistic superintendent, will be at the Pennsylvania state convention at New Castle, Oct. 6th to 12th, and at the Delaware state convention Oct. 13th and 14th. Thus any desiring help in these vicinities can secure it if they desire.

THERE is a new matron at the Anchorage Mission in Chicago, Mrs. Kelley, formerly connected with the Illinois Industrial School. Miss Sinock, who has been so favorably known in connection with her work in the Anchorage, becomes city missionary, going out to visit those who specially need help.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition, spoke recently at Chautauqua. She made a magnificent address, as we hear on high authority, telling the people just what they wanted to know about the Woman's Dormitory and all the other women's enterprises connected with the Exposition.

REV. LOUISE S. BAKER, of Nantucket, Mass., who has a poem in these columns, was for seven years the beloved pastor of the Congregational church at Nantucket, Mass. Her presence in the pulpit crowded the pews. Mrs. Baker is also a poet and prose writer of rare merit, and for several years was president of the local W. C. T. U. and is a leading white ribboner. She is raising one hundred dollars for the Temple and was a valued ally during Mrs. Carse's recent sojourn in Nantucket.

MRS. SUSAN T. CONVERSE, of Woburn, Mass., is most worthy the patronage of our white-ribbon sisters. She is a widow and supports herself and daughter by the manufacture of the justly celebrated Alpha undergarments. Mrs. Converse is the originator of the ribbed under flannel, and also of other desirable features of union suits and waists, and makes the underwear from exact measurements, thus insuring a perfect fit. She has not forgotten the helpless infants who cannot speak of their own discomforts, and can provide them with "Alpha" clothing which will guarantee warmth, good circulation and the best development for their little bodies.

MRS. IRENE G. ADAMS, South Dakota's superintendent of legislation and petitions, issues the following pointed request to the local presidents of her state: Will each W. C. T. U. president interview the nominees for state senator, representative and state attorney, asking this question: "Will you use your influence against the re-submission of the prohibitory clause of the constitution, and in favor of its enforcement?" Men who will not pledge themselves to this are not safe administrators for the commonwealth, and temperance people should use their influence against their election; there is no time to lose in this work. Re-submission is the prime issue of the campaign in South Dakota, though many seek to ignore the fact.

MEMORIAL services for Madam Willard have been held by unions all over the land, and many more are planning to hold services in memory of the departed "Saint Courageous." The first memorial service of which a report has been received, occurred in Shoreham, Vt., which it will be remembered, is Madam Willard's native state—and was a type of those which followed. "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord" was the opening hymn, in which all joined in memory of her who loved it. The ninetieth Psalm was read, prayer was offered, and "When the mists have rolled away" was sung. Then, after a brief address, dwelling upon the high character of the absent one, the poem from which she took her motto, "It is better farther on," was read. Other hymn favorites were sung, other tributes voiced by those who knew her well, and Whittier's, "My Psalm," was read. A few, low, tender words of prayer, and the benediction closed the exercises. At the services held in the Hall of Philosophy, at Chautauqua, N. Y., the same day as the funeral services in Evanston, Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller spoke very tenderly of the blessed influence which ever emanated from Madam Willard, and Susan B. Anthony gave a sweet tribute. The resolutions of sympathy for Miss Willard were signed by representatives from twenty-two states and Canada. Other memorial services were held in Manistee, Mich., in whose Union Hall (the first temple dedicated to the W. C. T. U.) Madam Willard took a deep interest; at Danville, Vt., (Madam Willard's native town); at Lyons, Ind., using the program published in THE UNION SIGNAL; at the W. C. T. U. Industrial school, Beloit, Kan., Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting, where the topic was, "How a Christian can Die," and extracts were read from THE UNION SIGNAL memorial number; at Steuben, N. Y., where a brief and helpful sketch of Madam Willard's life was read; at Malvern, Ark., where a very complete program, arranged from the memorial UNION SIGNAL was carried out, and at many other places. Resolutions voicing the high respect and esteem in which the departed saint is held have been passed by many W. C. T. Unions.

Convention Corner.

ACCOMMODATIONS AT DENVER.

Letters are constantly coming to the entertainment committee from persons desiring to attend the convention as visitors, relative to accommodations. Many want entertainment at one dollar per day and some at four dollars per week, within walking distance of the place of meeting. As it is about impossible for one person to answer all letters of this nature that come, a general statement will have to suffice. Hotel rates have been secured and published, on convenient car lines, but usually at such distances that walking a number of times daily is out of the question, excellent places can be secured at very reasonable rates. To those wishing to secure any of the places scheduled, the better wayis to communicated directly with the places specified and the sooner the better. Within close walking distance are desirable places and prices not at all exorbitant. Where persons take rooms far out, there are excellent restaurants, some on the European plan, not far from the church. Delegates of course will be entertained free.

Hotels and hotel rates for visitors at the National W. C. T. U. Convention to be held in Denver, October 28 to November 2, and for delegates preferring hotels, are given below.

One noticeable feature of Denver is the large number of family hotels or first-class boarding houses, not devoted to the transient trade. These have been taken into consideration as well as the regular hotels within a convenient distance of Trinity M. E. Church, in which the Convention is to be held, and convenient, also, to rapid transit by cable and electric lines.

Brown's Palace, very close to the church, will furnish entertainment at $3 and $4 per day according to location of rooms. This includes meals, as the hotel is conducted on the American plan. The Palace, just completed and furnished, is probably the finest west of Chicago, and superbly located. These rates are given upon the contingency of securing not less than fifty guests.

The Albany, corner of 17th and Stout, offers most reasonable rates, considering the excellence of the hotel, its advantageous location and admirable management. Room and meals, $3 per day, two persons occupying a room, $5 per day. The Albany is a favorite place for conventions. The use of the club rooms will be donated to the executive and delegates, if the Albany is chosen as headquarters. Its distance from the church is about four blocks and the managers are noted for their attention to the comfort of guests.

The Gilsey, 18th and Stout, will furnish rooms by the week, price $4 to $6, two occupying a room will pay nothing extra. Meals, short order. The proprietress is willing to do everything possible for the guests.

The Albert, 17th, between Glenarm and Welton, and distant three blocks from the church, offers pleasant and newly furnished rooms for $1, $1.25 and $1.50 per day. An attractive café gives meals at $1 per day; no bar.

St. James Hotel, Curtis, between 15th and 16th, makes reasonable rates. Cars pass the door.

Broadway Hotel: Rooms and board, $3 per day; two occupying the same room, $2.50 each; very convenient to the church; no bar.

L'Imperial, Court Place and 14th, and other family hotels conveniently located, will make reasonable rates, conditional upon having rooms to spare.

The Woman's Christian Association furnishes rooms and board at exceedingly moderate prices.

The Woman's Exchange—auxiliary to the W. C. T. U.—is conveniently located, furnishes meals on the short order system, and is convenient to many places where rooms can be secured.

The Cooper, 1404 South 13th street, can accommodate twenty-five people, four in each room if desired, with room and board at $1.50 per day.

Curtis Block, 1518 Curtis street, guarantees first-class accommodations at low prices, with or without board. Table excellent.

Glenarm Hotel, corner 15th and Glenarm, three blocks from the church, submits a rate of $2 per day each, room and board, where two occupy a room, and $2.50 per day for one person in a room.

The Earl, Tremont near 14th; first class entertainment, about $2.25 per day.

1958 Logan Avenue. Can accommodate four persons in two rooms. Terms, $1 per day. The Gilman near by furnishes meals.

The Tyrone, 22 W. 12th Avenue, two persons in one room, $1 per day each, room and board.

The Dinsmore, 1148 Broadway, $2 per day, room and board.

Ramona, $2 per day, room and board, corner 14th Avenue and S. 14th street.

Capitol Hill Hotel, rooms $3 per week; meals at Euclid Place, directly opposite, $6 per week.

The Holland, 18th and Pennsylvania, room and board, $2 per day.

On car lines, Mrs. Kreuzer, 2445 Clarkson street, two in a room, $1.25 or $1.50 per day each, room and board.

Mrs. C. Kelsey, 1657 Humbolt street. A party willing to share rooms can be accommodated with rooms and board at $1 per day each.

No. 19, 24th Avenue, can accommodate two at $6 per week each.

2160 Downing Avenue can entertain from ten to twenty, at $1 per day for room and breakfast; 22d Avenue car.

440 South Broadway can room two ladies at 50 cents each; reasonable restaurant near by.

1270 Logan Avenue, three ladies, room 75 cents each, but no board.

432 S. Broadway, "Jefferson Block," twelve ladies, two in a room, 25 cents each per day. In same building meals furnished at 25 cents. Car line direct and convenient.

All who come can be accommodated, not perhaps at eastern prices, but the advance will be very slight, and places are selected with a view to comfort and attractiveness. Other localities are being listed as rapidly as possible and will be in the hands of the information bureau so that there will be no difficulty in finding them. The committee should know as soon as possible the number of delegates and visitors.

MRS. FRANCES BELFORD,
1323 Evans St., Denver. Cha'm. Com.

RAILROAD RATES.

After weeks and even months of effort to secure satisfactory railway rates from the various traffic associations and outside lines, I am able to make what I trust is only a progressive report, my hope being that later on even better rates may be given us. The traffic associations would allow us only the usual excursion rate—one and one-third fare. After numerous and repeated efforts to secure better rates the Chicago & Alton consented to give us one fare. The result is that the official route to Denver and return is via the Chicago & Alton and Union Pacific lines. Rates from Chicago to Denver and return, $35; from Bloomington and St. Louis to Denver and return, $32.50; and the above rates may be used as basing rates, with the understanding that if any other line or combination of lines makes or offers "officially" a less rate we are to have the benefit of the very lowest rates in effect via the official route at the time of departure.

The following lines have agreed to give "one fare" for the round trip to Chicago, Bloomington and St. Louis in connection with above rates: The Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis system; the Monon; Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton; the Ohio & Mississippi; Lake Erie & Western; Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City; Indianapolis, Decatur & Western; Cincinnati, Hocking Valley & Toledo; Queen Crescent, and others. Eastern roads will give one and one third rate to Chicago on the certificate plan.

The chances are that the rates from Chicago and St. Louis will be considerably less than those named herein.

The official train will leave Chicago, Tuesday, October 25, 1892, at six p. m. Tickets will be on sale October 20 to 25, inclusive, and good for thirty days returning. The Chicago & Alton Railroad Company deserve the patronage of all delegates, members and others. In selecting a route to Denver please see that your ticket reads via the official route from Chicago, St. Louis and Bloomington, i. e., via the Chicago & Alton and Union Pacific. The tickets should read "to Denver and return." Free chair cars will be provided. You will be able to secure as low a rate by this route as by any other. The promptness of these roads, their natural advantages, and their efforts to give and secure for us low rates, good accommodations and a pleasant excursion have made them well worthy of our patronage.

If lower rates should be secured, due notification of the fact will be made through these columns, and circulars sent direct to state officers.

MARY G. HAY,
Nat. Supt. Railway Rates.

LOCAL COMMITTEES.

The committees appointed to prepare for the National Convention at Denver, October 28 to November 2, are as follows:

General Arrangements—Mrs. M. A. Cassell.
Entertainment—Mrs. M. E. Brazee.
Church Arrangements—Mrs. A. B. Sinclair.
Bureau of Information—Mrs. Josie Bissell.
Check Room—Central Y's pages and ushers: Misses Lutie Cassell and Fannie Craise.
Post Office—Misses Wrigley and Bruce.
Telephone and Telegraph—Mrs. S. M. Likens.
Street Cars and Carriages—Mrs. Jeanette Tompkins.
Typewriters and Stenographers—Mrs. Myra Sprague.
Decorations—Mrs. Hortense Miller.
Bulletins—Mrs. Sara L. Teetor.
Press—Mrs. Ella C. Benton.
Associated and United Press—Misses Winifred Spaulding and Sophia Jefferson.
Reduced Hotel Rates—Mrs. Frances Belford.
Pulpit Supply—Mrs. Ella F. Leonard.
Music—Mrs. Carrie Hipp.
Reception Committee—Hotel: Mrs. Eva Higgins; train: Mrs. W. H. Wrigley; evening: Mrs. L. Battis.
Lunch—Mrs. M. E. Craise and Mrs. A. B. Sinclair.
Scrap Baskets—Presidents of Y's.

Official Communications.

PARLIAMENTARY USAGE.

State, district, county and local unions:—Will you please report immediately all work done in the department of Parliamentary Usage? I am convinced by the great number of letters received that more effective work has been done than during any previous year and have hoped that such a reminder as this would not be necessary. I have waited until the last moment and now earnestly urge you to make no delay in sending clear, concise reports of work for the year just closing.

A. S. BENJAMIN,
Nat. Supt. Parl. Usage.
Portland, Ionia Co., Michigan.

CONVENTION ROSTER.

October 11–14, New Jersey, Newark.
October 12–14, Delaware, Laurel.
October 13–14, Oklahoma Territory, Elreno.
October 18–20, Massachusetts, Brockton.
October 18–21, N. California, San Jose.
October 21–24, Idaho, Idaho Falls.
October 25–26, Wyoming, Laramie City.
October 28–November 2, National, Colorado, Denver.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

Publisher's Dep't.

JUST TWO DAYS.

There are just two days more in which you can send subscriptions to THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL and be sure of having the same mailed daily from Denver. A cable gram received at Headquarters states that Lady Henry Somerset will accompany Miss Willard to the Convention. It will be the most interesting western convention ever held. You must have the DAILY. Send at once—alone or in clubs.

If you cannot send before October 15 send later, and we will mail all of the DAILIES in one wrapper immediately on the return from the Convention.

Price for THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL for five days, 25c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE UNION SIGNAL'S SPECIAL FIVE DOLLAR PREMIUM.

To any person sending a new subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL who may indicate a desire to secure the advantage here offered, remitting $1 to pay for the paper, we will send a paid-up scholarship for one month's instruction in the Phillips Home Study Business College, Syracuse, N. Y., with a choice of studies in either shorthand, bookkeeping or penmanship. The instruction is suited to young people of either sex, and its special features are: Rapid advancement, thorough qualification, saving of time and money. Distance is no objection, the work being done by mail. The regular price of a month's tuition is $5 for each study taken, but by special arrangement with the Phillips College, we are enabled to make this very liberal offer, presenting a remarkable opportunity whereby any young man or woman may, without any expense whatever, secure a month's instruction at home, thereby laying the foundation for a business education which will undoubtedly lead to success in life. Every energetic young reader of THE UNION SIGNAL will at once set to work and secure the name of the subscriber required; this will be easily done, for your friends will assist you in so laudable an undertaking. The offer is limited to one month's instruction, but those desiring to continue the course after the expiration of this scholarship can make satisfactory arrangements with the college to do so.

Every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL should call the attention of young people to this offer, and all members of the W. C. T. U. who have not secured a business training should realize what a good opportunity is now offered at small cost.

The price of home instruction is $5 per month.

To repeat:

The price of THE UNION SIGNAL is $1 per year.

Send one new subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and we will send an order entitling you to one month's instruction from the Phillips Business College without extra charge.

A letter just received says:

"I am arranging to offer a new one hundred dollar type writer as a prize to the student who shall make the greatest progress during a given time."

Do not delay. Send one new name and $1 without delay and enroll yourself in the home instruction class now being organized. Address,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

This book so long promised, is nearly ready, and will be used at the National Convention at Denver. Lady Henry Somerset has sent an order from England for five hundred copies to be forwarded to her as soon as issued. It will be a very popular book as it contains the favorite hymns of so many members of the W. C. T. U., besides new ones of great merit. The fact that it has been compiled by Miss Anna Gordon will in itself be evidence of its merit and destined popularity. It will doubtless be found in every union and the homes of most of the members of the W. C. T. U. To add to its value, a few pages have been devoted to appropriate selections of Scripture for W. C. T. U. meetings. Price per copy, 35c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Burlington Route.

The Burlington Route is the best railroad from Chicago to St. Paul, Minneapolis, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Omaha, Deadwood and Denver. The scenic line via. Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Leadville, Glenwood Springs, Salt Lake City and Ogden to all California points. All its trains are vestibuled, and equipped with Pullman sleeping cars, standard chair cars (seats free), and Burlington Route dining cars. If you are going West, take the best line.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " 3 months	.25
" " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15
Per 100 copies	1.00

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

WHY YOU..... WANT THE AUTOMATIC FOUNTAIN.

Which is now placed within your reach:

BECAUSE—People will get thirsty, and a cool drink is a necessity.

BECAUSE—With these fountains you can furnish a cool and tasty drink cheaper than ever was known.

BECAUSE—When the thirsty crowd cannot secure a cool, healthful drink, the drift is at once toward the saloon, with all its baneful influence.

BECAUSE—The fountain is offered to you on terms which will not fail to be advantageous to you.

BECAUSE—An opportunity is here given to enable you to make money for your work.

THEREFORE—Every W. C. T. U. should secure one or more of these fountains. Address the WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

.·.THE

Young Crusader For October

A World's Fair number. It has pictures from photographs by our artist, directions for the children's work for the Chain, sale-tables, etc. SEND FOR IT.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

DO NOT READ THIS

If you have read Miss Willard's book, "A Classic Town." But if you have not had that great pleasure, see what the discoverer of Evanston thinks of it:

"I have no criticism to offer on the correctness or character of the work, but simply a cordial acknowledgment of its worth and merit. ORRINGTON LUNT."

Price, $1.50.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

NOW IN PRESS.

A new book will soon be ready. Something new and very charming is in store for young people and friends of young people. It is in the shape of a book that all will want to read before coming to Chicago next year, and those who cannot come will need it even more, for it tells of that which made possible "America's four hundredth birthday, that we call the World's Fair." This beautiful book is entitled. "Columbus, and What He Found," by Mrs. Mary H. Hull. Price $1. Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE.
Chicago, Ill.

Jack and Jill wouldn't have had to carry so much water if they had used Gold Dust Washing Powder, and their work would have been sooner done, for nothing else that Cleans So Well, So Quickly, or Costs So Little has been discovered.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE
Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10 cts. to intending agents. F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St. Chicago, Ill.

A Sample copy free.
"MUSIC." An Illustrated Magazine, In the general style of the Popular Science Monthly
THE HANDSOMEST AND MOST INTERESTING MUSICAL PERIODICAL PUBLISHED
A sample will be sent free to any person sending the addresses of five others interested in music, either players or singers. Address W. S. B. MATHEWS, Editor and Publisher, room 33, No. 240 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

DIAMOND DYES give the fastest, brightest, handsomest colors, and make the old clothes look like new. They are the original and only reliable package dyes. Sample card free, WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Are made in A VARIETY OF SHAPES—to fit SHORT, MEDIUM, and LONG Waists.

THIS MACHINE $12
You can give this elegant machine a thorough test before sending us one cent. TRIAL FREE. All attachments free. Every machine warranted 5 years. For catalog, full particulars, etc., cut this adv. out and send to us to-day. ALVAH MANUFACTURING CO., Chicago, Ill.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

A COMPLETE LINE OF DRESS REFORM GOODS,
including the famous EQUIPOISE and DELSARTE Waists, Jenness-Miller Specialties, &c., &c. Send stamp for free illustrated pamphlet on healthful dress. Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 75 Madison St., Chicago.

How TO MAKE A Fortune
WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser; patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen to whom we give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new, will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., 184 Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.

GALVANIZED GEARED AERMOTOR
Re-designed and much improved, furnishes power to
PUMP, GRIND, CUT FEED, and SAW WOOD.

Price Cut to $75 For 12-ft. Steel Geared Aermotor.
Does the work of 4 horses at half the cost of one, and is always harnessed and never gets tired. With our Steel Stub Tower it is easy to put on barn. Send for elaborate designs for putting power in barn.
AERMOTOR CO. 12th & Rockwell Sts., Chicago, & 29 Beale St., San Francisco.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS
With its Stirring Music is just THE THING for Your Public Meetings It will help Immensely
YOUNG PEOPLE LIKE IT.
The CHILDREN ENJOY it.
Old Folks are Interested.
PRICE 35c. PER COPY.
Send for Sample Copy to
Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
THE TEMPLE
CHICAGO.

AGENT made $71 in four days, selling my Electric Corsets, Belts, Brushes, Rings. 100 per ct profit Cash Prizes. Samples free. DR. BRIDGMAN, B'way, N. Y.

CARDS FOR 1893. 50 SAMPLE STYLES AND LIST OF 300 PREMIUM ARTICLES FREE. HAVERFIELD PUB. CO, CADIZ, OHIO.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines. Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

BICYCLES ON EASY PAYMENTS No extra charge. All makes new or 2d hand. Lowest prices guaranteed. Send for cata and save money. Rouse, Hazard & Co., 77 G St. Peoria, Ill

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them. YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

$2.98 DUEBER SOLID SILVERINE FREE

A genuine Dueber, solid silverine watch to every reader of this paper. CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled, genuine Dueber silverine watches by express for examination; you examine it at the express office, and if you think it a bargain and equal to any $15.00 watch you ever saw, pay our sample price $2.98, and express charges and it is yours. With the watch we send a 20 year guarantee for the case and 10 years for the movement, also our printed guarantee that you can return the watch at any time within one year if not satisfactory, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you one free. Write at once as we shall send out sample for 60 days only. THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO., 324 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

TO AN IDLE BOY.

BY FLORENCE A. JONES.

Do you weary, lad, of the daily round
  Of lessons and books and school?
Do you long for a place where there's naught but play,
  With never a hateful rule?

When you watch the birds as they sway and swing
  From the top of the highest trees
And fling you defiance in crazy notes—
  Do you envy their life of ease?

Do you think the jolliest life on earth
  Is that of a free, wild bird,
Who follows its own sweet will all day
  With never a chiding word?

Do you ever stop, just to think of this,
  That a bird can never be
Aught but a bird, but a boy by God's grace
  A noble manhood may see?

Ah! my little man, you must strive to fill
  Your part of the dear Lord's plan,
Or you'll mourn your childhood in bitterness
  With the aching heart of a man

What you sow in youth you will reap in age,
  Increased by the passing years—
Regret is the harvest of idleness
  And garnered with fruitless tears.

Hampton, Iowa.

SAVE YOUR PENNIES AND YOURSELVES.

BY MRS. S. L. OBERHOLTZER.

Save your pennies, boys, you'll need them
  In your business by and bye
You'll be glad the smoke's beneath you
  When you climb life's ladder high.

Money grows; and, if you've got it,
  Why just plant it in a bank.
When you find how it increases
  Friendly counsels you will thank.

With the mossy growth of interest
  You can do some generous things;
And the good deeds will uplift you
  Till your souls are touched with wings.

Reach for naught that makes you poorer.
  Shun the wily cigarette;
And tobacco's train that follows
  You'll rejoice you never met.

There are highways broad to evil
  Through the din of drink and smoke;
But keep straight along the clear road,
  Do not deem it brag or joke.

To do aught that might defile you,
  Count your gains of strength each day,
Knowing only in God's sunshine
  You can make life's travel pay.

Norristown, Pa.

UNCLE JOHN'S TALKS.

II.

TOOLS.

Hello, Jimmy, got your workshop done? Why, yes, it looks like it, and well done, too. Bench solid, level, two feet wide; shelf correct; boxes in place; shades as ordered; sash fastened together by long strips at the edges, and hung on hinges like single doors; good idea, capital; stick with holes to catch over nail fastened by screw eyes to sash, so as to hold it open at any angle—also good.

But look here, you young chap, you never did all this yourself in the three days since we were here! And I doubt if you even remembered it all. What's that? Your father overheard my directions, and then helped you? Well, that is another good point. And if any boys ever read them, they'd better do it where their fathers or big brothers can hear. Once the shop is made, you can keep things in order without their help.

Now we are ready for tools, and we must plan for the future, whether you have the tools now or not. In general, tools should be kept where they can be most easily reached from the places where you are most likely to stand when using them—not like some housekeepers who keep matches and lamps at opposite ends of the room.

Start with saws. They are generally hung high so you must take them down by the blades, which is all wrong. You will oftenest use them while facing the big box; so of course the place for them is under the north window. Yes, I know that carpenters put them in the crack of the bench; but that is only a make-shift when the bench is not in a shop, and we don't want any crack in our bench, either, as we may want a drawer under it. You must have two full grown saws here, rip and cross-cut. Then you want a small one, about a foot long, where you can reach it while standing at the bench, perhaps on the end of the cabinet—that's what we will call our case of small boxes. Then a key-hole saw which can hang by the last. A scroll saw is often convenient, like a small wood saw, you know, for sawing brackets. Hang it out of the way on a high nail. Speaking of nails, you should have a row along the east wall, as high as you can reach, about six inches apart. Use 8s or 10s wire. Drive them in all convenient places.

Now, for hammers. Their place is the shelf before the east window, obliquely across it with their faces toward the two-inch shelf-back. Hammers are like the type-setters most used letters—entitled to the most convenient place. You use them, I suppose, more than any other three tools combined. Get one light weight claw-hammer and a magnetic tack-hammer. And you can get that old hammer from the cellar wall to use for rough work, so as to save the new one. These three and a hatchet will be enough. Yes, I know where to keep the hatchet. I forgot to tell you that the floor-box should be set on three inch blocks at the corners, so as to let your toes under when you want to stand close. Cut a four inch strip out of the side of this box toward the bench, put a shelf in the box one inch below the opening and lay the hatchet in there. Make this opening midway up and down, so as to retain the strength of the side.

The square is generally held in the left hand, but is used in all ways, and so may as well hang in one place as another. Suits me to have it near the saws, as the two are used so much together. Better not hang it on a nail for two reasons: first, because it will fit so close against the wall that you cannot get hold of it, and second, because the nail may injure the edge of the square. Use a little triangle of wood, and have a notch for the square to rest in, so arranged that the part of the square where your fingers take hold shall be a little out from the wall. You must have a try square, of course, and must keep it close at hand over the bench, say on the end of the cabinet.

Now for planes. If you have the old-fashioned kind, where the iron is fastened by a wedge, you will need two at least, jack and smoother. If possible, get a modern plane, which has a screw to adjust the depth, and a lever for adjusting the cutting edge to the surface of the plane block, so that neither corner will cut deeper than the other. With such a tool, one is enough, as you can turn the screw while you work and so change the plane from jack to joiner or smoother, without loss of time. But you should have an old one for gritty work.

Yes, it will take some money, and some of you cannot get it. Well, get what you can, only keep the finished shop in mind, so that each step shall be a part of the whole. Your fathers have more or less tools; and as soon as they see that you have good places for them, they will let you have them. I have been surprised many times at the utter lack of "places for things," as I often express it, which I have seen on farms and elsewhere. And some of you will be surprised to see how many tools you have already, when you have collected them into one place.

So do not be discouraged if you cannot get all at once. Remember I am laying out your shop and tools for your lifetime. I want you to start on the right track, and then you will land at the right place, sometime, be it soon or late. We will take up the cabinet next, before going on with the list of tools.

"US BOYS."

A temperance lecturer was preaching on his favorite theme. "Now, boys, when I ask you a question you must not be afraid to speak up and answer me. When you look around and see all these fine houses, farms, and cattle, do you ever think who owns them all now? Your fathers own them, do they not?" "Yes, sir?" shouted a hundred voices. "Where will your fathers be in twenty years?" "Dead!" shouted the boys. "That's right. And who will own this property then?" "Us boys," shouted the urchins. "Right. Now tell me, did you ever in going along the street notice the drunkards lounging around the public house door, waiting for some one to treat them?" "Yes, sir, lots of them." "Well, where will they be in twenty years from now?" "Dead!" exclaimed the boys. "And who will be the drunkards then?" "Us boys." Everybody was thunderstruck. It sounded awfully! It was awful, but it was true.—Sunday School Chronicle.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—The following bit of verse has been sent by a friend of the Cozy Corner Circle:

THE BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Matthew, Mark, Luke and John
Repeat the gospel of the Son.
The Acts of the Apostles then
Record the deeds of holy men.
Romans, Corinthians, first and second,
With the Galatians next are reckoned.
Ephesians and Philippians stand
With grand Colossians close at hand.
Paul speaks to Thessalonians twice,
And twice gives Timothy advice;
To Titus next and other friends,
Then to Philemon greeting sends.
Then Hebrews teaches us to view
The old law perfect in the new.
James shows how faith should work by deeds;
Peter writes twice; then John succeeds
With letters three; then Jude between,
And John's great Revelation ends the scene.

By committing it to memory, you will always have the names of the New Testament books in their order at your tongue's end, which is quite as necessary as to know the names of the months in order, is it not? We all thank the good friend who has sent us this helpful verse. When you have learned it send your name to me, and I will publish the first twelve names received in their order. Will your name be in that list?

Ever affectionately,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

I am always glad when THE UNION SIGNAL comes. I like to crack the soft-shelled nuts. I saw the request to learn Miss Willard's piece about the Presidents. I learned it and spoke it at school. Your little niece,

New Hartford, Iowa. ERIE COLLINS.

There is another piece for you to learn, Erie—the one above about the books of the New Testament. And it is one, too, that you will never forget.

I am a little white ribbon girl seven years old. I never tasted sweet cider, and I'm never going to, either.

Mumford, N. Y. MARY HELEN BROWNELL.

Bravely said, little one.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

107.

CHARADE.

'Twas by my first Columbus brave
Arrived at unknown land;
And pilgrims full of faith and hope
Escaped,—a noble band:

'Tis with my second skillful cooks
Nice pies are known to make,
Which some enjoy, and others shun,
As dangerous to take.

My whole a noble figure seen
On life's broad battle-field,
Guiding the hosts with ribbon white
The Christian sword to wield.

A. L.

108.

TEMPERANCE PI.

Ew permacnete ncirlhed fo otayd liwl eb eht mne dan emwon fo ot rowrom dan ew lshal fihgt gnik oollach.

109.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of fourteen letters.
My 12, 7, 13, 4 and 5 is a piece of furniture.
My 8, 2, 1 is a small child.
My 10, 3, 9 is a poor little dwelling.
My 14, 11, 6 is used by writers.
My whole is a temperance motto.

MYRTLE COCHRAN.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Il'

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 22.

95. The Temple.

96.
LATER ALONE
TOTAL
ENATE
RELET

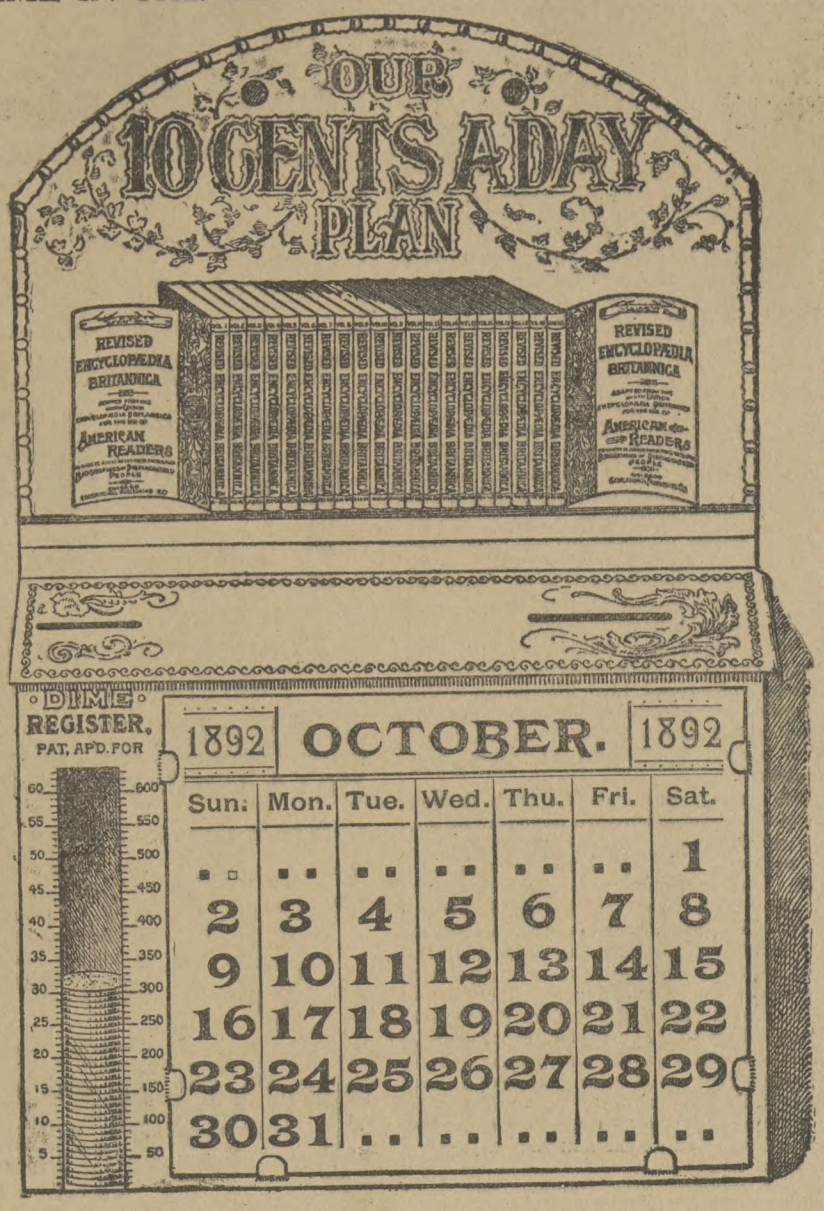
97. Canary.

98. 1, Bass, as. 2, Wall, al. 3, Pan, a. 4, Smart, mar. 5, Water, ate.

Correct answers: Sallie Wright; Flora Carson; Royal Davis.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN MAKER.

YOU DROP A DIME IN THE SLOT AND TAKE OUT A COMPLETE EDUCATION.



Charles Dudley Warner once said: The time would come when some inventive genius would enable us to put a dime in the slot and take out a complete education. This is the invention.

TO YOUNG MEN.

In the days of the Empire in France it was the proud boast of the nation that a marshal's baton was in the knapsack of every soldier. In this country and in these days we have a grander and a prouder boast.

In our higher civilization and more perfect government we are the creators of our positions. No accidental circumstances of birth or condition bar our ambitions. We are equal in citizenship, and in the realization of life's rewards one man is successful more than the other only in so much as he makes himself so.

Ours is the heritage of a glorious past and a present that is ever up and ready for the future. We are something more than mere workers. We toil through the early years that our ambitions may bear fruit and bring us honor and a competence when the shadows will have begun to grow lengthened. There is an individual ambition in us that makes us the peer of any people on the globe. We are not content to sit our lives out working at the footstools of others. The mechanic aims to be a master, the painter an artist, the clerk a merchant, the laborer that he may gain recognition. And as it is physically so it is intellectually. In the march toward progress, we must keep pace with the leaders or fall back into a mediocrity that is utterly inconsistent with the spirit of Americanism.

In the high positions of honor and trust filled by men not yet in the zenith of their lives, in the well filled classes in which young men and young women spend the hours of evening in study, in the libraries that are patronized to their full capacity, ay, and in the little library, too, which is the pride of even the humblest American home, there is evidence that the parents and their sons and daughters realize that mind is the ruling power in this newer and greater world.

We have passed the ruder stages of our civilization and what best fits a man to grapple with living issues, what best enables him to discern improvements, to suggest inventions, to cope with others whose brains are their capital—that is what tells in life, and the more varied the accomplishments the greater the possibilities.

In this connection we suggest to young men and strongly recommend the "Revised Encyclopedia Britannica." There is no field in the world of either mental or physical activity which it does not cover. It is the result of the critical labor of the best scholars, ompilation of history, the story of the achievements of years, a panorama in which scenes are called up filled with information that no college course can give. It is an education in itself. It only costs a trifle—one dime a day put away in the bank, which will be presented you with the set of books, will purchase it. No man needs any other library. No man could have a better one. One cigar less a day, one little deprivation that will save a dime, and you have a treasure that will prove both a pleasure and a lasting benefit.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO THE UNION SIGNAL.

PUBLISHERS UNION SIGNAL:

Please deliver to me the entire set of 20 volumes of Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, as above described, together with your Dime Savings Bank, for which I enclose One Dollar, and further agree to remit 10 cents a day (remitting the same monthly) until the remaining $9.00 is fully paid.

*Name*_____

*Postoffice*_____

*County*_____

*State*_____

Read Our Proposition

On receipt of only ONE DOLLAR we will forward to you, charges prepaid, the entire set of 20 volumes, the remaining $9.00 to be paid at the rate of 10 cents a day (to be remitted monthly). A beautiful dime savings bank will be sent with the books, in which the dime may be deposited each day. This edition is printed from new, large type on a fine quality of paper, and is strongly bound in heavy manilla paper covers, which, with proper care, will last a lifetime. Bear in mind that the entire 20 volumes are delivered to your address, with all charges paid to any part of the United States, Mexico and Canada.

This special offer is made only to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL and will remain open for a limited time only.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

Unlike the Dutch Process
No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals
are used in the preparation of
W. BAKER & CO.'S
BreakfastCocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.
It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.
Sold by Grocers everywhere.
W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

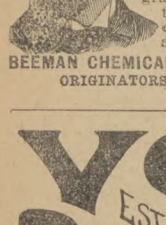
ALFRED PEATS THE Wall Paper Merchant will send you his guide, "HOW TO PAPER," and 100 beautiful samples of fine
WALL PAPER
Good Paper, 3c. Gold Paper, 5c. FREE
Handsome Gold Parlor Paper 10, 12½ and 15c per roll, all with wide borders and ceilings to match. Will refer you to 10,000 Well Satisfied Customers. Agents' sample book, $1.
ALFRED PEATS, 136-138 W. Madison St., Chicago.

DON'T CHEW TOBACCO.


Beeman's Pepsin Gum
Helps to overcome the Habit.
CAUTION—See that the name Beeman is on each wrapper. Each tablet contains one grain pure pepsin, sufficient to digest 1,000 grains of food. If it cannot be obtained from dealers, send five cents in stamps for sample package to
BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 64 Lake St., Cleveland, O.
ORIGINATORS OF PEPSIN CHEWING GUM.

VOSE & SONS PIANOS ESTABLISHED IN 1851.
Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue.
170 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.,
OR
LYON, POTTER & CO.,
176 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILL.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.
TAKE A COURSE IN THE SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW. (Incorporated.)
Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to
J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH.
525 WHITNEY BLOCK.

TOKOLOGY A Complete Ladies' Guide in Health and Disease. By Alice B. Stockham, M.D. Practitioner over 25 years.
Mrs. A. H. McW. writes: "Baby came June 10th. Needed no doctor, and had none. Sold a TOKOLOGY to each of the two women who waited upon me. Have taken five orders, and have not been away from home." Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison-st. Chicago.

"SILVER TONES!"
NEW PROHIBITION SONG BOOK
Just out, by the Silver Lake Quartette and W. A. Williams. Selling rapidly; best in the field; just the book for campaign, W. C. T. U. and contest work; special terms to quartettes; 35c.; $3.60 per doz., postpaid. Address W. A. WILLIAMS, Warnock, O.

Publisher's Notes.

WHAT A SAVING OF TEN CENTS A DAY WILL DO.

Many years ago, a little insect laid its life work on the floor of the Southern Ocean, and perished. Other insects followed in the path of their predecessor and by degrees one of the most masterful and lovely of nature's ingenious structures—a coral reef—reared its head above the ceaseless ebb and flow of the billows of the boundless Pacific. To this reef many ocean birds were attracted and with their aid—Nature working with the elements, gradually a vegetation appeared suited to the natural beauty of its ocean home.

At that spot, formerly an ocean waste, is now a beauteous island covered with the rich verdure of the tropics. From crevices in the many green and thickly wooded hills, cool waterfalls splash merrily and leap into the sea, laughing in their silvery sheen. The golden stranded shore that skirts the island is ornamented with a rich fringe of graceful palms of cocoanut and date that sway and blow gracefully before the playful embrace of the tropic breeze. Beneath the leafy umbrageous boughs, snugly covered with bright flowering vines, nestle the homes of happy men and women, and the sweet laughter of little children is heard as some gay plumaged bird flits through the foliage or some feathered songster tunes its merry notes. Here Nature is found in her most joyous mood. All is bright and beautiful.

This earthly paradise—for such it is—was made possible through the effort of the tiny coral insect, whose contribution to the perfect whole appeared so insignificant. Yet the earnest little worker was real god-father to the beautiful ocean home. That insect's work was to that island very much as ten cents is to a fortune. What good is ten cents to one anyhow? You have ten cents a day to spare, have you? Listen then and you shall hear what you can do with it. For ten cents a day, you can become useful and happy. You can store your mind with knowledge, the accumulation of which will prove at once a recreation and a pleasure. You can put yourself on a plane with men who are called educated, and who are familiar with every page of Nature's great book. You can train your mind in such a way that from its shelves you can at any time take down such information as is wanted then and there.

For ten cents a day, you can travel in imagination around the globe. You can visit strange lands and study their history, their customs and the manners and appearance of their peoples. You can delve into the earth and wrest from her the wonderful mineral secrets that lie hidden there. You can ascend in a balloon defying the elements and take a bird's eye view of the universe. You can look through all the telescopes past and present and familiarize yourself with other worlds than ours. You can go down to the sea in ships and master the mysteries of navigation; or you can descend into its depths and study the wonderful habits of the animal kingdom that bow to no monarch büt Father Neptuue. If you are artistically inclined, you can visit all the famous galleries of the world, and revel in descriptions of the works of the World's greatest masters.

These are a few of the things that are within your grasp, at the small outlay of ten cents a day for a very short period.

Is it worth the expenditure?

American enterprise has placed this possibility before you. The greatest educational work that the brains of Great Britain and America have produced;—a complete and perfect library, in itself an education—the great Revised Encyclopedia Britannica. This you can make your own for the outlay of that paltry ten cents a day which you did not know what to do with. It is the most compact Magazine of universal knowledge extant. It contains everything worth knowing, made as attractive and interesting and clear as ingenuity can make it.

As a home library for self education, it is the best school in the world and takes up the least room. It is a friend to the whole family as well as yourself and never withholds its gifts at any time.

It is yours for ten cents a day and you will only have to save the ten cents a day for 90 days to secure this great library.

We do not ask you to pay us at once, for we send the entire 20 volumes with charges prepaid, on receipt of only one dollar, and you can remit the ten cents a day each month for a period of 90 days. We send you a dime savings bank with each set of books, wherein you can deposit the dime each day. If you have friends who are not subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL and who want the Encyclopedia, tell them they can enjoy this privilege if they become subscribers without delay.

THE BEST-FITTING, MOST DURABLE HALF-HOSE ARE STAMPED
Shawknit
TRADE MARK.
ON THE TOE.
For Sale by the Trade generally.
POST-PAID PRICE-LIST, FULLY DESCRIPTIVE, TO ANY APPLICANT.
SHAW STOCKING CO., LOWELL, MASS.

YPSILANTI DRESS REFORM UNDERWEAR
[For FALL and WINTER WEAR.]
NEW IMPROVEMENTS
—IN—
YPSILANTI EQUESTRIENNE TIGHTS.
TRADE PATENTED JUNE 16 1891 HEALTH Ypsilanti UNDERWEAR DEC 29 1891 MARK
O. N. S.
"Our New Shape" Combination Suits are now on sale. See new Fall Catalogue for particulars.
DON'T BE DECEIVED!
See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark—
"Ypsilanti Health Underwear."
Ypsilanti Underwear is warranted perfect by the manufacturers, when stamped with the above trade-mark, and sold at regular prices.
Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Price List. Where we have no Agent, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.
HAY & TODD MFG. CO., YPSILANTI, MICH.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!
NO ODOR COLD BLAST CHICAGO NO DUST NO DUCKS
The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address
THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

TOBACCO HABIT
HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.
For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others.
Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.
EASILY CURED

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.
Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town. Send for Catalogue.
THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB Co.
180 S. Canal St. Chicago.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

THIS MACHINE $12
You can give this elegant machine a thorough test before sending us one cent. TRIAL FREE. All attachments free. Every machine warranted 5 years. For catalog, full particulars, etc., cut this adv. out and send to us to-day.
ALVAH MFG. CO., Dept. C 76 Chicago, Ill.

THIS SOLID GOLD GENUINE DIAMOND RING
FREE to any girl who will do a few hours work showing our new goods to their friends. Send No Money.
I. M. ASSOCIATION, 269 Dearborn St. Chicago, Ill.

A CLEAR COMPLEXION.

A SAMPLE BOX of Dr. O. P. BROWN'S Tissue Builder
for Plumping the Figure, Preserving and Beautifying Face and Hands sent for 10c. with Lady's paper illus. Woman's Life, and devoted to care of Face and Body. The Physical Beauty of the Romans was largely due to anointing and Dr. Brown's TISSUE BUILDER serves the same purpose. Druggists or mail $1. Dr. Brown, 47 Grand-st., Jersey City, N.J.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D. W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

MISS BEACH'S
Curling Fluid.
Keeps the hair in curl for days Innocent as cologne. A toilet necessity. Not sent on trial.
30,000 Ladies Have Endorsed It
At druggists, or prepaid, 50c.
LADY AGENTS wanted.
DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (H) LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory.
Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. Also 111 State Street, Chicago Ill.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

BEATTY Piano, Organ, 23 up. Want agents. Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beaty, Wash'ton, N. J.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble, Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Fat People You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by Dr. Clarke's Home Treatment. Proofs, Testimonials Free. F. B. Clarke, M. D. Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free.
G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to
H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.
Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets' Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN
CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT
SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. L. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

A GOOD THING TO ALWAYS HAVE ON HAND

Manitou
Table Water.

A NATURAL SPARKLING MINERAL WATER.

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use, packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints.
Convenient forms for Dealer and Consumer
Address for literature
Manitou Mineral Water Co., Manitou Springs, Colo.
Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists.

WOMAN'S CANNING & PRESERVING CO.

MAKERS OF CHOICE PUDDINGS, LUNCH TONGUES, FRUIT PRESERVES AND GENERAL CANNED GOODS.

All put up by competent women. Neatness and care exercised, insuring a perfect product.
Our business is "woman's work for women;" we supply table necessities and luxuries ready for use.
Secure our price list (sent free to any address) before making purchases. It is a revelation.
Our stockholders are requested to insist upon having our goods. By so doing they will further their own financial interests, by increasing the demand for our products, and at the same time secure the best in the market.

Woman's Canning and Preserving Co.,
19 Michigan Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

The Cheapest Way to Buy Music is to take a Good Musical Journal.

THE MUSICAL MESSENGER

is a magazine that prints, every month, new vocal and instrumental music for the piano and organ, written by popular composers. The music bought separately would cost ten times the price of the journal. The object of The Musical Messenger is to furnish the people the kind of music they like—such as they can use at home, at church, or at the concert.
Try it three months for 25 cents. Per year, $1.00.
FILLMORE BROS., 141 W. 6th Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, New York.
Canvassers make money by taking subscriptions

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS and DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE
A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction
By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.
A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to
A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.
Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE
a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

WHEREVER THE ROCKER WASHER
is used the Washboard becomes an Relic of Barbarism. It is warranted to do the washing of an ordinary family in one hour as clean as can be washed by hand. Write for full description and prices. Rocker Washer Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.
Agents wanted.

Publisher's Notes.

OUR DAY,

A Record and Review of Current Reform.

JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.
Price: Single numbers, - - $ .25
Yearly subscription, - - 2.50
Published by
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SUPPLIES FOR OUR WARFARE.

Aggressive Weapons.

For use against an intrenched enemy:

TIMELY TALKS.

Shall We License the Dram Shops? Prof. Geo. E. Foster.
How the Dram Shops Pay the Taxes. Prof. Geo. E. Foster.
How the Dram Shops Help Business. Prof. Geo. E. Foster.
The Delusions of High License. Herrick Johnson, D. D.
License, High or Low, Wrong in Principle. Herrick Johnson, D. D.
Our Drink Bill and the People Who Pay It. Rev. J. C. Fernald.
The High License Craze. Rev. H. H. French.
Fallacies of High License. Frances E. Willard.
High License a Backward Step. Pres. John Bascom.
Symposium on High License. Mary Allen West.

For a Hand to-hand Fight:

Along the skirmish-line of Conscience vs. Party.
Thy Bottle, from Voters' Leaflets.

For Christ in Government:

VOTERS' LEAFLETS.

Christian Patriotism.
Large Gospel Temperance.

Banners for the Color Guard:

TIMELY TALKS.

Restriction or Prohibition? Neal Dow.
Down with the Traffic. John P. St. John.
Echoes from History. Charles Sumner on the Third Party.

For New Recruits:

Wanted! Your First Vote on the Right Side.

For the Cadets:

Temperance Lesson Manuals.
The Advance Guard.
Signal Lights—varied and abundant.

Torpedoes:

Short range cannon, balloons, etc.

SONG LEAFLETS.

Saloons Must Go.
Clear the Way and The Cause.
Rallying, and "Keep Pegging Away."
Prohibition is the Watchword and The Crank.
Home Protection Song.
Down with Rum.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FOR EVERY HOME.

The book recently issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, entitled THE JUNIOR PARTNERS, should be in every home. It is very entertaining and exceedingly instructive. The purpose of the book is to illustrate the dangers that beset business men, and to show the relation between the drink habit and insanity. All who have read the book testify to its merits. It is written with remarkable power.

Dr. Thompson writes: "I am fascinated and uplifted."

A prominent physician writes: "I regard it as a beacon light on the stormy sea of ignorance, intemperance and vice. It bristles with jewels of invaluable truth respecting social relations. Its scientific thought couched in the most fascinating story comes as a glad evangel to suffering humanity."

Buy it for your homes.
Place it in your library.
It will do good everywhere.
Price: Cloth, $2; morocco, $3.
Agents wanted everywhere.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SEND orders at once for THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. Price 25c.

OVER 700 KINDS AND SIZES FROM $10.00 TO $75.00
THE GENUINE ALL BEAR THIS TRADE MARK. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

GARLAND STOVES AND RANGES

"The World's Best"

A NEW Twilled Lace Thread FOR CROCHETING. BEST in the world! Send 10c. for sample spool.
Crocheting Book No. 3 50 Illustrated Patterns. TEN CENTS.
Series of 24 Beautiful Illus. Tidy and Bed Spread Patterns from London and Paris. 5 cents each, or 60 cents a dozen including copy of above Book—No. 3.
GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn.

GOING TO BUILD
SEE THESE NEW 1892 DESIGNS IN BOOKS 4 and 5, "HOUSES and COTTAGES."

Size, 8 x 10 inches. Contains new designs, new styles. No. 4 has 35 designs, classified from $150 up to $1500, about half under $1000. No. 5, contains 59 designs of dwellings costing over $1 500, many $1800 to $3000, $1 each, or the two $1.50.
D. S. HOPKINS, Architect
72 Ottawa Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

NEW MAGIC LANTERN
STEREOPTICONS AND LANTERN SLIDES
For Amateurs, Public Lectures, and the Home Circle. PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENTS ARE PROFITABLE. J. B. COLT & CO., manfrs., 16 Beekman St., New York 189 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. Mention this paper.

TORN DRESSES
Instantly and perfectly repaired by use of Red Cross Rubber Tissue. Every lady should have it. A large sheet by mail, 25 cts. A. U. BETTS & CO., Toledo, O.

"ACTINA"
Makes the Blind See and the Deaf Hear; cures Catarrh, Hay Fever and Asthma. New York & London Electric Ass'n, 1113-14 Masonic Temple, Chicago. Prof. J. H. Gilbert, Mgr. Main Of. & Fac. 1021 Main-st, K. C. Mo.

EDUCATIONAL.

Chautauqua in the Home.

The influence of the Chautauqua Circle in the homes of America is very helpful. Parents are enabled to keep pace with the progress of their children; separation in mental tastes and sympathies is prevented; good conversation is promoted; taste is educated; the home is made a brighter, better, more inspiring place. Thousands of mothers and fathers are reading the course. Do not waste the winter in desultory reading. Address for details THE CHAUTAUQUA OFFICE, Drawer 194, Buffalo, N. Y.

Situations Vacant.

We want an intelligent man or woman in each city or large town to address and mail circulars, work to be done at their own homes. Also evening work for those employed during the day. Address in your own handwriting, enclosing stamp, BOSTON HOME COLLEGE, 178 Devonshire-st., Boston.

ROCKLAND COLLEGE NYACK-ON-THE-HUDSON.
For Young Ladies and Gentlemen. 25 miles from New York. Location beautiful and healthful. Rooms single or en suite. Preparatory and College courses. Music, Art, Industrial studies, Type Writing and Physical Culture. Opens Sept. 19. An endowment takes ladies at $200. Catalogues by request of
W. H. BANNISTER, A. M.

Dr. Sargent's Normal School
Of Physical Training for Women,
at CAMBRIDGE, MASS., will open its Twelfth Session on October 20 instead of November 1, as heretofore.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis.

Do Your Own PRINTING.

Card Press $3. Size for circulars or small newspaper $22. Saves you money and makes money printing for neighbors. Full printed instructions. Send stamp for catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., to the factory,
KELSEY & CO., Meriden, Connecticut.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY
or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

Do you want to buy a
PIANO OR ORGAN?
If so you will save money by addressing
BEETHOVEN CO., P. O. Box 701 WASHINGTON, Warren Co., New Jersey. Information FREE.

MAGIC HEATER—Ingersoll Heat Battery Metal Table. Elegant Mammoth Lamp. Heat, Light, Comfort, Convenience and Economy, All for $10. Send for facts. INGERSOLL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Lansing, Mich.

PRINTING OUTFIT 15c
COMPLETE, 4 alphabets rubber type, type holder, bottle Indelible Ink, Ink Pad and Tweezers. Put up in neat box with directions for use. Satisfaction guaranteed. Worth 50c. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Sets names in 1 minute, prints 500 cards an hour. Sent postpaid 15c; 2 for 25c. Cat. free.
R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y. City.

AGENTS Coin Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Every woman buys. Best and cheapest cooker sold. Big Profits to good workers, male or female. Sample's weight 12 oz. Adv'g matter furnished
For circulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

IMPROVED HALL TYPEWRITER.
The best and most simple machine made. Interchangeable Type into all languages. Durable, easiest running, rapid as any. Endorsed by the Clergy and literary people. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Agents wanted. Address N. Typewriter Co., 611 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES.
Agents Wanted. Catalogue free
Cline Mfg. Co, 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago

PLAYS Dialogues, Speakers, for School, Club and Parlor. Catalogue free. T. S. DENISON, Publisher, Chicago.

GRANDEST OFFER EVER MADE.

A fine $25 watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address and we will send you one of these fine 14 K gold-plated inlaid watches. The base of the case is made of fine jeweler's metal which is guaranteed to wear 20 years. The movement is beautifully jeweled and damaskeened throughout. You examine it at the Express and if you are satisfied it is equal in appearance to any $25 gold watch you may pay the agent our sample price, $5.85, and it is yours. If you will send the cash, $5.85 with your order thereby saving us the express charges, we will send you FREE a fine gold-plated chain to match the watch. This offer will not be made again. Remember we send our guarantee that the watch can be returned at any time within one year if found otherwise than represented. Address
Keene's Mammoth Watch House,
1301 Washington St., Sample Dept. 37, Boston, Mass.

Signal Notes.

Russia has prohibited the sale of ether and its compounds, because of the spread of the ether drinking habit.

To keep children off the street some Bostonians have opened play-rooms and gymnasiums for their amusement in different parts of the city.

The commander-in chief of the Indian Army sets a personal example of total abstinence to his men. Over seventeen thousand soldiers belong to the Soldier's Total Abstinence Association of India.

The Catholic Citizen says: "The pins would be knocked from under the liquor traffic if the Irish Catholic vote were to antagonize it, if Catholic men would vote against saloon aldermen and politicians."

It is said that two wealthy Chinamen have interviewed President Diaz of Mexico with the purpose of securing a colonization cession. If successful their countrymen now living in the United States will remove there in a body.

One attraction of the Algerian exhibit at the World's Fair will be a Café concert hall seating one thousand people. By a clause in the contract, the proprietors are prohibited selling anything in the Café except light lunches and non-intoxicating beverages.

A circular was sent recently to the leaders of religious bodies in Leeds, England, to ascertain the extent of their sympathy with total abstinence and the total suppression of the traffic. To the question: "Do you use non alcoholic wine at the Communion?" Fifty one ministers replied "Yes" and fifteen "No." On the question of the direct veto, sixty-seven ministers and fifty three laymen reported in favor. The replies came from all denominations.

In the Fortnightly Review, Mr. Arnold White gives the result of some searching investigations into the Salvation Army operations. They were directed to the financial operations as well as the social schemes of the Army and are extremely favorable. His general conclusions are, that Gen. Booth and family are honest to the core, that they eat hardly enough to keep body and soul together, and are one and all working themselves to death for others. Also, the funds laid out on the Hadleigh colony have been wisely spent and he urges that money be given Gen. Booth to fulfill his original plan.

The state Prohibition convention of Washington was the largest and most enthusiastic one ever held in the state, and the platform adopted is a strong one. The nominee for governor is Judge Roger S. Greene, who was appointed by President Grant chief justice for Washington Territory, an office which he filled with marked ability. He is known throughout the land for his strong testimony to the beneficent results of woman's ballot in this territory, and the excellent work done by women on juries. Prohibition and the cause of women never had a stauncher friend than Judge Greene.

One of the oldest women's missionary societies is the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, founded in 1852. When the women first began to be accessible to women physicians the Maharoui of Punnah was carried successfully through a serious illness. She sent a message to Queen Victoria, describing Indian women's sufferings. Her answer was: "We had no idea things were so bad; something must be done." The society now has three stations, with trained native nurses. The latest development is the appointment of a zenana lady missionary to follow up each case by visiting the patients in their homes. The importance and the need of help for these one hundred and thirty million poor Indian women can hardly be too strongly urged.

Good Cooking

Is one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc., use Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk. Directions on the label. Sold by your grocer and druggist.

A baby's skin is the most delicate of all delicate things, and is much more subject to external influence than a grown person's. It is frequently affected by the harmful ingredients of common soaps; these do not rinse readily, and will cause painful chapping, rash and disease by remaining in the clothing and coming into contact with the skin of the little one.

Do not permit the child's garments to be washed with anything but Ivory Soap. It is pure and is made of vegetable oils.

Dr. R. Ogden Doremus, of the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, says: "Medical men are much interested in discovering the various sources of disease, as whether from foul air, impure water, infested food, and possibly soap made of fat from diseased cattle.

Copyright 1892, by The Procter & Gamble Co.

GUARANTEED.

WILL CURE YOUR CATARRH
Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma. Headache, La-Grippe, Etc., Or Money Refunded!
We mean just what we say. Medicine enough to last four months with each medicator. Price complete by mail $1.50.
The medicine is put on sponge in enlarged part of medicator. Insert twin tubes in nostrils, single tube in mouth, then blow; thus your lungs force highly medicated air into all parts of the head and throat.
AGENTS ARE REAPING A RICH HARVEST.
Send for terms, testimonials and further particulars.
Ramey & Co., 85 Dearborn street, Chicago.

"AUGITE"
The Women's Friend Stove Mat.
Food of any kind can be cooked on this mat without stirring, and cannot scorch or burn. Can be placed on the blaze or on top of cook or gasoline stoves. Price 35 c. each.
Agents Wanted.
KEESTER & CO.,
81 S. Clark St., Chicago.

Barry's Tricopherous for the hair and skin. Druggists or by mail 50 cents. 44 Stone St., N. Y.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS
CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.
Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.
N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,
163-165 DEARBORN ST. - CHICAGO, ILL.
New York. Boston.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

Every true connoisseur of the dining table will readily appreciate the delicious qualities of "Manitou."

Have You Asthma?

Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn., will mail a trial package of Schiffmann's Asthma Cure to any sufferer who sends his address and names this paper. Never fails to give instant relief in worst cases, insures comfortable sleep and cures where others fail.

The Musical Messenger is the most enterprising musical monthly that we have seen. Handsome in appearance, it comes every month ladened with interesting reading and an abundance of new music for the piano and organ well suited to the popular taste. Look up the advertisement in our columns.

California.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad.

Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 723 Monadnock Building, Chicago, Ill., if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.

THREE HARVEST EXCURSIONS.

Half Rates via the Illinois Central.

Aug. 30th, Sept. 27th and Oct. 25, 1892.

The Central Route will sell Excursion tickets to the Agricultural Regions of the West, Southwest and South, at one fare for the Round Trip, from stations on its lines north of Cairo, on August 30th, and September 27th. A third excursion will be run to the South and Southwest on October 25th. Your Local Ticket Agent will give you full particulars in regard to these Harvest Excursions; arrangements can also be made in this connection to visit the desirable Railroad Lands for sale by the Illinois Central in Southern Illinois on obtaining special permission to do so by addressing the Company's Land Commissioner at Chicago, Mr. E. P. Skene. In addition, a few weeks before the first Excursion date, your Local Ticket Agent will be able to furnish you with a special Folder, issued by the Illinois Central, which will give you particulars of these Harvest Excursions in such form as will enable you to plan your journey at home. Should you not be within call of a railroad ticket agent, address A. H. Hanson, G. P. A., Illinois Central R. R., Chicago, Ill.

SOUTH WAUKEGAN NO SALOONS

can still be had at $200 and up. New plat and pamphlet mailed on request.

ONE HUNDRED GIRLS

Should apply before Oct. 15, to MORROW BROS., South Waukegan, Ill., to operate steam-driven sewing machines. Piece work. Ordinary persons can learn and make $5.00 to $7.00 first week.

TWO HUNDRED MEN

To apply at once to MORROW BROS. for work in their new factory

Wanted—Several Good Boarding-Houses.

Factories are just preparing to begin operations, and all who will come in the near future to live at South Waukegan will be given employment. Now is the time to visit the town. RESIDENCE LOTS with the strongest prohibitory clause in all our deeds ever drawn Harvey the best place for investment of any in or around Chicago.

MORRIS, GANSE & CO., 1300 CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BLDG., CHICAGO, ILL.

YOU GET ALL THE ADVANTAGE

of the special low rates to the Dedication of the World's Fair Buildings if you come in October, besides that we will pay the balance of your car fare to the extent of 2½ per cent. of what you buy of us while here. This will be the best chance you have ever had to visit HARVEY, CHICAGO AND THE WORLD'S FAIR (only 20 minutes ride from Harvey). Harvey with its millions—not to be, but—ALREADY invested in Manufacturing enterprises and this shows that TEMPERANCE PAYS BUT SALOONS ARE A CURSE, and renders It is a pleasure to have a home in a town not cursed with saloons, but has good School and Churches.

PRICES OF LOTS WILL POSITIVELY BE RAISED OCTOBER 27TH.

A deposit of at least $10 will hold a lot at present prices for 30 days if made before above date. DO THIS if you know you are coming on or before October 27th: Send us $10 and we will hold the best lot unsold at the time your letter comes for the price you name, and when you get here, if you don't like our selection you may change to any other of our unsold lots and have the deposit apply on same. We will send you a marked plat showing the lot we select. We have the best residence and business lots in that locality, beautiful and dry. It is on our tract that the Great Harvey World's Fair Hotel is being built, also the very successful Harvey Academy is in operation. Buy Now! GET PRESENT PRICES! Get Good Lots! WHERE IT IS ALWAYS DRY! Taxes Low! Harvey Illustrated, a twenty-page book, and plats and all information sent free. We can get Employment for 50 more Carpenters at good wages.

HARVEY

Address all communications in regard to Harvey property to

WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO., 161 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

1114 Murdock

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883

Volume XVIII.—No. 42.] CHICAGO, October 20, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs. Usher D. Herrick 2719 19th St. Henninges

STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The annual meeting of the W. T. P. A. stockholders was held as per constitution on Wednesday, October 12, in the office of the business manager, in the Temple, opened with prayer by Mrs. Carhart. It was, perhaps, as representative a meeting as has ever been held. On behalf of Iowa were her state president, Mrs. Dunham, and Mrs. Carhart; for Indiana, Miss Hay; for Ohio, the president, Mrs. Monroe, Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Ellis; for Kansas, Mrs. Thurston and the habitues of the Temple; Illinois was out in force with the state president, Mrs. Rounds, as leader. Two who have never failed at a meeting were greatly missed, Miss Willard and Miss West, and their names were often spoken.

Thirty-eight hundred and seventeen shares of stock were represented in person or by proxy, and there was much responsibility felt by those holding proxies that they might use them to the best interests of the business and as the owners would do if present.

The business manager's report made a very fine showing, and we find ourselves on firmer and firmer basis as time goes on; the value of our stock is seven per cent more than at this time last year. The new machinery, especially the great web press, is all doing very satisfactory work, and experts consider the press worth many more dollars than were paid for it. The advertising department has been especially successful during the past year.

The total cash receipts for the year were....	$230,565 70
Increase over last year.....	16,004 00
Earnings of printing department.....	78,541 54
Receipts from UNION SIGNAL subscribers....	49,745 02
Receipts from publications.....	15,146 11
Receipts from Young Crusader.....	3,834 96
Receipts from Oak and Ivy Leaf.....	1,015 35
Receipts from Subscription Book Department.....	3,359 21

There are forty-eight state superintendents and 1,737 local superintendents on our lists, and 1,476 club raisers for THE UNION SIGNAL. Sales through superintendents aggregated $17,607.59, an increase of $3,463.31 over last year.

Sales from the show-cases amounted to $1,387.83. The amount sold was in excess of $100 per month during six months of the year, viz: December, February, March, April, May and June.

The postage bill for the year was $10,355.45.

The amount of insurance carried is $65,500.

Letters containing orders number 61,958, 6,316 more than in 1891.

Miss Gilbert, the book-keeper, read her balance sheet, which was approved. The by-laws were amended, the first section to give a little more time after the first of the month for inventory and stock taking, and will henceforth read to call the stockholders' meeting the Wednesday following October 15. Section 9 was amended in accordance with action of directors, making superintendent of printing an appointee of business manager. In the afternoon the meeting was opened with prayer by Mrs. Ellis. On motion, proceeded to election of directors, which resulted as follows: Mrs. M. B. Carse, Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, Mrs. C. B. Buell, Mrs. S. A. Thurston, Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge, Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Miss F. E. Willard, Miss M. A. West, Mrs. L. S. Rounds, Miss Esther Pugh.

Reports were received from Miss Sudduth, Mrs. Kells and Miss Melville for THE UNION SIGNAL, Miss Guernsey, for The Young Crusader and publications (the exquisitely designed cover of the new White Ribbon Hymnal was shown as a sample). Miss Stewart, for Oak and Ivy Leaf. Every department and avenue of the great work upon us was discussed and almost every one expressed the satisfaction she had in a better understanding of the intricacies of the business. The following resolution was presented and unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That this annual meeting of stockholders express its appreciation of the work of our business manager, Mrs. F. H. Rastall, the past year, and commending her business-like methods, with gratitude we present our sincere regards.

On adjournment, the new Board of Directors was called together for organization. Mrs. Carse was elected president, Mrs. Hagans, treasurer, Miss Mary Allen West, secretary, with Miss Pugh as acting secretary during her absence. Mrs. Rastall was made business manager. Miss Willard and Miss West were elected editors of THE UNION SIGNAL, Lady Henry Somerset, contributing editor, Miss Sudduth, managing, and Mrs. Kells, office editor. Miss Guernsey was again chosen editor of The Young Crusader and of books and publications; Miss Jennie Stewart, of Oak and Ivy Leaf; and Miss Gilbert, book-keeper. Business committee, Mrs. Carse, Mrs. Hobbs and Miss Pugh. Thus we start the year with the old and tried officers in command, with a bright outlook and a trust for great success. The past year has been one of heavy expenses in the matter of rent, in connection with the change of office, but in spite of this has made a good financial showing. The directors adjourned to meet at Denver, probably the evening of the 27th of October.

ESTHER PUGH, Act. Sec.

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.

ALICE M. GUERNSEY, EDITOR.

To the Board of Directors of the W. T. P. A.:

While wondering how I should present a report that would be other than a mere list of Crusaders, leaflets and books, so many pages, such and such titles, in series so and so—questioning how I could show the real editorial work and the reason for the issuing of our several new publications, there came a letter to my desk. Examination proved it to be just the help I needed, and so I have secured permission to present a copy of it to you as my report to-day. It is from one whom you will recognize as an old friend of the W. T. P. A., Melinda Allen, a niece of Josiah Allen, and is written to her Aunt Samantha. It runs thus:

CHICAGO, Oct. 11, 1892.

DEAR AUNT SAMANTHA:—It's a little more'n two years since I wrote you from Chicago afore. Do you remember that I had a lot to tell you then about some women printers that I saw there? Well, I went back to Loontown, an' never s'posed I should hear anything more about 'em. But after awhile, you know, the W. C. T. U. came along, an' I j'ined it. I've been a member in good and reg'lar standin' ever since, and if they didn't up an' say they'd have me take charge of papers an' tracts an' things, last month—Superintendent of Literature, they call it. I tried to beg off, but 'twant no sort o' use. I s'pose they remembered how I'd gin 'em no peace till ev'ry single member of that union took the blessed old SIGNAL, and lent it to her neighbor when she was through with it, and they tho't maybe I'd give 'em a rest on that if I had the rest of the papers to 'tend to. But I won't let up on 'em a bit, you know I won't, Aunt Samantha, for ev'ry mother's daughter of 'em's got to stick to the SIGNAL—an' read the other things, too.

Well, when I said I'd try, seein' I couldn't get out of it, I went to studyin' up the p'ints, and what should I find but these same printer women that I visited in Chicago were the ones who did the W. C. T. U. printin'. I knew it when I was there, but I'd clear forgot all about it. Then thinks I to myself, I'll just go down there and see with my own eyes what those folks have got that I and my union want. I never did believe in doing things by the halves-es. I do really s'pose they're pestered most to death by folks coming to see 'em, specially now they're in the Temple, but you see I felt sort o' 'quainted like, seein' I'd been before, and so I come right along.

They treated me han'some—of course they did—but I'll tell you all about that when I see you next week. I want to write you now about the things I've found—just exactly what we want in Loontown.

First, there's The Young Crusader. They changed the form in February, 'cause when it came only once a month they wanted it to seem more like a magazine to the children. It's had lots and lots of new subscribers since, and folks say it's getting better and better. It tries to "keep in de middle ob de road," not too old for the younger children, nor too young for the older ones. It makes a p'int of tellin' 'bout the children's work for the World's Fair, an' the work they're doin' for temperance all over the world. The names of lots of L. T. L. graduates are in it, and that shows that the children "mean business." Dear "Mother Thompson" has been writin' some stories in it, 'bout Crusade days way back in Ohio, you know, and Mrs. Scott—she's the one that's writin' that cute story in THE UNION SIGNAL 'bout David Douglas and his wife—she's written some Log House stories. There are pieces for the children to speak, an' pictures, an' music, an' every quarter it has a temperance Sunday-school lesson on a Supplement, that our Sunday-school's got to have.

Now about the tracts. I said, "Show me the very newest thing you've got, for I want to keep up with the procession." And the girl that waited on me, she said, "Then I'll show you first the bran new things that came out this year." So we began on 'em, an' I'll take 'em in order, just as she did. First, there's the Scripture cards to tie onto bouquets for the Flower Mission. Then came the National Leaflets, and I want Uncle Josiah to read the one called "A Suffrage Question-Box." I'd like to see how he can squirm out o' women's having a right to vote, after he reads that. Mr. Woolley's writ one 'bout "Gospel Temperance," an' I reckon he knows what that means well's most anybody. "Joe Brown, Doctor,"—isn't that a queer name? asks "What's the Matter with Alcohol?"—but you'd better believe he doesn't say, "It's all right!" Lady Henry Somerset's writ one on the "World's W. C. T. U.," an' Mrs Leavitt—she that took the white ribbon round the world—she's writ 'bout "The World's Problem," meanin' the same thing. The girls are callin' for "Fair Play" from their brothers, and the L. T. L. leaflets are just what I want to give to boys and girls I know. There's "Tested,"—I shall give that to Cousin James, and I hope it will help him to be a temperance gentleman if he is in college. Mr. Bok, the editor, you know, who's been all over the world and dined with bigbugs everywhere, he tells, "Why I Never Tasted Liquor." I'm going to give the one called "Part of a Boy," to the little fellers in my class down t' the Mission. It's 'bout just such ragamuffins as they are. who were temperance clear through. I'm going to send "Snares" and "His Name," to Tirzah Ann's Hannibal, for I'm awful afraid that boy'll learn to play cards and swear, now he's down to the 'Cademy.

We shall want to have an L. T. L. convention by and by so I'll keep the one that tells 'bout that. I know the schoolma'am at the Mills'll want to have the "Dragon Corner" tract—it will help her out of a hard place, I'm thinkin', an' that 'bout the Band of Mercy I'm goin' to "sow knee-deep with," an' see if the boys can learn not to torment my old cat.

Maybe I didn't feel cheap, Aunt Samantha, when I found out that there was a Bible Readin' and a Readin' 'bout our work for ev'ry month in the year. Our union hasn't even heard of 'em, but it'll hear now!

I was s'prised, too, to find out what lots of tracts they have to help in the departments. There are five for the Railroad work, each one of 'em with a picture of a switch-tower and a whole maze of tracks and trains that must be put on the right track—just's we try to put the men that drive 'em—or they'll go to smash. And there's four for the Peace Department, with the flowers growing all over a rusty old cannon.

Talk of women's not bein' in politics! These women are there, I tell you, but they're sharp about it. There's Miss Willard a-tellin' "Why I Am a Prohibitionist," and John G. Woolley a-talkin' to voters 'bout their "Bottle," an' makin' out that ev'ry voter's got one, or his part of one, if he don't vote the Prohibition ticket. Then they go for the Christians and the church with "Christian Pat-

(Continued on Page 13.)

Our Library Table.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH devotes itself to short articles and brief, pointed paragraphs on the many topics that may be included under the terms "Health" or "Sickness," and means for promoting or averting these conditions.

46 East Twenty-first street, New York City.

HISTORIA is an illustrated monthly magazine of historical stories, furnishing good reading for the boys and girls who are to be the makers of history to morrow. It does not confine itself to past or present, native or foreign events, but makes the whole field of occurrence in history its theme, mingling judicious fiction now and then with hard fact, as youthful readers need some of the "cake" of literature as well as the plainer "bread" and "meat."

The Historia Company, Chicago.

THE MOTHERS' NURSERY GUIDE is a monthly magazine having for its interest the welfare of children and assistance of mothers in procuring the same. The table of contents for this month suggests valuable material: "A Few Words about Cholera," by Leroy M. Yale, M. D. "The Use of Meat in Childhood," by Wm. H. Flint, M. D.; "Some of the Diseases Caused by Bacteria, with Hints for their Prevention and Avoidance," by William B. Canfield, M. D. Prof. G. Stanley Hall, on "Moral Education and Will Training, Occupations and Amusements"; "Personal Experiences in the Home Training of Young Children," Philip G. Hubert, Jr.; "The Mothers' Parliament," "Nursery Problems," "Financiering for the Baby," and "Current Topics." In some one, if not each of these excellent common-sense articles, "fond mothers" can, without doubt, find ample food for reflection.

Babyhood Publishing Company, 5 Beekman street, New York City.

One of the most telling features of CURRENT LITERATURE for October is its department of Celebrities of the Day. The October number contains a sketch of George William Curtis, by Mr. Howells, an estimate of Grover Cleveland, by Mr. R. W. Gilder and an essay on Whittier. Under the head of Social and Philanthropic there are a number of articles that compel attention,—A Pueblo Democracy, Innocence versus Ignorance, and How to Get the Best of It. Among the articles of travel, adventure and discovery one notes A Northern Venice, Cliff Dwellers in the Canyon, Towers of Silence and The Falls of the Juanacatlan; while science and industry are treated in a dozen different topics of current interest. The readings from New Books, the Gossip of Authors and the department of Art, Music and Drama are all well up to date. It is the excellence of this magazine that it combines a sense of timeliness with a due regard for literary value. Hence, while its pages are brimming with questions of the day, they also embody a fair share of the permanently good work that is being produced all over the country.

Current Literature Publishing Co., 52-54 Lafayette Place, New York.

SCRIBNER'S for this month is an exceptionally fine number. "The Making of the White City," by H. C. Bunner, is a well-told story of a modern "Wonderland" that has sprung into form and being on Michigan's lake shore—the World's Fair. Walter B. Peet, gives an instructive article upon "The Education of the Deaf and Dumb." Edmund R. Spearman writes the sixth article in the series on The Poor in Great Cities, entitled, "A School for Street Arabs"; of these Arabs who are in France, by the way, the author says: "The Parisian street Arabs take pride in their eminent privileges, and the graduates of Montévrain are as liable to achieve praiseworthy social distinction as the graduates of any learned university in the world." "Launching Cruisers and Battle Ships" is the subject of an elaborate and interesting paper by Wm. J. Baxter, of the U. S. Navy. Paul Leicester Ford introduces "Thomas Jefferson in Undress," making an unpretentious memorandum book once belonging to his hero, the curious text of his sermon. Last but not least among the contributions is Dr. Daniel Denison Slade's strong telling of "The First Capital Operation Under the Influence of Ether."

Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

The October HOMILETIC REVIEW brings its usual supply of good reading for clergy and laity. The leading article of the Review Section by Dr. Barrows, of Chicago, on the Historicity of the Gospels is an able contribution to apologetic literature. Prof. Martin, of Lincoln University, has an extended and interesting paper on The Inheritance of Sacred Song. Prof. Crooks, of Drew Seminary, represents the Methodist Episcopal church in the series of contributions on Church Federation. Prof. Raymond, of Princeton College, gives some practical hints on The Division of Themes, which cannot fail to be helpful to preachers. The American, English, and German pulpits are ably represented in the Sermonic Section, the contributions to it being from the pens of some of the best known pulpit orators of seven of the leading denominations. The Public School question is discussed by the Rev. G. F. Greene in the Sociological Section. Dr. J. D. Wells, of Brooklyn, and Miss Cusack, the Nun of Kenmare, are the writers for the Miscellaneous Section, the former treating the subject of Long Pastorates, and the latter that of Falsehoods about Convent Life. The number sustains the well-merited reputation of the Review.

LIPPINCOTT'S story for October is entitled "The Kiss of Gold" by Kate Jordan. This is a strong character delineation and attractive reading of its kind. Tom Murray leaves the theological school to write plays for a theater, leaves the love of a pure girl for the companionship of men of the world, leaves high ideals for the pursuit of gold, and finally leaves the letter of truth to which he has clung through all his downward course, for deception and thus falls. But the author leaves him with a gleam of hope for better things. James Cox contributes "The Grand Carnival at St. Louis," a beautifully illustrated, superior article on the festivities that commenced on September 7 to last forty days. Margaret J. Preston's poem "Unconscious Service," is a gem. Edwin Checkley, whose portrait shows him to be a worthy advocate of the cause he pleads takes a sensible view of "Muscle Building." Sigmund J. Cauffman conducts his audience on a picturesque tour through "Old Paris" with quaint pictures to aid the vivid word descriptions. "Under the Harvest Moon" by Helen Marion Burnside, is an exquisite fall poem. R. H. Stoddard writes of precious memories of James Russell Lowell. M. Crofton converses in "Men of the Day" about George Augustus Sala, the famous journalist, Sir Frederick Leighton, the great painter, Spea[illegible] Crisp, Gen. Roger A. Pryor and Camille Flammarion [illegible]e noted French astronomer.

J. B. Lippincott [illegible] Philadelphia.

The Columbian Exposition is the fruitful theme of thoughtful and ambitious pens the world over, and the magazines are replenished thereby. GOODFORM is not behind the times. Its October issue is a World's Fair number. "Organizing a World's Fair" by J. P. Holland, rehearses the growth of the stupendous enterprise from the spring of 1890. Martha Howe Davidson's descriptive article is entitled "The City of White Palaces," with illustrations of groups of statuary, capitals of pillars, pediments and sculptors with their work. Hubbard William Harris speaks authoritatively about the "Music at the World's Fair," giving programs and brief sketches of directors and composers. A very short but most interesting article is entitled "A Young Sculptress" by Martha Howe Davidson, her heroine being Miss Alice Louise Rideout, of San Francisco, who "received the first prize and the exterior sculpture work for the Woman's Building. . . . . Munich is her objective point for study, and will give her both inspiration and hard work. For her work on the Woman's Building she receives $8,000. Her study and work have occupied a marvelously short time, but they promise much for her future, and her success has left her as earnest and unspoiled as it found her." "A Boy Fernando" is treated of briefly and interestingly by "A. H." Amber's beautiful "String of Beads," "Coming Home," a touching poem of love of mother by Amanda T. Jones, the continued story "An Odd Situation" and the editor's breezy and telling "Reflections" go to make up a number that does credit to each and all concerned.

The Goodform Company, Monroe St., Chicago.

A valuable and pleasing number is THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY for October. Dr. Henry Ling Taylor contributes the opening article, on "American Childhood from a Medical Standpoint," in which he points out the unwholesome mental and physical influences that surround American children, especially in cities. There is a timely article on "Specifics for the Cure of Inebriety," by Dr. T. D. Crothers, who tells what the signs are by which a great quackery may be distinguished. A notably interesting article is that on "The Evolution of Dancing," by Lee J. Vance, accompanied by illustrations. In his "Lessons from the Census," Carroll D. Wright treats of "The Native and Foreign-born Population," a subject on which every citizen should be informed. William Simpson takes "Mud as a Building Material" for his subject, and with the aid of half a dozen pictues establishes a pretty strong claim for his client. In "Language and Brain Disease," Dr. H. T. Pershing shows how loss of speech from brain disease throws light upon the process of obtaining the mastery of a language. John Coleman Adams describes the grand work of Redfield, Espy, Hare, Loomis, and other American meteorologists, under the title "A Chapter in Meteorological Discovery." Dr. R. W. Shufeldt has an attractive illustrated article entitled "A Comparative Study of some Indian Homes." An able review of "Recent Science," by Prince Kropotkin, an illustrated account of a successful French experiment in the "Warming and Ventilating of Dwellings," and a "Sketch of Alexander Winchell," with portrait, complete the body of the magazine. In the Editor's Table, "The Claims of Science," as recently stated by Professor Pearson, are vigorously emphasized, and some account is given of "The Rochester Meeting of the American Association."

D. Appleton & Co., New York City.

The October ATLANTIC opens with an able paper by James C. Carter, entitled "Mr. Tilden." He gives an interesting résumé of Samuel J. Tilden's place in public life. At the present moment, when Mr. Tilden's bequest is so much talked of, this will serve to show the manner of man he was, and will perhaps throw some light as to the way he would have wished his bequest to have been used. Mrs. Deland, in "The Story of a Child," gives some delightful passages in the life of her heroine, and the scene in which she and her playmate worship an idol is very cleverly written. She introduces Mr. Tommy Dove and Miss Jane in a manner which leads us to believe that his wooing, as pictured in a former story, will be brought to a successful termination in this. Alexander Brown, author of the "Genesis of the United States," has a paper on "The English Occupancy of North America," and incidentally endeavors to put Captain John Smith back into his rightful obscurity. There is also a Calabrian story by Elisabeth Cavazza, called "Rocco and Sidora," and this, with Mr. Crawford's "Don Orsino," completes the fiction of the number. Mr. Hale's amusing papers on "A New England Boyhood" are continued, and Boston Common and his associations with it, forms the subject of this new installment. Professor Shaler writes on a subject of the day, namely, "The Betterment of our Highways," and Mary A. Jordan has an article on "The College for Women." A stirring poem by Edith M. Thomas entitled "Arria," another by Clinton Scollard, and some critical papers on "The Naulahka and the Wrecker," on "Curzon's Persia," and on "Cavour as a Journalist," with the usual reviews and Contributors' Club, finish a number of uniform interest throughout.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

In OUR DAY, edited by Joseph Cook, Rev. W. F. Crafts has the initial article for October; it is entitled, "Sabbath Closing of the World's Fair." A sentence here and there may be not inaptly quoted: "The one supreme, sublime moment in the defense of Sabbath closing at the World's Fair was when Senator Quay, on July 9, had the fourth commandment read from his Bible by the Senate clerk, as his only and sufficient argument for his amendment conditioning upon Sabbath closing the Fiar's financial aid from this 'Christian nation,' so called in a recent supreme court opinion. The Senators listened in reverent silence to that constitutional law of nations. It was a scene worthy of an historic painting to be hung beside the landing of Columbus, cross in hand, or the devout landing of the Pilgrims after making in the May flower that famous compact, which Daniel Webster used to say was in reality the first paragraph of our American Constitution." The author gives reasons why Christians fail to make themselves felt in Congress: "An inexcusable ignorance of the methods by which the people may and should make known to their agents, their 'representatives' at Washington what they desire should be done. I have often asked a preacher in vain for the name of his Congressman. I sometimes have to tell him even the names of his Senators. . . . The voice of Providence, like the sound of many waters, cries to us in the needs of the hour, 'WRITE.' . . . Let not the friends of the Sabbath lose the momentum of the Yorktown we have won, but so follow it up at Chicago and again at Washington and in every state and city where Sabbath-breaking or liquor-selling lingers, that ere long we may joyfully reach 'Evacuation Day,' for the Continental Sunday and the Continental saloon, the worst invaders of our native land."

OUR DAY, published in Boston and Chicago.

THE CONQUEROR comes to Our Library Table with its cover bearing the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, the stars and stripes floating above her and the Cross, white and strong, in the background. This magazine is published monthly by Ballington Booth, at the National Headquarters of the Salvation Army, 111 Reade St., New York City. As one reads its pages—glowing with the soul light of enthusiasm in the work of saving a lost world—the heart beats higher in hope for the surely coming, though long delayed victory of good over the powers of evil. On the title page is the picture of Adjutant Kantahella, of Ceylon, so long since promoted to heaven. Looking into the calm, strong face, the reader is forced to ready indorsement of the words of praise written in his memory: "How often have we had occasion to remark to one another, as he stood pleading in English, that the customary order was reversed, and that instead of the converted, cultivated European or refined American going out to reach the heathen, the converted heathen had come to reach and help save his 'over-the-sea brothers and sisters.'" "A Passion for Souls," is a vigorous, eloquent article by "the General," touching that element in which lies the power of the Salvation Army. "Give yourself up," he pleads, "the love of yourself, the love of your own interests." Offer the old self up as a burning sacrifice on the altar of Calvary, and then He will make your new and purified life a medium through which He will pour forth heavenly hallelujah, and everlasting blessing on the world. Be a Saviour of mankind in His way, the only way—the Christ way, that is by suffering for it, sacrificing yourself for it, and all this because you love it. God give you a passion for souls!" Amen and amen. Through Christ and Him alone, the One who understands as no human intellect can, what the erring world needs to correct its pains and mistakes, shall come the solution of all the vexed social, political and financial questions. May His right arm strengthen these brave soldiers of the Cross, and bless every means, ordinary and extraordinary by which they seek to save souls.

The leading article in THE COSMOPOLITAN, for this month is by Charles de Kay, "Munich as an Art Center." Representations of choice old pictures long ago painted by master hands render the valuable article a rich bit of reading. Nathaniel T. Taylor has written of "An Old Southern School"—the oldest cloisters in the United States, founded in 1792, on the heights of Georgetown, now known as West Washington. Besides the cuts illustrating the article, there are beautiful portraits of Harriet Monroe, Mrs. Potter Palmer Mrs. Governor Grant, Harriet Lane Johnson, Emma Etheridge Morgan and Mrs. Russell Harrison. John Vance Cheney's lore legend of the Yosemite, "Totokomila and Lisayae," has quaint illustrations of the "little spirit maid," Lisayae, who was so hopelessly loved by the chieftain. "A Persian's Praise of Persian Ladies" is written by Ruel B. Karib, M. D. The article is certainly able and evidently a faithful picture. It makes the fair reader in free America, however, rejoice that her lot is not similar to that of her sisters in that far land. People who smile at the "temperance cranks" cannot find in all the creeds of the latter any such as this: "The great, absolute, total abstinence Prohibitionist in the world was the prophet of Persia. Mahomet gave to his people the following example, that they should abstain from liquor; he said: 'If a single drop of liquor should be dropped in a well or cistern that is one hundred yards deep; if afterwards the cistern should be filled up with earth, and if the grass should grow on the top and be eaten by a lamb or sheep, then my followers must not touch that mutton.'" "Some Phases of Contemporary Journalism," is a keen examination by John A. Cockerill, of the spirit that dominates the makers of our great daily journals. The following words are significant: "It is the average man who buys the newspaper, the average man who reads it, and the average man who profits by its advertisements. Were the moral and intellectual tone of this average man to be raised in a night—in other words, could some beneficent power, between twilight and dawn, cleanse and ennoble the affections and tastes, and purify and elevate the intellects of the masses of newspaper readers, the howl of disgust and rage which would be heard the next morning over the breakfast table, in the surface and elevated railway cars, and along a hundred trains on a score of roads, in the streets, restaurants and hotels, in short, wherever men congregate with their eyes open, would go up to heaven in such a way as even more speedily to open the eyes and purify the aspirations of the owners and makers of newspapers, which would then seem so abhorrent in their character." "Mr. Taswell Langdon in Seville," by Marrion Wilcox, is a bright bit of fiction, the hero of which is a whimsical original. Among several other noteworthy contributions to this issue may be especially named, "The Human Eye as Affected by Civilization," a comprehensive consideration of the structure of this wonderful organism, and the weaknesses and diseases affecting it, with their causes.

Edited by John Brisbee Walker, New York City.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, October 20, 1892. Number 42

OUR LAST OPPORTUNITY.

On page thirteen of this paper is a list of the Commissioners of the Columbian Exposition. The commission begins its meetings in Chicago, October 18, and will probably continue in session ten days. The question of liquor selling at the Exposition is to be decided at this meeting. If each reader of this paper would AT ONCE write a letter or send a telegram of remonstrance to one or more of these commissioners, against the granting of licenses to sell liquor on the Exposition grounds, it would probably cause the repeal of the action of the local directors which gives this privilege—not alone to restaurants and cafés, but to a model "German village," with its customary beer gardens. An original letter is more effective, but if you have no time for that, copy the following petition in the form of a letter, sign your name and address it to a commissioner from your own state, care of J. N. Dickenson, Rand-McNally building, Chicago. A special delivery stamp will insure prompt delivery and respect for the message:

To the Columbian Commissioners, Chicago:

We earnestly petition you to ascertain whether the managers of the Columbian Exposition have contracted, as alleged, for the sale of liquors at the Exposition in German beer gardens or otherwise, in violation of state laws and the National charter of the Exposition, and we urge you in the name of law and order and temperance to veto and forbid all such contracts.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Mrs. Harrison's condition is unchanged.

New York's Columbian celebration was a phenomenal success.

The triennial general Episcopal convention is in session at Baltimore.

James G. Blaine made his first campaign speech at Ophir Farm, N. Y., October 14.

Lady Henry Somerset and Misses Willard and Gordon arrived in New York, October 16.

Chicago is decorating elaborately for the dedication of the Columbian Exposition buildings on Friday.

The absence of Gladstone and the Prince of Wales from Tennyson's funeral has caused much comment in England.

The Congregational Council in session at Minneapolis last week passed strong resolutions against Sunday opening of the Exposition.

President Harrison has issued a proclamation offering to settlers the surplus lands of the Sioux Indian reservation, 1,800,000 acres in Montana.

Union Theological Seminary of New York has withdrawn from the control of the general presbytery, on account of its support of Professor Briggs.

The Prohibition vote in Maine is found to be three thousand seven hundred and thirty-one, a gain of thirty-nine per cent over the vote for General Fisk in 1888.

DR. NIVESON, of Dryden Springs, N. Y., and Miss Selma Berg, a Finnish lady, will attend the convention at Denver. Dr. Niveson will speak of her cure for inebriety. Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson will also be present and speak in the interests of a new society organized for the purpose of teaching patriotism.

"IT is welcome news," writes the press superintendent for the Denver Convention, "that Lady Henry Somerset has agreed to pay a short visit to America accompanying Miss Willard and her faithful secretary, Miss Gordon, and that this distinguished president of the British Women's Temperance Association will be present throughout the Convention. This fact gives fresh impetus to the tireless local workers who appreciate the honor of having with them one who has so unselfishly and affectionately held the American white-ribboners in tender remembrance."

MR. CHARLES CRITTENTON, a merchant prince and evangelist of New York City, who started the Florence Mission in that city, will be at the National Convention and speak about his work. Mr. Crittenton designs to establish one of these missions in every large city in this country and England. One will be established in Denver.

"THEY were content." When Simeon and Levi proposed to murder Joseph outright there was some hesitation among the other brothers. When Judah brought up the "profit" question and proposed to sell him to the Ishmaelites the record is "they were content." Just so now the boy is sold, and the brothers pocket the money and "are content."

THE more we think of it the more monstrous it seems that intelligent men like Mr. Carnegie, owner of the Homestead mills, can establish a manufacturing plant, and permit as a part of the outfit a score or two of saloons. It would be just as bad if there were only five, for the five would be palatial in their appointments and correspondingly attractive and destructive. But to think that such an institution can be tolerated in these closing years of the nineteenth century and even defended!

INQUIRIES are being made as to what became of the Siberian Exile Petition. Great difficulty has been experienced in finding a proper person to present the petition, and also owing to the fact of the interest apparently dying out in raising the means to pay the necessary expenses. Rev. Alfred J. P. McClure gave personally two or three hundred dollars to keep the Petition Association out of debt. The right person to take the petition has, even now, not been found, but it is to be hoped that this difficulty may vanish. The wishes of the many who signed it ought to bring a strong influence against the terrible cruelties of Siberian prisons.

THE London Times has been issuing a series of letters upon the cholera which have received the commendation of the highest medical authorities. In an article published October 7, it takes a gloomy view of the prospects for next year. The prophecy for 1893, it tells us, is not to be looked for in the cheerful news from Hamburg, Paris and central and southern Russia where the cholera is steadily subsiding, but rather in the reports of a few cases scattered about in Holland, Hungary, Belgium and western Russia; for these isolated cases, which the general public regards as of trivial importance, show that the disease is creeping steadily westward, "that seed is being sowed over a vast area in central Europe ready for a death harvest in 1893."

THE question comes to us in various ways, "Can any person be a life officer or a life delegate in the World's or National W. C. T. U.?" We have to reply that there is nothing in any constitution or by law of any white ribbon society in the world so far as we know that gives to any person any life position. Mrs. Wittenmeyer was made a "life delegate" by the Indianapolis convention in 1879, and was in that capacity welcomed by the Boston convention of the W. C. T. U. in 1880, but her delegateship could not in the nature of the case "hold over" as no convention has the power to bind another, and anything permanent must be incorporated in the organic law of the society, namely its constitution or by-laws. An honorary president must be elected at each convention just like the actual president. It is well for our women to study carefully into these things that there may be no confusion. We repeat: No woman has a life position in any W. C. T. U., and no woman can by virtue of her office enter any convention or any executive committee of a nation or state, a colony or district, unless said nation or state or colony by its own free action has given her the power to do so. Our principles and methods in the W. C. T. U. are exceedingly democratic in the best sense of that word, that is, the people rule, and home rule is the final factor.

THE Congregational Women's Boards are in the practice of holding a representative meeting during the annual session of the American Board, and a large congregation met last week in Chicago. Mrs. Moses Smith, president of the Woman's Board of the Interior, presided, and brief addresses were given by leading members of the boards and by a number of missionaries from various fields. The main address of the meeting was given by Mrs. Esther Tuttle Pritchard, our National superintendent, who presented the subject of "Proportionate and Systematic Giving." At the close of her paper, Mrs. Pritchard requested all who were in the practice of tithing their income to rise, and a large number responded. Converts to proportionate giving were then called for, and nearly as many stood up. In all there must have been two hundred or more. This subject has pushed its way to the front and is rapidly gaining ground in mission circles as well as in our own organization.

IT is truly encouraging to note the attitude of the religious press of the country towards the relation of the church to the liquor traffic. The church papers, almost without exception, take the ground that the balance of power in the control of this gigantic evil rests with Christian believers, and it is they who must arouse from their lethargy and cast their righteous vote for God and home and native land. The following paragraph from the Christian at Work illustrates our statement: "As surely as we believe that God is true and just, so surely do we believe that the church which He has established among men will yet awake to the full measure of its duty and responsibility with regard to the liquor traffic. We cannot believe that the great mass of those who profess to love God and their fellow men will always remain deaf to the piteous and agonizing cry going up from the multitude of innocent and helpless ones who are daily offered up in sacrifice to the Moloch of the liquor traffic. Some day the light will break upon the darkened eyes; some day the deaf ears will be unstopped and the followers of Christ everywhere will see, hear and understand what a hideous and unspeakable monster they have been nourishing by their laws and customs all these long and awful years. May the Almighty Father hasten the coming of that decisive day."

A COMMITTEE from the British section of the World's W. C. T. U. presented Miss Willard with the following birth day testimonial on September 28:

Beloved President: The sadness that enshrouds your coming to our country forbids any demonstration of national welcome; yours is a loss in which each of us have a share; with you we mourn a mother who by a long life of courage and triumphant entry into eternity has taught us that it is "always better farther on." We cannot, however, refrain on this, the anniversary of your birth, from tenderly wishing you many years rich and full of useful labor. In approaching you with our congratulations it is on no commonplace errand of courtesy that we come, nor do our good wishes spring solely from our love and gratitude. We lay this tribute in your hands because from you we have received the message of women's greatness; because looking back on the story of the past we see none other to whom her fellow-women should confess so large a debt; because we know that life and strength to you will ever mean priceless and unflinching toil in the cause which seeks to bring humanity nearer its divine ideal. Your great heart which knows no limitations of creed, class or nation, but beats only with the pulsations of humanity, has thrown out the life-line of the white ribbon, and to-day it girds the world, fit emblem of the white light of truth that called it into radiant existence. You have stood for the forces that level up and not down; your life shall "chant itself in its own beatitudes after your own life's service," for you have understood the divine motherhood that has made the world your family.

TENNYSON.

In Memoriam.

BY REV. H. A. DELANO.

"Sunset, and evening star,"
And the "clear call" for thee;
But "moaning" sad, upon "the bar,"
As thy barque goes to sea.

Sunset, and darkness then,
O'er land and sea,
For the heart that taught us, men,
How great and grand to be.

Sunset, o'er sea and land,
For we feel the cold, weird thrill,
And we miss the touch of thy "vanished hand,"
"The sound of a voice that is still."

Sunset, and yet we trust
God's good—"the goal of ill,"
That hoary wrong and evil, must Obey the Sovereign will.

Sunset, o'er Britain's soil,
O'er all thy kindred lands
Thy sons of rank or toil
Will clasp with us their hands.

Sunset, both here and there,
For Whittier has gone;
Thy poet laureate leaves his chair,
"And the stately ships go on."

Sunset, and ships go on,
"To the harbor under the hill";
Oh, night of death, ye have won,
The harp and the lute are still.

Evanston, Ill.

OUR COLUMBIADE—WHO WILL BE THERE?

BY TARPLEY STARR.

And if there, will there be a Donnelley to dispute his name and claim?

So many names! So great! so grand!
Of whom so much is sung and said—
A show for our Columbiade
Whose fame now runs through ev'ry land.
How curious! could we just command
From the long stretch of this parade
Some vision from the future made
To show us which of all shall stand;
Which craft here bears the enchanter's spell,
The magic word, "Sail on! sail on!"
Columbus, Shakespeare—they sail well;
But when four hundred years are gone,
The next grand cycle rolled around,
Which of these names will then be found?

Berryville, Va.

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH.*

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

Chapter X.

Why so slight a word overheard by chance should have stirred within him a feeling that day by day grew stronger, Marston could not have told. All he knew was that it was there, and that till he had spoken he should not be content. A week went on and then another, and Prescott appeared but seldom at the table, preferring to take his meals in his own room, held there often by the severity of suffering which at times drove him nearly beside himself and could only be quieted by anodynes. Marston himself had days of much the same experience, but youth was in his favor, and despair the occasional, not the permanent companion.

Back of the new building lay the pine grove, never disturbed by axe, and part of the Scarborough property. That it shadowed the pasture next it made no difference to the Doctor, who had withstood all Bassett's entreaties to cut down at least part of it.

"It's my private medicine chest," had been his invariable reply. "A breath of that, Bassett, wipes out all the poison you folks make me breathe in winter with your air-tight stoves, and your cellar-flavored living rooms. I've tried it and know what I am talking about."

Underneath the trees the pine needles lay thick, and at the upper end hemlocks grew so close that their branches swept the ground and cut off entirely the path leading out toward the pasture. Here on the second day Dr. Scarborough had taken his first patient and showed him a seat contrived in the curving boughs of an oak which had in some way taken root in this alien ground, and gave store of blossoms, as well as of very small and very crabbed fruit.

"Here is a spot, Prescott, where you can feel as much alone as if the village were ten miles away," he said.

"'Come unto me, saith the pine tree,
I am the giver of honor.'

Do you know that bit of Emerson? There is more tonic in this patch of wood than in all my bottles, and it is a grave error on your part to believe the bottles mean more than this does. Breathe it in. Fill your lungs, and thank the Lord for a thing so sweet."

"I recognize no tonic but you, yourself," his patient said, after a moment, in which his sad eyes had taken in the quiet corner, and then turned restlessly away. "You are the first human thing that has done me good in years. I wish I need not be out of your sight till I am better or dead."

"No time for dying at present," Dr. Scarborough said cheerfully, and chatted on as he led him back to the house. It was Dr. Martha who led him there again a day later and who said:

"This is the best think place I know, because it smells so good you can't think any but nice thoughts;" and he had come there often since then, feeling at last a sense of property in it as no one appeared to disturb him.

Here one afternoon, himself distracted and miserable, Marston wandered, and as he put aside one of the drooping branches, his footfall noiseless on the thick-fallen pine needles, started as he saw Prescott, his face hidden in his hands, his frame shaken by suppressed sobs.

"My God!" he cried, at last, starting up. "How long must this go on? I can't live through another hour of it, not another hour."

Marston moved forward a step, and as Prescott hastily turned, flushing darkly, put out his hand.

"We are in the same plight," he said. "Don't you suppose we can help each other? According to the old law that two negatives make an affirmative, your 'can't' and my 'can't' ought to end in a distinct 'will' for both of us. Don't go. It's a case of the wedding guest, and you must hear me whether you will or not. Listen to me."

He sat down as he spoke, and Prescott, after an instant of hesitation, sat down by him, his eyes fixed on the young man's face.

"But you are Marston, the popular author," he said, and then hesitated.

"Exactly, and you are Prescott, the Biblical critic and the most famous Hebraist we have among us. That doesn't hinder you or me from being on the road to the devil, though one might suppose it would act as a brake. It never has with me. I look round my rooms at home at times—for that matter, I do it here, and at the things that mean my resources, in the way of books, art, music. I'm not a bad classic; I'm more than a fair linguist. Sober, I have learned to be a fairly good companion and to enjoy the use of my own powers. Drunk, I am a devil, violent and dangerous."

"Drunk?" Prescott repeated in amazement.

"Yes, drunk. I was born with a mixed temperament;* peevish, cross, troublesome in my cradle, and I have been a trouble to the few that make up my family, ever since. Do you want the whole of the autobiography? Here it is. I was timid, retiring, sought solitude, yet loved talk between fine minds and lost myself in listening. As I grew older I struggled with my own tendencies, and forced myself to seek society. I was a big infant, timid, suspicious and fretful, always wanting to realize something that was not within my reach, but in the society in which I mingled I could not find the solace for which I yearned. Study was my sole comfort. I went to Princeton, there learned to drink, and, though the fact was a horror to me, it still brought solace. I was expelled for drunkenness and went to Harvard with the same result. Finally I became my own tutor, and alternated work with drink, becoming what the doctors call a case of solitary inebriety. I have studied contentedly and happily, hour after hour, varied pursuits, giving the brain the rest needed, and knowing nothing of fatigue. But at midnight the thirst would awaken suddenly. Whisky must be had and it aroused the most dangerous qualities of my nature. Once under its influence I broke away from my solitude and roved abroad, unconsciously exposing myself to my neighbors and agonizing my mother.

"I don't know how other men find it, but to me the worst thing was my degradation in my own eyes. I determined to drop whisky and try opium. I said to myself, 'Here I am, the victim of generations of eccentricity that lie back of me. From them come to me, and show at once in my riddle of a nature, problems, concealments, obscurities, wit, culture, cheerfulness, sadness, obstinacy, refinement and rudeness. Opium may bring solace to a spirit, wounded by long outrage and evil, to weary nerves and muscles; it may soften passions and subdue a misguided will. At least it shall be tried.

"Only temporary relief resulted. There was none of the positiveness and certainty for which I longed. Hasheesh was next in order, but after the first times it gave no real satisfaction. Opium was simply soothing, swaying dreaminess. Hasheesh brought a puzzling, awkward sense of all real things being unreal. In short, I was forced back to alcohol because only with that would profound sleep come, an absolute forgetfulness of self and everybody and everything. I had ceased to be a daily midnight drinker, but the ungovernable physical craving came at frequent intervals and had to be met. In the meantime, my tastes and studies had borne fruit. I was a student of phsychological phenomena, finding in my own breast all the passions and emotions man needs to draw upon, and my first novel made me master of the situation. With success I ceased to be a solitary and discovered that among the other contradictions that make up my nature, I had social gifts and could be sought. I met Byington, whose name you know, and in time, a little more desperate than usual one day, I told him my life and my probable fate. Through him I came here, having met Dr. Scarborough at his house and been attracted by the man. Here I am. Here you are. Why should we not help each other?"

Lanesborough, Mass.

(To be continued.)

*Copyrighted.

*"Inebriety," by Dr. Joseph Priestly. Page 57.

JULES SIMON.

BY RILLA NORTON.

With an irony that is habitual to her, Fortune has made the author, who so clearly portrayed his dislike of meetings and his stratagems to avoid them, in that clever story "My Double and How He Undid Me," the officer of innumerable societies and the orator of countless occasions.

What Mr. Hale is to Boston Jules Simon is to Paris. In the last twenty years, in his native city, there has been scarcely a humanitarian enterprise in which M. Simon has not been a prominent figure. The two philanthropic themes to which he has given the most of his talent and attention are the development of primary instruction in France and the improvement of the workingman's condition.

Jules Simon, member of the Institute of France, philosopher and statesman, was a pupil of Victor Cousin, to whose chair of the "History of Philosophy" at the Sorbonne he succeeded in 1839. M. Simon has been elected to the French Chamber of Deputies several times, and is the author of works on political and moral questions, history of philosophy, etc., to the number of a dozen or more.

Eminent though he is as a scholar, it is as a philanthropist that he will live longest, probably, in the memory of the world. His is one of the thoughtful, scholarly minds that are struggling with the social problems of the hour, to whose cool judgment as well as warm-hearted sympathy we shall owe their solution.

It is said that at the labor congress in Berlin, it was the sentiment of Jules Simon that had the most weight with the young Emperor William. It is but natural that a novice in reform should learn much from a veteran who has spent a generation in its service.

Gervex and Stephens, in their "Panorama of the Century," have painted M. Simon's portrait as he now looks, white haired, stooping slightly like a scholar, standing amid a group of his contemporaries, Lecomte de Lisle, Littré, Claude Beruard, Chevreuil and others; the officers of the present government standing near, with President Carnot in the foreground.

Jules Simon is one of the rare old men who look toward the future with all the eagerness of youth—who sympathize with the aspirations of to-morrow as well as the ambitions of yesterday. He belongs to that imperial guard which dies but never surrenders.

The last cause to which he has given special aid is that of woman. He presided over the "International Congress of Women" held in Paris during the summer of 1889, and his speeches, witty and wise, were held by many to be the most attractive feature of the Congress. No one appreciates more than this gallant survivor of the chivalrous generation of sixty years ago, the charm and grace of woman, but, as a thinker who is familiar with the laws of his country, and an observer who has seen them in practice, he has concluded that if statesmen and voters will not come to her rescue, she would better help herself. It was a good omen for the weak and struggling, though hopeful, cause of woman in France when such a man gave it his support.

But the chief title of Jules Simon to the honorable name of philanthropist is that twenty years before Socialism became the popular movement it is to-day, he was the calm, enlightened friend of the working classes; societies for the mutual aid of workingmen, co-operative systems, and all similar schemes have had his careful investigation, and, when worthy, his encouragement.

It was a great pleasure to see M. Simon, under the dome of the "Institute of France," in that room where men of talent and genius, the flower of French intellect, have met for centuries. The occasion I have in mind was one after M. Simon's own heart. That distinguished company had met, not to consider works of literary merit, but to honor works destined to a surer if not more enviable immortality—good deeds. The half dozen manly men who went up to the platform to receive their medals were not littérateurs, but manufacturers, merchants and mine owners, who had chosen, instead of colossal fortunes for themselves gained at the price of the impoverishment of their employés, to share with these the profits of a prosperous business. There were tears in many eyes, and a voice accustomed to utter the polished sentences suited to the traditions of the place, was somewhat husky as it spoke of the unselfishness of these employers. As we watched Jules Simon's face, his eyes brilliant with enthusiastic satisfaction, we felt that we had seen that personality in its truest setting.

What is the secret of M. Simon's interest in the poor? He has been poor himself.

He has told us, in his life of Victor Cousin, how he, himself, worked on, at his studio in a garret, and of how, one cold day, the great professor, passing in the street below, pointed out the window of his room to an accompanying pupil, as he said: "There's Simon up there in his garret without any fire, and he never knows one day whether he will dine the next." "He liked the idea," adds M. Simon, "not from cruelty, but from love of struggle. He loved struggle himself, and he liked to see others at it."

At a banquet given in Paris to our retiring Minister, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, who has been so justly honored by the French, Jules Simon made the farewell address, which closed with these eloquent and touching words:

"You are going to leave us, Monsieur Reid, but you leave friends who will not forget you. When the vessel which carries you toward the New World shall quit the coasts of France, I should like to be on the most advanced promontory of those coasts, and would shout to you, as the last echo of our land to yours:

"Let us spread liberty with light; let us spread justice with liberty."

Shoreham, Vt.

THE POST EXCHANGE OF THE U. S. ARMY.

BY CHAPLAIN C. C. BATEMAN, U. S. A.

The system by which the post exchange, formerly called the post canteen, is conducted, has recently become more perfectly understood by civilians. The profits of the establishment are largely from the sale of beer. These are divided statedly between company organizations stationed at the respective posts or forts and are consumed usually in the form of various extras and sometimes luxuries at the dining tables.

Without the sale of beer the post exchange would scarcely pay for the trouble of conducting it. Now I am asked if the thing is really authorized. Certainly it is. This institution for the sale of intoxicating drinks has the full sanction of the authorities at Washington, D. C., and paragraphs are devoted to it in the stern regulations of the United States army.

Its original institution was to offset the evil effects of the vile saloons in villages and towns adjoining garrisons. Vancouver Barracks, state of Washington, was the station at which the first experiment of this nature was made. At other places the canteen was hailed as a "God-send," because post traders were in not a few instances grossly unprincipled. I firmly believe that the canteen was regarded by its founders as a wise solution of the temperance question in the army. I know intimately one of the officers who was instrumental in introducing the system. He was and is a gentleman of strictly correct personal habits, but woefully astray, as I see things, along temperance lines.

The maintenance of the exchange (canteen) by the department of war is still due to the honest conviction in the minds of military authorities, that soldiers will drink, and the only thing to do under existing circumstances is to regulate the drinking. Of course beer "makes the drunk come" the same as other drinks—merely a question of quantity—but it does not make the men crazy, it is claimed, as did the "forty-rod benzine" of the festive post trader.

I have so often given my views of the drink feature of the exchange system, that my words are liable to be discounted because of my profession, the ministry. Many may argue that a minister is not a good witness in a case of this kind. Testimony from an officer of the line would, therefore, with such, be far more trustworthy, because unbiased.

Happily I am able to give just such testimony from a line officer.

Lieutenant A. K. Taylor, of the Nineteenth U. S. Infantry, in his admirable paper on "Company Discipline," in the United Service Magazine for the month of April, 1892 (vide page 338), says: "Another measure of recent introduction into our service, supposed to bring the men favorably under the captain's influence, because of inducements to remain more in camp or garrison, is the present canteen system at posts. What is this institution but one of licensed idleness, with the attraction of beer, cards, dice, billiards, and other kindred solicitations to extravagance and dissipation? Can it possibly aid company discipline? If it is not an aid then it must be a hindrance; and if a hindrance, then it is an evil; and if an evil, can we reach any other conviction than that it should be promptly suppressed?

"The young recruit, fresh from the rural district, of whom we hope so much from his enlistment, is met on the threshold of his military life with the invitation to waste his money, become a beer drinker, a card player, a dice thrower and an idler of his time. We may, and doubtless will, return him to civil life, if we limit him to one enlistment, as now proposed, enfeebled in body, weakened in mind and morals tainted, the end a ruined manhood.

"Eliminate the bar from the canteen, and the business becomes a pecuniary loss and the enterprise a failure. It is the sale of beer that attracts the soldier. You say we can give the soldier twice as much beer for his money as he could get in outside saloons, and what does this result in but that the soldier drinks at least twice as much beer as he would if obliged to have recourse to those saloons. As we look at it, the canteen supplies facilities to ruin a man more cheaply and rapidly, and its inevitable result must be to spread 'intemperance' throughout the army.

"It is unfortunate that we are committed to a scheme so objectionable and dangerous in character, under guise of pecuniary advantage to the soldier and the deception that the canteen is a place of innocent recreation, of healthful amusement and of useful entertainment.

"The captain who does his duty must oppose the system, which destroys true discipline and effectually prevents the formation of those traits which make men strong in physical grace, mental achievement and moral power.

"Can we escape the conclusion that the sooner we displace the canteen by the reading-room, the library, the gymnasium, where calisthenics, under a competent professor is taught, the whole at the expense of the government, and stop further traffic in the soldiers' pay, the better for the efficiency and reputation of the service."

Fort Assinniboine, Mont.

WHAT NAME FOR NATIONAL REFORMERS?

[At the great Cincinnati Conference, June 28, Mr. Edward Evans—the well-known banker of Tonawanda, N. Y., and the nation known Prohibitionist—presented a most comprehensive paper, "The View of the National Reformers." Some of his suggestions are worthy the broadest circulation, and are given as follows.—EDS.]

The St. Louis Globe Democrat said, not long ago: "The successful leader is the man who leads the people the way they want to go!" This may be, and doubtless is, good doctrine for either of the old party leaders to practice, but it will hardly do in the formation of new parties.

Had Moses led the people of his day the way in which they wanted to go, they would all have gone back into Egypt, and placed themselves again under the cruel lash of the Egyptian task master, rather than brave the perils of their long journey through the wilderness.

Every great epoch of the world's history has produced its leaders, equal, in all cases, to the demand of the times in which they lived. The patriarchal age produced its Abraham, its Moses, and its Joshua. The prophetic age produced its Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, the three major prophets of those times. The Christian age produced its Christ, its Peter and its Paul!

The governments of all free nations are administered by parties. Questions and opinions of public policy, upon which the people are divided, will naturally come up, and out of which new parties will be formed. The various attempts to form political parties in this century, during the last half of the century, reminds one of the "cat faces" upon the waters, as the sailors call them, and which are the sure precursors of a coming storm.

In 1788, George Washington was elected the first President of the first Constitutional Republic the world had ever known. The party he represented was called the Federalist party. After it had accomplished its work, viz: the confederation of the thirteen colonies (an issue which gave it its name), it made its last feeble effort in 1816 (Rufus King being its candidate) and gave up the ghost.

Twenty six quadrenniums have passed since the election of our first President, and about twenty-six different parties have asked the suffrages of the people during that time; thus showing that we have had an average of one new party every four years since the adoption of the constitution!

Four only of these, after much travail, have succeeded in "borning" a president, viz: Federalist, Democratic, Whig and Republican. All the rest so far have died without issue.

The Prohibition party, under the various names it has assumed, has been the most tenacious of all the other unsuccessful parties during the century.

The first suggestion for the organization of the party was made by the Right Worthy Grand Lodge of Good Templars, at its session in the city of Oswego, May 27, 1869. At this meeting a call for a convention, to meet in Farwell Hall, in the city of Chicago, on Wednesday, the 1st day of September, 1869, was issued, and responded to by nearly 500 delegates from nineteen states and the District of Columbia.

The fourth plank in the platform, adopted by that convention, reads as follows:

"While we adopt the name National Prohibition Party, as expressive of our primary object, and while we denounce all repudiation of the public debt, and pledge fidelity to the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and the Federal Constitution, we deem it not expedient at present to give prominence to other political issues."

In the first national nominating convention held in Columbus, Ohio, December 9, 1871, the platform of 1869, relating to the prohibition of the liquor traffic, was reaffirmed. At this convention the party first favored the name, "Anti-Dramshop party," but before its close adopted the name "National Prohibition party." Fourteen states were represented in this convention, and a very broad platform for the times was adopted, favoring reforms in civil service and finance; postage, railroad, telegraph, "water and other transportation costs, to be placed at the lowest practicable point, by force of laws wisely and justly framed": opposed all class legislation which tended to favor monopolies of all kinds, including the liquor traffic: favored the extension of the common school system under the state, as the primary duty of government. The platform also favored the bestowal of suffrage upon all citizens, wherever it had been withheld, regardless of sex, with equal rights to both naturalized and native born! This, for a "starter," was a very good national reform platform.

The nominating convention held in the city of Cleveland, May 17, 1876, changed its name to "Prohibition Reform party"; reiterated its former declarations, with slight changes in the verbiage, and added opposition to lotteries and gambling in stocks; the observance of the Christian Sabbath and the free use of the Bible in the schools; the separation of the schools from the control of all religious sects; favored the "reform of criminals as a means for the prevention of crime"; the election of all officers, including President and Vice-president and United States Senators, by a direct vote of the people; the separation of the money of government from all banking institutions, and the high prerogative of the right of government to "issue paper money, demanding its redemption in gold and silver."

The third nominating convention of the party was held in the same city June 17, 1880. Its last platform plank closed with the recognition of the Providence of Almighty God. This was well. Any party that would issue such a document and call it a platform, certainly needed a divine Providence to guide it. No wonder that a Lake Bluff conference was held in August, 1881, for the purpose of organizing a "Home Protection party." Things were getting pretty highly mixed about this time.

A joint convention, however, was called by the leaders of the "Home Protection party" and the "Prohibition Reform party," to meet in Farwell Hall, Chicago, August 23, 1882, at which a union was formed and the name (or names of the parties) was changed to that of Prohibition and Home Protection party, and at which they adopted the most terse and sensible platform ever adopted by any party in this country. In fact, had they added a clear cut plank on the money question, to this platform, and had they adopted a name commensurate with the great reforms which it embraced, a reform President would have been seated in the White House long ere this, and such a thing as the People's party would never have been heard of! There is not a single proposition made by the People's party, of any value to the country, but what has previously been put forth by the Prohibition party.

The great trouble with the latter party is, that it has been constantly tinkering at its platforms—at times dropping out certain economic questions and then again inserting them, but always standing true to the one single issue involved in its name, namely the prohibition of the liquor traffic! So long as it retained this name it should never have taken up any other issue! The name implies but "one idea," and right royally has it stood for that "idea."

The people, as a whole, have never relished the name "Prohibition party." It does not cover the great reforms which a new, successful party will have to deal with. No "Shan't do it party" will ever succeed in this country. This is a great, earnest, affirmative nation. It is just entering upon a series of reforms, such as the world has never known before. The hour demands a party equal to the emergencies—one as broad in principles and name, as is the country over which such a party aspires to rule.

The experience of the past and the history of the century teach us that no new party can be formed successfully upon any issue which either of the dominant parties dares take up.

Neither the Whigs nor the Democrats dared to take up the slave question. Could either have done so, there would have been no successful Republican party in 1860! So we say of the People's party. There is not a question in its platform but what either of the old parties could take up and deal with more successfully than could any new party.

But not so with the chief issues of the present Prohibition party. Neither of the old parties dares to meddle with the liquor traffic. If they did, it would be "like a house divided against itself."

Great care should be taken in selecting a name for a new political party. As each follower is called by the name of his party, too much care cannot be taken in this respect. The followers of the Democratic party are called "Democrats"; those following the Republican party, "Republicans"; those of the Prohibition party, "Prohibitionists"; those of the People's party, "Peopleists," or "Peopleites"; and should a union of different elements of reform ever be effected, and the party be called the "National Reform Party," the followers of that party would necessarily be called "Reformers."

It ought not to be a difficult thing for those who are struggling for the same great reforms, to get together. We all need one fold and one shepherd. The great mass of the People's Party are in full sympathy with the National Reformers, and the National Reformers are, in turn, in full sympathy with the desires and intentions of the Prohibitionists.

We are like the churches, who are all worshiping the same God, trusting in the same Christ, and seeking the same heaven; and yet one will call himself a Methodist, another a Presbyterian, another a Baptist, another an Episcopalian, another a Universalist, another a Quaker, and another a Roman Catholic, and all this in the face of the great prayer of the Christ, "that we all should be one, even as He and His Father are one."

How much better it would be if all these great bodies would drop all human names, and call themselves simply —Christians, and the congregation to which they belong, "The Christian Church," in contradistinction to the great Mahometan and heathen world, and thus the bride, the Lamb's wife, honor the great Bridegroom by being called by his name!

The New York Tribune is quoted as saying:

"By the very necessity of his being, a reformer must be an egotist. It is not enough for him to believe that he has a mission; he must also believe that he is the one man on earth who can fulfill that mission. Consequently, every successful reformer has lived apart in a world by himself, into which his coadjutors and followers never venture. And every reformer who amounts to anything in religion, politics or society, has advanced to the accomplishment of his mission, with a ruthless disregard of all opinions and traditions, and conventional faiths that stood in his way.

"No man with a mission will ever hold back because his course will hurt some people's feelings, or make some good souls think ill of him. To do just that is really a part of his mission; for it causes a ferment of thought and a clash of opinion out of which his propaganda takes shape and grows.

"To the timid multitude looking on, and concerned only with the superficial aspect of things, the reformer must necessarily appear to be not only a fell destroyer, but the very incarnation of tyrannous egotism. Paul, the apostle, was such a man; so was Cromwell; so was Ignatius Loyola, and so were Garrison and Wendell Phillips. And because of this fact they were able to do what they did for humanity.

"Your mealy-mouthed moralist, who hesitates to call things by their right names, never does anything worth recording. The doctrinaire reformer, who pauses to estimate the strength of what he would oppose; who is always ready to make excuses for the evils he would reform; who hesitates because of the ridicule or opposition of those whose good opinion the world counts valuable, will never be the leader of a victorious cause."

America's greatest bard, our own John G. Whittier, has pictured in immortal song the true character and mission of the reformer, in that beautiful poem, from which I quote but two stanzas:

"All grim and soiled,
And brown with tan,
I saw the Strong One in His wrath
Smiting the godless shrines of man along His path."

And further on he gives the true character of his mission and work by exclaiming:

"'Tis but the ruin of the bad,
The wasting of the strong and ill;
Whate'er of good the old time had
Was living still!"

The work of the reformer is not to destroy but to build up, and make possible the fondest hopes of men. Reform has been the talisman of all the ages. It was the first utterance of "the voice of one crying in the wilderness," who proclaimed the coming of heaven's king.

No word in the English language embraces so broad a meaning as the word "reform." It always means "betterment" when used, besides it has no dogmatic sound to it. Webster says it is derived from two Latin words: "re," again, and "forma," to form, and simply means to "form anew" that which is deformed, or out of order.

Contrast this great verb "reform" with the adjective, "prohibition." The former is euphonious, inviting and winsome, while the latter is proscriptive, dogmatic and dominating in its application and use. It means to "interdict"; to prevent some one from doing that which is unpleasing to you, however much it may be pleasing to the one to be restrained. This, I believe, is one of the many causes why the party taking this name has made such poor progress during the last twenty-two years of its existence.

I desire to see the great reforms for which you and I stand, crystallized into law. I know that such a great event could not be brought about, short of a great, new, successful party, one in full sympathy with these reforms.

It must come, and it can only be postponed by those who ought to be its chief promoters. The leaders of the Prohibition party should assume the rôle of national reformers—just what they are in fact.

This nation is full of reformers, and all that is needed is the mobilizing of this mighty force into a great, broad, national reform party as an instrument to accomplish the great work we have in hand.

Tonawanda, N. Y.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

BY MRS. H. E. DAVIS.

The death of no other poet, unless it be that of Henry W. Longfellow, has brought to so many American hearts and homes a sense of personal loss as has the death of the venerable Quaker poet, John G. Whittier.

The catholicity of his spirit and the warmth of his feelings led Mr. Whittier into sympathy with all classes and conditions of men, while his patriotism enlisted his active interest in every question of national importance.

The real nature of the man is indicated by his poems. His "Songs of Labor" show the dignity he attached to the humblest avocations; "The Bridal of Pennacook," "The Funeral Tree of the Sokokis," "Toussaint L' Ouverture" and "The Slaves of Martinique" reveal his interest in the lowly and his recognition of a fellowman in the oppressed; a history of our country might be compiled from his collected poems.

Free alike from fear or favor, Mr. Whittier has never failed to voice his clear convictions of right and duty. His "Voices of Freedom," his poems "In War Time" ring no uncertain sound. That they did much to educate national sentiment is beyond doubt; how much no human record will show. Above all jealousies and envies, his tributes to the living and to the memory of the dead show the poet's generous appreciation of his friends, the true and tender heart of the man.

Mr. Whittier was an intense lover of nature; how closely he observed, how understandingly he interpreted, almost every poem he has written in some way attests. He had not traveled far, he had not felt the need to. In "The Last Walk in Autumn" he indicates his feeling:

* * "He who wanders widest lifts
No more of beauty's jealous veils
Than he who from his doorway sees
The miracle of flowers and trees,
Feels the warm Orient in the noonday air,
And from cloud-minarets hears the sunset call to prayer!"

But while Mr. Whittier had not passed the boundaries of his own land, his accuracy in describing places he had never visited, and in depicting scenes that he had never looked upon, are a constant and pleasant surprise to his reader, as well as an attestation of the painstaking, studious character of the man and the vividness and power of his poetic conception.

In "Snow-Bound," in "The Barefoot Boy" and "In School Days" Mr. Whittier has given the influences and circumstances of his early life; while many have conjectured that "My Playmate" was suggested by some later experiences in life, and have thought to find in it a clue to the poet's solitary life concerning which, unless here, he has never lifted the veil.

The poet's ideas as to the relation of the soul and God are indicated in the poems, "My Soul and I," "My Psalm" and "Eternal Goodness."

That his thoughts remained unchanged in the eventide of life, is shown by his last poem, that to Oliver Wendell Holmes. It is the utterance of a soul, which, realizing that its hour of departure is near, is calm in its retrospect of life, and strong in its faith and trust in God for the future:

"The hour draws near, howe'er delayed and late,
When at the Eternal Gate
We leave the words and works we call our own,
And lift void hands alone
For love to fill. Our nakedness of soul
Brings to that Gate no toll;
Giftless we come to Him, who all things gives,
And live because He lives."

University, N. Dakota.

RAILROAD TIES.

XV.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

"Seek the kingdom of God," not "first," but ultimately, or in other words seek last the kingdom of God, that is to say, make a still hunt—the stiller the better. Seek the kingdom of God without letting anybody know you are doing so. Such a course provokes no opposition, is easier, politer, more popular, more practical. . . . "Slip up on it," so to speak. Keep in touch with the King's enemies and give your "silent influence" a chance to "pervade" them. The fear of the Lord is the further end of wisdom.

. . . . . .

Seek first the best thing in sight. Incentives, opportunities, candidates, principles, and the like, go in pairs. Always keep the pair, if you can, naturally, but if not, choose the best one, for don't you see that this will eventually discourage the devil, and he will only put up his very best candidate, for instance, and ultimately, will offer "the kingdom of God." In that case, public sentiment will sustain "the kingdom" and "His righteousness" will be the simplest thing in the world, and the devil will die of general paresis.

C. M. & St. Paul R. R.

CORRESPONDENCE

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WESTWARD TO THE FAR EAST.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Vancouver, British Columbia, is the creation of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Six years ago a hamlet, swept out of existence by a fire, it has literally soared from its ashes, and to-day stands a solid city of brick and stone, claiming 20,000 inhabitants.

Everywhere floats the red and white flag of the dominant railroad, seeming to supplant the Union Jack itself. The arrival of the overland train is the great event of the day, and when the Empress comes to her dock the whole city is moved to meet her at her coming, and all lines of traffic seem to converge at her wharf.

Here are two unions and a Y, of which Miss Bowes is the heart and head, while she has many efficient coadjutors. She directed me to the Ellsmore, a nice, quiet hotel, kept by a temperance woman, which I can heartily recommend. My stay was too short for a public meeting, but many of the ladies called upon me and made me wish for a longer stay among them.

The night before we sailed I attended a unique service, the baptism of three Japanese converts. Mr. Koboyaski, native pastor of a mission church in Tokio, had been to Toronto for a year's advance studies, and was detained a few weeks on his return in Vancouver. These weeks were so utilized by him in work among his countrymen that these three converts are the first fruits of what, we trust, will be a mighty harvest.

At this service I met a number of missionaries and learned that over thirty were going out in the Empress of Japan next day. Among these were Dr. Beebe and family, returning to their work in Nanking, China; Rev. C. F. Reed and family, Shanghai, whom I gladly welcomed as the gentleman whose tact and persistency secured a hearing before the great missionary conference for Miss Ackerman; Miss Cartmel, returning to her work in Tokio, accompanied by two bright, young Canadian girls, and Dr. Lucy Gaynore, who had served her initiative in missionary work in Bethesda mission, of the Central W. C. T. U., Chicago; Rev. W. A. Noble and his young wife go as new recruits to Corea. Mrs. Abbey returns to China, where she has spent seventeen years in missionary work and buried her husband; and others return to fields where their husbands await them. The Church of England mission is represented by Rev. G. H. Pole and family; he conducted the Sabbath services on board. Among the passengers is Professor Sharpe, of the Kioto Government School, Japan, a very interesting man, who, though not of them, identifies himself with the missionaries who find it a valuable privilege to draw freely upon his store of Japanese knowledge.

This steamship line is the projection of the Canadian Pacific across the ocean to Hong Kong. To our people it is a comparatively new route and many have asked me to "tell them all about it," which I shall try faithfully to do. Its steamers are the Empress of India, Empress of Japan and Empress of China; as near alike as three peas, I am told by the officers, so that if one did not see the name he would never know which he was on. They are magnificent steel ships of 6,000 tons burden, well officered, unusually well manned, ten of her crew being total abstainers, and making a steady rate of from 370 to 395 miles a day. The promenade deck is broad and roofed, making it serviceable even in stormy weather. A large library and recreation room, well stocked with books, writing tables, easy chairs and cozy corners, affords a pleasant resting or working place. The meals are well cooked and deftly served by China boys in long blue frocks and black caps.

The staterooms are like the little girl: "When she was good, she was very, very good, and when she was bad she was horrid." Some of them are the most luxurious of any afloat, and some are hardly endurable. And the trouble is, all rank as first-class, cost the same money and you don't know what yours is to be until you are in it. You pay your money, but you do not take your choice by any means. You buy your ticket, that is, pay your money for it at some of the many offices, but find it only an order for a ticket to be issued at Vancouver. No plan of the steamer is to be seen, by which to choose your stateroom, at least that was my experience, though with tickets bought in Chicago and other eastern points it was different.

Arriving at Vancouver you present your order to the smiling and bland agent, who makes out your ticket and presents it to you in most courteous fashion; you take it on board and find the berth it calls for absolutely "horrid," and the Chinaman in charge confirms your suspicions by telling you, "He second class." You return to the agent, thinking he has made a mistake. Still smiling, he waves you away with the assurance that the general passenger agent will be on board till you reach Victoria ninety miles away, and will make all things right. You return on board, are introduced to Mr. B., the general agent, and find him even more smiling and bland than his subordinate; Sir Walter Raleigh could not have thrown down his coat for Queen Elizabeth to walk upon with a more courtly air than does he listen to your tale of woe and assure you the wrong shall be righted. You rest content, sure that such a knightly man must tell the truth; but Victoria is reached, it is night, and he glides from the steamer, the brightness of his smile illuming the darkness; you see him no more, nor the fulfillment of his promises. The steamer makes no more stops before reaching Yokohama, four thousand three hundred miles, and you have no alternative but to "grin and bear it," or jump overboard.

In my case there was absolutely no berth "No. 26," as my ticket called for, and after I had made up my mind to spend the night in a library chair the good stewardess, Mrs. Griffin, came to the rescue and gave me a berth in her stateroom. All the lady passengers vote Mrs. Griffin the best stewardess afloat. The widow of a San Francisco physician, she is almost as good as a doctor herself, knows just what to do for seasick folks, has exhaustless patience and that great, motherly heart which draws all little children unto her. This is her first trip in the Empress, she having before been on the Oceanic, of the Oriental and Occidental line.

The Empress line, like those of San Francisco, makes a reduction of twenty-five per cent to missionaries and their families. Of course the supposition is that the accommodations furnished these missionaries are what the ticket calls for, first-class. But by some sort of legerdemain, probably wrought by the agent with the "smile that is childlike and bland," the worst staterooms in the ship were accorded the majority of them. This was a peculiar hardship in the case of several missionary ladies with little children; it seems to me a matter into which the missionary boards should look before sending any more missionaries this way; if second class accommodations are to be furnished, the boards should know it and calculate accordingly.

The second-class accommodations in this ship are much better than in American ships; the Church of England missionary society always sends its missionaries that way, and on this trip they are quite as comfortable as many missionaries holding first-class tickets, with the exception of the privileges of the deck; this, however, is a great exception, for one wishes to almost live on deck.

Our ship has had a chance to prove her seaworthiness, and grandly has she sustained the ordeal. Early Tuesday morning a great gale struck us and blew continuously for about fourteen hours, veering from one side to the other, however, in such a way as made old voyagers call it a typhoon. The officers, who at first made light of it, confessed that it came within one point of a cyclone; dishes hopped off the table, trunks danced round the stateroom, passengers were thrown down, and the officer on watch had his collarbone broken by being dashed on the deck. The decks leaked badly, but otherwise the ship gave no evidence of the strain, plowing through the enormous waves, making three hundred and seventy miles that day.

To the few who ventured on deck, sitting in chairs lashed to the rail, with the spray dashing over us, the sight was grand beyond description. It was an experience of a lifetime, worth all the discomforts of the voyage to purchase. When darkness came down upon the sea, the rocking of the ship increased, the dash and roar of the waves grew louder, and it seemed as though nothing made by human hands could resist the combined shock of wind and wave. Yet safe in the hollow of His hand, we slept, and awoke with a thrill of gratitude to find the ship comparatively still. "Then are they glad because they are quiet; so He bringeth them to their desired haven."

During the gale we crossed the meridian 180, so went to bed Tuesday night to awake Thursday morning; if Wednesday was to be like Tuesday, no one was sorry to have it lose itself in the Pacific Ocean. By the way, if all our Seventh Day friends could be wafted across the dividing meridian and mark the ease with which the change of a day is made, they would no longer be troubled with scruples concerning the difference between the first day and the seventh. It is a fact that two bodies of Christians on two islands of the Pacific for years observed, unconsciously, different days for Sunday, the missionaries going to one having dropped the day in passing the meridian, those going to the other having failed to do so.

We had made the second cabin a sort of rallying point, as there we were undisturbed, Dr. Pole's party, Mr. Koboyaski and a Parsee family from India being its only occupants. At the suggestion of Dr. Beebe the missionaries invited me to give them a talk on W. C. T. U. work, which I was glad to do. The time fixed was half past ten next morning, and the place the second cabin. Professor Sharpe was deputed to secure the consent of the officers, which he did, but reported they thought it better to have it in the first cabin, and in the evening. This put an entire new phase on the matter and made the ordeal a trying one, but as Dr. Reed said it might prove the opportunity of a lifetime to speak of our work to those who would otherwise never hear of it, I consented.

When the time came there gathered in the cabin all of the missionaries who were not busy with the babies, a fair representation of the passengers and two of the steamer's officers. Among the mission boards represented were the Church of England, the Canadian Methodist, the M. E. of America, the Methodist Church South, the Disciples and the Friends; the nationalities were even more varied, English, American, Canadian, Japanese, Australian, Chinese and several European nations.

. . . . .

YOKOHAMA, September 14.

We have arrived safely, though greeted with the "tail of a typhoon" in the harbor which made disembarkation more difficult and dangerous than anything of the voyage. The severest earthquake shock felt here in a year occurred last night, but only served to emphasize the greeting Japan is giving us.

Nothing can exceed the cordiality of this welcome. In spite of the gale, Mrs. Tashima, president of Japan W. C. T. U., and Mr. Sho Nemoto, of Tokio, Dr. Ogata and Mr. Hayushi, president of the temperance society of Yokohama, came out to the steamers, anchored half a mile in the bay, gave me all possible assistance and showed me every attention. Several representative Japanese ladies of Tokio have already called as has Mr. K. Ito, chief editor of the temperance magazine, and a number of other gentlemen. The Japanese tender me a reception, social with Japanese refreshments at five o'clock this afternoon, after which we adjourn to the Union Church for speeches. I there make my first attempt to speak through an interpreter.

The missionaries' welcome equals that of the Japanese in kindliness; between them they have planned and done everything for my comfort, even to securing my passport in advance. I am domiciled in a homelike boarding house "on the Bluff," right in the heart of the missionary colony, and find my next door neighbor, Mrs. VanPatten, of the Methodist Episcopal training school for girls, an old Illinois friend. Not far away is the Woman's Union Missionary Home, fragrant with memories of sainted Mrs. Pruyn, and enshrined in my heart's prayers ever since its first foundation stone was laid. In this house are Dr. Mary A. Gault, of Cleveland, true yoke-fellow with Esther Pugh in W. C. T. U. work there, and Miss Parmelee, of the same place, now teacher in the Dashisa School for Girls, Kioto.

Work seems to open out all over the Empire. To-morrow I start for the extreme north, Sapporo, in the island of Yeddo, stopping over Sunday in Hakadate, and on my return, at a number of places, making a three weeks' trip.

MARY ALLEN WEST.

THE FARMER'S WIFE AGAIN.

[Testimony from many grateful hearts comes for the work Mrs. H. L. Ricards has been doing for the farmer's wife. Lonely women from far off ranches and buried farms write with new hope now that this hungering, isolated, hard-worked, forgotten class is at last remembered in the gracious plans for human betterment. Mrs. Ricards herself tells how it happened in the following letter.—EDS.]

OLD UNION SIGNALS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In a country home in Ohio a tired little woman is rocking her baby to sleep. Her thoughts are playing truant to-night, for they are back in her school girl days, and the one who was the "other part of herself" then, steals in upon her memory and will not be put aside. She places her sleeping baby in his crib, and selecting some half dozen papers (UNION SIGNALS) from the table, addresses them ready for the morning mail, praying our Father's blessing may follow.

In a Kansas home, another woman, restless and unsatisfied with the narrow, pitiless life she is living, prays for work outside of home drudgery, the ceaseless revolution of milking, dish washing, the wash-tub and cook-stove. This bundle of old papers drops into her home on the hillside, and the sun shines through the windows of her soul again. They seem to suggest one way to work, but "the how" not being plain, she writes to the editor, and she, knowing so well the loving, willing hearts belonging to our white ribbon ranks, saw best to put an extract of that letter in THE UNION SIGNAL.

"Then came the deluge!" Big bundles and little bundles rained down upon the village of Strong until the inhabitants were astonished and the postmistress in despair. And the letters and cards! How gladly would this busy woman answer every one, but that is, for her, impossible, as they represent seventeen states. How earnestly she wishes each writer might know what an inspiration all this has been to her, and to those many others who receive these papers. She has taken for her motto, "Freely ye have received, freely give," and she is still passing on the good seed, whenever and wherever an opportunity is given. This for the sowing—the harvest we know is in the hands of Him whose promises are "Yea and amen forever."

Strong City, Kas. H. L. RICARDS.

SHALL THEY BE CONTINUED?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—From all along the line comes up the cry, "How shall we reach the farmer's wife?" and it is a hopeful sign that these appeals come mainly from farmers' wives themselves. Belonging to that class, I fully understand their peculiar conditions and environments, and the almost insurmountable difficulties of organizing them into working bands, and though the cause needs them—their strength and numbers—even more do they need the broadening influence of an interest in something outside the monotonous grind of daily life.

The idea of our editor in THE UNION SIGNAL of August 11 of forming a union at large to include the scattering ones who cannot belong to any local society, seems a good one, and no doubt this would, in time, become the largest union of all. But the question is how to get them in. This cannot be accomplished unless they are first interested in the work, and in order to get them interested, they must be supplied with our literature.

If we could introduce THE UNION SIGNAL into their homes—not a stray copy, to be read, thrown aside, and soon forgotten in the multitude of daily cares—but if it could be sent every week for three months, surely a large proportion would become interested enough to renew their own subscriptions at the proper time. They would learn to look for it, long for it, and when its visits cease, would miss such a grand, helpful paper too much to do without it. I wonder if its editors know how we prize it, we who read it week after week and year after year? Then ought not we to show our love and appreciation by works and not by a cold, bare faith, for faith without works is dead, and I am convinced that the great army of farmers' families will never be brought into working sympathy with the temperance cause unless we make a special effort to reach them. It seems to me that each local union ought to set apart a certain sum, or take up special collections for this work, and once a quarter, at least, make up a list of short term subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. Sister Kelly, of Missouri, thinks it difficult to obtain names and addresses of farmers' wives, but full lists could be supplied by the secretaries of Farmers' Alliances and People's Party Clubs, and at county and state fairs the nimble pencils of a few bright women there could jot down thousands of names. The fund to carry out the idea is a greater perplexity than finding the farmer's wife. Perhaps at the National Convention it may be deemed wise to make a new department for the farmer's wife. Some sister with a great heart and a full purse might here find an inexhaustible and blessed work. Let us hear through THE UNION SIGNAL from those interested, and so keep the ball rolling. A FARMER'S WIFE.

Kalamazoo, Mich.

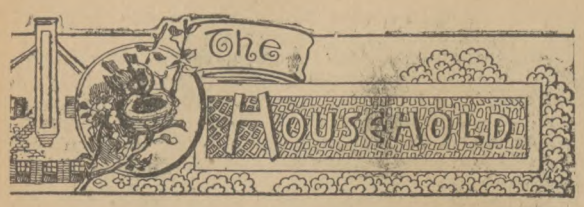
WOMEN'S NEIGHBORHOOD MEETINGS A SPECIALTY FOR THE COLUMBIAN YEAR.

EDITORS OF THE UNION SIGNAL:—In your issue of June 30, page 15, right hand column, there is an appeal for help from "A Farmer's Wife," who missed the sweet courtesies and the literature of W. C. T. U. circles. That appeal touched my heart. I have seen in many farmers' homes the loneliness, the weakness and despair that comes to women who are isolated from companionship with their own sex, and have never feasted on the cheery news of THE UNION SIGNAL. To them, death seems the only hope of relief. The present coming of the Kingdom they cannot discern.

Shall not a new department be added, or the old ones enlarged and revivified? Let a new crusade be inaugurated amongst the blessed sisters of the farm, and, also amid the families of city laborers. "The equal rights for all," certainly includes the working home-mothers of our entire country.

The Crusade of '73 and '74 broke up the indifference of our people, to the destruction of life, morals and property caused by intemperance. Now that woman suffrage is an avowed demand of our National union we need a new Pentecost upon the women whose votes we must have in the near future to help cleanse legislation of injustice. In Ezekiel, 37: 1-14 we read of a resurrection of "dry bones" of a nation. In the vision we find that they awoke under the word of the obedient prophet. The nation was called out of graves of covetousness, ignorance and indifference to become an army for Israel's God. The necessity of a new army of intelligent, conscientious voters will become apparent to the hard-working, honest, true angels of the fireside. Our valiant captains and soldiers should make the next enlargement of their field take the form of awakening all firesides to their needs and duties. These scantily clothed, half-starved and over worked women cannot promise any fees, but they are next God's heart if the needy dwell closest in His shadow and so are the most promising subjects for our work.

Kansas City, Mo. MARY M. CLARDY.



AN ODE TO WHITTIER.

BY D. E. PENNELL.

A strain is hushed upon New England hills,
The heart of nature with our own bereaved;
There comes a murmur from her pines and rills,
As though they grieved.

Oh, bard beloved! A nation's tears must flow
In living sorrow for thy spirit gone;
Above thy tomb the fair and sable brow
Shall bend as one.

No more thy lyre its clarion note shall sound
In faithful warning to thy brother man,
That truth and justice form the mete and bound
Of life's great plan.

That wrong can never covenant with right,
Nor power endure that from oppression springs;
That love and mercy honor and delight
The King of Kings.

And never more from out thy still retreat
Shall come the gentler ripples of thy song,
Lapsing as wavelets sparkling at the feet
Our shores along.

The winter glowing of thy warm hearth-fire,
The summer beauty of thy meadow bloom,
The blossoming clover, and the glad sweet brier,
The rich perfume,

Awoke to melody a soul that loved;
That conned a lesson in wayside flowers,
And throughout nature felt the pulse that moved
Her secret powers.

But closer yet thy human heart was laid
Against the worn and suffering of thy kind;
Earth's common woe thy tender pity made
A link to bind.

And wide thy Christian charity outspread,
Beyond the boundary of sect and creed,
Though simple rites thy humble spirit led,
And filled thy need.

Thy words enduring to all coming time
Shall build a glorious monument for thee;
The faith that deepens in thy graver rhyme
Its base shall be,

And form the earnest of thy place on high,
Above the changing of life's woof and warp;
There in thy hand we see with clearest eye
The golden harp.

And He who gave thy minstrelsy and kept
Its strength unweakened past thy green four-score,
A home hath given where no tears are wept,
Forevermore.

New York City.

DAVID DOUGLAS AND HIS WIFE.*

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

CHAPTER VIII.

Chesport was on the direct route between two much larger cities, and because of this, had heard the best campaign speakers, including Col. Cheviot and the Hon. Mr. Tinne of New York.

And now appeared the flyers announcing a Prohibition rally to be addressed by Col. Fairplaie and Miss Golden of the West.

"We have fine speakers," said Mrs. Douglas, "but I suppose there won't be much of an audience."

"Oh, yes, they will come out of curiosity!" replied her husband with a smile.

"Then, according to tradition, it will be wholly composed of women," said she. "Political curiosity is not confined to your sex, my dear, as you will find."

Mr. Douglas' prophecy proved correct; when the evening of the rally came, the large hall was well filled. It was noticeable that some prominent citizens and their wives took seats in the rear of the hall, conveying the impression that they had simply "dropped in" expecting to leave if they found it uncomfortably warm.

"Who fathers this meeting, anyway," inquired one young man of another, in the seat behind Mrs. Douglas and Mrs. Reed, who were together.

"They are up in front," was the reply. "It's the old prayer-meeting crowd, women and all—"

"How'd you happen to come then?"

"Oh, my sister trains with the temperance women and I came to see her home. But that doesn't explain why you are here."

"Well, I have to write to my mother every week, and she'll be wonderfully pleased if I tell her I've heard Miss Golden. She's one of the women my mother has framed and hung up,—a kind of patron saint, you know."

Number Two lowered his voice as he replied: "I did not feel very bad about coming, for I'm looking around a little for myself before I vote."

"So am I," said Number One.

The opening exercises were quite similar to those of any religious service. A double quartette of young people sang, and Mr. Douglas prayed as though he stood between the saloon and his own home.

"Got right down to business, didn't he?" remarked our friend Number One, which is not a bad criticism when we pause to consider it. Ministers often pray as though the struggle over intemperance was taking place upon some other planet—Saturn, for instance—and ask God to furnish capital and means to overthrow it. They hate to admit that the whole question lies in the hands of their own church members.

A rustle of expectation followed the prayer, and up the two aisles marched the children's Legion, bearing their banner inscribed, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up!"

They sang, too, a pretty marching song, and mother eyes, and father eyes, as well, followed them with tender and tearful glances.

Why is it that the old parties have no songs for the children? Do they not know that a vast influence is exerted by early impressions? Where is the poet who will set the beauties of license to music? And who will teach our "mission bands" to sing some psalm of praise over the exportation of rum by this government to Africa and other foreign countries? Defend it! there's a mistake, somewhere. Every great, humanizing, elevating theme which touches hearts and homes, finds natural expression in prayers and songs. But this is "eppisodin'," as Josiah Allen's wife would say.

Col. Fairplaie held the audience, as he reviewed the various questions, which are, by the courtesy granted to age, accepted as "political issues."

It was a grand lesson for the young men who listened, and for the members of the club as well, who in their zeal for prohibition had failed to sufficiently study other national questions which must necessarily be included in the platform of a reform party.

Perhaps Col. Fairplaie touched the average Chesportian heart most forcibly in his closing argument. "Some one says, 'men do not make laws, they discover them.' We find this true in every department of science. Men who believe that God has made all essential, fundamental laws, set themselves to discover and apply them to existing needs. They study and experiment days and nights and years, ofttimes feeling that they tread upon holy ground, so close do they come to the secrets of the Almighty. In medical, moral, and physical science we find these trained thinkers—experts, we may say—until our leaders in all departments are specialists. In all departments, did I say? The great business of law-making, the science of government, which involves the weal and woe of millions, is in the hands of men who are elected to make, not to discover laws. Such men should be statesmen—and that is a good old word once understood in this country. They should study the relation of capital to labor, of wealth to poverty, of education to all classes, the race problem, and above all the liquor problem, which complicates all the rest. Such men should study to keep this wonderful new world in line with God's will. Do you elect such men? You want the best physicians, the ablest lawyers, preachers and teachers—trust you Yankees to get the best you can for your money—but when it comes to law-makers, you take whoever the 'party' nominates, knowing that the party is run, not by patriots but by parasites, who exist on the life-blood of this nation. Would you trust such men to educate your children? Would yon choose them as your executors? Would you give them a contract to plan your home? Not unless you wanted to be swindled. But your politics, your politics, you will trust in the hands of such men, and then on Sunday fervently pray: 'O Lord! bless those who are in authority!' "

Such talk as this made some of his audience very uncomfortable, since Chesportians had not really reached a pachydermatous condition.

The young man referred to as "Number One," who had been perfectly quiet during the speech, exclaimed at its close, "He got there, didn't he?" And "Number Two" replied, "That's a 'home run'!"

When Miss Golden came forward there was no applause. Most of the churches in Chesport thought it highly improper for women to speak in public, and under these circumstances it was rather remarkable that so many people would flock to hear whenever a woman was announced to speak. Was this simply an unwarranted and deplorable curiosity, or was it a concession to that inner consciousness which recognizes "the public" as an outgrowth of homes, a company of people, to whom a woman may have a special message? I cannot answer a question still being discussed by doctors of divinity, and Miss Golden did not try to answer it. She quietly rose before her audience and talked to them as a woman might to her brothers and sisters. From a woman's standpoint she reviewed the temperance legislation of twenty-five years, showing with pathos, not unmixed with fine sarcasm, how, while men experimented, the victims of drink, men, women and children, passed on and down in one unbroken, unending procession. She told them how gradually she had sought to learn where laid the power most feared by the saloon element. She had found it, not in sermons nor lectures, resolutions nor petitions, societies nor pledges, but in consecrated ballots.

"Now she's going to talk 'woman suffrage.' I wish I hadn't come," whispered one irate sister to her husband, who stood in the aisle holding her gossamer over his arm.

To tell the truth, the temperance workers themselves had rather hoped that she would not touch the suffrage question. Chesportians could tolerate having their billboards covered with indecent pictures of female figures heralding theatrical play or circus; they could endure in their goodly city the existence of places not lawful to mention in the family circle; they could look complacently upon saloons, which sold to women as well as men, and actually hired poor women to scrub their stores and offices, but from any hint of woman's political equality, they begged to be delivered!

Miss Golden was evidently a "mind reader," for she said with sweet impressiveness: "I think in this question of home versus saloon, you do not care to see women using the ballot; but I belong to a class peculiarly interested in national affairs. I refer to the thousands of women whose husbands or those who would have been such, were slain in our Civil War. We have represented them in a sense all these years. We are an unrecognized branch of the grand army wearing no badge, asking for no offices, joining in no march or jubilee, but with a loyalty unswerving, and an anxiety which cannot be allayed, we watch the logic of events, and tremble for the results. It seems to us that the women of this land have a right to citizenship, that they may protest in the one most effective way against a complication of evil more widespread and threatening than this country ever knew." As Miss Golden said this, and much more in that provokingly convincing way of hers, there were signs of conviction on every side. Men found themselves laughing or crying, quite forgetful of previous prejudices and professions, until, with an effort, they again assumed a rigid exterior, and glanced around, wondering if any one had observed their momentary weakness.

The evening was undoubtedly a success, and Mrs. Douglas did not wonder that "Number One" ejaculated after Miss Golden had finished, "Say, Ben, I'm here yet, ain't I?" and "Number Two" responded, "She's converted me, and I shall tell Sue she can vote 'early and often' now, for all me."

Mrs. Douglas saw Ted and Dorothy hurrying down the aisle, for they had been with the singing children, and she inquired as they reached her: "Have you enjoyed it, and haven't you been sleepy?"

"I couldn't have enjoyed it more 'less I grow bigger," said Dot emphatically.

While the people in Mrs. Douglas' vicinity were waiting for a street car, and she for her husband, various entertaining bits of conversation were borne to her ears.

"This is the best campaign speech-making we've had thus far," said one man impulsively.

"Not by a good deal!" responded another. "Sentiment does well enough for women, but it takes Col. Cheviot to give us the good, hard facts about protective tariff and such things."

"I don't care," interrupted his wife, "I think Miss Golden's right about boys being worth more than—"

"Melinda! what do you know about politics?" growled her husband.

"I was proud of her, she was so easy and so logical," came from another quarter.

"Don't you think her sleeves were too short?" inquired the high tones of a young girl.

"She can afford to wear them short," replied an older lady severely.

"Queer she never got married," said a bald-headed widower.

"I wonder what's the reason?"

"All this talk won't amount to anything; when 'lection day comes they'll all hustle into the old pasture like so many sheep when the bars are down," said an old farmer, with a hearty laugh.

But there were others who were silent and thoughtful, and still others were silent and angry, which also marked an arrest of thought which was most encouraging to the cause.

*Copyrighted.

After an evening of such earnest and convincing appeals from speakers of national reputation, it would be natural to suppose that the local papers would publish a full report; but journalism is not always mindful of the "freedom of the press."

The Mercury made brief mention of the rally, stating that "the larger part of the audience were women"; while the other papers ignored it altogether.

"But the kingdom of heaven is like leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal."

Norwich, Conn.

(To be continued.)

WORDS TO THE WISE.—"THOSE HORRID POLITICS."

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

In a small company of women each had been specifying which kind of newspaper reading she cared for most, and which she skipped. Every one disclaimed any interest in politics and in public affairs generally. Said Aunt Phosie to them in her Aunt Phosie fashion:

"Now, ladies, excuse me, but in slighting politics it seems to me you don't know quite what you are doing. Say, now, what is politics?"

Then came definitions. "Fraud and corruption." "What the men quarrel about." "Nothing that concerns women." "Carried on by corporations, so my husband says."

"One of you," said Aunt Phosie, "mentioned just now the coal combine as something of no interest to women. That comes into politics, in one way, and is an uncommonly public affair. You must have skipped over that in reading the papers, so I will explain. Of course combine means to bring together. You combine a lot of strings into a rope. This gives them strength to pull. They all pull together and pull the same way, and act as one. Now, a number of railroad corporations in the coal country combine so as to bring their railroads under one management, and to get control of the coal mining and the coal carrying and the coal market and the prices. When it appears as if coal enough has been mined to make it plenty enough and cheap enough, so that everybody, poor folks and all, can have an abundance to keep them warm in winter, and for cooking their victuals, then the mining is stopped and miners by the hundreds are thrown out of work and the coal is held back. I read an account of great numbers of cars full of coal standing stock still on side tracks—for you know it will never do to let coal be too plenty. This would bring down prices. Coal could be carried at less cost if sent part way by water, and there have been sixty or seventy coasting vessels at a time staying idle at Philadelphia because the combine people are determined the coal shall go over their railroads so they shall get the pay.

"All this is for keeping up the prices, or what they call 'keeping the market firm.' You see that the object in combining is not that the people may have plenty of coal, but that the railroad owners may have plenty of money. I have seen it stated that when the corporations combine each one is guaranteed a certain yearly income and if the roads do not earn enough to allow this, why, what is lacking has to be put onto the price of coal and so taken out of the people. I have read that some of the managers get twenty-five thousand dollars a year apiece, and some get more.

"You perceive that these coal combines, by having control of the mines and the railroads, can put up prices higher and higher, and they do. Such an easy way to make a great deal more money! For the coal-carry is about twenty million tons a year. Adding fifty cents a ton to the price would give them ten millions of dollars more a year to divide among themselves, and they can just as easily add another fifty cents later on. This would be taking only twenty millions out of the people, a sort of private way of taxation. These high prices would give a boost to the figures on your coal bills—though of course this is no concern of women.

"But there's more to it than this. A great part of all the factories are run by means of coal, and if coal goes up, the prices of manufactured goods go up, such as are used in the family. Then the figures of more of your bills go up, and the common run of folks will have to pinch and to do without things—but of course this is no concern of women—nor when the sugar combine raises the price of sugar high enough to take two dollars a year from every member of every family in the country.

"When the coasting vessels stay idle the owners of them and the crews of them lose chances to earn money for their families, and when the miners are thrown out of work and there's no money in their hovels to buy anything to eat, why, their wives and children come nigh starvation—but then, this is no concern of women! And when the poor creatures, shivering in the garrets and underground places of cities, buying by the bucketful what little coal they can scrape together a few coppers to buy, when these have to see a layer or two layers taken off the scanty little bucketful—I suppose this is of no concern to women! All such matters are what they call public affairs.

"'In that light'? No; I suppose you never did think of it in that light. But what other light is there? No other. These combiners want luxuries and mansions and land, and they see this good way of getting them and they take it. Excuse me, ladies, but I do really think you'd better read of all that is said and done in regard to such matters, and if you'd just as soon sit awhile longer I will show how women stand affected by some other proceedings, which they call public affairs, and skip over in reading the newspapers."

Belmont, Mass.

BIBLE MOSAIC.*

BY J. H. SAMMIS.

"I will prophesy to thee of wine and strong drink."

Let us who are of the day be sober, not drunk with wine, not among wine-bibbers: not keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a drunkard, with such a one, no, not to eat; the harp and the viol are in their feasts, but they regard not the work of God, they drink and forget the law.

Beloved, we are sons of God, kings and priests unto God; it is not for kings to drink wine nor princes strong drink, neither shall any priests drink wine when they enter the inner court; let us draw near, having our bodies washed with pure water, and with joy shall we draw water out of the wells of salvation: Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, it biteth like an adder, it stingeth like a serpent.

Wine and new wine take away the heart. King Ahasuerus, when the heart of the king was merry, commanded to bring Vashti, the queen, to show to the people and to the princes her beauty: Lot went up out of Zoar and dwelt in the mountain and his two daughters with him, and the firstborn said unto the younger, "Come, let us make our father drink wine," and they made their father drink wine that night.

The priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink—: Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, offered strange fire before the Lord, and fire from the Lord devoured them; and the Lord spake unto Aaron, saying, Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou nor thy sons when ye go into the tabernacle: And Noah planted a vineyard and drank of the wine and was drunken, and he was uncovered within his tent, and cursed Canaan.

Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine and men of strength to mingle strong drink; while they are drunken as drunkards they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry—: Benhadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings with him, and the king of Israel sent out and slew the Syrians; Elah was in Tirzah drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza, and Zimri went in and smote him and killed him; and Nabal held a feast like the feast of a king; and Nabal's heart was merry within him, for he was very drunk, and it came to pass that about ten days after the Lord smote him that he died; Belshazar made a great feast to a thousand of his lords and drank wine before the thousand; and while he tasted the wine he commanded to bring the golden vessels that were taken from the house of God; that same hour came the fingers of a man's hand and wrote: Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting. In that night was Belshazar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain.

Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babblings? who hath wounds without cause?

He that loveth wine shall not be rich, nor drunkards inherit the kingdom of heaven. Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with drunkenness and that day come upon you unawares. Be not drunk with wine but be filled with the Spirit; the fruit of the Spirit is temperance.

*Links of Scripture found in Gal. 5: 22, 23; I The. 5: 8; Eph. 5: 18; Pr. 23: 20; I Co. 5: 11; Is. 5: 12; Pr. 31: 5; I Jn. 3: 2; Re. 5: 10; Pr. 31: 4; Eze. 44. 21; He. 10: 22; Is. 12: 3; Pr. 20: 1; Pr. 23: 32; Ho. 4: 11; Est. 1: 9, 10, 11; Ge. 19: 30, 36; Is. 28: 7; Le. 101: 2, 8, 9; Ge. 9: 20, 21, 25; Is. 5: 22; Na. 1: 10; I Ki. 20: 16, 21; I Ki. 16: 9, 10; I Sa. 25: 36, 38; Da. 5: 1, 2, 27, 30; Pr. 23: 29; Pr. 21; 17; I Co. 6: 10; Lu. 21: 34; Eph. 15: 18.

IS THERE but one day of judgment? Why, for us every day is a day of judgment—every day is a dies irae, and writes its irrevocable verdict in the flame of its west. Think you that judgment waits till the doors of the grave are open? Nay, verily, it waits at the doors of your houses, it waits at the corners of your streets. We are in the midst of judgment; the insects that we crush under our feet are our judges; the moments that we fret away are our judges; the elements that feed us judge as they minister, and the pleasures that deceive us judge as they indulge. Let us do the work of men while we bear the form of men.—Ruskin.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The power of faith—"Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning, fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thy hand, O King. . . . . Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the son of God."—Dan. 3: 17, 25.

We have just paid Marshall Field this week an additional $20,000 on his stock, besides interest. Who shall say our God is not able to deliver and give the temperance women of this nation the ownership of their beautiful Temple, in order that the captives may be set free? I fear there is going to be a great shamefacedness among a large number of our white-ribboners when they visit Chicago in the great jubilee year of 1893 and see tablets in the Temple which have been set apart to record the gifts of unions who have contributed a hundred dollars or more to its erection, with scarcely a name upon them. We do beg all unions to hasten and take up the work at once. There is still time enough before June, 1893, for each union in the country which has a membership of twenty-five or thirty members to raise $100, but each member will have to pledge to fill a mite box, $3.65 (or a penny a day for a year). Let no one shrink from the privilege of having a part in this great work by the excuse of being too poor to give such an amount. We don't ask you to give it if you cannot afford it, but we do ask you to have your friends give pennies, nickels and dimes until your proportion of the desired amount is secured. We hold where there is strong desire and purpose, no disability will hinder an earnest white-ribboner from doing her little part in the accomplishment of the grand whole. If presidents of unions will write me that they desire to raise $100 for this purpose I will send to them free of charge a large picture of the Temple and all documents in regard to it; also any number of mite-boxes wanted by paying the cost of transportation; forty-five cents pays for thirty boxes.

***

The following letter from Mrs. Lide Aten, Wellsville, O., demonstrates the spirit which should animate the presidents of all our unions. She writes: "My heart is light as a feather this morning for I can tell you we had a lawn fête last Tuesday, and we have clear of expense about $70. So you see we can send you $45, the balance due on our pledge for the Temple. This has been on my mind and heart ever since I sent the $55. Two weeks ago I told the ladies I would give my house and grounds, and do all in my power for the success of an entertainment, if they would help, and we all feel so thankful that we did so well. I hope all our unions will go and do likewise, for I know every union can raise a hundred dollars if it will, especially if there is one determined woman who will never let up until the thing is done." Mrs. F. M. Hooper, treasurer of the Brookline, Mass., W. C. T. U. writes as follows: "Enclosed please find check for $100, from our union toward payment of the Temple debt. We are glad to have our name included in the list upon the Massachusetts tablet. This gift has been made possible for us through the devotion and generosity of a member of our union, Mrs. J. D. Sturtevant, who proposed the measure and gave generously toward it." Mrs. H. O. Sisson, Anaconda, Mont., writes: "We, the members of the Anaconda W. C. T. U. wish to have an interest in the Temple, and are confident that we can raise $100 for that purpose. You will find enclosed $25, our first payment."

***

The Ava, Ill., W. C. T. U. has sent $10.21 on the $100 pledge for the 20th Illinois district, which the unions of the district are raising through the effort of Mrs. Cora V. Husband. The 17th Illinois District is also raising $100, $15.76 having been received for it through the faithful efforts of Miss E. B. Dickinson. The W. C. T. U. of Romeo, Mich., sends $21 on a pledge of $100. Mrs. Annie Alexander, Winfield, Kan., sends $37.87 as a first installment on a pledge of $100. She writes that Edith Adams, a young woman of twenty-two years, who has never sat up in her life, and who cannot even feed herself, sends $1.38 of the above amount. The Lady Henry Somerset W. C. T. U., St. Paul, Minn., sends a first installment of $25, on a pledge of $100. Central City, Neb., W. C. T. U. sends $26 first payment on a pledge of $100. Mrs. S. S. Shove, New Orleans, La., sends $7.30, first payment of the W. C. T. U. on a pledge of $100. The money for this first payment came from the mite boxes of two of the oldest members of the union, Mrs. O. Dowd, 83 years old, and Mrs. Sarah Dalton, another aged lady who is entirely blind; she is now filling her mite-box a second time. The faithful employes of the coffee house of the Central W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis, Minn., send another $5 on their $100 pledge. Thirty dollars come from the Plattsburg, N. Y., W. C. T. U. on a $100 pledge $10; of this amount has been raised by the Y's. The Providence, R. I., W. C. T. U. will have its name on a tablet largely through the work of one faithful woman, Mrs. A. J. Winship; the last $20 received she secured from the city hall officials and clerks, $60 having already come through her efforts.

***

Mrs. Fanny K. Earl, Lake Mills, Wis., vice-president of state W. C. T. U., sends $1 with the advance pages of her new W. C. T. U. song book, "Water Lilies"; one song alone, "The hand that rules the world," is worth the price (35c.) of the entire volume. Mrs. Earl says: "Through the song book we hope to do something for our Temple beautiful, as well as to help a little in singing our cause into the hearts of the people."

***

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box, descriptive card and bulletin; remember, all who fill a mite-box ($3.65) before next April will receive a photographic group consisting of Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple. All drafts should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh. All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His Holy name.—Ps. 103: 1.

OUR BILL OF FARE.

"Tennyson" is appropriately given the place of honor on the contributed pages. The only drawback to the delight with which "Dr. Martha" is received is the fact that the story is drawing to a close. The Parisian philanthropist, Jules Simon, is admirably sketched by Miss Norton. The Post Exchange (formerly the Post Canteen) is well outlined by Chaplain Bateman. The best name for the Prohibition party is discussed by Mr. Edward Evans. A brief but beautiful outline of John G. Whittier is given by a personal friend, Mrs. H. E. Davis. Briefer yet is Mr. Woolley's "Railroad Ties," which everybody eagerly reads. "Westward to the Far East," describes Miss West's ocean voyage to Japan. "The Farmer's Wife" is always a welcome and fruitful theme. Another ode to Whittier introduces the Household department, as well as "David Douglas," "Words to the Wise," "Bible Mosaic" and the Temple Items. Every one, old and young, should read the Children's page in the rear of the paper, as well as the News from the Field and the important Convention Corner on page twelve.

A STRATEGIC POINT OF HISTORY.

Although Chicago does not claim as many great men as Boston, the "electric city" is fortunate in being so much nearer the "center of the world," that she gets all of the good things going, among them Boston's best and brainiest. The great Sunday closing ratification meeting reported in our columns last week, was graced by one of the principal platform orators of the day, Rev. Joseph Cook. Although this meeting was the chief occasion of Mr. Cook's visit to our city, he could not leave without visiting our beautiful W. C. T. U. Temple which he characterized as "a wonderful exposition of woman's work and worth."

Knowing Mr. Cook's keen interest in the Columbian Exposition, we captured him for a conference on the subject and are delighted to present to our readers the following interview:

"What do you consider, Mr. Cook, the strongest influence brought to bear upon Congress to close the Exposition gates on Sunday?"

"Petitions. Actual signatures of twenty five millions of Christians are now on file at Washington, asking for Sunday closing at the World's Fair. The church membership of the United States is twenty millions. According to the lowest estimates ordinarily made in such cases, these facts show that forty millions of our population favor Sunday closing. This was Senator Hawley's claim on the floor of the Senate. In Boston, the first question asked a stranger is, 'Have you ever written a book?' in New York, 'How much are you worth?' in Chicago, 'How much do you expect to be worth?' in Washington, 'Do you hope to be reëlected?' The American people have convinced Congress that this latter question is of great and growing importance in connection with votes on Sunday closing. The quality as well as the quantity of the protest raised against Sunday opening was duly considered by Congress; the result was that by great and unprecedented majority Sunday opening was prohibited in both Houses as a condition of a national appropriation of $2,500,000 in the aid of the Fair."

"Is there any danger of a repeal of the Sunday closing proviso?"

"The president signed this bill, the directors accepted the money under the imposed conditions, the contract, therefore, between the government and the Fair has been signed, sealed and executed. Unless by reverse of contract and the transformation of extraordinary large majorities to new opinions in Congress, no movement for the reversal of the national decision will succeed. It is confidently believed that petitions cannot be gathered in the United States for Sunday opening outnumbering those which have already been sent in for Sunday closing, and it is certain that the quality of the petitions against Sunday closing as thus far gathered is notoriously inferior to that of their rivals. Mercenary considerations depreciate its quality, to say nothing of popular delusions and vices. Placards calling for signatures to petition for Sunday opening are now being abundantly displayed in saloons and in or near other places of vile resort. It is not intended to deny that many respectable parties petition for Sunday opening, but the unquestionable general truth is that the intellectual and moral respectability of the movement for Sunday opening as compared with that of its rival is like that of the churches and schools on one side compared with the saloons and mercenary Sunday advertising sheets on the other."

"Do you believe petitions are practical?"

"The practical value of petitions is illustrated by the fact that in a congressman's large mail there is said to be usually not more than thirty letters a year not dictated by love of office or a desire for some personal favor. Entirely disinterested applications for congressional action, as Dr. Crafts says after prolonged work in the lobby at Washington for Sunday closing, 'Are as rare as a day in June.' Average constituents regard congressmen as past praying for and expect far too little from the results of personal application to their representatives and from local agitation. On a religious question too many constituents are misled by false notions as to the relation of church and state in America. We have no union of church and state here and desire none, but the sacred right of petition from John Quincy Adams' time to the present day is assuredly ours, and has been honored again and again by magnificent triumphs on national questions of moral concern."

"Then you believe that friends of the cause should continue to petition Congress and the National Commission?"

"In view of the vigor with which the right of petition is exercised by the opponents of Sunday closing, we believe that it should continue to be exercised vigorously by the friends of Sunday observance, especially if there should prove to be the slightest danger of a reversal of the action of Congress. We urge alertness at all points of the compass, for our opponents are not likely to sleep, and portions of the press of the country favor them from obvious mercenary motives. So does the immense wealth behind the saloon. But there is more wealth behind the churches and the respectable portion of society than behind all the opponents. The forces of the churches are in this case substantially united, and are already triumphant in the preliminary contest. If there should seem to be danger of congressional collapse, the people, in their colleges and churches and philanthropic parties of every name need only to speak out with emphasis by petitions and in personal letters and by great public meetings like the one just held in the Auditorium in Chicago to renew and even enlarge congressional courage, in support of national precedent."

"What do you think of the proposition to boycott the Exposition provided the gates are open on Sunday or liquor is sold on the grounds?"

"The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, now a national and international force of prodigious significance, contains many members who threaten to boycott the Exposition in case Sunday opening and liquor selling under national auspices are not prevented. A large number of Methodist conferences have taken the same position. It is our opinion that the sentiment represented by these protests is growing and is exceedingly ominous to the financial interests of the Exposition in case reversal of congressional action of Sunday opening is obtained, and liquor selling proceeds unchecked. A movement is on foot to organize national protest against liquor selling on the grounds, and we believe that agitation may yet be successful in ridding the nation of the disgrace of going into partnership with the saloon in connection with a great commemorative display of that prosperity of the republic of which the saloon is the chief enemy."

"Whose duty is it to see to the enforcement of the prohibitory law which governs the territory of the Exposition grounds?"

"Great responsibility rests upon the state officers of Illinois to execute the laws of the commonwealth. It is distinctly provided by the national enactment appointing the commissioners that they shall do nothing contrary to the state law. The laws of Illinois, as great legal experts affirm, forbid the sale of liquors in Jackson Park, the site of the Exposition. Congressional action already taken, permitting rumselling on the grounds, is therefore legally inoperative, unless these Illinois laws are repealed. We urge agitation for the enforcement of the laws now on the statute book of the state, and the utmost vigilance to prevent their repeal. A press subsidized by the liquor traffic will no doubt assist in repealing these laws. It is to be hoped, however, that the American people at large will not be betrayed by the alert population of the foremost state in the Mississippi Valley at the strategic point of history at which Illinois now stands."

OUR SPECIAL FUNCTIONS.

Has the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of to-day a raison d'être? The question is constantly coming to us in one or another form. It is a question, the frequent repetition of which is one of the characteristics of our age.

The time when individual, party, organization, or even the church itself could live upon a past record, be that record never so glorious, has long since gone by. "Act in the living present," is the motto by which, consciously or unconsciously, all things are to-day gauged. "What have you done?" fades into absolute insignificance before the transcendent importance of the correlative question, "What are you doing?" The world no longer deifies the dead past; it has learned that for its weal or woe, it must look to the living heart-throbs of the present. Again and again, much more frequently as the years go on, must our great organization confront this question.

The causes contributing to our first being are unhesitatingly conceded. The good we have thus far accomplished is universally acknowledged; "but"—and here comes in that ominous pause—"is not the work done? If so, why continue the form of the organization?" "Or, if not done, are there not other forces, other agencies, some of them evolved since the W. C. T. U. came into being capable of carrying on its work more efficiently." In country unions especially do we meet this problem, and find that it carries with it a constant temptation to dissolve the organization of the union and unite with the Relief Corps, the Home Missionary Society, the Christian Endeavor, King's Daughters, the Daughters of Rebecca, Sons of Temperance, or kindred societies.

We gladly concede the good in each and all of these organizations; we question not the motives which called them into being, nor the work accomplished by them and yet we can but feel that one of the dangerous tendencies of this age is that which leads to a multiplicity of organizations; that if one organization can be found which combines the best elements in all the others, that organization, especially since "the time is short," is the one which comes to all with the strongest claim for attention.

Can we substantiate our claim that the W. C. T. U. is this all-embracing organization? Let us see.

What do its forty-three distinct departments mean except that it is carrying on, quietly and persistently, every known line of reform? Starting with the two-fold idea of reforming the individual drunkard and abolishing the saloon, it had not gone far in its march toward victory before it learned that each evil is related to all evil; that in striking a blow at one form of sin, we are met straight way by all other forms of sin, and that the successful reform movement of the future must be made up of countless movements; a new e pluribus unum. In no other single organization can the mere fact of membership ally one with so many of the forces making for righteousness all over the world! And that, too, not merely with those forces which have their outward manifestation, but with those deeper lying forces so seldom recognized because working so far beneath the surface.

"Because it is easier to see a drunkard than a principle," was the answer of a well-known suffragist, when asked at the Boston Convention why such crowds came to our meeting, and so few, comparatively, to the suffrage gatherings. It was a profound saying, but its application to the W. C. T. U. was a false one. Whatever may be the causes contributing to W. C. T. U. popularity the fact that it sees only the "drunkard," or that outward of which the drunkard is a type, is surely not one.

Indeed, another class of critics is inclined to rebuke us because we have merged our thought for the "drunkard" into our fight for the "principle." We do not believe the rebuke is merited. Our women, we are sure, have never gotten away from their thought for the individual in their struggle for the universal; but, if it were true is not the universal more than the individual? Must not our reform work be always less than our work of building up the "new heaven and the new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness"—the establishment of a society in which reform work shall be henceforth and forever unnecessary?

Our great society is preëminently the John the Baptist of this age, crying, not in words but deeds as well, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight.' We have really caught the Master's interpretation of His own prayer—"Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven.' "The kingdom of Heaven" has come to mean to us not the life after death, but what it meant to Him who used the phrase so often, a kingdom of Heaven's life, Heaven's love, Heaven's impulses built up here on earth, worked out in faithful effort, a concrete whole by those in whose hearts and lives the abstract principle had long lain a germinating seed.

Some day, when the "Philosophy of the Kingdom of Heaven" shall be written, it will be found that, unconsciously to themselves, the women of the W. C. T. U. have been working out that philosophy from the beginning.

There are other reasons why we claim that no other organization has usurped the plan of our own or is likely to usurp it. Its flexibility of form, its all roundness of manifestation, its catholicity of heart, its aggressiveness of action, its unflinching bravery of bearing, and its absolute truthfulness to conviction, are all qualities unsurpassed and unsurpassable.

But all these are as nothing compared with the transcendent fact that the W. C. T. U. has caught the divine conception of the Kingdom of Heaven; thus it is working for the city "which lieth four-square," whose "height, length and breadth" are "equal" and that in working for God's end it chooses God's means, and discards nothing, whether of heart, brain or soul which can be moulded into the inner life or outward manifestation of "the perfect humanity—the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

OUR WHITE-RIBBON ANCHORAGE.

The Anchorage Mission was opened in 1886, on Fourth Avenue, Chicago, which is in the "morally burnt district." It was the first work attempted by the president of the National W. C. T. U. after she had received the arrest of thought through the revelations made by William T. Stead in the Pall Mall Gazette. The active instrument in carrying out her new hopes and purposes was Dr. Kate Bushnell, who had been one of her most promising and devoted pupils in the Northwestern University, 1873–4, and who is now in company with Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, formerly an editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, making the world's tour in the interest of women.

Having no money whatever with which to begin, Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell attempted nothing more than a reading-room for homeless and unfortunate girls, which, through the warm coöperation always given by Mrs. Matilda B. Carse to every undertaking of Miss Willard's, was fitted up and opened under the auspices of the Central W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. Carse has long been president. We well remember the day when this occurred. How bright and cheerful the rooms had been rendered, what a company of good women gathered! Miss Julia Ames, the lamented, young associate editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, placed in the front window of the reading-room an Easter lily, saying, "That is all the sign that needs to be displayed. Every woman who looks at it knows that it is the symbol of purity. I will keep a lily there from now on in token of my devoted interest in this enterprise, and as a white hand beckoning the sorrowful and lost into the ways of blessedness and peace."

This moral Pharos shining out through the darkness of Chicago's roughest sea of sin was simply a beginning, only an attempt, nothing more than a place where women of vice and sorrow, the sinning and the sinned against, could come if they chose to do so, for an hour and a day, finding sympathy and advice, finding prayer and hope, finding a warm, sisterly hand of welcome and an earnest effort to help them in practical, everyday ways no less than in spiritual. Little by little the work succeeded and soon outgrew its very moderate accommodations. It could shelter a few girls during the day and give them a light luncheon, but at night they must go back to their old haunts or be turned into the streets. Ere long it was decided that a home must be provided, and after careful searching the present house, No. 125 Plymouth Place, was secured. This home is located like the other, in darkest Chicago, surrounded on all sides by vile dens, saloons and dance houses, but it is the only place of shelter and protection which can be sought by a young woman or girl, if she wants to leave the life that has dragged her down. It is the only place, you may say, aside from the "Erring Woman's Refuge." It is a building of moderate size, formerly a dwelling house, and accommodates, at the utmost, but eighteen. Nevertheless, during the last year over five hundred different girls have been boarders in this mission, and over three thousand lodgings have been given.

Ours is a preventive and a rescue work. This humble home is an "anchorage" indeed, where young girls who may or may not have taken the first step in vice can have an opportunity for sober, second thought, and this home is furnished them without money and without price until work is provided for them or they are sent to their parents or friends. In fact, the "Anchorage" is a sort of whispering gallery of the voiceless and forgotten in the Paris of the Great Northwest. It is a clearing house of sinners, and we hope to some extent at least, of sin. Its whole aim is to exploit those who have been in these houses of an infamous detention back to the better lives and pure homes of their childhood and youth, to the compassion of their relatives, if they have relatives who are compassionate, to the rehabilitation of honest work. The police records and the morning papers are searched by our good angels of the white ribbon, who seek these most degraded and fallen of all the human race and do their utmost to make them believe that they can be better. It is hoped and our experience has ascertained the hope to be well grounded—that their faith in the women who love and work for them may help give back their faith in humanity and afford a groundwork for their faith in God. For, no human being can subsist except by faith any more than a plant can live without air. Shipwreck of these three faiths seems to have been made almost universally by the class of women whom the "Anchorage" would help.

Homes and situations have been found for the girls who have entrusted themselves to us—five have been well married; two are conducting a large laundry; one is carrying on a small fruit farm and often brings fruit, butter and eggs to the "Anchorage" as a token of her affectionate remembrance. One is keeping a large and respectable boarding house and has saved several hundred dollars.

We have not space to mention the many instances of those who are writing constantly to us, thanking us with tenderness for the timely aid and comfort given to them while at the "Anchorage," or of the many gifts or the many donations of money, food, clothing, coal, ice, etc., that have been prompted by our kind friends. It should be especially mentioned that Kohlsaat, Chicago's most popular baker, has gratuitously supplied the mission with bread, cakes and pies ever since it was founded, six years ago.

The work done at the "Anchorage" speaks for itself. It rescues fallen women, helps friendless girls, cares for young mothers and their babes. To day it is crowded with young girls who are trying to lead a better life, some of whom are obliged to sleep on the floor for want of room. A Baptist society in the city offers to take the mission and conduct it, but we cannot bear to make it over even to friends so good and kind. It is a mission founded by the white-ribboners, and we firmly believe they are willing to sustain it. What we need is evident—a larger home, better accommodations and a surer foundation, for we now live "from hand to mouth"; and but for the devoted and unceasing efforts of Miss Alice Bond, of Evanston, Ill., a woman of fine presence, character, and property enough to enable her to devote time and efforts without remuneration to this holy cause, the Anchorage could not possibly have been continued up to this time. Miss Bond has begged for it from door to door for years, as have other women good and true. Miss Nettie Houghton is our special solicitor among the farmers and in the villages and outlying parts. In response to her call, fresh and toothsome products of the country homes come to the Anchorage, and are among the most gratefully received of all our contributions. Miss Kate Jackson, of Evanston, is the secretary of the board, appointed by the Central W. C. T. U., and having this enterprise in hand. She accompanies Miss Bond on many of her visits to the purlieus of the city, "seeking to save," and to the business houses of the rich seeking the "sinews of war." We hope good people will send money to Mrs. Greenlee, treasurer of the Anchorage, 677 Monroe street, or to Miss Alice Bond, chairman of the committee, Evanston, or to Mrs. E. P. Vail, 2129 Calumet avenue, Chicago. The devoted lady whom we have last named, though advanced in years, gives her time and energies to help women who have strayed. We ask for cast-off clothing, material for underclothing, gingham or calico for dresses, and we hope and pray that good men and women will help us to get the ground and build a home that shall bring in scores and hundreds where we now have but units of lost ones found. The Anchorage appeals to the Christian public with earnest confidence:

"Help your fallen sisters rise,
While the days are going by."

THE board of managers of the National Temperance Society at its recent meeting unanimously adopted the following memorial which has been sent to the National Commissioners of the World's Columbian Exposition: "The Board of Managers of the National Temperance Society respectfully and earnestly ask you, as authorized by act of Congress, to make all needful rules and regulations for the government of the World's Columbian Exposition, to at once revoke all contracts, publicly alleged to have been made by the local directory of the Exposition, subordinate to your body, for the sale of intoxicating beverages upon the grounds of the Exposition—illegal contracts, involving, as stated upon the floor of the United States Senate, forfeitures of upwards of half a million dollars; and we furthermore urge that you will distinctly prohibit all dispensing of intoxicants, by sale or otherwise, in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition.

"We respectfully represent—

"I. That, by a statute now in force, the state of Illinois makes illegal the sale of intoxicating beverages in connection with all fairs and exhibitions within its borders.

"II. That, within the territory occupied by the World's Columbian Exposition, the sale of intoxicating beverages is also rendered illegal by local prohibitory statute.

"III. That, in consideration of the honor of our country, the safety and well-being of our own citizens, and the welfare of visitors from other lands, and that America may furnish a praiseworthy temperance object lesson to foreign countries, we pray you to forbid all traffic in intoxicants in connection with the Exposition held under your jurisdiction."

To lose with high endeavor is to win,
And they but fail who build success on sin.
—J. T. Trowbridge.

***

In opening a question-box the English method would be a good one for us to adopt; I think it was introduced by Lady Henry Somerset, at all events, it is practiced by her. Some delegate or member appointed for the purpose sits at the question box and hands over to Lady Henry the questions just as they occur. If something like this is not done there is apt to be complaint of favoritism.

***

Labouchere, the well-known editor of Truth, says he keeps it before his readers that those who write him on post-cards, and he has about two thousand communications every week, will always be the first to receive attention; those who write short letters will come next, and those who write long ones, last, if at all. It is certainly according to the laws of mind that a busy person is most apt to attend to the wants of one who states his case with great point and brevity, whether in spoken or in written words.

***

Be careful from whom you accept favors. The duty of gratitude may become a heavy burden to you.

***

An interested farmer's wife who thinks that she and her too much hedged-in sisters need more recreation writes On Duty and heartily indorses the plan of forming W. C. T. Unions among them. She thinks, and rightly too, that the temperance work would bring them the necessary recreation (or change of employment) in the forming of L. T. L's distributing literature, and in giving socials and temperance entertainments. By taking our work to the isolated sisters on the farm, we will give them a wide and helpful outlook, and aid in keeping them in touch with advancing Christian womanhood.

***

Pond lilies are all the sweeter for having come up from the filth. The mud and mire are life to them, and through them are transformed into the most exquisite loveliness. So a pure, brave, hopeful heart may gather from unwelcome and even repulsive surroundings, sustenance for a higher life.

***

He who overlooks a small occasion will have lost his eyesight when a great one comes. Never wait for a great chance to do good—never seek for some great thing, but improve each small opportunity as it comes to you, and some day you will be surprised to find that the truly great occasion of your life would have been overlooked had you not been keeping track of the small things.

***

Some souls there are like the cactus blossom, surrounded by a prickling mass of ugliness, themselves a marvel of sweetness.

***

The American college for girls, situated in Constantinople was founded in 1871. Though the funds for the institution were raised by the woman's board of missions it is not a mission school. The language of the college is English, but each student is also required to study her own vernacular. During the last year one hundred and forty students, representing eight nationalities, were enrolled.

***

At its last annual meeting held in Nottingham early in September, the British Medical Association admitted women to membership by a vote of three hundred to five. At a confirmatory meeting held afterwards in London, the vote stood fifty-five to twelve in favor despite the strongest efforts made by the opponents of women to reverse the previous vote.

***

Dr. Cunningham Geikie says that in a program of a bazar for the building fund of a church in Birmingham, England, recently published, eight pages were given to advertisements of "family ales," and other strong drinks. As an offset to this, he adds: "There are now no fewer than 2,613,000 young people in the United Kingdom who are members of Bands of Hope, or other temperance societies for the young." And the latter fact is the one to be taken as the prophecy of the outcome of the temperance struggle. As Froude has said, "The promise of the future is not with the ice and sleet, but with sunshine, with gladness and hope."

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

SOUTH AFRICA.

A LETTER FROM MRS. BRIDGMAN.

The following copy of a resolution from our Natal W. C. T. U. will at least give evidence that Miss Willard is gratefully and lovingly remembered in this dark corner of the earth, hence I take pleasure in forwarding it:

Resolved, The W. C. T. U. of Natal, South Africa, at their third annual convention, have heard with much regret of the death of Mrs. Downs, Miss Julia Ames and other Christian workers. They desire to express especial sympathy with Miss Willard who has lost in Miss Ames not only an efficient co-worker, but a most loving friend.

They thank God that while He has seen fit in His providence to remove Miss Ames He has raised up a successor so willing and gifted as Lady Henry Somerset, whose life of consecration, joined to her exalted rank, enables her to wield a mighty influence, and is a noble example to Christian women in every station.

[Signed] MRS. LAURA B. BRIDGMAN, President.
ELIZA SCOTT, Secretary W. C. T. U., So. Africa.

We still live and move and grow a little in our union work here, and expect to take a new and vigorous start ere long when our most eagerly expected and long desired missionary shall have taken us in hand. It was with unbounded joy and thankfulness that I read in THE UNION SIGNAL that Miss Alice Palmer, of Indiana, was to leave for South Africa. We do earnestly pray that she may come clothed with power from on high for this great and important work, and I hope she will not be oppressed or cast down if she does not find the wide-spread interest and enthusiasm which she may have hoped to see.

The fact that the work has lived and grown at all gives evidence of divine planting and care. God knows we would gladly work for it more earnestly and effectively if we could. Our third annual convention held in Pieter Maritzburg, July 9–12, was considered a success. It was indeed gratifying to see the interest in considering new branches of work. We hope to have a printed report to send in due time.

MRS. LAURA B. BRIDGMAN,
President W. C. T. U.
Umzumbi Mission Station, Natal, South Africa.

THE WORK OF A SOUTH AFRICAN UNION.

We held our annual meeting in the Temperance Hall at Woodstock, opening with a conference of two hours' duration. The noontide hour of prayer was faithfully observed, and God's blessing asked on our leaders, Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and the blessed women who are carrying the message of temperance round the world. There was a good attendance, and a spirit of earnest prayer prevailed, and all felt it was good to be there. The afternoon was devoted to business, hearing reports and electing officers. The president stated that though there had been fewer public meetings than usual during the year, still an amount of good work has been accomplished. She also said that while visiting many branches of women's work she felt more and more convinced of the mighty power of women's influence. While in England she had had a large case of temperance and anti-tobacco literature given by Mr. Eccles, of Lancashire, which had been widely distributed in South Africa, was gratefully received, and it was hoped would result in great good. The treasurer reported receipts for the year at £29 11s 11½d; expenditure £25 16s 11½d. The same lady had conducted weekly meetings of the Band of Hope, at which the children were taught the evil results of the use of alcohol and narcotics. They were much interested in the lessons. During the year there have been three tea meetings and the annual trip, all of which had been greatly enjoyed. There have also been weekly meetings for the older pupils, at which much encouragement has been received. The weekly class for sewing is making steady progress. The officers were elected and superintendents of young women's work, Bands for Hope, social purity, prison work. Letters were read from Miss Willard, Miss Bergh, Mrs. Woodbridge. At six in the evening there was a meeting with the railway mission workers, and it was arranged to hold gospel temperance meetings weekly.

The public meeting in the evening was large and enthusiastic and the singing good. The president gave a brief review of the work of the past eight years. Interesting speeches were made and ten new members joined the union.

We hope the day may not be far distant when this great and glorious work may be widely spread throughout South Africa.

ELIZA DENHOLM,
President W. C. T. U. Woodstock, South Africa.

AUSTRALIA.

WORKERS IN QUEENSLAND.

A colony, whose drink bill in one year averaged £5, 12s and 6d ($23.12) per head is surely worthy of a place in your pages. Truly, "the odds are greatly against us," but this fact stimulated us to greater effort. We have a band of women of whom any country might be proud, from the young girl in her teens to the white-haired president of eighty four.

Many of our unions keep the railway boxes supplied with literature, a great boon to residents in the bush. Thousands of tracts have been given to patients in the hospitals, text cards and bouquets are given and many an invalid has blessed the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

We are trying to introduce temperance literature into every home in the colony. We have now two unions west of Toowoomba; the first organized was in a small village settlement, where the only public building was a Methodist church, and wonderful to relate, no drink seller had obtained a license. The union at Noma (farther west) organized a few days after the above, finding their sisters in the new settlement wanted to prevent any one selling death and destruction to their children, gave a concert, the first sacred concert "in the memory of the oldest inhabitant," and thus were supplied with funds to contest for the third clause of local option, "No new licenses." This holds good for two years, and if carried will practically mean total prohibition in one place in Queensland at least.

At Albion, a suburb of Brisbane, the union two years old has made rapid strides, held monthly evangelistic meetings in the different churches, has a Y union with thirty names given in at the first meeting, also a Loyal Temperance Legion with one hundred members. "Ackerman" union (the first that Miss Ackerman formed in the colony) has three branches, all doing aggressive work, one of which has (I believe) the oldest president in Australia, in her eighty-fifth year.

Our scientific instruction department has been energetically worked. The central union of Brisbane, uniting with the different branches in the suburbs, invited children from the state schools to compete in an examination on Dr. Richardson's book, which is used as the text book in all the schools, with the result that about fifty children will receive prizes at a grand concert and public meeting to be held in honor of the event. Examinations have been held and prizes given by several unions in the colony.

At Laidley, one of our members has solved the unfermented wine difficulty thus: "I make a quantity of grape jelly in the season, and as I require, I dissolve as much as necessary in water, so that I can always procure it fresh." She gives it to those churches who use unfermented wine. We have some enthusiastic workers in our Y unions. May God hasten the day when these well trained soldiers shall march against the foe with resistless force.

MRS. C. P. BRITTEN,
Queensland, Australia.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

All those wanting copies of the minutes of the first World's W. C. T. U. convention held in Boston, Mass., November 10 and 11, 1891, will please send at once to Alice E. Briggs, Evanston, Ill., U. S. A. Price, 10 cents per copy or $1 per dozen copies.

The following are the names of the presidents for the different South American countries in which Mrs. Leavitt organized last winter: Argentina, Miss Mary L. Swaney, 949 Calle Comercio, Rosario; Uruguay, Mrs. Marinda Greenman, 242 Calle Tacuaramba, Montevideo; Brazil, Mrs. E. E. Brelsford, Colegio Piracicabana, Piracicaba, Estado de Saõ Paulo.

There are five colonies in Australia, each of them having a colonial president, Mrs. M. M. Love being the president of Victoria. Miss Ackerman is president of Australasia which includes the continent of Australia and the adjacent islands. The efficient officers of the South Australian W. C. T. U. include Miss Mary J. George, Colonial office, W. C. T. U.. Franklin St., Adelaide. Miss Hannah Chewings is the colonial superintendent of press and social purity departments.

NEW JERSEY.

THINGS POPULAR AND NOT SO POPULAR.

Silently, but surely, the educational work of the W. C. T. U. during the summer is ripening for the autumnal harvest.

Tabor—Morris county school of methods, although held but one day and evening, was a pronounced success—the audiences large and full of enthusiasm. The association, at whose invitation the meeting was held, expressed themselves as more than pleased and a cordial invitation was given them to "come next year."

The L. T. L's of Union county held a grand rally on Labor Day at Elizabeth. Plainfield union, upon their anniversary, held an all-day meeting, full of interest and profit. It was called a "picnic lunch"; each member was invited to come and bring a friend with her. In the afternoon the members, much to the pleasure of all, related their experience in earning or saving one dollar towards carrying on the work, and as a result, seventy-five dollars were added to the treasury. May others do likewise!

The annual county meetings, of which there are not a few just now, show a steady trend of advancement on many lines, and no decline in membership in the aggregate.

Clara Hoffman has been with us but owing to other engagements could not accept some of the invitations. She has decided to return about the middle of January, and will be open for a few dates then. Unions will take note of this announcement.

Wolfenbarger and Huckins, Volney B. Cushing, M. J. Fanning, with the Indiana quartette, have been up and down our state, and have been greeted with crowded houses, notably in Morris, Warren, Camden and Cumberland counties. The logic of their convictions in speech and song has produced a cleaner and purer moral atmosphere in the minds of those who were so fortunate as to hear them.

The "basket picnic," held under the auspices of the Prohibitionists of Morris county, at Tabor, was "straight out prohibition truth, delivered by the basket full." With Cushing and the Indiana singers in the morning, and Wolfenbarger and Huckins, Chairman White, of the state committee, and others in the afternoon, prohibition had a full day, and such a day as the cause never had in that section, and, we opine, in no other part of the state. The large auditorium was too small for the people who came, and the size and respectability of the audiences were an utter surprise, and chagrined some, who, in the early morning were perfectly willing the cranks should have their little "side show." But the seed was sown, and God alone knows whether it fell on good soil, and what the harvest will be!

Thos. J. Kennedy, the prohibition candidate, is a prominent lawyer of the city of Bayonne, and is a worker in church, Sunday schools and many philanthropic organizations. Since 1884, when he gave the political side of the saloon question his attentive consideration, he has cast his vote for the only party arrayed against the saloon. His interest in the party's progress has already been marked by zealous and untiring work, and surely with such a leader, having such a record, men of Christian principles cannot be at a loss for whom to cast their ballots.

Bordentown W. C. T. U. has begun a crusade against liquor selling on Sunday, and it would be well for other unions to watch out for their brothers who just now are too busy looking after the interest of their party to notice that the saloon door is ajar on the Lord's day.

The Law and Order Society of Camden has ordered the arrest of thirteen saloonkeepers, and judging from their names they are of foreign birth. In passing, we say, blessed be the cholera scare, and give it a yearly welcome, if thereby we can prevent this dumping of blood so polluted with disease germs, moral and physical, to eat out the life of the nation!

The Law and Order League of Monmouth county has caused the arrest of over five hundred, including the president of the Monmouth Park Association, bookmakers and others, and evidence for their conviction is at the service of the prosecutor of pleas and the grand jury. "Measures are being taken to run independent candidates for county and state offices, if the wishes of the moral and religious people are ignored by the two political parties," so says a prominent minister of Asbury Park, who also states, "that this race track works more evil in two months than all the pulpits in Eastern Jersey can correct in ten."

New Jersey contains, on its statute books, laws against gambling, yet these laws are publicly and defiantly violated by the managers of fairs in different parts of the state and Christian people never utter a protest, but patronize them and help to make them respectable, instead of saying, "no gambling, no liquor, if you want our support." When the proceeds from four days' gambling is fifty thousand dollars, and the receipts from the privileges more than made up the loss on gate receipts, which was six thousand dollars less than last year, isn't it time for the pulpit to cry out? And we are thankful to make a record of at least two who have the courage to utter their convictions against this crying sin.

One fair in the southern part of the state openly sold all day Sunday to the baser sort. The Inter-State fair in Trenton did not take admission on Sunday, but over five thousand attended that day and could get all they wanted. Everything is done to cater to the respectable people, and they largely patronize the exhibit. Children in the public schools are given free tickets, which necessitates mother or father or both to go, and they all come home "delighted, and saw nothing wrong." On the big day, when fifty thousand people went through the gates, the most of our stores closed (and the city had a Sabbath) the sale of beer was, on good authority, over $1,700 (and that means 35,000 glasses), yet the morning paper, the day after, commenting on the great fair, congratulated the managers "on the almost entire absence of intoxication!"

Many a young man, aye, woman, too, is started out in lines of vice at these places, who would never have gone the downward track had he not been allured by the respectability of the affair.

God help these Christian parents to utter their protest before they feel the agonizing wail of sorrow, of a boy or girl lost, and seek to have these beautiful, instructive and useful exhibits divested of the vices which now are a part of them!

God help the people to put out the danger signal ere too late, and may the women of the W. C. T. U. be among the first to sound the note of warning, calling to action!

N. L. CAMINADE,
State Reporter, Trenton.

DELAWARE GLEANINGS.

Our organization, with others of philanthropic purpose, has learned the wisdom of trying to overcome an evil by the offer of something good in its place. Believing in this principle of practical helpfulness, the Wilmington W. and Y. entertained fifty persons at their headquarters the Fourth of July, some of whom might otherwise have gone to the saloons. These bright rooms were kept open during the entire summer, fifteen and twenty boys often visiting them in the evenings. The penny provident fund, having about eighty boy depositors, and the girls' circulating library were also attended to during the heated term.

Speaking of work at this trying season, the Milton W. and Y. held their regular meetings throughout, and gave a Harvest Home in their town which attracted a large number of people who heard good music and temperance addresses, and had the opportunity of helping the ladies financially by the purchase of their tempting viands.

Another Harvest Home was given a few weeks ago by the neighboring unions of Marshallton and Stanton in a woods near these towns. The Spring City Quartette rendered prohibition songs during the day and evening, and the noble champion of the great cause, ex-Governor St. John, made a fine address in the afternoon. As an expression of esteem for the governor the Fairview lodge I. O. G. T. accompanied him to the depot on horseback, dressed in regalia, giving him, after a little speech, hearty cheers as he took the train. Revs. Daniel Greene, A. S. Mowbray, C. H. Williams, and William White, staunch friends of the W. C. T. U., participated in the making of addresses. Quite a crowd of people were present to be benefited, and the members of the unions to whom the occasion had involved hard work, were rewarded by the hope of good results, and fifty dollars aside from expenses.

Although we have not as yet summer schools of methods, our work was presented at the Brandywine Summit Camp in New Castle county, and the Camden Camp in Kent county, Mrs. J. T. Ellis of New Jersey, having spoken with her usual enthusiasm before each gathering. Good music was a prominent feature at each meeting as was the presence and help of other ministerial brethren known for fidelity to their temperance convictions. At the Camden camp an hour of the afternoon was devoted to a children's service, conducted by Mrs. N. B. Smithers, Rev. Dr. Caldwell, of Dover, speaking to them in an unusually interesting and impressive manner. In the evening two of our Smyrna L. T. L. Demorest medal contestants, May Faries and Katie Beckett, gave recitations,—"The World on Fire" and "The Boys of America," both of which were much enjoyed by the audience.

The Camden Y, ever active in kindly ministries in His name, and watchful of opportunities for aggressive work, held a public meeting some weeks ago in the interest of scientific temperance instruction, which was addressed by W. P. Fikes, of Dover, the young ladies securing five signatures to the pledge at the close of the address. In this connection we have cause for gratitude in that the books recommended by Mrs. Hunt and earnestly asked for by our state superintendent, Mrs. E. D. Slaymaker. "The Children's Health Primer" and "Hygiene for Young People" have lately been added to the curriculum of our public schools, the result largely, we believe, of the inspiration received from Mrs. Hunt during her visit to the state last fall.

A little incident given by a correspondent shows to some degree an advance in temperance sentiment. Not long ago a vessel was launched. Instead of wine a little girl used water in its christening and the owner is said to have made the remark "that bad luck follows vessels christened with wine." We are sure disaster follows its use in the more frequent way, and shall be glad when the sentiment is sufficiently advanced to altogether prohibit it.

As steps toward the ultimate prohibition of the wicked traffic, John Lloyd Thomas spoke in several towns last month, and meetings were held in Wilmington under the auspices of the Law and Order League of the city.

On the 22d a prohibition convention was held in Dover, at which fifty delegates were present, and the following indorsement made as a part of the platform: "We believe the W. C. T. U. is entitled to the confidence and support of all patriotic and virtuous people, and we pledge them our hearty coöperation in all lines of their excellent efforts."

Fortunate in having for president of my home union our earnest county president, Mrs. Kate E. Smithers, and the assistance of our state superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Roberta Matlack, much that is uplifting and helpful comes to us in the quiet of our local work. Such was the memorial service of Madam Willard recently held in the home of our state recording secretary, Mrs. Jennie C. S. Price, the latch string of whose door is always on the outside for white-ribboners, individually and collectively. The grand old hymn, "How Firm a Foundation," sung with the accompaniment of the piano, was more beautiful than ever before from association with the lovely saint who so triumphantly proved its truth. There was, too, a touching fitness in the reading of the passages from St. John by our corresponding secretary, whose dear mother was born the same year and month Madam Willard was born and to whom also the words were precious to the close of her earthly life a few months ago. May those comforting words and the sympathy and love which encompass our National President be to her as the support of "The Everlasting Arms."

ANNIE W. SUTTON,
State Reporter, Smyrna.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEWS NOTES.

Miss Nancy Bean took the gold medal prize at the Demorest contest at Claremont recently. She was the first to win the silver medal at Warner.

The W. C. T. U. of Hopkinton have packed and shipped a box of clothing, boots, bedding, etc., to the Mercy Home in Manchester. It was contributed by friends and members of the union, also by the city boarders who were interested in this good cause.

A new union has been organized at East Colebrook, with Mrs. Willis Holmes as president.

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, of Massachusetts, has been making a tour through Coos county, in company with the county president, Mrs. Brown.

There is another new union at Tremont, Mrs. D. C. Hook, president.

Grafton county convention occurred in the Congregational church at Bath. North Haverhill reported having raised one dollar from each member of their union for the land around the Mercy Home. It is the first union in Grafton county that has complied with the request, though many unions have done nobly. Littleton has raised one hundred and seventy-five dollars for a drinking fountain which has been ordered. Their L. T. L. meets once a week. Reports were heard from all the unions present. The former board of officers was reëlected. The paper read by Rev. Mrs. Cochrane, pastor of the Unitarian church at Bath, "Moral Progress of the World," was a helpful, hopeful essay. The subject, "What can we do to make our Unions more Effective?" was freely discussed. Rev. Mr. Brown and Rev. Mr. Francis addressed the meeting. The evening session was opened by Rev. Mr. Francis. The twenty-third Psalm was chanted by four young ladies. A recitation was given by Charlie Edwards. The address was given by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, of Boston, upon "What the W. C. T. U. has done for Women."

Rockingham county held their convention in the Congregational church, New Market, in September. Delegates were present from twelve unions. Rev. Mr. Durgin, of New Market, spoke words of cordial greeting and God speed. An able address of welcome was given to the convention by Mrs. Rev. D. J. Smith, to which the president responded. The afternoon praise service, under the guidance of Miss McIntire, was impressive. The president gave an address telling of her year's work among the unions. The old board of officers was elected. A poem was read by Mrs. Woodbury, of Salem, and remarks by superintendents of Sabbath observance, non alcoholics in medicine, and juvenile work were given. The convention was a varied one and very interesting.

At the Belknap county convention held at Tilton, September 20, the following officers were chosen: Miss O. M. Knowles, Merideth, president; Mrs. Emma P. Whittier, Lakeport, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Clara F. Hoyt, Laconia, recording secretary; Mrs. M. A. Rollins, Merideth, treasurer. The address of welcome was made by Mrs. Spencer, of Tilton, and responded to by Mrs. Lizzie Brum, of Laconia. The address by Miss Waterman, of New Hampton, was a gem of the finest material, and ought to be in the possession of every young girl, her subject being, "The Physical Training of the Girls, and the Duties of Mothers to their Daughters." She urged the necessity of proper care of the bodies—not only for the physical well being, but as a means for the highest intellectual, moral and spiritual attainments.

Mrs. Tucker gave some facts which have come under her observation, showing that terrible appetite for stimulants may originate from the use of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup. Rev. Mr. Hutchins spoke feelingly of the immense amount of good done by the W. C. T. U. Mrs. M. E. Tucker, of the Lakeport union, had some fitting words to offer. It was left with a committee of three to appoint the next place of meeting.

The town of Epping has been made to feel the wrath of the non-temperance sentiment within the past few months. Their union was organized in 1885, since which time there has been no end of persecuting. Numerous fires have been set, destroying church property, private dwellings and keeping the inhabitants in a terrified condition. The pastors are outspoken temperance men.

September the 8th was a great day for the Bow union. On that day a large company assembled to dedicate the hall built by the W. C. T. U. When it was commenced there was little but faith to step out upon. But God seemed to bless the effort from the first. One brother generously gave a beautiful lot, and offered to loan money at a low rate of interest. Contributions came in. Men were found willing to give work in putting in the foundation. A contractor made a liberal offer in putting up the building. And so it was built, a neat, pretty, two-story building. Then a friend gave a very fine organ. Rev. A. J. Wheeler made the dedicatory address. Revs. Waldron and Ewer, of Concord, Mrs. Gleason, of Massachusetts, and others participated in the exercises. There was fine singing, a violin solo and presentation of the keys. Mrs. Cross presided. A bountiful supper was provided. In the evening the L. T. L. marched in with banners and gave songs and recitations. Mrs. Gleason lectured; Mrs. Cross talked to the children and Mrs. Gleason gave them an earnest talk on tobacco. Over $100 was pledged to be paid yearly until the hall is paid for. A large collection was taken, and so ended a very successful and happy day for Bow.

MRS. F. H. BAILEY,
State Reporter, Hopkinton.

CONNECTICUT.

AUTUMNAL ITEMS.

The summer is over and everywhere, in valley, on the hill, by the brookside and in the forest are bright autumn tints; the fruit is fast being gathered and soon every maple will lift a torch of glowing crimson skyward, glossy nuts will fall in showers and the flowers will bow their heads and the frost king reign supreme.

In glancing over the record of the summer days we find that they have been filled with work, each county has kept faithfully plodding on for the sake of the cause. Good words have come from New London, Fairfield and Middlesex counties. Rockville union, Buell union, of Bridgeport, Portland union, and Portland, Middlefield and Rockfall Y's have each sent word of work, while doubtless a score more have worked but have not reported it.

The summer meeting at Willimantic was much like other similar gatherings, full from beginning to end of good things. The Loyal Temperance Legion picnic at Tylerville was the best ever held by the county. Middlefield L. T. L. had a very enjoyable local picnic, and other L. T. L. companies have had social meetings or picnics. The state paper has contained many reports of work that have proven the fact that our rank and file has not succumbed to the summer heat.

At Rockville, with the thermometer in the nineties, the ladies prepared and carried out an excellent program, Mrs. Forbes being present and making a stirring address, the foundation of which may be found in I. Chron. 4:23; it was quite novel, and there was so much of encouragement and help in it that the audience gave the best of attention, and thoroughly appreciated it despite the oppressive heat. After the intellectual feast was over the audience was served with plenty of strawberries and a social time was enjoyed.

The Cornelia B. Forbes Y, of Portland, gave a lawn party which was pleasant and financially successful.

The summer convention of New London county was held at Mystic, and was heralded in by a cloudless sky and a general air of balminess. Throughout the day harmony reigned and delightful reports and papers filled the time. Some time was profitably devoted to the children and to Y work, and the session closed after an address in the evening by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of Boston.

Buell union cheered many hearts by devoting several afternoons to visiting the almshouse, jail and hospital. The visitors carried fruit, flowers and, when it was advisable, cake, held devotional services or talked individually with the inmates and were made heartily welcome. Many cheering incidents of the pleasure their presence gave, made the visitors feel that it is truly more blessed to give than to receive, be the giving time, money or kind words.

The 19th semi-annual convention of Fairfield county W. C. T. U. met in the Baptist church at Stepney, September 15. A perfect day, with brilliant sunshine, soft air and over all the autumn haze, together with the largest attendance on record combined to make the county convention a success. The praise and promise meeting of the morning was led by Mrs. Andrews; theme, "The Promises to those who Overcome." At ten o'clock the session was called to order, Mrs. Palmer in the chair. Committees on credentials and on courtesies were appointed. Three officers and eleven unions responded to the roll call. A brief address of welcome was given by Mrs. Botsford, president of Stepney union, with a response by Mrs. Fitz Gerald. Short reports were read from So. Norwalk Y, Buell union, Huntington, Sherman, Danbury, So. Norwalk, Danbury Y, Crusade union, Greenwich, Newton, Shelton, Stratford and Stamford. Rev. Mr. Sands, of Bridgeport, was introduced and sang, "Wonderful Jesus."

Addresses of welcome were given by Rev. Mr. Johnson, of the Baptist church, Rev. Dr. Merwin, of the Methodist church, and Miss Ruth Edwards, of the L. T. L. Rev. J. H. James, of Rockville, was introduced, and brought fraternal greetings from the Connecticut Temperance Union. Mrs. Forbes and Mrs. Andrews, president and secretary of the state W. C. T. U., were presented, and addressed the convention. Mrs. Mosher, fraternal delegate from Charity Lodge I. O. G. T., of Shelton, was introduced, and reported for the Juvenile Temple. The noontide prayer was observed. A Bible reading was given in the afternoon, and a most interesting and instructive lecture on the "Chemistry and Physiology of Alcohol" was delivered by Rev. J. H. James, to whom a hearty vote of thanks was tendered by the convention.

Mrs. C. H. Fitz Gerald was elected a delegate to the National Convention at Denver, alternate Mrs. Palmer.

The convention adjourned after singing and the benediction. An interesting children's meeting at which Mrs. Fitz Gerald presided was held during the session. Prayer, Scripture lesson, songs and recitations occupied the early portion of the meeting and afterward Rev. J. H. James gave a chalk talk, "The Contents of a Cider Barrel." The meeting closed by singing, "Saloons Must Go." Literature for the children was kindly furnished by the speaker and eagerly sought for.

A gold medal contest was held in the evening with a full house. Stirring national music was a pleasing feature of the occasion. The class was composed of six young women and one young man. The elocutionary ability displayed was of a high order. The judges were Miss Emily Hawley, of Danbury, Rev. J. H. James, of Rockville, and Rev. Taft, of Long Hill. The medal was awarded to Miss Edith Fairchild, of Bridgeport, subject, "Noble Christian Womanhood." Miss Fairchild had previously spoken in the gold medal class at Willimantic.

One of the most familiar faces at every state convention has been that of Mrs. M. A. Stone, of New Milford. For many years state treasurer and always the valued friend and adviser of the state officers, she will be missed from these yearly gatherings. Her place now vacant cannot easily be filled.

JOTTINGS.

Sherman is at work in the steady, quiet way that so often counts the largest results. They have no L. T. L. but attend to the children's needs by securing competent scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. The young ladies have a White Ribbon Circle and are sewing for the Connecticut school in Georgia and are deeply interested in the National Temperance Hospital. The union is constantly receiving new members and now numbers seventy-one active and twenty-three honorary members.

Pawcatuck is one of the five districts in the town of Stonington in the southeastern part of the state. This district lies on the west side of the river Pawcatuck, while the village of Westerly, R. I., lies on the east side, hence, in social matters, Pawcatuck is very closely identified with Westerly. But the women of Pawcatuck have long realized that the noble work of the Westerly union did not meet the necessities of those living beyond the state line, even though they were practically in the same village. As a result of this conclusion and largely through the efforts of Miss H. A. Babcock, a union has been formed. Previous to the coming of Mrs. Forbes, the state president, Miss Babcock trained the children to sing, and a delightful evening meeting was held in the Palmer Street school hall, at which time the children showed the results of the fine training they had received and Mrs. Forbes gave a profitable address. Mrs. M. J. Moore, of the Westerly union, and Mrs. Mary A. Babcock, president of the Rhode Island state union, also participated in the exercises. A union of thirty six members has been formed. Superintendents of scientific instruction, of literature, of juvenile work, of evangelistic, parlor meetings, of press work and of THE UNION SIGNAL and White Ribbon Banner have been appointed.

M. BELLE SMITH,
State Reporter, Rockfall.

VIRGINIA.

STATE GATHERING.

The Virginia W. C. T. U. convention met in Winchester, September 27, and after a pleasant and harmonious session adjourned September 29 at 11 p. m.

The regular business was transacted without unnecessary delay. Officers were elected and superintendents appointed for the coming year.

There was a marked improvement in all reports of work as much in the style of the reports themselves as in the work reported. Our reports are no longer mere essays but accounts of actual work accomplished. Some changes were made all in one direction, it being unanimously resolved that no merely nominal offices should be retained upon our roll.

The convention adopted the suggestion of the National committee, that the department of young woman's work should become a branch and its head be called a secretary. Mrs. Funkhouser, of Harrisonburgh, was elected secretary. Mrs. Funkhouser is in every way suited to the responsible position to which she is called, and received the unanimous vote of the convention, having been nominated by the Y's in Y conference.

Richmond Y carried home two banners, the first Virginia union ever so honored. Mrs. Barnes, National superintendent Y. W. C. T. U., was present the entire session. She is greatly admired in Virginia and beloved by the Y's.

The most important advance reported was in prison department work. Last winter, by the united efforts of Mrs. Judith Crenshaw, Mrs. W. H. Pleasants and Mrs. Thomas Whitehead, a matron for the female ward of the penitentiary was secured, nominated by this committee, Mrs. Fannie Page, of Richmond, was appointed, and since the first of May has been in office and in prison, having been out only once to attend church.

A change in the mode of punishment of women has been also brought about by constant prayer to Him who hears the cry of those who trust Him. The shameful punishment to which women were subjected is a thing of the past.

Mrs. Love, of Australia, was also present. She is an earnest woman and must do good. She was elected state organizer.

Miss Willia Francis, of Norfolk, was appointed organizer for the Y's.

The resident ministers of all Christian denominations of the city visited the convention. Much interest was manifested in all lines of work.

It was a cause for rejoicing and thankfulness that so successful and harmonious a convention was held.

MRS. THOMAS WHITEHEAD,
State Reporter, Ashland.

Convention Corner.

THE CONVENTION CHURCH.

Convention preparations are crystallizing quite rapidly now. If whole-souled zeal and loyalty to our beloved cause and "Trust in the harvest Giver" be an earnest of the result, then shall we indeed have an extraordinary meeting.

It may interest your readers to hear something concerning the beautiful church in which the Convention is to be held. Trinity M. E. is the largest and noblest of our church edifices, conspicuously located near the head of Broadway, the main avenue of the city. It is constructed in modern Gothic style of architecture of Colorado stone, than which there is no material more perfectly adapted for imposing structures, ninety-seven by one hundred and twenty-five feet in dimensions and its total cost, $137,000. On the Broadway front are two square towers, the one on the south being crowned with a spire rising to a height of one hundred and eighty-one and one half feet from terra firma. Four minarets are at the base of the spire, one at each corner and four Gothic archways look into the belfry. The spire itself is octagonal, surmounted by a cross. Above the entrance to the church, which is through a triple arched portico, supported on polished Colorado granite columns, is an elaborate stained glass triple Gothic window of extremely graceful proportions. Handsome circular windows, framed in stone, ornament the north and south gables.

The interior arrangements are admirably adapted for the use for which it was intended. The seats are arranged in a bow and there is a capacious gallery with boxes on either side of the choir loft. The main auditorium is eighty-three by one hundred feet and will comfortably seat 1,500, allowing twenty inches to a person in the pews. The full capacity of the room is much above that estimate.

The organ cost $30,000, and is one of the finest in the United States. It is built in the alcove beyond the pulpit, and encircled by a choir loft capable of accommodating three hundred singers on special occasions. There are four outlets to the auditorium, and communication also with the pastor's study and other apartments.

The lower floor contains a Sunday-school room, eighty-three by sixty-one, seating 1,200, and six class rooms, also parlors for social gatherings, a kitchen, laundry, boiler room and electric light plant.

Overflow meetings will take place in the First Baptist church, Stout street, near 18th street, which at the time of its erection in 1882, was the largest and is yet one of the finest churches in the city; also in the First Congregational, Unity, Central Christian, and most of the other churches, for so wide-spread is the demand for pulpit supplies from the ranks of our eminent speakers for Convention Sunday that we should not be surprised if not a man among all the ministers was moved to speak upon that eventful day.

ELLA C. BENTON,
Denver, Col. Chairman Press Com.

THE OFFICIAL HOTEL.

The local executive committee making arrangements for the National has decided upon the Albany Hotel as headquarters, where the National executive officers will be entertained. The Albany is located on Seventeenth and Stout streets. It seems to be conceded as the "Convention" Hotel of the city, being convenient to a network of car lines running to all parts of the city; within easy distance of Trinity Church and all down town churches; close to business streets, and always securing to guests the very best service possible. The committee feel sure that the National officers will be entirely satisfied with the choice, and that the hotel itself will attract many visitors and delegates attending the Convention.

MRS. FRANCES BELFORD,
Chairman Committee.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS.

Letters are constantly coming to the entertainment committee from persons desiring to attend the convention as visitors, relative to accommodations. Many want entertainment at one dollar per day and some at four dollars per week, within walking distance of the place of meeting. As it is about impossible for one person to answer all letters of this nature that come, a general statement will have to suffice. Hotel rates have been secured and published, on convenient car lines, but usually at such distances that walking a number of times daily is out of the question; excellent places can be secured at very reasonable rates. To those wishing to secure any of the places scheduled, the better way is to communicate directly with the places specified and the sooner the bet ter. Within close walking distance are desirable places and prices not at all exorbitant. Where persons take rooms far out, there are excellent restaurants, some on the European plan, not far from the church. Delegates of course will be entertained free.

Hotels and hotel rates for visitors at the National W. C. T. U. Convention to be held in Denver, October 28 to November 2, and for delegates preferring hotels, are given below.

One noticeable feature of Denver is the large number of family hotels or first-class boarding houses, not devoted to the transient trade. These have been taken into consideration as well as the regular hotels within a convenient distance of Trinity M. E. Church, in which the Convention is to be held, and convenient, also, to rapid transit by cable and electric lines.

Brown's Palace, very close to the church, will furnish entertainment at $3 and $4 per day according to location of rooms. This includes meals, as the hotel is conducted on the American plan. The Palace, just completed and furnished, is probably the finest west of Chicago, and superbly located. These rates are given upon the contingency of securing not less than fifty guests.

The Albany, corner of 17th and Stout, offers most reasonable rates, considering the excellence of the hotel, its advantageous location and admirable management. Room and meals, $3 per day, two persons occupying a room, $5 per day. The Albany is a favorite place for conventions. The use of the club rooms will be donated to the executive and delegates, if the Albany is chosen as headquarters. Its distance from the church is about four blocks and the managers are noted for their attention to the comfort of guests.

The Gilsey, 18th and Stout, will furnish rooms by the week, price $4 to $6, two occupying a room will pay nothing extra. Meals, short order. The proprietress is willing to do everything possible for the guests.

The Albert, 17th, between Glenarm and Welton, and distant three blocks from the church, offers pleasant and newly furnished rooms for $1, $1.25 and $1.50 per day. An attractive café gives meals at $1 per day; no bar.

St. James Hotel, Curtis, between 15th and 16th, makes reasonable rates. Cars pass the door.

Broadway Hotel: Rooms and board, $3 per day; two occupying the same room, $2.50 each; very convenient to the church; no bar.

L'Imperial, Court Place and 14th, and other family hotels conveniently located, will make reasonable rates, conditional upon having rooms to spare.

The Woman's Christian Association furnishes rooms and board at exceedingly moderate prices.

The Woman's Exchange—auxiliary to the W. C. T. U.—is conveniently located, furnishes meals on the short order system, and is convenient to many places where rooms can be secured.

The Cooper, 1404 South 13th street, can accommodate twenty-five people, four in each room if desired, with room and board at $1.50 per day.

Curtis Block, 1518 Curtis street, guarantees first-class accommodations at low prices, with or without board. Table excellent.

Glenarm Hotel, corner 15th and Glenarm, three blocks from the church, submits a rate of $2 per day each, room and board, where two occupy a room, and $2.50 per day for one person in a room.

The Earl, Tremont near 14th; first class entertainment, about $2.25 per day.

1958 Logan Avenue. Can accommodate four persons in two rooms. Terms, $1 per day. The Gilman near by furnishes meals.

The Tyrone, 22 W. 12th Avenue, two persons in one room, $1 per day each, room and board.

The Dinsmore, 1148 Broadway, $2 per day, room and board.

Ramona, $2 per day, room and board, corner 14th Avenue and S. 14th street.

Capitol Hill Hotel, rooms $3 per week; meals at Euclid Place, directly opposite, $6 per week.

The Holland, 18th and Pennsylvania, room and board, $2 per day.

On car lines, Mrs. Kreuzer, 2445 Clarkson street, two in a room, $1.25 or $1.50 per day each, room and board.

Mrs. C. Kelsey, 1657 Humbolt street. A party willing to share rooms can be accommodated with rooms and board at $1 per day each.

No. 19, 24th Avenue, can accommodate two at $6 per week each.

2160 Downing Avenue can entertain from ten to twenty, at $1 per day for room and breakfast; 22d Avenue car.

440 South Broadway can room two ladies at 50 cents each; reasonable restaurant near by.

1270 Logan Avenue, three ladies, room 75 cents each, but no board.

432 S. Broadway, "Jefferson Block," twelve ladies, two in a room, 25 cents each per day. In same building meals furnished at 25 cents. Car line direct and convenient.

All who come can be accommodated, not perhaps at eastern prices, but the advance will be very slight, and places are selected with a view to comfort and attractiveness. Other localities are being listed as rapidly as possible and will be in the hands of the information bureau so that there will be no difficulty in finding them. The committee should know as soon as possible the number of delegates and visitors.

MRS. FRANCES BELFORD,
1323 Evans St., Denver. Cha'm Com.

RAILROAD RATES.

After weeks and even months of effort to secure satisfactory railway rates from the various traffic associations and outside lines, I am able to make what I trust is only a progressive report, my hope being that later on even better rates may be given us. The traffic associations would allow us only the usual excursion rate—one and one-third fare. After numerous and repeated efforts to secure better rates the Chicago & Alton consented to give us one fare. The result is that the official route to Denver and return is via the Chicago & Alton and Union Pacific lines. Rates from Chicago to Denver and return, $35; from Bloomington and St. Louis to Denver and return, $32.50; and the above rates may be used as basing rates, with the understanding that if any other line or combination of lines makes or offers "officially" a less rate we are to have the benefit of the very lowest rates in effect via the official route at the time of departure.

The following lines have agreed to give "one fare" for the round trip to Chicago, Bloomington and St. Louis in connection with above rates: The Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis system; the Monon; Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton; the Ohio & Mississippi; Lake Erie & Western; Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City; Indianapolis, Decatur & Western; Cincinnati, Hocking Valley & Toledo; Queen Crescent, and others. Eastern roads will give one and one third rate to Chicago on the certificate plan.

The chances are that the rates from Chicago and St. Louis will be considerably less than those named herein.

The official train will leave Chicago, Tuesday, October 25, 1892, at six p. m. Tickets will be on sale October 20 to 25, inclusive, and good for thirty days returning. The Chicago & Alton Railroad Company deserve the patronage of all delegates, members and others. In selecting a route to Denver please see that your ticket reads via the official route from Chicago, St. Louis and Bloomington, i. e., via the Chicago & Alton and Union Pacific. The tickets should read "to Denver and return." Free chair cars will be provided. You will be able to secure as low a rate by this route as by any other. The promptness of these roads, their natural advantages, and their efforts to give and secure for us low rates, good accommodations and a pleasant excursion have made them well worthy of our patronage.

There will be a sufficient number of free chair cars to accommodate all who desire them. Those who prefer sleeping-car accommodations and have not secured them should at once notify Mr. Somerville, at the Chicago and Alton office, Chicago, Ill.

If lower rates should be secured, due notification of the fact will be made through these columns, and circulars sent direct to state officers.

MARY G. HAY,
Nat. Supt. Railway Rates.

Official Communications.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

The institution of school savings banks throughout the United States is a matter of general economic and educational interest. They are steadily increasing in number. Broader W. C. T. U. interest in the system is earnestly solicited. Women honor themselves and their communities when they are able and ready to propose and abet this popular teaching of thrift, industry and self-responsibility.

Maine, Missouri, Nevada and Idaho took up the work last year. New York, Pennsylvania and California have some county superintendents. We expect cheery, coöperative news from many state conventions. I will take literature to the National Convention, and stand always ready to aid every inquirer in this great but simple method of improving the grade of human inclinations and aspirations.

Australia, Tasmania and the Maritime Provinces of Canada have adopted school savings banks as a department. The school principal of Honolulu is about introducing it into the schools of that city at the recommendation of Mrs. Whitney. The W. C. T. U. president of Chili says they hope to recover from the war sufficiently to take hold of the work next year. Our beloved Lady Henry Somerset writes she is looking for a woman to take the superintendency for England. So I would say to our able home forces, won't you investigate the system and understand its advantages? Literature, blanks and school cards always on sale. Address

SARA LOUISA OBERHOLTZER,
World's and Nat. Supt.
Norristown, Pa.

ONTARIO W. C. T. U.

The fifteenth annual convention of the Ontario Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in Belleville (D. V.), Oct. 25th to 28th. The executive committee will meet for business Monday evening, the 24th. The convention will be composed of the executive board, one delegate for each affiliated union, and one additional delegate for every twenty paying members of such union. It is hoped that each county will send its shield and banner which add much to the attractions of the place of meeting. The prize banner will be awarded to the county having the largest number of affiliated members in proportion to its population. The unions are requested to be as careful as possible in returning correct statistics. An interesting feature of our meetings will be an afternoon devoted to a School of Methods, which we are sure will prove very helpful. We have succeeded in securing the Rev. W. Patterson, of Cooke's church, Toronto, for an evening.

May earnest prayer ascend for this convention, that in all our deliberations Christ-like love and peace may reign in every heart, and be manifest in all our utterances; that we may have Divine guidance in all our plans for the future; that the power of the Holy Spirit may be so felt that an influence shall go out from us that shall permeate every union and bring greater blessing upon our work than has ever been hitherto; and that our speakers may have a special message from God for the people.

Galt, Ontario, Can. JENNIE CAVERS, President.
MARY WILEY, Cor. Sec.

CONVENTION ROSTER.

October 18–21, N. California, San Jose.
October 21–24, Idaho, Idaho Falls.
October 25–26, Wyoming, Laramie City.
October 28–November 2, National, Colorado, Denver.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

THE WORLD'S COLUMBIAN COMMISSION.

President—Thomas W. Palmer, of Michigan.
1st Vice-President—Thomas M. Waller, Connecticut.
2d Vice-President—M. H. DeYoung, of California.
3d Vice-President—Davidson D. Penn, of Louisiana.
4th Vice-President—Gorton W. Allen, of New York.
5th Vice-President—Alexander B. Andrews, of N. C.
Secretary—John N. Dickenson, of Texas.
Vice-Chairman Executive Committee—Jas. A. McKenzie, of Kentucky.

COMMISSIONERS-AT-LARGE.

Augustus G. Bullock, Worcester, Mass.
Gorton W. Allen, Auburn, N. Y.
Peter A. B. Widener, Philadelphia, Pa.
Thomas W. Palmer, Detroit, Mich.
R. W Furnas, Brownville, Neb.
William Lindsay, Frankfort, Ky.
Henry Exall, Dallas, Texas.
Mark L. McDonald, Santa Rosa, Cal.

COMMISSIONERS.

Alexander T. Britton, Washington, D. C.
Albert A. Wilson, Washington, D. C.
Alabama.—Frederick G. Bromberg, Mobile.
Oscar R. Hundley, Huntsville.
Arkansas.—John D. Adams, Little Rock.
J. H. Clendenning, Fort Smith.
California.—Michel H. DeYoung, San Francisco.
William Forsyth, Fresno.
Colorado.—Roswell E. Goodell, Leadville.
J. H. Smith, Denver.
Connecticut.—Leverett Brainard, Hartford.
Thomas M. Waller, New London
Delaware.—George V. Massey, Dover.
Willard Hall Porter, Wilmington.
Florida.—C. F. A. Bielby, DeLand.
Richard Turnbull, Monticello.
Georgia.—Lafayette McLaws, Savannah.
Charlton H. Way, Savannah.
Idaho.—George A. Manning, Post Falls.
John E. Stearns, Nampa.
Illinois.—Charles H. Deere, Moline.
Adlai T. Ewing, Chicago.
Indiana.—Thomas E. Garvin, Evansville.
Elijah B. Martindale, Indianapolis.
Iowa.—Joseph Elboeck, Des Moines.
William F. King, Mt. Vernon.
Kansas.—Charles K. Holliday, Jr., Topeka.
J. R. Burton, Abilene.
Kentucky.—John Bennett, Richmond.
James A. McKenzie, Oak Grove.
Louisiana.—Davidson B. Penn, Newellton.
Thomas J. Woodward, New Orleans.
Maine.—Augustus R. Bixby, Skowhegan.
William G. Davis, Portland.
Maryland.—James Hodges, Baltimore.
Lloyd Lowndes, Cumberland.
Massachusetts.—Francis W. Breed, Lynn.
Thomas E. Proctor, Boston.
Michigan.—M. Henry Lane, Kalamazoo,
George H. Barbour, Detroit.
Minnesota.—H. B. Moore, Duluth.
Orson V. Tousley, Minneapolis.
Mississippi.—Joseph M. Bynum, Rienzi.
Robert L. Saunders, Jackson.
Missouri.—Thomas B. Bullene, Kansas City
Charles H. Jones, St. Louis.
Montana.—Lewis H. Hershfield, Helena.
Armistead H. Mitchell, Deer Lodge City.
Nebraska.—Euclid Martin, Omaha.
Albert G. Scott, Kearney.
Nevada.—James W. Haines, Genoa.
George Russell, Elko.
New Hampshire.—Walter Aiken, Franklin.
Chas. D. McDuffie, Manchester.
New Jersey.—William J. Sewell, Camden.
Thomas Smith, Newark.
New York.—Chauncey M. Depew, New York.
John Boyd Thacher, Albany.
North Carolina.—Alexander B. Andrews, Raleigh.
Thomas B. Keogh, Greensboro.
North Dakota.—H. P. Rucker, Grand Forks.
Martin Ryan, Fargo.
Ohio.—Harvey P. Platt, Toledo.
William Ritchie, Hamilton.
Oregon.—Henry Klippel, Jacksonville.
Martin Wilkins, Eugene City.
Pennsylvania.—R. B. Ricketts, Wilkesbarre.
John W. Woodside, Philadelphia.
Rhode Island.—Lyman B. Goff, Pawtucket.
Gardner C. Sims, Providence.
South Carolina.—A. P. Butler, Columbia.
John R. Cochran, Walhalla.
South Dakota.—Merritt H. Day, Rapid City.
William McIntyre, Watertown.
Tennessee.—Lewis T. Baxter, Nashville.
Thomas L. Williams, Knoxville.
Texas.—Archelaus M. Cochran, Dallas.
John T. Dickinson, Austin.
Vermont.—Henry H. McIntyre, West Randolph.
Bradley B. Smalley, Burlington.
Virginia.—Virginius D. Groner, Norfolk.
John T. Harris, Harrisonburg.
Washington.—Henry Drum, Tacoma.
Charles B. Hopkins, Spokane Falls.
West Virginia.—James D. Butt, Harper's Ferry.
J. W. St. Clair, Fayetteville.
Wisconsin.—Philip Allen, Jr., Mineral Point.
John N. Coburn, West Salem.
Wyoming.—Asahel C. Beckwith, Evanston.
Henry G. Hay, Cheyenne.
Arizona.—George F. Coats, Phœnix.
Wm. K. Mead, Tombstone.
New Mexico.—Thomas C. Gutierres, Albuquerque.
Richard Mansfield White, Hermosa.
Oklahoma.—Othniel Beeson, Reno City.
Frank R. Gammon, Guthrie.
Utah.—Frederick J. Kiesel, Ogden.
Patrick H. Lannan, Salt Lake City.
Alaska.—Edward de Groff, Sitka.
Louis L. Williams, Juneau.

Publisher's Notes.

WHAT YOU NEED

More than anything just now is the DAILY UNION SIGNAL, which will be published in Denver each day during the National Convention which meets in that city on October 28. The program indicates that it will be a meeting of great interest. Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Gordon landed in New York on the morning of October 16, and their presence is now assured. A competent court stenographer has been secured, and the contracts are written which insure the prompt production and mailing of the DAILY UNION SIGNAL. Every W. C. T. U. worker (and many who are not) will want it.

Very many subscriptions have already been received, and more are coming daily. Do not wait another hour before sending yours. And get your friend to send at the same time. Price, for five days, 25c. Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

"Busy Bee" Washer.

GUARANTEED to Run Easier and do Better Work than any other in the world. No rubbing necessary. We challenge a trial with any other machine. Warranted for five years and money refunded if not entirely satisfactory. FITS ANY TUB. Saves time, money and clothes. Just the machine for ladies who are not very strong. Thousands of ladies who used to hire their washing done, now save that expense by using the

"BUSY BEE" WASHER.

Save your strength, health, time, clothes and money, by investing only $2 in this machine. Don't keep the Washer unless it suits you. We are Responsible, and mean just what we say. We invite you to investigate thoroughly before risking a cent. We will forfeit $100 to any one who will prove that we ever refused to refund the full amount to a dissatisfied purchaser.

AGENTS WANTED in every county. Exclusive territory. Many of our agents make $100 to $200 a month. Lady Agents are very successful. Farmers and their wives make $200 to $400 during winter. One farmer in Missouri sold 600. Price $5. Sample (full size) to those desiring an agency, only $2. Also celebrated PENN WRINGERS and other useful household articles at lowest wholesale price. We refer to our P. M., Mayor, Agt. Am. Ex. Co., or editor of this paper.

HERE IS A LETTER! (We have hundreds more just as good). COLLICOON, N. Y.—I have received the "Busy Bee" in perfect order, and have given it a perfect trial. Have washed all kinds of clothing, also quilts and carpets, and found it to do the work perfectly; that is, positively as clean as they could be washed by hand. And the work was done in half the time and with ⅔ less than half the labor. I do not write this to humbug people, but as a fact, having tried the machine with my own hands, following the directions very closely. Please hold the agency of Sullivan county for me. Will send a good order soon. F. R. KAHL.

☞ Write for Catalogue and Terms to Agents ☜

LAKE ERIE MFG. CO., 122 E. 13th Street, ERIE, PA.

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.

(Continued from first page.)

riotism," an' "Large Gospel Temperance." They don't forget the young folks on this line, neither; there are two new manuals 'bout the government of our country, an' a leaflet for the boys who are just twenty-one, called "Wanted!" (you know that would sort o' make a fellow look up to see what was wanted)—then it 'splains—"Your First Vote on the Right Side." But the very best thing, I really believe, is that sort of a magazine they have for the half-way men an' women, The Advance Guard. If the boys an' girls who read that, don't get strong principles on the right side, it won't be because they aren't taught 'em. It don't never tell a boy or girl which party's the best, but it set's 'em a-thinkin', with a pretty strong slant toward the straight-out temperance one.

And oh, Aunt Samantha! if you want some new temperance arguments, you'll find 'em in a little book here 'bout the "Jericho Robbers." Say, did you know them fellows was in a "legitimate business," and orter've been let alone? I allus thought they was just thieves an' murderers, but this proves 'em right out to have been respectable gentlemen.

There's three books that I want—"Child-Life Abroad," "Lady Gay and Her Sister" and "A Woman's Evangel," an' oh! only think! there's a letter from Santa Claus, postmarks an' all, an' tellin' that he's a temperance fellow through and through. I'm goin' to take another book—"Bright Eyes"—home to Thomas Jefferson's little girl, an' I know she'll like it for Sunday afternoons; it has pictures in it, and the children have to find the Bible verses an' write 'em 'long side the pictures.

We'll have glorious times singin' from the new White Ribbon Hymnal—there's the good old tunes, and some splendid new ones.

Both of you must read "The Junior Partners," a new story book they've got out. I never read anythin' like it. It's the kind of a story that men who like Dickens and Thackeray will like, an' it will do 'em a world of good.

I've saved till the last the tellin' of the beautiful book 'bout that dear girl that went home last Christmas time—home to where our sweet Cicely went, whom we haven't got over missin', though it's years an' years since she left us. As I looked at that book I just knew that the writers an' the editor an' the workers on it all felt that there was love in ev'ry touch of their hands, an' ev'ry stroke of their pens, an' that they wanted 'bove all things to have it just's she'd have had it for somebody she loved.

This is a dreadful long letter, so I'll tell you 'bout the rest next time. Love to Uncle Josiah. Your affectionate niece,

MELINDA ALLEN.

SOUTH WAUKEGAN

NO SALOONS

Sold on monthly payments. An illustrated pamphlet and map of the town request.

MORRIS, GANSE & CO., 1300 CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BLDG., CHICAGO, ILL.

Factories Build Cities.

Every person who visits South Waukegan becomes an enthusiast in regard to its location and future.

It has the Factories.

They are in operation, and all who want work can get it.

It is a beautiful place to build a home, and it will make you rich to invest in real estate, or to establish here any branch of business. Lots $200 and up, give full information. Cost or

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c. per dozen, post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞ A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED New Topical History of United States

Memorial Story of America

—From 1492 to 1892—

By HAMILTON W. MABIE, Editor of Christian Union, With chapters by Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, Senator DAWES, Congressman BRECKENRIDGE, Col. A. K. MCCLURE, Bishop VINCENT, D. D., FRANCES E. WILLARD, and others equally prominent. Full of new illustrations, and intensely interesting. Every word written this year.

Outsells all other books. Write to-day.
JOHN C. WINSTON & CO., 6th & Arch Sts., Philada.

Recommended for Comfort, Support and Fine Form. Combines best features of Corset and Waist. Much worn by women and misses unable to bear a rigorous garment. Snug fitting, beautifully made. Warranted. Equal to any $1.25 Waist. White, Drab, Gold, Black. Genuine marked CCC. 7,000 dealers sell it. Sent post paid for Jackson Favorite Waist.

$1. CORONET CORSET CO. JACKSON, Michigan.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING.

Card Press $3. Size for circulars or small newspaper $22. Saves you money and makes money printing for neighbors. Full printed instructions. Send stamp for catalogue of presses, type, cards, &c., to the factory,

KELSEY & CO., Meriden, Connecticut.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

SOLID COMFORT CORSETS.

Best to wear; best for comfort; best to sell, and best pay. Book free.

AGENTS WANTED Solid Comfort Corset Co. 84 Adams St., Chicago.

A CHARMING LADIES' PAPER SENT

THREE MONTHS FREE!

THE LADIES' WORLD is one of the most attractive and valuable papers published for ladies and the family. It has now over 300,000 subscribers. Each issue comprises twenty or more large four-column pages. It is profusely and beautifully illustrated, and its contents embrace high-class Fiction by the best American authors, the choicest Poetry, Artistic Needlework, Home Decoration, Housekeeping, Mother's, Children's and Fashion Departments, Hygiene and choice Miscellany. It publishes original matter only, and spares no expense to procure the best. Each issue is replete with practical hints and useful suggestions of the utmost value to every lady, in addition to the vast fund of entertaining reading provided. No intelligent household should be without it. To introduce this charming paper into thousands of homes where it is not already taken, we will send The Ladies' World to any lady Three Months on trial Free, who will send us Six Cents to cover postage and mailing, and help pay for this advertisement. We charge you nothing for the paper; the six cents merely covers the expense of sending it to you. Our liberal offer presents an opportunity whereby every lady may secure one of the most delightful periodicals published three months free. You cannot afford to miss this opportunity. Address, on the CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY leaves Chicago, daily, at 10 P. M. It is called

S. H. MOORE & CO., 27 Park Place, New York.

A VERY POPULAR TRAIN

"THE BIG FIVE"

is only one day out, and passengers arrive at Denver, Pueblo or Colorado Springs early the second morning.

The "ROCK ISLAND" has become a popular Colorado Line, and the train above referred to is Vestibuled, and carries the "ROCK ISLAND'S" excellent Dining Car Service.

JNO. SEBASTIAN, G. T. & P. A., CHICAGO, ILL.

RUBBER GOODS Of Every Description BY MAIL. Send for Cat. A. U. BETTS & Co., Toledo, Ohio

Please state what periodical you saw our advertisement in.

How TO MAKE A Fortune

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser; patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen to whom we give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new, will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., 184 Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

From the foot of Pike's Peak; "Manitou Table Water"; growing to be the favorite Mineral Water of the United States.

The Whole world pays tribute to the merits of "Garland" Stoves and Ranges.

GOOD KING ARTHUR.

BY MARY L. WYATT.

[Character, a boy dressed like a king with crown on, cloak trimmed with imitation of ermine, large roll in his hand. Large seal made of red paper in the bottom left-hand corner of the "bill of sale."]

Boy:—

I've heard a rhyme about myself,
That is not strictly true,
So I will try to clear my skirts
As honest kings should do.

"When good King Arthur ruled the land,
He was a goodly king."
Now that's a pretty compliment
And quite the proper thing.

And then the rhyme goes on to say:
"This goodly king did steal,
To make a pudding in a bag,
Three pecks of barley meal."

I never was a thief, my friends;
I bought that barley meal,
And here you see the bill of sale (Shows paper)
Sealed with the royal seal.

That man's a thief who makes strong drink,
And steals away men's brains,
And robs the home of joy and love
To add unto his gains.

I'd rather make a pudding good
Than gin from barley brew,
Besides, I'm pledged for temperance
And prohibition, too.

Now as a king I beg you all
To stop a bit and think
How you can help me rule the land
And stop this cursed drink.

For if we could arise in might,
And crush the deadly thing,
I then might honestly enough
Be called a goodly king.

West Medford, Mass.

SILAS LOVEJOY'S CALL.

BY LIZZIE YOUNG BUTLER.

Down the walk in the glad June morning ambled Silas Lovejoy, unconscious of the beauty of earth and sea and sky, unmindful of the happy twitter of the flitting birds building their summer homes, not noticing the sweet perfume of the budding flowers which nodded by the wayside or swayed in the gardens near.

He had left home not ten minutes before, followed by the pleading eyes of a loving wife and bearing with him the good by kiss of his five-year-old lassie, who, in her innocency had said, "You's sweet this morning, papa."

Poor little girlie! not often did she care to send papa off with a kiss. Usually his breath was vile with rum, but this morning the bottle was empty and Silas Lovejoy was sober.

Into town he was going to get a draught before seeking a job. Passing along down the street with his hat slouched over his eyes, pondering on the home scene just left, he was brought suddenly to his senses.

"There goes Silas Lovejoy," said a voice from a house near. "I do believe he is sober. Too bad he will drink when he is such a capable workman and has such a dear wife and baby. He is going to ruin, ruin," and he felt the regret in the tones and hurried on.

He'd pass no more houses if he must hear himself commented upon. Whose affair was it if he did go to ruin! He thought he could "row his own boat" awhile longer and not sink her either.

Cherishing such feelings he left the traveled way and cut across the fields with their floating network of daisies, buttercups and clovers. Almost into the city he had passed when he spied three little girls swaying in a grape-swing. They saw him, too, and said: "Let's sing to old Silas; perhaps he'll hear." So, as he neared them, their childish treble fell on the air in a rousing temperance song.

Leaning against a tree he listened while they sang song after song. One, "Shun the Bowl," made him draw his hat still further over his face while he brushed his eyes with the back of his hand. Silence fell for a moment, then the sweet voices took up the world-wide hymn, 'Come to the Saviour, make no delay."

Tremblingly Silas heard as never before, for he heard with his heart, and falling on his face by the lilacs in full conviction cried: "I will, I will!" Then came

"Softly and tenderly Jesus is calling, Calling, oh, sinner! come home."

"I'm coming, O Lord, hear!" and Silas sprang up with the thought deepening in his mind that he should make all speed into town to headquarters and sign the pledge.

Through the daisy fields he hurried, purpose in his step and head erect, little resembling the listless figure which a few moments before was ambling towards the town.

On he hastened, leaving the field for the beaten way, passing through the town and drawing many a jocose remark from associates; yet he heeded no one, stopped nowhere until his form disappeared within a doorway beneath a row of windows bearing the letters "W. C. T. U."

. . . . . .

In South street church the gas was flinging its light aslant the pews and diffusing a glow of comfort and cheer throughout its quarters. The lily bells on the desk wafted a peculiar, yet grateful fragrance abroad, and moved gently above the open Bible, swayed by the sweet evening breeze which crept in through the open window. Many nights had the South street church flung wide its door in welcome to all, and souls which had passed the threshold, still dead in sins, had crossed it homeward bound with the new life of hope and joy. It was generally conceded that no such revival had been in Glendale for years. Old men and women, termed in the world's vernacular "hard cases," had bowed the knee to their King, and many given to the use of rum or opium, had claimed the One who alone is able to conquer habits so deadly.

A few heads were turned as Silas Lovejoy and his wife entered the crowded house and quietly took the back seat. Some thoughtless boys in the rear of the church nudged each other and whispered together about "the bonnet that came over with Mrs. Noah, and wondered how it had been so well preserved."

Every head turned, however, when Silas' voice fell on the stillness as the testimony meeting opened. "Now, I know you'll hardly b'lieve that old Silas Lovejoy's here in meetin', and it will be harder for you to b'lieve that Silas is a new man. Yes, sir, old Silas heard his call to day, and answered it, and he's come to the Lord to stay forever. 'Twas just this 'ere way, Ruthie kissed me good-by this mornin'; 'tisn't often that she does. Then with her soft arms around my neck said, 'You's sweet this mornin'.' That made me feel bad, for when the bottle was full old Silas was apt to be full, too, then the little gal couldn't call me sweet. I left Ruthie, and wife too, looking after me, and the little one called, 'March, pa, march!' That set me to thinkin', for once I could walk as straight as any one, and no soldier-boy carried a prouder head than old Silas when he was young and marched in line, and I declare to you, I couldn't help but see that my shamblin' way didn't look like a march step.

"After awhile as I was goin' by some houses I heard some one say: 'Old Silas goin' to ruin.' Now that made me mad like, so I thought I'd cut across the fields but I declare for it I got deeper in than ever. One part of me was mad and t'other part was sorry-like and something kept sayin': 'You know it's so, Silas, you know it's so.' Then something else would rise up: 'You're havin' a good time, Silas, a first-rate time.' But do you know I couldn't stand that nohow for I 'lowed 'twas a lie and I said right out, 'No I ain't either'.

"Just then them three little gals a-swingin' in the breeze set up a-singin'. I just stopped by them lilacs and listened. While all the time there was the greatest confab a-goin' on inside o' me. Why, I was three people all to once. Then just like the burst of the sun over the hills when them little gals was singin': 'Come to the Saviour,' I saw that this was my last call. I fell on my face in the daisies and in no time the confab was over in my soul and one man, the new Silas, got up and hurried to the town. I tell you I stopped for nothin' till I clipped around the corner of the Woman's Temperance stairway.

"When I went up them stairs I was just set on gettin' my name on the pledge. Seems 'though the Lord kept sayin': 'Sign the pledge, Silas, sign the pledge.' The woman what was there was difficult to persuade seein' she'd heard of old Silas, the drunkard, but wasn't acquainted with new Silas, the saved. But I put my name to that pledge in big, round letters and anybody can see it what wants to. Then the strength all left me like and I began to cry. By littles I told of my call and then you'd ought to have seen that woman smile and heard her thank God three or four times. She left me a bit and come back with a smokin' cup of coffee and some bread and meat. That's all, only old Silas' been workin' all day, and praise the Lord is sober to-night and is goin' to stay so all the time."

Then such a buzz as followed Silas' talk soon interrupted by a testimony meeting that one must have participated in to appreciate. Many enrolled themselves on the Lord's side that night, who, like Felix of old, had been intending to put off the matter "till a more convenient season." One man, for many years the keeper of a card and billiard room, who had tried to find other employment but had failed, and who had been kept back by this fact, gave up all that night—means of livelihood, associates, past life—and took his stand on the Lord's side. After the regular meeting at the "pledge call," his was the first name written, "for" said he, "I sell no more the stuff that kills the body and kills the soul."

The residents of Glendale say that Silas Lovejoy's call is as fresh to-day as ever. His work among the drinkers and the tempted is abundantly supplemented by the grand women of the W. C. T. U., and the three little girls who are still singing the call, God bless them.

Should you see Silas crossing the daisy fields this summer, whistling, "Softly and tenderly Jesus is calling," as he loves to do, you would never suspect that he once ambled across the same way, a figure to be shunned for very repulsiveness. So true it is that the grace of God is sufficient for all men, uplifting and upholding as nothing else can do.

Rockland, Me.

Dear Boys and Girls:—In response to my request for essays on tobacco, alcohol or cider a few have been received. I think, however, that you do not clearly understand what an "essay" is and that perhaps the very thought of writing one has proved alarming to many a timid Cozy Cornerer who would like to write something for our column. An essay means "a trial," so that when you write an essay, you just try to tell all the facts you know about a subject. Here is one of those sent in:

AN ESSAY ON TOBACCO.

Tobacco is a deadly poison, and lots of people use it. I hate it myself, and never mean to use it.

And that was all that Harvey told us. But wasn't it a good beginning? We would like to have had more thoughts and facts from him. Will you not all try?

Yours, to help,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

I am ten years old. I belong to a Young People's Christian Temperance League. I like the Cozy Corner. I have had a nice time making sentences, and thank Cousin Mollie for it. Here is a sentence: A boy came down early from grandfather's house in justice, kindness, liberality, manliness; no one present quite realized such temperate usages, voting wrong yet zealously.

Baltimore, Md. J. Clinton Perrine.

That is an excellent sentence. I hope other Cozy Cornerers have tried Cousin Mollie's game.

I am eleven years old and my brother is eight and we both hurrah for Bidwell. Stella B. Kuhl.

North East, Pa.

The Cozy Corner circle welcomes the little Prohibitionists of the Keystone state.

I enclose a puzzle that I made myself. I hope that you will publish it in The Union Signal, for I would like to surprise my papa. Mary P. Sears.

Kingston, N. Y.

We could not use the puzzle, dear little friend, but I am glad to publish a part of your nice letter.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

110.

CROSSWORD ENIGMA.

In Frank not in Ray,
In Grace not in May,
In Anna not in Bessie,
In Jane not in Jessie,
In Clara not in Molly,
In Ella not in Polly,
In Sarah not in Florence,
In William and in Lawrence,
In Philip not in Paul,
In Lewis and in Saul,
In Wallace and in Lily,
In Isaac not in Milly,
In Ralph not in Mattie,
In Leonard not in Hattie.

My whole is the name of a great and good temperance worker. Virgie.

111.

HIDDEN CANDIDATES.

Unless God forbid, we'll battle on.
The athletic ran, filled up the bucket and returned in a trice.
Private Pharr is on duty.
Waiter here, I do not drink.
His rare logic, level and true head gained many friends
The best, most even sonnet ever written.
We, a very tired crowd, returned late.

112.

COMPARISONS.

[Example.—Positive, to move; comparative, to stab; superlative, a phantom. Ans. Go, gore, ghost.]

1. Pos., a part of the foot; comp., did rend; super., to dry at the fire.
2. Pos., an insect; comp., an alcoholic drink; super., a wild animal.
3. Pos., dried grass; comp., a part of the head; super., hurry.
4. Pos., to reward; comp., to reverence; super., an entertainment.
5. Pos., wages; comp., a couple; super., to cement.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, The Union Signal, the Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

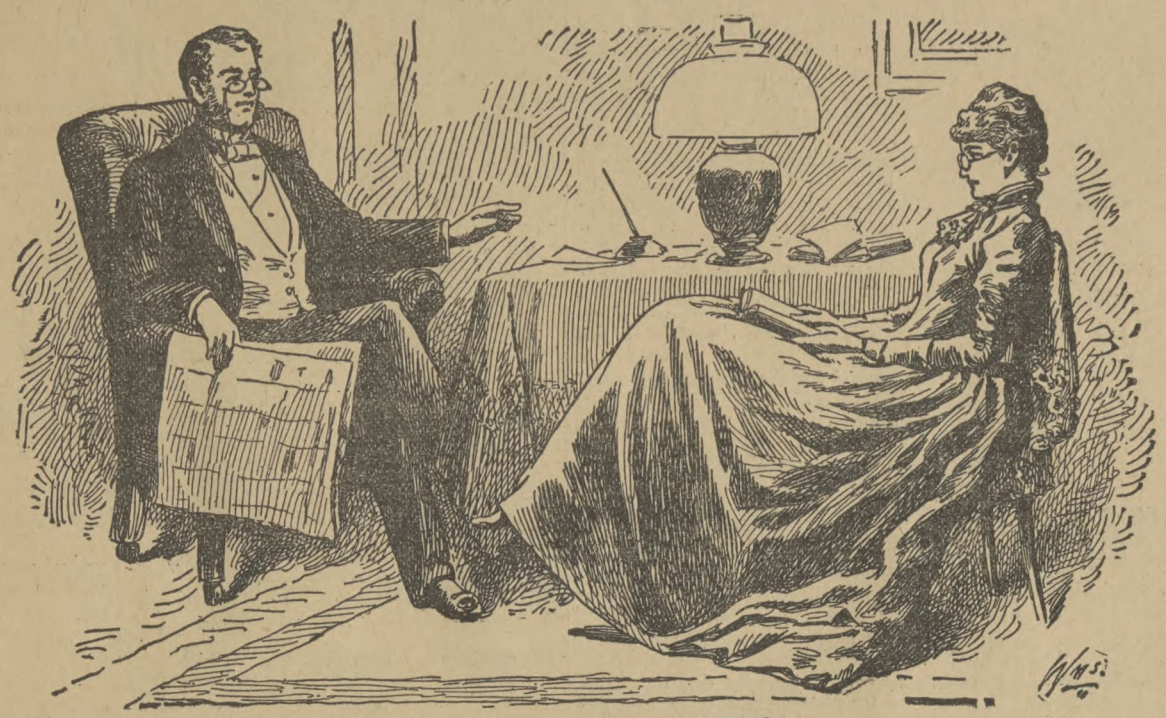
ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED SEPTEMBER 29.

99. Alcohol.
100. Omaha, Denver, Dayton, Troy, Ithaca.
101. 1, Look not upon the wine when it is red. 2, Fight for temperance. 3, Do right and fear not.
102. Union Temperance Band.

Correct answers: Ethel E. Banks; Royal J. Davis; Mary [illegible]; Ida Mae Atchison; Rebecca; Beth S. Sargent.

"Education is an ornament in prosperity; a refuge in adversity."

THE COST OF AN EDUCATION.



HUSBAND—"My dear, our boy Robert graduates from the public schools very soon, you know. Have you thought what he had bes do then?"

WIFE—"Well, John, I'd like ever so much to send him to college if you think we could afford it."

HUSBAND—"I'm afraid that is out of the question, my dear. Do you know it would cost at the very least $800 a year for him at any good college?"

WIFE—"Goodness, as much as that? Of course we can't send him. But I do want to give him a good start in the world, and I don't think a public school education is enough to equip him for the battle of life."

HUSBAND—"No, it is not to-day, when education is so general. Now, I've been set a thinking by an advertisement I saw in our paper the other day, and that is why I brought up the subject to-night. The trouble is, I think, that most young persons stumble into business, are thrown into it by accident or temporary necessity, or are drawn to it by misguided ambition or a perverted fancy, without any serious thought as to their real fitness for it. When the years for learning the theory and practice of their trade or profession are passed they often awake with regret and dismay, to the fact that they have not only made a mistake in their selection. but have wasted the precious years of early manhood upon a wrong pursuit.

"Now, the chief thing for our boy's success in life is not education as much as proper education, that is, education along the line of his natural bent. It's a year or two before he graduates. I'm going to give him an opportunity of doing a little study at home during this time. I was reading about the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica to-day, and it's really a great thing. With these books in the house, Robert will have information upon every possible subject, and it is the most reliable information in the world. Whatever his natural bent is he can find proper development for it in this encyclopedia, whether it's the law, mechanics, engineering, literature or any of the arts and sciences. Besides, there he will find the life stories of all the great men of the past, and he will know of their efforts, their struggles and their successes, and he may have a better and more serious view of life. These books have in them all the instruction he can get in a college education. Honestly, our paper has given us a great opportunity. Now, my dear, what do you think of my scheme?"

WIFE—"It's just splendid, John; but what will the books cost?"

HUSBAND—"Why, that's the most surprising thing of all. We can get them for only ten cents a day, just think of it. Here i the offer."

ON RECEIPT OF ONE DOLLAR

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO THE UNION SIGNAL.

PUBLISHERS UNION SIGNAL:

Please deliver to me the entire set of 20 volumes of Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, as above described, together with your Dime Savings Bank, for which I enclose One Dollar, and further agree to remit 10 cents a day (remitting the same monthly) until the remaining $9.00 is fully paid.

*Name*_____

*Postoffice*_____

*County*_____

*State*_____

We will forward to you, charges prepaid, the entire set of 20 volumes, the re maining $9.00 to be paid at the rate of 10 cents a day (to be remitted monthly). A beautiful dime savings bank will be sent with the books, in which the dime may be deposited each day. This edition is printed from new, large type on a fine quality of paper, and is strongly bound in heavy manilla paper covers, which, with proper care will last a lifetime. Bear in mind that the entire 20 volumes are delivered to your address, with all charges paid to any part of the United States, Mexico and Canada.

This special offer is made only to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL and will remain open for a limited time only.

PRETTY GIRLS

are getting plenty, and it is fashionable to be HEALTHY and STRONG, BE SURE TO BUY FERRIS'

GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS.

THOUSANDS NOW IN USE.

Best for Health, Economy and Beauty. BUTTONS at front instead of CLASPS. Clamp Buckle at hip for Hose Supporters. Tape-fastened Buttons—won't pull off. Cord-Edge Button Holes—won't wear out. FIT ALL AGES—Made in FAST BLACK, drab and white. Mailed FREE on receipt of price, by FERRIS BROS., Manufacturers, 341 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

MARSHALL FIELD & CO., CHICAGO, Wholesale Western Agts. For Sale by ALL LEADING RETAILERS.

The Sweet Strains of the Zither, falling even upon the untutored ear, have a soothing effect, but are not equalled by the salutary influence exerted on the system by that "marvel in medicinal magic,"

Manitou

MINERAL WATER.

It flows from the celebrated soda springs at Manitou Springs, Colorado, and is naturally effervescent. In the spring house it noisily churns and bubbles like a thing of life. The American Indians looked upon this as the one great fountain of life and a cure for all their ills. Hence they called it "Manitou Spring" (the Great Spirit spring).

For Centuries

People who use it for the first time exclaim,

"Such a Draught."

It hisses and bubbles when poured from the bottle, just as it does at the spring, being heavily charged with its own surplus gas. It should be drank with meals as a table water.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. ☞ We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE

The Cheapest Way to Buy Music is to take a Good Musical Journal.

THE MUSICAL MESSENGER

is a magazine that prints, every month, new vocal and instrumental music for the piano and organ, written by popular composers. The music bought separately would cost ten times the price of the journal. The object of The Musical Messenger is to furnish the people the kind of music they like—such as they can use at home, at church, or at the concert.

Try it three months for 25 cents. Per year, $1.00.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 W. 6th Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, New York.

Canvassers make money by taking subscriptions.

"SILVER TONES!"

NEW PROHIBITION SONG BOOK

Just out, by the Silver Lake Quartette and W. A. Williams. Selling rapidly; best in the field; just the book for campaign, W. C. T. U. and contest work; special terms to quartettes; 35c.; $3.60 per doz., postpaid. Address W. A. WILLIAMS, Warnock, O.

BEATTY Pianos, Organs, $33 up. Want agts. Cat'lg FREE. Dan F. Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15
Per 100 copies	1.00

Address all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

EDUCATION IN THE HOME.

A fine poet, a brilliant writer, master of the purest English, and a most distinguished style was Hugh Miller. He was also the most eminent geologist of the day, imbuing with life and poetry the dry details of a science that had hitherto been regarded as altogether technical and of no interest to the lay student. Miller's audience was the civilized world. He compelled the attention and excited the admiration of thinking men everywhere. His writing showed that their author had evidently read and studied the best English authors, and possessed extraordinary powers of description and illustration.

What Burns did for the old songs of Scotland, Miller did for the facts of geology.

A rich man, of course, and graduate of a university?

Not at all, Miller was a poor Scotch boy, and he educated himself.

His relatives would have clubbed together and given the orphan boy the benefit of a college course. But he was proud, as well as able. He was proud to appear as a working man; proud of his rough coat and leather apron; and resolved to force his way to the top by solitary study, self-denial and perseverance.

Remember one thing; he did not have the opportunity for self education that lies within the reach of every American boy today, even the poorest in this world's goods.

In his simple and charming narrative "My Schools and School master or the Story of My Education," Hugh Miller has told of his early struggles and also of the charm of independence and the glory of knowledge. The hard working stone-mason wrung from the "Old Red Sandstone" the mystery of its creation, and gave new life to an old subject. He was at home among the rocks and crags and he educated himself at home.

So can you.

If the list of eminent and successful men who have educated themselves at home and so laid the foundation of their success were ever published, it would startle the college graduates out of their boots.

Young man, educate yourself at home. Home is a good place to cultivate, an excellent place to study. The household is the homeplate of human happiness.

How can you do it? The solution is easy. Even if you were rich enough to afford it, your home would not hold all the text books of a university or the paraphernalia of a laboratory. You do not need them.

Do not forget that we send the entire 20 volumes on receipt of one dollar and allow you 90 days' time at the rate of 10 cents a day, the same to be remitted monthly. On these terms there is now no excuse for not owning this great reference library.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

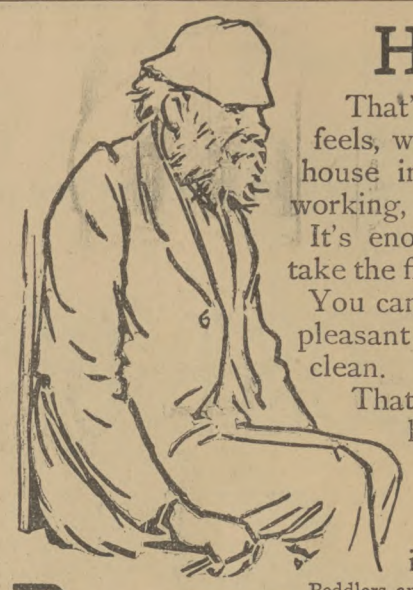
FOR EVERY HOME.

The book recently issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, entitled THE JUNIOR PARTNERS, should be in every home. It is very entertaining and exceedingly instructive. The purpose of the book is to illustrate the dangers that beset business men, and to show the relation between the drink habit and insanity. All who have read the book testify to its merits. It is written with remarkable power.

Dr. Thompson writes: "I am fascinated and uplifted."

A prominent physician writes: "I regard it as a beacon light on the stormy sea of ignorance, intemperance and vice. It bristles with jewels of invaluable truth respecting social relations. Its scientific thought couched in the most fascinating story comes as a glad evangel to suffering humanity."

Buy it for your homes.
Place it in your library.
It will do good everywhere.
Price: Cloth, $2; morocco, $3.
Agents wanted everywhere.



Homeless!

That's the way your husband feels, when you're trying to clean house in the old-fashioned, hard-working, fussy way.

It's enough to drive any man to take the first steps downward.

You can just as well make home pleasant while you are making it clean. Take Pearline to it.

That saves so much work that house-cleaning is no trouble, either to the worker, or the looker-on.

It's sooner over, and it's better done.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 330 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

FREE.

Our large 24-page Catalogue, profusely illustrated, full of information on the proper construction of Pianos and Organs. We ship on test trial, ask no cash in advance, sell on instalments, give greater value for the money than any other manufacturer. Send for this book at once to

BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO
WASHINGTON, N. J.
P. O. Box 701.

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS

With Its Stirring Music is just THE THING for Your Public Meetings It will help Immensely

YOUNG PEOPLE LIKE IT.
The CHILDREN ENJOY it.
Old Folks are Interested.

PRICE 35c. PER COPY.
Send for Sample Copy to

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
THE TEMPLE
CHICAGO.

'DELSARTE'

Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.
Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. Also 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

A CLEAR COMPLEXION.

A SAMPLE BOX of Dr. O. P. BROWN'S Tissue Builder for Plumping the Figure, Preserving and Beautifying Face and Hands sent for 10c. with Lady's paper illus. Woman's Life, and devoted to care of Face and Body. The Physical Beauty of the Romans was largely due to anointing and Dr. Brown's TISSUE BUILDER serves the same purpose. Druggists or mail $1. Dr. Brown, 47 Grand-st., Jersey City, N.J.

BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS FOR THE HAIR AND SKIN.

An elegant dressing, Prevents baldness, gray hair, and dandruff. Makes the hair grow thick and soft. Cures eruptions and diseases of the skin. Heals cuts, burns, bruises and sprains. All druggists or by mail 50 cts. 44 Stone St. N.Y.

A CENT SENT BENT.

Manufacturer of "CROWN" PIANOS AND ORGANS.

WELL SPENT, is a cent sent to Bent, (your address, on postal) if you wish a Piano or Organ I want verses about the "Crown" goods, and give Pianos, Organs, etc., for the best ones. Ask and learn how it's done. Catalogue free. GEO. P. BENT, (Clerk No. 52), Chicago, Ill. (Estab. 1870).

A COMPLETE LINE OF

DRESS REFORM GOODS,

including the famous EQUIPOISE and DELSARTE Waists, Jenness-Miller Specialties, &c., &c. Send stamp for free illustrated pamphlet on healthful dress. Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 75 Madison St., Chicago.

☞ See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.

CATARRH

Sold by Druggists or sent by mail. 50c. E. T. Hazeltine, Warren, Pa.

PRINTING OUTFIT 15c

COMPLETE, 4 alphabets rubber type, type holder, bottle Indelible Ink, Ink Pad and Tweezers. Put up in neat box with directions for use. Satisfaction guaranteed. Worth 50c. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Sets names in 1 minute, prints 500 cards an hour. Sent postpaid 15c; 2 for 25c, Cat. free. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt St. N.Y. City.

THE BABY will be given a beautiful birthday card if the mother will send baby's name and age to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. This is done to advertise LACTATED FOOD The food that SAVES BABIES' LIVES.

SEWING MACHINES Our List Prices are about ONE-HALF those of any other manufacturer of Sewing Machines. We will cut these prices IN TWO to INTRODUCE them. We have the newest and best. LIST FREE. AMERICAN MACHINE COMPANY, Chicago.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY

or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

IMPROVED HALL TYPEWRITER.

The best and most simple machine made. Interchangeable Type into all languages. Durable, easiest running, rapid as any. Endorsed by the Clergy and literary people. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Agents wanted. Address N. Typewriter Co., 611 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis.

$2.85 GENT'S SIZE LADIE'S

WARRANTED FOR 5 YEARS.

Will keep as good time as a $15 watch. We are the only firm in the United States making this offer. The country has been flooded with cheap imitations of this watch. Now we propose to offer 10,000 of the real article. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address and we will send this watch to your nearest express office for you to look over and if you think it is a big bargain pay the agent $2.85 and express charges and it is yours. We send our guarantee that you can return it any time within one year if in any way unsatisfactory. FREE. If you send cash, $2.85, with your order we give you a $1.00 Gold plated chain as sample.

Keene's Mammoth Watch Store, 1301 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL'S SPECIAL FIVE DOLLAR PREMIUM.

To any person sending a new subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL who may indicate a desire to secure the advantage here offered, remitting $1 to pay for the paper, we will send a paid-up scholarship for one month's instruction in the Phillips Home Study Business College, Syracuse, N. Y., with a choice of studies in either shorthand, bookkeeping or penmanship. The instruction is suited to young people of either sex, and its special features are: Rapid advancement, thorough qualification, saving of time and money. Distance is no objection, the work being done by mail. The regular price of a month's tuition is $5 for each study taken, but by special arrangement with the Phillips College, we are enabled to make this very liberal offer, presenting a remarkable opportunity whereby any young man or woman may, without any expense whatever, secure a month's instruction at home, thereby laying the foundation for a business education which will undoubtedly lead to success in life. Every energetic young reader of THE UNION SIGNAL will at once set to work and secure the name of the subscriber required; this will be easily done, for your friends will assist you in so laudable an undertaking. The offer is limited to one month's instruction, but those desiring to continue the course after the expiration of this scholarship can make satisfactory arrangements with the college to do so.

Every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL should call the attention of young people to this offer, and all members of the W. C. T. U. who have not secured a business training should realize what a good opportunity is now offered at small cost.

The price of home instruction is $5 per month.

To repeat:

The price of THE UNION SIGNAL is $1 per year.

Send one new subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and we will send an order entitling you to one month's instruction from the Phillips Business College without extra charge.

A letter just received says:

"I am arranging to offer a new one hundred dollar type writer as a prize to the student who shall make the greatest progress during a given time."

Do not delay. Send one new name and $1 without delay and enroll yourself in the home instruction class now being organized. Address,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

This book so long promised, is nearly ready, and will be used at the National Convention at Denver. Lady Henry Somerset has sent an order from England for five hundred copies to be forwarded to her as soon as issued. It will be a very popular book as it contains the favorite hymns of so many members of the W. C. T. U., besides new ones of great merit. The fact that it has been compiled by Miss Anna Gordon will in itself be evidence of its merit and destined popularity. It will doubtless be found in every union and the homes of most of the members of the W. C. T. U. To add to its value, a few pages have been devoted to appropriate selections of Scripture for W. C. T. U. meetings. Price per copy, 35c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

NOW IN PRESS.

A new book will soon be ready. Something new and very charming is in store for young people and friends of young people. It is in the shape of a book that all will want to read before coming to Chicago next year, and those who cannot come will need it even more, for it tells of that which made possible "America's four hundredth birthday, that we call the World's Fair." This beautiful book is entitled, "Columbus, and What He Found," by Mrs. Mary H. Hull. Price $1. Send orders to

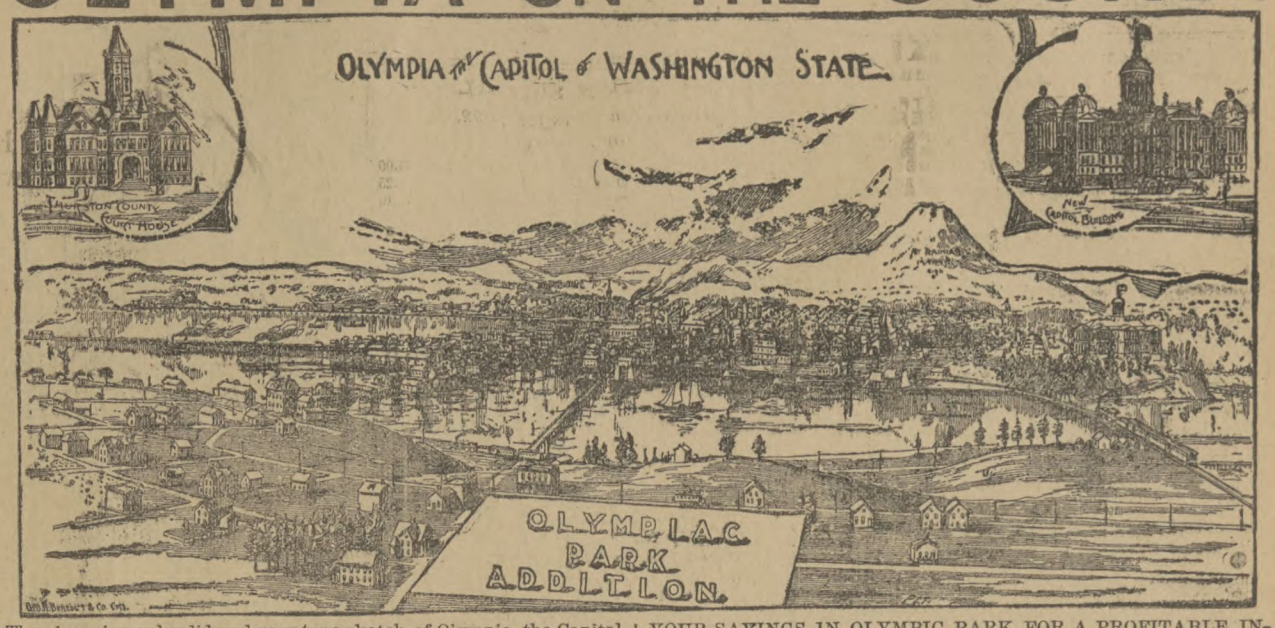
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SEND orders at once for THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. Price 25c.

Have you tried "AUGITE"? We have. It's fine. Send for one to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

OLYMPIA ON THE SOUND.



The above is a splendid and very true sketch of Olympia, the Capital of the wonderful State of Washington, showing the relative position of Olymyic Park Addition. OLYMPIA is a growing, thriving young city of over 8,000 people, situated at the head of navigation on Puget Sound; possesses unrivaled transportation facilities, both rail and water, resources great and inexhaustable, such as Lumber, Coal, Iron, Tin, Gold, Silver, etc., etc., and abundance of natural advantages; one of the greatest water powers west of the Mississippi River; a harbor second to none in the world, which floats the largest vessels and is headquarters for a great many steamboats. Olympia's population has more than doubled during the past 18 months, and is growing faster and making more substantial improvements according to her population than any other city in America. OLYMPIA has four railroads, besides these the Great Northern and Union Pacific are now actively engaged in building, and will be running trains into Olympia in a few months. MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES OF ALL KINDS ARE LOCATING AT OLYMPIA. The combination of unlimited resources and great natural advantages, capital and enterprise is pushing Olympia to the front and will keep her there. PUT YOUR SAVINGS IN OLYMPIC PARK FOR A PROFITABLE INVESTMENT. Interest yourself in this great young city, the coming metropolis of the Pacific Coast. It will be safer and more profitable than depositing in a savings bank. Olympic Park is within one mile of the State Capitol building and Post Office. All lots are 25x100 feet. All lay well, not a bad lot in the whole addition. Inside lots are $125 each; corner lots, $150. Terms, $10 cash, balance, $5 per month; or one-third cash, balance in two equal payments running one and two years. Ten per cent. discount for all cash. Deferred payments draw six per cent. interest. Warranty deeds given, title guaranteed. By having lots reserved you will secure better location. Lots ordered by telegraph will be reserved a reasonable time for remittance to reach us by mail. Send us $10 and we will select for you the best lot unsold, we will send you a plat showing the lot selected. If you do not like the lot selected you can exchange for any lot unsold. We will reserve lots 10 days upon payment of a small amount per lot, which amount will apply as part of first payment. Send money by express or P. O. order or Chicago draft, payable to order of Russell & Russell. As to our reliability we refer you to

Any bank or business man of Olympia, Washington,
The Merchants National bank of Seattle, Washington,
The Boston National Bank of Seattle, Washington,
The Corn Exchange National Bank of Chicago, Ill.,
The Globe Loan & Trust Co. Savings Bank, Omaha, Neb.,
The Bank of Hope, Hope, North Dakota.

RUSSELL & RUSSELL,
Send for pamphlet and instructive matter, mailed free. 1414 ASHLAND BLOCK, CHICAGO, ILL. (Eastern Office.)
PRICES WILL BE ADVANCED $25 per lot on the 15th of November, 1892.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR COLD BLAST FEATHER CO. CHICAGO

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

TOBACCO HABIT

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.

For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others.
Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

EASILY CURED

DO YOU CROCHET ?

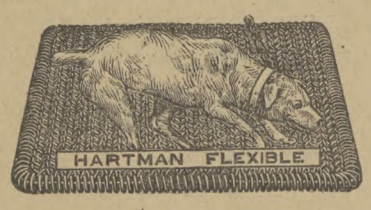
The GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn., will distribute in Premiums $2,000.00 Gold Coin, for the best specimens of fancy work, to be made only from the Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread. Open to all residents of the U. S.

Send 10c. for Sample Spool Twilled Lace Thread. 500 Yards.

$2000.00 GOLD COIN in Premiums.

Ask your dealer for circulars giving full information. If not to be had of him, write us. DO NOT DELAY. Thoroughly satisfactory proofs of our reliability furnished. GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., GLASGO, CONN.

Illus. Crochet Books, Nos. 1, 2, or 3, 10c. each. 24 Bed Spread & Tidy Patterns, 5 cts. each.



"THE F. F. V."
and the "first families" everywhere will have no other mat than the Hartman Flexible; they know which is best—so will you on examination.
HARTMAN MANUFACTURING CO., Beaver Falls, Pa.
Branches: 102 Chambers St., New York; 508 State St., Chicago; 51 and 53 S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga. Catalogue and testimonials mailed free.
Our Mats have brass tag attached stamped "Hartman."

For Harness, Buggy Tops, Saddles, Fly Nets Traveling Bags, Military Equipments, Etc.
Gives a beautiful finish which will not peel or crack off, smut or crock by handling. Not a varnish Used by the U. S. Army and is the standard among manufacturers and owners of fine harness in every quarter of the globe.
SOLD BY ALL HARNESS MAKERS.

BAKER'S COCOA.

ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

VOSE & SON'S PIANOS

EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order. American Desk & Seating Co. 270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

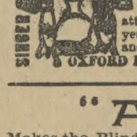
Cuts a Circle.

No Good Kitchen complete without a Chicago Rotary Biscuit and Cake Cutter, they sell at sight. AGENTS WANTED. Sample mailed for 15c. Columbia Specialty Mfg. Co., 59 Dearborn St., Chicago

TORN DRESSES

Instantly and perfectly repaired by use of Red Cross Rubber Tissue. Every lady should have it. A large sheet by mail, 25 cts. A. U. BETTS & CO., Toledo, O

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL in your own home. First class Sewing Machines shipped anywhere to anyone at wholesale prices. All latest improvements Warranted five years. Complete set of attachments FREE. Send for catalogue Standard Singer Machines, $9.50 to $15.50 $50 Arlington Sewing Machine for $19.50 $60 Kenwood Sewing Machine for $28.50
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 160 W. Van Buren St. B 26 Chicago



MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

"ACTINA"

Makes the Blind See and the Deaf Hear; cures Catarrh Hay Fever and Asthma. New York & London Electric Ass'n, 1113-14 Masonic Temple, Chicago. Prof J. H. Gilbert, Mgr. Main Of. & Fac. 1021 Main-st, K. C. Mo

THIS SOLID GOLD GENUINE DIAMOND RING FREE to any girl who will do a few hours work showing our new goods to their friends. Send No Money.
I. M. ASSOCIATION, 269 Dearborn St. Chicago, Ill.

BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Fat People You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by Dr. Clarke's Home Treatment. Proofs, Testimonials Free. F. B. Clarke, M. D. Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y

HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents. Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

Signal Notes.

In England penny cups of coffee are sold near large factories by temperance workers.

The new House of Commons contains two hundred and thirty seven known supporters of the anti-opium bill.

The vineyards of Europe cover almost twenty-three million acres, and the average yield is estimated at over two million gallons.

The saloons of San Francisco, five thousand in number, keep open night and day employing two sets of waiters and barmaids.

Half a dozen young Indian Rajahs have lied within a few years from indulgence in strong drink, a habit learned generally from their English tutors.

An interesting tablet has been translated recently in the British museum bearing the proposal of a Pharaoh for the hand of the daughter of the king of Babylon.

The wealthy Turks drink a great deal of saké and rum, their excuse for breaking Mahomet's command being that he only prohibited the drinking of wine.

The meeting of the Society of the Blue Cross in Geneva, resulted in the formation of a society of Swiss citizens, called "The Swiss Patriotic League against Alcohol."

Out of ten million three hundred thousand artisans of France, there are over four million women who draw thirty-five per cent of the entire sum spent in wages in the Republic.

The great Metabela chief Lobengula, is something of an autocrat, using his power for the benefit of his people by not allowing them to make or drink beer. "Beer is the source of all quarrels; I will stop it."

To watch an entire procession of all the heathen, a person would have to stand night and day in one place for fifty years. Only six thousand missionaries have been sent out by the Christian churches to reach them.

In Salem, Mass., samples of posters, lithographs and other advertisements of entertainments must be submitted to a committee of the city rulers before being displayed An example worthy of imitation by every city council.

"Where there's a will there's a way." If any one is possessed of a determination to do battle against our common foe, weapons and fighting ground are soon discovered to be ready at hand. Rev. H. R. DeBra, of Evanston, Ill., with blackboard, crayons and applied talent placed a picture before an assembly of children that was the means of winning fifty pledges from them for total abstinence. "Many of these children are real heroes," writes Mr. DeBra, "for they are keeping the pledge even when father and mother both drink beer, and many of them refuse to carry the 'beer pail.'" The picture referred to represents an immense serpent emerging from a saloon. As it goes it winds its sinuous length about a building representing the government, and passing on coils itself about the school house, the church, the home, and is in pursuit of the next generation, its head poised to strike a little child, who, with pail in hand, is on its way to the saloon. Lying prone in the dust is seen the "Banner of the cross." The picture, with its questions "How do you pray?" "How do you vote?" preaches a strong sermon. Mr. DeBra has had photographs of the drawing made, and has the commendable "ambition to make a thousand Prohibition votes" by its circulation. Surely it is an excellent "pocket weapon," and will speak convincingly to heart and conscience when the outward ear will not listen to spoken words.

Sickness Among Children,

Especially infants, is prevalent at all times, but is largely avoided by giving proper nourishment and wholesome food. The most successful and reliable is the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk, Your grocer and druggist keep it.

After your bath,—have you ever noticed it? There is one peculiar quality in Ivory Soap. No other soap can give you that exquisite sensation of perfect cleanliness. You feel as if you had been entirely made over. This undoubtedly is attributable to the effectual cleansing of the pores.

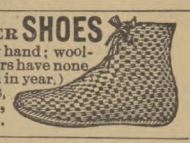
Copyright 1890, by The Procter & Gamble Co.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

DICK'S FOOT WARMER SHOES

Worn everywhere; woven by hand; wool-lined; seamless. Where dealers have none we mail postpaid (any month in year.) Ladies' size, $1.25. Men's, $1.50. WM. H. DICK, Manf'r, Dapsville, N. Y.



Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s New Books.

Children's Rights.

A most readable and valuable book, discussing subjects of great importance to parents and kindergartens. By Kate Douglas Wiggin, author of "The Birds' Christmas Carol," "The Story of Patsy," "A Summer in a Cañon," and "Timothy's Quest." 16mo, $1.00.

An American Missionary in Japan.

By M. L. Gordon, M. D., D. D. With an introductory Note by Rev. Dr. William E. Griffis. 16mo, $1.25.

Dr. Gordon, a wise and judicious missionary for twenty years, in this book makes a distinct and very interesting contribution to our knowledge of the social and religious development of Modern Japan.

Autumn.

Selections from the Journals of H. D. Thoreau. Edited by H. G. O. Blake. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

A book of nice observation and varied interest, like previous volumes made up of extracts from Thoreau's Journals on Spring, Summer, and Winter.

The Foot-Path Way

By Bradford Torrey, Author of "Birds in the Bush," and "A Rambler's Lease." $1.25.

A delightful outdoor book, written with admirable literary skill and humor. Some of its chapters describe June in Franconia, December Out-of-Doors, Five Days on Mount Mansfield, A Widow and Twins, A Great Blue Heron, Flowers and Folks.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

WOMAN'S LAND SYNDICATE!

Our lots are now worth $500 each on an average, which is 100 per cent profit on the investment.

THE FRANK B. BARKLEY MANUFACTURING CO.

Have just located here. Contracts will be let this week for the construction of their building. They wil employ over 300 people.

ONLY 2,947 BONDS REMAIN UNSOLD

And every purchaser shares in the enormous profits we are sure to realize from the sale of our 2,000 lots on which the Bonds are secured.

Seven large manufacturing plants are now located in the midst of our lots, and will soon all be in active operation. Our lots will then be in great demand for residence purposes, and the value increases with the demand.

BONDS ARE STILL $10 EACH.

They are worth much more, but we want to close them out quick. The investment is ABSOLUTELY SAFE, and there is no liability.

OPINIONS OF PEOPLE WHOSE OPINIONS ARE WORTH KNOWING.

Mr. JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co., Chicago, says:

"The property is particularly well located, and is among the most desirable around Chicago."

FRANK P. CRANDON, Gen'l Tax Commissioner Chicago & Northwestern R'y, says;

"It has come to be recognized as the place which shall establish a large manufacturing interest."

Dr. E. S. LENOX, Director of the Washburn & Moen Mfg. Co., says:

"Here are cheap fuel, quick transportation of goods, the lowest freight rates to all parts of the country, with all the surroundings that add to the charms of a home."

Miss ESTHER PUGH says:

"This is just the beginning that we see, of the great enterprise, of the great city that is to come here."

Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association, says:

'I have advised my wife to invest in the Bonds o the Woman's Land Syndicate, believing that investments in South Waukegan will be very profitable."

CHICAGO EVENING POST:

"It is quite safe to say that in this new town there will be 50,000 people in the next five years."

If you send us a deposit we will reserve Bonds for you until you can investigate fully, or collect in your money to pay fo same. They are selling fast. YOU SHOULD NOT DELAY. Make checks, money orders, etc., payable to

Woman's Land Syndicate Mrs. R. A. EMMONS MANAGER. The Temple, Chicago

P. S.—Send for new printed matter just issued. Send for last issue So. Waukegan News. Send for copies of letters from people who have seen the tow with the strongest prohibitory clause in all our deeds ever drawn Harvey the best place for investment of any in or around Chicago.

YOU GET ALL THE ADVANTAGE

of the special low rates to the Dedication of the World's Fair Buildings if you come in October, besides that we will pay the balance of your car fare to the extent of 2½ per cent. of what you buy of us while here. This will be the best chance you have ever had to visit HARVEY, CHICAGO AND THE WORLD'S FAIR (only 20 minutes ride from Harvey). Harvey with its millions—not to be, but—ALREADY invested in Manufacturing enterprises and this shows that TEMPERANCE PAYS BUT SALOONS ARE A CURSE, and renders It is a pleasure to have a home in a town not cursed with saloons, but has good School and Churches.

PRICES OF LOTS WILL POSITIVELY BE RAISED OCTOBER 27TH.

A deposit of at least $10 will hold a lot at present prices for 30 days if made before above date. DO THIS if you know you are coming on or before October 27th: Send us $10 and we will hold the best lot unsold at the time your letter comes for the price you name, and when you get here, if you don't like our selection you may change to any other of our unsold lots and have the deposit apply on same. We will send you a marked plat showing the lot we select. We have the best residence and business lots in that locality, beautiful and dry. It is on our tract that the Great Harvey World's Fair Hotel is being built, also the very successful Harvey Academy is in operation. Buy Now! GET PRESENT PRICES! Get Good Lots! WHERE IT IS ALWAYS DRY! Taxes Low! Harvey Illustrated, a twenty-page book, and plats and all information sent free. We can get Employment for 50 more Carpenters at good wages.

HARVEY

Address all communications in regard to Harvey property to

WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO., 161 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee; that it may be displayed because of the Truth."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, October 27, 1892. Number 43

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

A hurricane and flood destroyed hundreds of lives in Sardinia last week.

Dennis Hanks, the early tutor of Abraham Lincoln, died October 21, at Paris, Ill.

A National League for good roads was organized by prominent men in Chicago, October 20th.

Archbishop Ireland delivered the oration at the World's Auxiliary Congress dedication, October 20th.

The German government proposes to demand a yearly addition to its army of seventy thousand men.

A little before dawn, October 25, Mrs. Harrison passed peacefully away and the nation mourns with its president.

Thousands of school children all over the country celebrated the discovery of America, on Friday, October 21.

Columbus Day was celebrated in Chicago, October 20 and 21. One hundred thousand men were in the civic parade.

The recent Lake Mohonk Indian Mission Conference passed strong resolutions favoring the allotment of land to Indians, and the compulsory education of Indian children, of whom there are now twenty thousand in schools.

The Grand Jury in the Homestead cases has indicted the officers of the Carnegie Co., the chiefs of the Pinkerton detectives, and all the strike leaders on the charge of murder, and the advisory committee of the strikers on the charge of treason.

Mrs. Anne K. Bidwell, wife of our Prohibition presidential nominee, has in this issue a most interesting account of her own and her husband's mission work among the Indians of their county.

The friends of the Sabbath must not be too secure, though just now it seems settled that the Exposition gates are to be closed on Sunday. A sleepless and resourceful foe is to be watched. We must expect to hear a great deal about the elevating influence of art, and the innocence of visiting Jackson Park on Sunday, and the sufficient observance of the Sabbath indicated by stopping the machinery, etc. It is difficult to see how these proposals of compromise can be sincere. Who wants to visit at pains and expense an Exposition which is not an Exposition? Motionless machinery and "covered" exhibits have no great attractions. All this talk is the "camel's nose."

Our entire force was delighted to welcome back last Thursday the two editors who had just arrived from England, although we were able to keep them only three days, and much of that time was given to the dedication exercises. It was good to hear Miss Willard say that her health was somewhat improved. Lady Henry Somerset was so well pleased with the Temple that she mounted to the roof over steep iron stairs and viewed the city from the dazzling height of two hundred feet. Monday morning found them on their way to Denver, intent upon the interests of the great Convention, which they have traveled six thousand miles to attend. Lady Henry will return soon after the Convention.

In reply to questions coming to this office we have to say that Willard Hall while not finished was rented at the noon hour while the workmen were at their lunch, to a Republican club at twenty dollars per hour. It was done without Miss Willard's knowledge or consent, and was a misadventure, deeply regretted by all, and sure never to recur. Mrs. Carse, thinking she had succeeded in annulling the contract with the club, wrote the paragraph to be found in her "Temple Items" on page 7. Since that part of the paper has gone to press, it has been discovered that the contract is good for the full campaign, and the hall will be used for these noon meetings until November 8, but not a day longer.

The time has clearly arrived when every Prohibitionist can safely leave all other issues, to give himself with all that he is politically to the cause of prohibition. Some millions of voters have said with impressive solemnity: "When the time comes that I can vote for prohibition, without putting more important things in jeopardy, I will gladly embrace the opportunity." That time is here.

The Inn-Keepers' Journal, October 1, makes the statement that at the request of the Liquor Dealers' Association, President Harrison prohibited the sale of liquors on government grounds during the G. A. R. encampment, the dealers objecting for the valid reason that they paid license and the sutlers did not. The W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia claim that the prohibition was made in response to their request, and in confirmation forward the following telegram in reply to their own to the President:

Loon Lake House, September 16.

Mrs. LaFetra:—The President has had Col. Ernst investigate the subject of your message. The citizens' committee deny that permission to sell liquor has been granted, and special instructions have been given to the police to prevent such sales.

E. W. Halford.

The absence of hate in this campaign is a notable and commendable feature. That here and there a violent partisan should display his characteristics is to be expected, but on the whole the occasion is dignified, and will be memorable by courtesies which excite admiration. A democratic convention in Virginia sends a resolution of condolence to President Harrison in view of the illness of Mrs. Harrison. For the same reason Mr. Cleveland declined to attend the opening exercises of the Columbian Exposition, as his journey and presence would certainly be given a political coloring. The Chicago Inter Ocean, a strict Republican party journal, can afford to say: "The country would by no means go to ruin if Cleveland and democracy should be voted into power in November."

Much as Miss Willard desired the presence of Lady Henry Somerset at the Denver Convention, it was brought about by reason of our English leader's knowledge that Miss Willard was physically unable to take so long a journey and follow it by meeting her duties at the Convention. No one on this side the water can appreciate what Lady Henry's coming involved. Engagements of the highest importance were postponed or otherwise provided for and the temperance people of Great Britain may well feel that they have given the highest proof within their power of good-will to America's white ribbon host by lending us their leader for six weeks. On our part we profoundly appreciate her coming and will lend them our own when she is once more strong and well. The presence of John G. Woolley, one of the noblest speakers that the temperance cause has produced, and for whom Lady Henry had made engagements far and wide throughout Great Britain, will ameliorate the situation in her greatly regretted absence.

An ironical circular purporting to be "The local directory's reply to the members of American churches of all ranks from laity to bishop, including editors of the religious press," is going the rounds. This circular states that since deciding to allow foreign exhibitors of beverage liquors to sell samples upon the Exposition grounds, the above mentioned persons have accused the members of the directory of being un-American and un-Christian in their action. It then proceeds to defend the directory against these charges. It denies that the action can be called un American when our entire government, from national to municipal, licenses and receives revenue from the liquor traffic. Neither can it justly be called un-Christian in face of the fact that one-third of the voters (about 4,000,000) who elect the men who make and enforce the laws are Christians. The circular concludes with the question, "Can such a traffic, sustained with such practical unanimity by the political power of Christian churches, be un-Christian?"

Any one accustomed to read the interviews of "Nell Nelson," of the New York World, will not take at par value the latest bright bit of romance in an interview with our editor-in-chief October 18th. We prefer not to attribute any unkind motive to the slashing young journalist, because her style is understood, and no one who has heard our editor or read her writings will ever be made to believe that she served up for the public any such dish as the one set before the World's readers in the interview referred to. A few specimen sentences from the interview are enough to show its general character. For instance, that "the World's Fair is going to settle religious unrest forever" (!) and "We have six million members in the W. C. T. U." Well, well, this is but a part of the price, and we do not believe it will harm anybody in the long run. If it does, our editor in-chief has met this sort of thing so often that her equanimity is proving itself equal to the occasion.

The play by Hoyt, entitled "A Temperance Town," was presented to crowded houses in Chicago. The plot is laid in a little town in Vermont, and represents the leading temperance men of the town as persecuting a poor saloon-keeper who is a one-armed Union soldier. Of course, the whole play is calculated to secure the sympathy of the hearer for the saloon-keeper and disgust him with the temperance people. It is adroit and successful and must wield a great educative power. But as temperance people are not above learning something from their enemies, there is one point brought out in the play that they would do well to heed. That is the exceeding iniquity of hiring a detective or drinking man to go and drink at a saloon in order to get his testimony to use for convicting the saloon-keeper. Two wrongs do not make one right, and it seems to us that it would be better to wait until the laws can be changed so that the presence of the liquor may be considered evidence, rather than to jeopardize the soul of a detective by hiring him to drink the accursed stuff, to secure evidence.

On the last day or two of the voyage, our white-ribbon trio on the steamship Etruria had most pleasant conversations with Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, R. H. McCormick, Augustus Eddy, Mrs. Denby, formerly a W. C. T. U. leader in Brooklyn, now in Mont Clair, N. J., and many others. Rev. and Mrs. Miller, missionaries of the United Presbyterian church returning from Sierra Leone, Africa, attracted their attention by the white ribbon symbol, and a delightful interview ensued. It seems that our intrepid Mrs. Leavitt visited Freetown, their station near Sierra Leone, which latter is a city of 65,000. A W. C. T. U. was then founded, and has since been successfully maintained. They had no white ribbons, so Mrs. Miller, an enterprising young Ohio woman, made bows of cloth. The women had no money, but she told them to plant patches of rice and they did so. An L. T. L. was formed and became so enthusiastic about the Temple that they got their mothers to agree to give the rice and buy two bricks ($10), a large sum for them to produce. At a meeting the children sang,

"Little eyes have watched you grow,
Rise, temple, rise.
You were built for us, you know,
Rise, temple, rise."

The mothers got so enthusiastic at this that they came forward during the singing with their rice. So in that far-away land our cause is loved. The Union Signal is read to the women. A smart little "Kansas Willard" (named by the United Brethren Women's Foreign Missionary Society of Kansas) is in the school, "and she's somebody to be proud of," said this bright missionary. "We shall send curiosities to W. C. T. U. exhibit in Chicago," she added, "and I doubt if you have a more loyal set on earth." God bless the great hearts away in Africa and all along shore.

BE STRONG, FEAR NOT.

DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

Be strong, fear not; these paths of ours
Are not all laid in garden bowers;
The rugged rocks are in our way,
And oceans with their driving spray;
And foemen stand in lofty towers
With leaden hail in fiery showers,
The menace of audacious powers;
But angel voices winging say,
Be strong, fear not.

All wrong is weak; immortal dowers
Enrich the soul that never cowers,
And stands confronting the array
Of evil hosts with no dismay,
And makes their trail a path of flowers;
Be strong, fear not.

Cazenovia, N. Y.

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH.*

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

Chapter XI.

As the talk went on Prescott had listened intently, and the look of deep melancholy had left his face, but at the words he shook his head, and it dropped again upon his breast.

"It lightens the burden to know that another has walked the same path," he said. "That is true. Tell me why you hope, and perhaps I shall see it as possible for myself. To-day I cannot. The craving is on me."

"Don't I know it?" Marston said. His teeth were set. For a moment he ground his heel into the earth, and threw back his head with a gesture of unendurable pain. "My God, don't I know it! But I see that under this regimen we are following, it lessens day by day. In the nature of thing it is plain that it must die out. It is impossible for me not to analyze from hour to hour. The doctor knows it and has turned me loose among his books. For some men it would be the worst thing that could be done. For me it opens up a new field. The interior economy of a human being has suddenly become as interesting as his mental and spiritual processes. I am wandering in that border land between flesh and spirit, where I see the current that flows between, and yet through each interchangeably. It is plain to me at last—it might have been made plain in my youth, had my teaching ever held a ray of light on these most vital points—that our healing is from within. I thought prayer could heal. I know now that prayer is a mockery if brute ignorance frames it, and that man suffers deservedly till that ignorance gives place to the knowledge God meant for him. You are a minister, I know, but does not experience tell you the same truth?"

"Absolutely, but at fifty I am less sure than you that tissue can be made over."

"Then take to reading and you will see how it can. I tell you, my friend, the devil can be fought with beans and drowned in fruit-juice. I am proving it, and so will you. Now let us tell each other when he gets temporary upper hand and see if it does not act as a sedative. Read some of the 'Homes' reports, and see if there is not fresh strength for the weakest in every one of them. We'll fight it out together, and when it is over we shall have some words for our public that perhaps will mean more than words generally do."

Prescott put out his hand gratefully. His face had cleared, and the pair walked slowly toward the house meeting Dr. Martha, who put her little hand into that of the older man.

"Supper is ready," she said, "and because there are Porter apples made into beautiful white sauce I am come to tell you."

"Is it any better because it is white?" Marston asked.

Dr. Martha looked at him gravely. "Of course," she said. "Common apples would be yellowy, or even browny perhaps, but these are different. "Don't you know that the porter has taste in it, oh, more than all the summer apples, and smells of the blossoms, and my father says he tastes all the orchards since Adam. It spices its own self, and it gets clear, like pineapple, and you taste it and taste it, and could go right on, because nothing else could be so fine and so sweet."

"Little epicure!" said Marston, with a sudden boyish laugh. "Is that the way you eat?"

"Always," said Dr. Martha. "My father says we must always eat to understand the secret of everything made to eat. Don't you know all of the things have their own secret, and we have to find it out, and when we have, everything does us all the good it can? I don't know all the stories, but I shall, and there are so many things that everything in me can have just what it wants the most. That is what eating is for, you know."

"No, I don't know very much about it," said Marston. "Will you teach me?"

"Not now. You will have to wait till I am big, and then my father says I can have a college of my very own, maybe, and teach everybody that comes that to build a body all fresh and beautiful out of all the beautiful things that grow is just the same as building a cathedral for all the world to see," and Dr. Martha, dropping the hand suddenly, ran toward Johnny, who had just come down the hill.

. . . . . .

Three months had passed and the seven cases that, within the first one, had filled all the room so far planned for patients, had each and all gone through practically the same rôle, varied only by their individual peculiarities. Prescott and Marston were to remain till spring or if necessary, even longer. An artist who had sought for new secrets in color, and like Marston, fallen back at last on alcohol as the surest medium, first of visions, then of oblivion; a successful broker, another secret drinker, who had for years depended upon brandy at midnight, for his most far reaching plan for the next day, till warned by a series of failures of memory and strange symptoms that death might be the end of the life he had chosen, and a lawyer who depended upon the same source for light upon his most perplexing cases, made up five. Of the remaining two, one was a journalist, and long night editor on a successful daily; the other a merchant, given to periodical carouses, but always at such times leaving home, so that his weakness had never been suspected. Each case was something out of the common order; each had come in despair, and promised absolute obedience to the little code of laws governing all who came under Dr. Scarborough's control, and each guarded jealously from the other any hint of the causes which had brought them there.

Save for fullest compliance with the few regulations the largest liberty prevailed. But the day for each was so filled up with the special treatment prescribed, that between gymnasium, baths, massage, long walks or horseback rides, and the lingering over meals, where Dr. Scarborough talked his best, and the young physician proved himself the cheeriest of companions, evening came always as a surprise.

With each and all had been the same revolt when told that all highly seasoned dishes and all stimulating drinks must be renounced. Loudest of all in protesting was the little broker, a round faced and jovial man weighing two hundred pounds, but reaching barely to Dr. Scarborough's shoulder.

"I'll take a ton of medicine, doctor," he moaned, "if you won't cut off my curries. You have a cook capable of anything. I have never seen more delicate omelettes, and whatever comes on the table is perfect of its kind, but good gracious, man, one must have something to tone up on. Dose me any way you like, but give me my natural food or I shall go out of my head altogether."

"That's where your fight comes in," Dr. Scarborough said. "If you trust me at all you must trust that I know what I am talking about; but I am ready to explain as many times as you like."

"Explanation isn't going to keep my stomach from howling for what it's used to and wants," returned the little man with a groan. "Just one paté de foie gras, doctor, and then I'll keep still till things get too much for me again. I tell you there's a gnawing that's most as bad as the other gnawing that I'm here for; I didn't bargain to have to fight that too."

"The fight is all one," Dr. Scarborough said, after a moment in which he watched the restless little man pacing up and down. "You are the third one who has made formal appeal this morning for the flesh pots of Egypt. Now state to yourself, once for all, that your business has just one end, and that to heal and cleanse every irritated, inflamed, debilitated inch of surface for every organ in your body, and that if there is craving and gnawing, it is the same thing as the smarting of a burn. You don't cure your burn with more fire, but with the coolest, blandest healing-medium you know. It's a tough piece of work, I know, but you can do it and you must."

"I believe in you, doctor; I'd walk on my head if you ordered it, but I swear that would be easier than to hanker the way I do. Give me an anodyne and keep me asleep till I'm farther on," but the doctor had vanished as he spoke, to be replaced by the masseur who led him away still grumbling, to the bath and rub which followed, from which he emerged to ride till dinner, and come home with a better defined appetite than he willingly admitted to exist.

Dr. Scarborough had passed on to Prescott's room in his morning round, to find him sitting at the table with head bowed on his arms. He raised it at the doctor's approach, his melancholy eyes full of sharp anxiety.

"Another letter from Anna," he said. "She cannot understand why I still linger on here, and implores me to come home. 'Trust in God' she says, 'and all will be well.' She has always felt that faith would do the whole, and she would still feel so, I think, if she knew everything."

"'Trust in God and keep your powder dry.' That was the old Puritan's notion of trust," said the Doctor, with the steady look under which Prescott's face always lightened. "She has never realized your real state. You must, tell her, Prescott, and have some real coöperation before you go back."

"Dear as she is, and well as she loves me," Prescott returned after a pause and with evident effort, "that is something I can never expect. I have never been able to make her understand the necessity of order or law with our children. To her, faith has always been sufficient. Medicine and plenty of it, is what she was brought up on, and this business of food with her indifference to all luxuries would seem to her pure folly."

The Doctor had frowned darkly as the words dropped slowly, and for a moment pressed his lips together as if afraid of what might come.

"Knowledge of what has been the actual state of things might rouse her," he said. "I will talk to her myself, Prescott."

"If anything could do good that would, but there is nothing that can. It will be simply a matter of my own resolution; a fight I must fight alone. I am stronger. It may even be a fairly easy one in the end, but now I doubt if I shall ever dare be far from you."

"Let the first sermon you preach be against the organized obstruction of women," said Dr. Scarborough, after a silence in which he ran his hands through his hair with a desperation which now and then came upon him. "Good souls as they are, and now and then a rational one who restores faith in her sex, organized obstruction is what they are. Conformity to tradition and custom. No endeavor to get beyond or to find out what a body means and has a right to demand. They will weep for you, ache for you, go down to death for you; anything but live a rational life or learn the meaning of law. The men are dolts; heavy as oxen or light-minded as a congregation of goats, but who are responsible? The mothers who from their cradles, have done for them not as much as is done for a prize pig or horse. I asked the other day what the Woman's Club in Westfield were at, and they told me studying the seventeenth century in French literature, Lord help us! When it is women who make or mar us, why can't they try to find out how to do as little marring as possible?"

"You are hard on them," said Prescott, surprised at his warmth.

"Why should I not be, when here under my eyes day by day are seven men, who, if their mothers in the beginning and their wives afterward had had a gleam of reason in dealing with them, would have made their coming here unnecessary? A wife can hardly make over the imperfect product of another woman's incapacity, but she can see that her own children do not share the same fate. It is because I know that the world's salvation depends on women that a sense of outrage comes upon me when I think how we must still wait for their real work to be done. If echoes did not come to me of some who are thinking out the thing, if I did not know that co-education here and there is making men and women better aware of the real work for each, I should retire to the desert with my little woman and give up the fight as a useless one. I can cure in part, certainly, wholly, I believe, if you obey, every creature who has come to me here, but what am I to do when it comes to your wives and the sort of thing you are going back to? What have I burst out like this for? Because I want you when you go back to work to remember that your fight is against ignorance. It is your business as minister to stop burrowing among dead doctrines, and study life and its meaning. Sorrow is not the law of life. It is only the penalty of our own folly. Joy when it may be, content when more than that cannot be, are tonics, and they are within the power of all, when knowledge has done its work and law is understood. Rouse up, Prescott. There is something to live for besides your own sensations. Sink them in a new work and get up a new type of revival in your congregation, such an one as the Lord can have a solid interest in. And now that you know what is expected of you, come up to the gymnasium. I want you to see a new machine that Sterling has just finished putting up."

Prescott followed slowly, went through his usual morning's work and returned to his own room, lost in thought. Dr. Martha came in after dinner, and finding him still absorbed, stood silently at his side, wondering if he would want her for a walk or if she could steal back to Johnny, who resented her absence as a personal wrong. But his arm had stolen about her, and soon he put a finger under her chin and looked down into the clear, soft eyes, as steady as her father's.

"There will be no trouble about you, little woman," he said. "The heart of a man may safely trust in you, now and when the time comes, perhaps, for your own share. If there were any chance for my two that are left me!"

*Copyrighted.

"What two?" said Dr. Martha.

"Didn't you know? Of course you know; the two little girls right here on the table."

"Oh, but I thought they were dead," Dr. Martha said in surprise. "You always seemed so sorry when you looked at them. If they are alive, why, you can have beautiful times; just such times as father and I have."

"But I can't teach them as your father teaches you."

"Oh, yes, you can, because he will tell you just how," Dr. Martha answered after a pause for reflection. "If you don't, you know, just think how sorry they will be. Because that is what all the children are for; to make the fathers and mothers remember all the things they have forgotten, and learn new things all the time, beautiful things, you know, so that by and by everything will get perfect, and there won't be so much trouble."

"Then you, too, don't believe we were meant to be always in trouble?" Mr. Prescott said with a half smile at his own question.

But Dr. Martha looked at him doubtfully, and then answered with fullest conviction: "My father says that when everybody has learned just how to live there won't be any more trouble, just as it is when you know exactly how to do things, and like to do them. God wants us to find out just how, and so because we don't, we have to have trouble to make us open our eyes and see, and then we need not have any more. Didn't you know that?"

"Perhaps I did, Dr. Martha," said her hearer a little absently; "perhaps I did; but it is going to mean something it never did before. Come now, my small teacher, and we will see what the hemlocks have to say."

Lanesborough, Mass.

(To be continued.)

SOME POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY

Applied to New Parties and Their Chances.

BY R. M. ALDEN.

Men who can see all the way round a question are almost as scarce as those who can see all around a pillar, from one point of view. Every other man, these days, considers himself a political philosopher of the first water; if every other man is right, whom are we to depend upon? Four political parties are now before the people, and ninety-nine men out of a hundred will agree to demolish the platforms of three of them, with one fell swoop. The only difference is in the selection of the abiding fourth. By all the laws of politics, history, logic and philosophy, all four are daily sentenced to political, historical, logical and philosophical death. The hangman, that is the meek and undecided voter, does not know where to begin.

The immediate cause of these reflections is to be found in the experience of one of the would-be philosophers who recently heard two political speeches, the gist of which he begs leave to recount.

Speech Number One.—This was delivered by a prominent Prohibitionist of West Virginia to an enthusiastic company of white-ribboners and a few masculine barbarians, and set out to show why a third or fourth party bringing forward a moral issue in its platform could hope to succeed in pushing its way to the front in American politics. And this was the argument: There have always been in the United States two political parties, A and B. Party A has always been the party of conservatism, the party of the kicker, the party of opposition to the issue of the hour. Party B has, on the other hand, always been the party of advance, the party of the pusher, the party of support to the issue which it brought forward. Party A, singularly enough, has experienced few changes in its general organization and principles, and no change at all in its name "from the grand old days of Thomas Jefferson" to the present time. It is called Democratic, and it has opposed, in turn, the adoption of the federal constitution, the maintenance of a protective tariff, the national regulation of slavery and "sumptuary laws" relating to the liquor traffic. Party B represents many more vicissitudes and reorganizations. It has been baptized as Federal, as Whig, as Republican, at least, but its general character may be recognized from the fact that it has been the supporter of three of the four movements which its old enemy fought. The speaker did not doubt, that were he to return to earth one hundred years from now, provided no great crisis had overtaken the progress of American events, he should find at the front of the political arena two familiar combatants—our old friend the Democratic party, and Party B, bearing a new name in its forehead and a new sword in its hand, which now it would be impossible to define.

The historical argument seemed, to the impartial would-be philosopher, entirely satisfactory thus far. We can only judge the future from the past; this was what the Prohibitionist was engaged in doing. His final conclusion was eminently satisfactory to himself and his audience. The logic of our history shows a place for a party with a new issue, which the Democratic party will oppose, to take the place now seemingly held by the Republican party, which we all know is dying of degeneration of the issue.

But speech number two came not long afterward. This was delivered by a prominent Republican of New York State to an audience less sympathetic than the one with which the first speaker was favored, but no less attentive. The would-be philosopher was there too, and listened as impartially as he had before. He pricked up his ears considerably when he heard phrases in speech number two which had illuminated a very different cause in speech number one; the reader must excuse him if the two reports are monotonously similar, remembering that one address bears a watery, fanatical, Prohibition flavor, and the other a more spicy, if not alcoholic, Republican tinge. This was the argument: There have, since the early discussions in the Continental Congress of the colonies, always been in this country two political parties, A and B. Party A has always been the party favoring local control in the several states, and opposing the effort to strengthen the central government in the Federal power. Party B has, on the other hand, always been the party favoring this strong Federal system. In the old Federal and Whig parties it maintained this principle; in the Republican party, organized as a foe to extension of slave-power, it was forced from beginning to end to plant itself on the same platform; and now it maintains Federal supremacy for a constitutional protective tariff and the Federal control of national elections. This speaker was equally certain with the first, that, should he return to the United States a hundred years from now, he would find the two familiar parties struggling, respectively, for and against a greater centralization of government.

And here, likewise, the historical argument seemed to the would-be philosopher entirely satisfactory. He waited anxiously for the conclusion. Would speaker Number Two come to an entirely different place from speaker Number One, though traveling upon nearly the same road? He did; and this was the conclusion: The logic of our history shows no place for a party with any other issue than that of centralization, or anti-centralization, of governmental power; and therefore the Prohibition party, which seeks a place for a moral and an economic issue in political life, is by the very nature of things doomed to failure, no matter how successful the issues which it supports.

The would-be philosopher was unusually interested to find these two widely different conclusions resting on such similar bases. He asked himself, What is the true teaching of our political history, if it teaches anything? Where is the flaw which must exist in one or the other of these arguments?

And the answer which he submits is this: Both lines of argument, up to the two conclusions, are perfectly correct and perfectly consistent, as will presently be manifested by combining them into one. But the second speaker passed by a few important facts, and this neglect led him astray in his final statement. These are the important facts:

First, The party which has stood for centralization of governmental power has never maintained the principle in the abstract merely, but always with reference to some special example.

Second, This special example has frequently been of the nature of a moral or economic issue.

Third, The party has been formed entirely anew for the support of a distinct issue, and has sometimes been so formed after "third" or "fourth" parties have demanded and prepared the way for a consideration of that issue.

Fourth, This centralization party has sometimes been called a "third party" in the early days of its support of a new issue.

Fifth, The Prohibition party maintains a moral and economic issue for the support of which it demands the extension and use of the power of the central government.

And this is the final line of argument to which the would be philosopher arrives: There have always been in our government two political parties, of which one, the Democratic, has always resisted the extension of national power to the support of several new issues. The other, under various names, has always forced the extension of national power to the support of those issues, and has frequently found it necessary to change its entire organization for the maintenance of a new issue.

Wherefore, the logic of our history, the issue of the Prohibition party of to-day, and the present attitude of the Democratic party toward that issue, combine to show the consistency of a new party as the successor of the Republican party, maintaining the extension of the Federal power to the destruction of the next dragon which lies in the path of the St. Georges of America. The same things point to the Prohibition party, or its successor, as the logical and natural heir to the estate of our fathers and grandfathers who were in the van of the forces of advance, the party of Pushers, the "men of thought and men of action" who have led the way to all the promised lands.

We cannot shirk logic, or skulk behind eloquence or sophistry to get out of the way of the light of history. We must defend ourselves by the teachings of experience, or surrender. We must not be afraid of these conclusions because of any "states' rights" inclinations. We must be ready to show a clear title to the inheritance we claim as ours in the political status of to-day.

If the would-be philosopher has himself, in reaching these conclusions, omitted any significant facts, or been guilty of any inaccuracies, he will be as ready to have them pointed out as any other would-be philosopher will be to point them out; but if they stand, let all the citizens who are waiting to declare their verdict on the issues of 1892, be ready to defend them with their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor.

Washington, D. C.

THE ENFRANCHISEMENT OF WOMEN.

BY ARTHUR H. POLLEN, B. A.

POLITICAL.

In a previous paper I indicated some grounds for supposing that the only way to restore the moral character of modern states everywhere in need of restoration was the extension of citizenship to women, more especially on account of their being the only unenfranchised class that might be expected to rise above corruption, direct or indirect.

However, even if it be granted that the emancipation would succeed in this object, and that the object, moreover, were both desirable and urgent, it might still be contended that the political change would be too great to be safely risked. The change would affect the fortune of the state in three chief departments of its activity, the machinery by which it organizes and maintains a government, the making of its laws, and their administration.

1. No doubt in the first of these women citizens would bring about little short of a revolution. Old party divisions would be so modified as to disappear and entirely new lines of demarkation would take their place. But this is not a thing to fear in prospect or lament as a fact. Parties have died out or merged in others before now, unregretted except by the handful to whom factious devotion is a lucrative profession. They represent a stage in development and exist for the common weal, not the commonwealth for them. The butterfly mourns not for the chrysalis—and why should men pause to weep over their progress, even if it be a progress "By stepping stones of their dead selves to better things?" And when all is said the ethical enthusiasm that will inspire the change should prove a sufficient anesthetic to carry the body politic painlessly through so wholesome an operation.

2. Nor is it easy to see that as far as legislation is concerned there is danger in the admission of a new body of advisers and critics. It is an experiment that has been recently tried in this country, where in 1885 the electorate was enlarged by some millions. The laboring class excluded absolutely until seven years ago are now citizens. For years the needs and burdens of the poor had been proclaimed by philanthropics and preachers. The injustices under which they labor had been ably demonstrated, or at least as ably as the inevitable ignorance of those outside the category permitted. Sometimes men of exceptional eminence or ability, such as Lord Shaftesbury and Mr. Plimsol, compelled a hearing, but for the most the remedy was disproportioned to the grievance.

To day the citizen takes over the function of the philanthropist and patriot. The sufferers have become a power. As their own spokesmen they can make their demands definite; as voters they can make them effective. And so after a few years' waiting we have a government pledged to deal with Ireland, with the drink curse in Great Britain, with the land and church in Scotland and Wales, and with many other questions entirely from the standpoint of those to whom in their long exclusion from political existence all governments had turned deaf ears. By the Saxon laws of our ancestors the oath of an earl was worth in the courts the oaths of ten of inferior status. It is an emblem of the significance of political power; and first amongst the consequences of the new order will be that before the great jury of humanity the cause and rights of women will be pleaded with authority and heard with justice.

3. Pregnant, however, of consequences as constitutional machinery must be, and far reaching the effects of legislation, it is by administration that governments are most readily and most rightly judged. And it is in administration that the skill and criticism of women is most needed. If one looks at the organized life of a community as a great aggregate of administrative effort, the part taken by the central power is insignificant compared to the rest. The work of the Cabinet at Washington will not bear comparison in bulk with the aggregate of the work of the separate state governments; nor even this with the aggregate of the city, county and township executives; nor all together with the accumulated labor which the economy of fifteen million American households represent. And on whom does this last most Herculean of labors fall? To whom is given this stupendous education in the task of successful administration? To whom, indeed, but to women whose inexperience (!) is said to be such a bar to citizenship. And this is to look at it merely on its financial and executive side. When it is remembered that behind this training there is the anxious solicitude of millions of mothers' hearts, expert in all that makes for the safeguarding of what is dearer to them than life, we see at a glance how inestimably valuable is the reserve of power on which the state can draw.

It is well over 2,000 years since the first of purely human thinkers defined the family as the unit of the state. To our time has come the opportunity that was denied to the age of Aristotle, and by the enfranchisement of women we shall realize the truth that the Greek philosopher proclaimed and restore the sanctity and teaching of the home to their place among the nations.

London, Eng.

FOR THE REPORTER.

BY H. CHAPELL.

The local W. C. T. U. is a grand institution for any place, but the local union with all the fathers, brothers, aunts and cousins of its members is too often but a little flock. Compare the sum total of all those directly interested in your union with the total population of your town or city, and consider that, to all the hundreds or thousands of outsiders, your union is exactly what the despised reporter makes it. Therefore cultivate friendship with the reporter.

No class remembers a kindness longer, for it is part of their business to estimate people. At the same time the press must judge of an interest through the business dealings it may have with it; therefore, when things do not suit you, waste no breath blaming the reporter, but investigate wherein you may have failed in courtesy or business-like methods toward the press. In speaking of the press one should always except a few free-lance, sensational, irresponsible publications that vex the journalism of every city.

General H. V. Boynton said in the Century of a year ago: "It has been for many years a singular fact that comparatively so few of the able men of the land, in spite of their moving in daily contact with the work of the press, acquire an adequate knowledge of its machinery, and, above all, of the proper methods by which it can be used to promote their interests, by giving them the prominence before the public which they really deserve." So it is not surprising that in reporting the National and World's conventions, I discovered that even some of our public women were not perfectly posted, although excellent work was done in that line then.

A few hints may help the inexperienced. First: Remember that the daily press is under no obligations to any, except those who pay for its space. Second: That there is such a thing as journalistic honor, and the press keeps more secrets than the public dreams of.

If some special meeting is to be held, send a communication something like this to the editor of the paper so that it shall arrive as this did the day before the meeting specified: "The ——— —— Association reporting last year over 15,000 members, meets at —— ——— to-morrow at 10 a. m., 2 and 7 p. m. We shall be glad to aid your reporter in preparing such a report as your space may permit and bespeak a favorable notice." This is in many respects a model, but its fair promise was fulfilled very badly.

No table was provided for the reporter, not to mention pen and ink; no one was near to supply names; the secretary was very slow to allow reference to his notes for missing names or copies of resolutions; no abstracts of addresses were supplied; the reporter had to stay late to gather outlines of the coming session, and not being invited to the collation, had to wait for her lunch so many hours that the lack of food after prolonged work made her ill for several days. And just here remember that collation tickets may secure an extra item in your behalf by saving the reporter the time needed to go in search of a restaurant meal.

Those organizations which figure best in the daily press are those which supply printed, or typewritten abstracts of addresses and duplicate copies of reports to the reporters in advance. Any paper of good standing will not disregard a definite request to hold material until a certain time, and it takes some time to "cut down" and paste even printed material. I myself have held an address for days before the speaker even started for the place where it was delivered.

A good plan is to appoint some well informed person to answer the reporters' questions and see that they obtain all names in full, and a sight, at least, of the resolutions adopted.

I remember one time when the reporters felt that the people with whom they had to deal understood the business rush of the press. The day before a noted hospital the reporters, and himself showed them all over the buildings, gave full explanations, supplied all possible printed material and a program of the coming dedication exercises, and at noon set them down to a dainty little lunch. The next day, in addition to a full report of the exercises, columns were devoted to descriptions.

Two more points should be remembered. To many papers, old news is no news, and all is old news that has once appeared in other papers. And don't forget to prepare all material on one side of the paper and written plainly, or better, type-written. These efforts will surely convince the reporters that you are sensible and understanding people of some importance to the world.

Boston, Mass.

AN EXAMPLE OF INDIAN CIVILIZATION.

BY MRS. ANNE KENNEDY BIDWELL.

Among the Indians in 1868, I could not find a woman or child who understood me, or who could speak to me, a nod and smile being the only response from the women, and usually a hasty retreat on the part of the children, who in this respect had not lost their resemblance to the deer. The men could speak a little English, having mingled with white men while at work. They were superior plowmen, making furrows a mile or two in length as straight as a surveyor could make them, their only instruments being a plow and two sticks or poles, and some distant object while making the first furrow. One stick would be fastened in the ground, then a certain number of steps taken from it and the plow started to the distant object, on reaching which the same number of steps would be taken and the return furrow indicated by a mark on the ground with the foot; then as many more, where the stick would be left, to indicate the third furrow, and so on.

The women gathered garden seeds, sewed sacks in the mill, and gathered seed wheat, which they sold to my husband. They gleaned as in the days of Ruth, and had as many privileges, and were as industrious, removing the chaff by tossing the wheat on a round, shallow tray made of grass roots, the breeze driving away the chaff. They wore handkerchiefs on their heads, simple calico dresses, no shoes or stockings, and moved along gracefully in a little trot, single file. No Indian "trail" or path is ever sufficiently wide for two persons. The men dressed like the white men with whom they worked.

Their houses were made by excavating a circular cavity in the ground, then tying "saplings" together to form a dome, which they thatched and covered with the excavated earth, leaving a circular opening on top for entrance, a ladder of pieces of sapling forming the stairs; and the "house top" being a favorite rendezvous for the women, the ground serving for chairs. Bunks of saplings formed their beds, and a fire on the ground in the middle of the room served for cooking and heating purposes. One room sheltered the family, while a large "sweat house" added a place of rendezvous, as well as steam baths. Now, though the houses are still humble, they are of wood, and have bedrooms, parlor and kitchen or a kitchen parlor, in which is found, now and then, a seventy-five dollar sewing machine and comfortable furniture. A bedstead is now considered a necessity by even the least advanced, though the introduction of the first bedstead was greeted with ridicule and laughter, as I was informed by the man who introduced it. "They've all got to have one now," he added, laughing.

Until January, 1875, I was unable to do anything in the way of educating the Indians, though they lived in our private grounds. I could not make myself understood until I adopted the method just seen at Bethany Mission, Washington, D. C., of giving clothing if they would come and make it. By showing the goods and by signs indicating that the maker could have the article made, provided the children were also brought, I got hold of them at last, and the school opened with twenty pupils, ranging from six years of age to forty and over. Babes were brought and laid in cradles improvised out of clothes baskets.

I next secured the coöperation of the Ladies' Missionary Society of the Chico Presbyterian church, my husband furnishing the schoolroom by vacating his pretty cottage office. But at the end of six weeks every lady had abandoned the enterprise as too fatiguing, and I was left alone. William D. Stevenson, a friend and guest, came to the rescue and assisted me faithfully for six months, making stencil-plate charts, teaching the boys reading, spelling, geography, arithmetic and writing, while I taught the women and girls, adding sewing to their instruction. All but the older boys had to learn English, their conversation being entirely in Indian, and so continuing long after they understood English. Pictures were the best medium of teaching the language. The men had no instruction until about eight years since, except that which my brother had given to a few young men on Sundays during six months in 1868, which work was unavoidably terminated. My husband had taught them morals as far as possible, and had given them employment, and they had learned to plow, to handle teams, to build houses, and to work in the mill. Some of them had also learned to read and write. Their children were in the school, and I had taught them to sing, and had given them clothing. I had also planted trees on the private grounds near our residence in order to remove them from evil and to protect them.

The rapidity with which all learned was phenomenal and amazed me. The first hymn sung was "There is a Happy Land," I repeating the lines and they after me, several times, when the command was given to sing; and if "The Happy Land" had dropped down into the room I could not have been more surprised and overcome. It was sung perfectly.

The rapidity with which the women and girls learned to sew was also remarkable. As well as the skill attained in ordinary sewing, their tucking, puffing and hemstitching equaled that of a French woman. And so eager were they to sew that it was almost impossible to keep them supplied with work, even after they could cut out their own garments. Like most other Indian children, the boys and girls became skilled penmen. The women did not attempt writing.

About eight years since the men asked for a church. Their plea was so earnest that we built a little wooden chapel of which I had to take charge, there being no man willing to do it. I had buried their dead from the time of opening the school, before which date they had buried in the Indian style; the knees bound to the breast, the body wrapped in bear skin, and laid, with many gifts, in a grave eight or ten feet deep. The first casket was given for a man who said he was going to the white man's God and wished to be buried like a white man. He had been one of my brother's pupils. Lately I have questioned whether the savage way is not the more sanitary for the living. Very soon the little chapel was so crowded, men often standing through the service, holding infants, that we built a larger, in which service is still held every Sunday morning.

After the chapel was built we had school every day from eight until twelve, discontinuing the sewing department, the women and girls having become expert with the needle, and my strength having become exhausted. For over two years I employed an assistant, but after her marriage I could not find a suitable substitute. The women would never attend the school unless taught by me, making excuse that they had so much work at home, which was true, yet they loved to come. An attack of brain trouble a few years since obliged me to close the school, when we sent five of the children to a government school just opened in Lake county, California, where they remained until it broke up for want of funds.

The Occidental Board of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of San Francisco generously took charge of the school on learning I had to discontinue it, and supplied a teacher for three years, until forbidden by the authorities in the East to continue it. Not feeling able to resume our own, we succeeded in getting the children into the public school of Chico, the prejudice against the Indians having been in a measure removed by their brass band, public concerts, polite behavior and good clothing. Even now, our law forbids public-school privileges to any who are not "wards" of white persons. Every year we have to claim guardianship in order to have the children enrolled.

To Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Davis, of Boston, we are greatly indebted for the Sunday-school chart used for some six years, and for quite a library, the accumulation of Christmas gifts, and for letters of encouragement to the Indians. Also to Miss Ida Florence, a saintly young lady (who for two years taught here for the Occidental Board), for taking entire charge of chapel service during my recent illness of two years, and of the singing for some time previous, and at present; as also to Mrs. Fannie Gurley Elderkin for organizing a Home Missionary Society among our Indians, by authority of the Home Board. When visiting us last May she was so impressed with what she saw at chapel service that she was inspired to do this work, and the society has met every month since, having a membership of about forty, ranging in ages from three years to over seventy, and the collections averaging five dollars monthly, exclusive of outside gifts. There being no Presbyterian Indian Mission work in California, the Indians say they will hold their money until it can be used for the California Indians, "who have no place to praise God in, or their children to learn to read in." They will not send their gifts to Arizona or New Mexico, and I think they are right.*

Their missionary meeting is conducted by the Indians, and I wish you could hear them sing and play on musical instruments, making melody and harmony with such heartiness. A number of them are communicants in the Presbyterian church. They have their own land—a gift from us—but have built their houses and have planted their own little flower and vegetable gardens. Those here number about seventy and belong to the race improperly called Digger Indians. There are no Digger Indians in California. It was applied as a term of reproach by ignorant early settlers.

Chico, Cal.

*The organization of the Chico Woman's Indian Association by

CORRESPONDENCE

MEMORABLE VISIT TO THE TAJ MAHAL.

By Our Third and Fourth Round-the-World Missionaries.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is not every day that our workers visit the wondrous Taj Mahal, at Agra, and so I feel that I ought to give my simple chronicle of an exquisite joy in the midst of anxious labors. This most perfect tomb that was ever erected to the memory of any human being in the world's history, was built by the Emperor Shah Jehan, in love and honor of his wife, centuries ago.

Every description I had read of it was more than realized. The yellow Indian moon was at its full, and no mists obscured the scene. We passed through a richly ornamented entrance hall, with lofty archways and pavement beyond, set all around with waving palms, a fitting prelude to the glories that followed. Those ancient Persian despots were cunning in devising impressive approaches to their treasures of art and beauty.

Then we came out into a great garden of surpassing charm, with its marvelous variety of trees, plants and flowers, from all parts of the world, its winding marble walks, stretching away into the loveliest vistas, from every one of which the visitor catches glimpses, in his wanderings, of the etherial creation beyond. A long, narrow artificial lake lies in the center, with walks on either side, by which you are led directly from the entrance to the Taj; in this are placed numberless tiny fountains where many colored waters are sent up on gala nights, but this was a pure white night, all for our own private delectation. The most perfect taste has ruled in the disposition of the plants and trees. The central walk is bordered by tall, sighing cypresses; in one of the side paths we lingered long to watch the beautiful effect of the foliage of a feathery tree from Madagascar, in its near proximity to the tomb, as it formed a lace screen across a portion of the front of the Taj which became almost as a halo, under the rain of moonlight. Here we could see three of the four slender attendant minarets, and so etherial was the vision, that it was as if the building, with its pure and airy outlines, might float away at any instant, into the heavens above.

All this time as we wandered in the garden, not one of the silent attendants whom we passed in the entrance approached us; no rude sound broke the enchantment of the hour; there was no light save that of the moon, and far, far within the Taj, where burned a dim taper placed on the Queen's tomb—we felt that this was where it must be, and so we found it, when we penetrated to that inner shrine.

As we neared the tomb we were almost overcome with awe, the whole thing was so metamorphosed before our very eyes; it seemed to approach, then recede, and when finally we reached it and climbed the flight of marble stairs leading up to the broad, mosaic pavement that surrounds it, suddenly it seemed to lift itself out of the exceeding delicacy which had made it seem almost small when we first viewed it from the garden entrance, into vast and magnificent proportions, and the wide sweep of the River Jumna, just beyond, added wonderfully to the effect.

On the structure itself, of creamy white marble, the moon glittered, bringing out the inscriptions from the Koran, inlaid with black marble, the lovely flowers of many colors set in the surface in the same perfect way, lotus leaves and blossoms carved in bas-relief all along the balustrade of the pavement, great doorways of thin slabs of marble, cut clean through into exquisite designs. Everything brought to such absolute finish of skill and beauty that "ever the wonder grew," and then finally we ventured within. Ah, that mystery of ineffable art, that charm of color and harmony of effect! Who could catch all these? I dare not try to convey it, but I felt the thrill of it in my whole being.

Think of passion flowers and other lovely blossoms in rhythmic procession all around the marble screen that encloses the tombs of the emperor and the empress, each of which is formed of many precious stones: jasper, chalcedony, agate, lapis-lazuli, amethyst, carbuncle, and others. The marble sarcophagus of the royal lady for whom all this glory of earth was wrought out, stands in the center, and that of the emperor to the left. The inlaid flowers on these tombs are most exquisite. One is reminded at every step in this charming pilgrimage of the saying regarding the Taj, that "it was begun by giants and finished by jewelers." The perfection of it all fills one with a sort of despair, as well as delight.

As we stood in the heart of the great building—for it has many rooms, and was meant to be a house of worship as well as a mausoleum—within the carven marble screen, we realized that we were in the mystical presence of a curious and bewildering echo; we turned to look over our shoulders many times, hearing voices and footsteps only to find that they were our own.

Just as we were leaving, an ancient native attendant came in with a group of women, veiled to the eyes; they seemed embarrassed by our presence, for they huddled close together whenever we came near them, and whispered hurriedly to one another. Little they knew how sisterly were our hearts toward them! The old native gave us some red blossoms that were scattered on the Queen's tomb—now dutifully pressed—and we dropped a silver coin in his expectant hand, and came away.

Lingering a little longer in the garden, my friend wandered away for a further look at the entrance hall, and I stood on its mosaic pavement, drinking in the wondrous vision and thinking of God's call, nearly two years before, to come and walk with Him, wherever He should lead in all this universe, and of how far it was from my thought that He should ever have brought me here; and then as I remembered what the Lord said, I dedicated myself to Him anew, forever, in spirit and soul and body: "Verily, I say unto you that there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my sake and the Gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred fold, now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mother and children, and lands with persecutions, and in the world to come, eternal life." Amen. He is fulfilling His word to us all the way along.

ELIZABETH WHEELER ANDREW.

En route in Queensland.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—While you in America are just approaching your great electoral struggle, we in this country have come through ours and are settled pretty much into quietness again, so much so that a stranger might not discover that there had been such an event as a general election in recent days. Yet no more important contest has occurred at our polling booths within the present century, for apart from the fact that the strongest government of modern times has been displaced and replaced by another from which great things are expected, no election in England has ever before seen such prominence given to the question of temperance reform, and certainly never before has temperance reform held anything like the place, politically, that it holds to-day.

A word as to the position of temperance in the contest. Next to Home Rule for Ireland—the great sharply dividing item between the two great political parties—no question was so much in evidence before and during the actual electoral struggle. On the one hand the Unionist party, speaking broadly, had the support of the liquor faction and their help in men and money, because that party twice tried (and was twice prevented) to give the liquor interest a legal right to compensation on the withdrawal of licenses to sell liquor; and because the candidates of that party, for the most part, accepted the dictation of the liquor wire-pullers, and gave promises adverse to all real temperance legislation. On the other hand, the Gladstonian Liberals, almost wholly, accepted the most advanced plank in the temperance platform—that of the direct popular veto. They were helped to this position, no doubt, by the fact that the veto has during recent years been accepted by the Liberal Federation, the great caucus of the party; and also by the still more significant fact that Mr. Gladstone himself, for the first time, gave in his adhesion to that principle this very year when a bill containing the veto was before Parliament. He gave clear assurances to the supporters of the bill, and later in his election speeches declared plainly and clearly for power being given to the people to suppress liquor selling, as is now possessed and exercised by landowners—that is the Direct Veto. Hence, generally speaking, the Liberals had the temperance vote.

Not exclusively, or always, however. There were cases in which candidates of both parties went for the veto and the temperance vote was divided. There were other cases in which the Liberal failed to give the requisite pledges and was on that ground opposed—in two cases by the running of independent veto candidates; and among those, who in our new Parliament are pledged to the veto, are to be found members of all parties, which is decidedly for the good of the cause. The result—the election of a Parliament pledged to deal with the drink question, and in turn the advent to office and power of a government committed past recall to the prohibition principle of the Direct Veto, was not achieved without great and fierce battling. Seed sowing has gone on for years, platform, pulpit and press—and latterly the utilization of the secular press—have all been brought into the service; organization has been kept steadily going and the beginning of the battle royal saw the temperance forces ready for the fray.

As the outcome of a private conference Lady Henry Somerset had with a few of the best known temperance leaders here, she agreed to issue, in her double capacity as president of the British Women's Temperance Association and British President of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, an appeal to temperance societies and workers throughout the country for the holding, on two specified days, a Saturday and a Sunday, of simultaneous demonstrations in support of the Direct Veto and Sunday Closing—our two burning questions on the line of prohibition.

United open air gatherings on Saturday, and after service meetings in churches and chapels on Sunday were recommended, and suggested resolutions and lines of organization accompanied the call. No more inspiring appeal was ever issued, and the effect of it was seen in the holding, on one day—June 18, the anniversary of Waterloo—of many hundreds of separate demonstrations, in cities, towns and villages, literally in all quarters of the land, and to such a number that a complete record has proved to be inaccessible; but with the happiest results which proved indisputably the value of the effort, reflected the greatest credit upon Lady Henry as a leader, and laid the entire temperance cause in these countries under lasting obligation.

The most striking feature of the effort was the bringing together of men and women holding the most diverse views on other subjects but uniting on this, and the identification with the demand made for temperance legislation of public men—members of Parliament, magistrates, county officials, clergy, ministers and others belonging to all parties, sects and social positions, in one united phalanx—at the word of one noble woman. Over twelve thousand copies of the appeal were sent by post, and in addition Lady Henry addressed a separate letter on the subject to all the bishops and heads of religious bodies. Immediately afterward our general election occurred—the effort was nicely timed to occur on the very eve of battle, and none can say how much this timely and patriotic proposal has to do with the grand results outlined above or what effect it will produce when these shall be translated shortly into force of law, as to the prospect and bearings to which my next letter shall apply.

H. J. OSBORN.

112 Fleet St., London, E. C.

LIQUORS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

EDITOR OF THE UNION SIGNAL:—The only way I can explain the silence of many religious papers in regard to the campaign against liquor selling at the World's Fair is, that they have generally accepted as true, the statement made by the managers in the United States Senate, through Senator Palmer, that nothing is contemplated beyond "the sale of liquors at meals as at hotels." This statement Major Handy admitted to me was not true of the "German village" which the papers tell us has arrived at New York, and is to contain one or more beer gardens, to be managed in a quaint and foreign and fascinating manner, of course, showing none of the drunken fruits, making the devil of drink look like an angel of light.

When Major Handy repeated to me the excuse about "selling only with meals as at hotels," I asked him if they were going to palm off an eating house with beer as a genuine German beer garden, and he admitted that the exhibit would not be a fraud in that respect.

Those who think that the selling of liquors in violation of two state and one national law would not be serious enough to oppose, if meals were mixed with the illegal sales, have also overlooked the proposal of the California Senator to give away the wines of that state for several hours every day at a fountain.

In my judgment the Sunday paper that is circulating petitions for the repeal of the Sabbath closing law is too smart to suppose that the President, Senate and House of Representatives will all reverse their action on this subject. In any case no repeal is possible till December and then it is wholly improbable. It looks like a shrewd effort to keep us fighting over an old victory to prevent us winning another.

Let Hyde Park and Illinois and the whole country demand that the World's Fair shall not be used to foreignize and anarchize our youth by enthroning beer and wine and lawlessness.

The state W. C. T. U. conventions of Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Illinois and several colleges—also the Y. P. S. C. E., are moving vigorously in this matter.

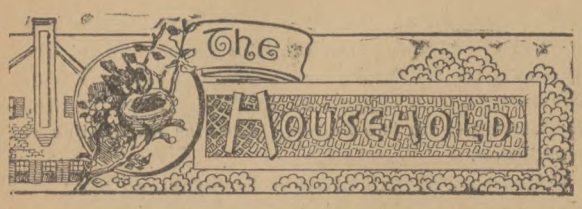
Let everybody, and everybody who is against liquor or for law, swiftly indorse by vote or signature, or at least by a single signature the following petition and forward it by letter before October 18, or by telegraph after, to me as the official representative of the National Temperance society in this matter, at 189 LaSalle St., Chicago:

To the Columbian Commission, Chicago:

We earnestly petition you to ascertain whether the managers of the World's Fair have contracted (as alleged) for the sale of liquors in the Fair, in German beer gardens or otherwise, in violation of State laws and the national charter of the Fair, or both, and we urge you in the name of law and order, or of temperance, or both, to veto and forbid all such contracts. Adopted by, etc.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

En route, Oct. 6, 1892.



WE KNOW!

"'Whatever can be known of earth we know,'
Sneered Europe's wise men, in their small shells curled;
'No'—said one man in Genoa, and that 'no'
Out of the dark created this new world."

THE OLD CIDER MILL.

BY MATHER D. KIMBALL.

'Pears to me I see it yit—
That old cider mill whar we
Uster santer reggerly
Arter school, us boys, to git
Yaller apple juice, fresh squeezed!
Drinked jest oceans ef we pleased.
Ev'ry boy could git his fill
Down to Bunker's cider mill.

Seems like only yisterday
Me 'nd Hank 'nd Silas Clark,
Way down suller in the dark,
Found a bar'l stowed away.
Bored a hole through, jist for fun
'Nd to let the cider run,
So's that we could git our fill
Down to Bunker's cider mill.

On the soft side of a plank,
We jist lay thar on the groun',
Let the cider trickle down
Our gullets—me 'nd Si 'nd Hank.
One would drink 'nd two stand guard—
Didn't s'pose the stuff was hard,
'Till we'd more'n got our fill,
Down to Bunker's cider mill.

Mill has long sence gone to rot,
Roof 'nd rafting tumbled through.
Si, he's gone to ruin too.
'Nd Hank, he's jist a whisky sot.
Cider first, then wine 'nd beer,
Gin 'nd rum 'nd whisky clear.
That's the way they went down hill—
Down from Bunker's cider mill.

Chicago, Ill.

DAVID DOUGLAS AND HIS WIFE.*

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

CHAPTER IX.

Election was over. The news of Republican victory had been flashed all over the land and across the seas, and Chesport had been "painted red." Then there was a lull. "The country is saved!" said one side. "The country is lost—to us!" said the other; while the "saloon party" solid with winners and losers alike, said nothing, but entered unchallenged upon a new era of unparalleled prosperity. The "ins" were out and the "outs" were in, and the great political game was once more over.

But the victory had not been won without great outlay of time and money, especially in towns which like Chesport were quite evenly divided. Every doubtful man had been jealously watched, our friend, Mr. Douglas, among the rest.

Rumor had it that if he had cared to take a short vacation early in November his expenses would have been paid; but to the credit of his church members, be it said, no one ventured to suggest it directly to him.

On election day, as he stood conversing with a friend, who had just handed him a prohibition ballot, the Rev. Mr. Snow approached and asked, "Are you going to vote that ticket?"

"Believing as I do, could I cast any other vote?" he replied.

"I'd see my right hand cut off," said the brother minister, "before I would do it"— and walked away, full of virtuous indignation.

Mrs. Douglas remembered the anonymous note, and dreaded dark evenings when her husband was obliged to be out during the last of the campaign. She and Hugh were watchful of tramps and suspicious looking agents, even of book canvassers, whose books, drawn from hidden pockets, seriously reminded her of the drawing of concealed weapons. But aside from girdling of fruit trees in the parsonage yard and the hooting of hired and half intoxicated political retainers, there was no attempt to molest or injure.

I say there was "no attempt," but how are we to know? In this holy war against the great destroyer, God's servants have suffered the loss, not only of treasure, but of life. This has been known, and that others have been saved by divine interposition, who can doubt? Our deliverances are from "dangers seen and unseen," and no mortal hand keeps a record of the unseen foes, whose plans have been thwarted.

It was after election that Esther Steele, Mrs. Douglas' elder sister and well beloved by all the family, came to the parsonage on her annual visit. We introduce her as she sits in the kitchen, assisting in preparations for the Thanksgiving festival. She deserves a description as elaborate as we find in popular society stories of the day, in which characters are not only outlined, but shaded and dissected and atomized, until the patient reader is supposed to understand the minutest springs of action. But in real life we give a glance at the outer man and ask, Who is he, and what has he done?

Looking at Esther Steele, we see a comely middle aged woman, with a hopeful face, and eyes—well, there is in them a look which reveals to other women a comrade of the "new era."

What has she done? A variety of helpful things, including her present work in connection with the Woman's Employment Bureau, and lecturing on temperance.

"I'm just in the mood for talking and working," said she on this November morning, drawing her chair nearer the pantry, where Mrs. Douglas was mixing a mass of spicy sweetness on her moulding board. "Oh, Mary, aren't you glad a thousand times a year that we grew up in the country, where we learned to 'do things' when we were young? Not that I believe farmers' wives and daughters have had their share of happiness yet; there's been too much churning and baking, and washing and ironing, and scrubbing floors, and 'scrimping' as they say in Gilead, for the health of body and soul. But they are such capable women, so very different from many I meet—the soft-handed, tiny waisted creatures, who have been sheltered all their lives, and are so afraid of mice and politics."

"Why, Esther!" laughed Mrs. Douglas. "What have mice and politics to do with each other?"

"They are associated in my mind because such women as I have in mind seem to be equally afraid of both. They shriek and attitudinize, you know," said Esther.

"Can we come in? We heard you girls laughing and the study began to seem very dull. Oh, yes, we can pare apples," and Mr. Douglas entered the kitchen followed by Austin Steele, Mrs. Douglas' brother from Boston, who had unexpectedly arrived the night before. He was a fine looking man, whose soldierly figure and tell-tale bronze button revealed something of his past. His life had been devoted to the great American pursuit of "money-making," and that he had been reasonably successful, one could judge from his appearance.

"Yes, you may come in," said Esther, "if you will explain what you mean by calling two middle aged women girls?"

"Oh! are you middle-aged women?" and Mr. Douglas looked at her critically. "Yes, gray hair tells the story; but really you and Mary laughed just as you did when we all lived in Gilead and thought the sky rested on the Green Mountains."

"Mary, that's another thing we have to be thankful for, I mean that women keep young in these days. I can remember when I thought I wouldn't care to live after I was forty—women at that age looked so old and tired. But now-a-days the mothers of grown up sons and daughters are as ambitious as their children," said Esther.

"Give me the old-fashioned mothers with their knitting work," said Austin. "Think how mother sat there in the old kitchen night after night sewing and knitting, busy every minute."

"Yes," cried Esther, "and tired every minute. The modern man can't understand how those blessed grandmothers and mothers used the reserve strength which should have been given to the children. You remember how mother used to long for time to rest and read, don't you, Mary? But with labor saving machines and so many new interests even farmers' wives are taking new lease of life."

"Yes, but with surplus time women seem to turn either to fashion or politics," said Austin, disapprovingly.

Esther laughed. "Now Austin has reached his ground of complaint," said she. "He can't be reconciled to the dreadful fact that his sister is a political Prohibitionist and actually talks about it in public."

"Well, I think it is no fit subject for a woman. Politics are dark, dirty, and altogether disagreeable," he replied.

"So is the bottom of a pond, my dear brother, but out of it grows the long stem which bears the pure water lily. The lily root is somewhere in the mire of politics, but God's own sunshine must bring forth the blossom."

"And you think women can hasten the day?" queried Austin.

"Certainly—all God's people working together. We are being led that way," said Esther.

Mr. Steele was silent a moment, letting a long red paring slip slowly through his fingers to the floor. Then, lifting his head with a sudden air of determination, he said, "What do you suppose brought me up from Boston just now?"

"I hoped you wanted to see us and help eat our Thanksgiving turkey," replied his sister.

"So I did, but wife and the girls were getting up some kind of a fandango, and business was brisk, so it was hard to get away. But since you wrote about your political somersault, David, I've felt anxious. I've always thought you were a cool headed, practical kind of a fellow—"

"He is," said Mrs. Douglas.

"Yes, but I mean above such trifling."

"Trifling! Why, Austin, it is anything but that."

"Yes, of course in a sense; but I am one of the poor sinners in the pew who have always felt that ministers were set apart to preach about heaven. What have you to do with this horrid liquor business?"

"Austin, there are no men anywhere who see the sad side of it as we do," said Mr. Douglas. "In every place, on my first round of calls, I find families groaning under this curse. People come to me with revelations they wouldn't think of trusting with anybody else. And then they come to get married. I married a couple once when the man was too intoxicated to stand until they were pronounced husband and wife. God forgive me! I'll never do it again, any more than I would perform the ceremony for an idiot or an insane man. And then, Austin, we have to bury these men; they're dying all the time, and some minister has to offer prayer at their funerals. I tell you we ministers haven't the bliss of ignorance. We've got to speak of what we know or give a reason for our silence by and by."

"Admitting all that—though I don't believe the minister I hear preach thinks so—why couldn't you do your talking without joining that impecunious Third party?"

"Oh, foolish Galatians!" said David Douglas with a laugh; "didn't you think I understood? All my friends make that same inquiry; but I'll answer your question—Yankee fashion—by asking another. Why shouldn't I join it?"

"More reasons than I can tell. Here in New England you almost ostracize yourself—"

"So did Wendell Phillips in older times," remarked Esther quietly.

"Well now look here!" and Mr. Steele struck his knife into a big Baldwin with unnecessary force. "Take this very last campaign; we heard how many thousands were going to vote the Prohibition ticket. You had a splendid candidate, but wasn't it rather humiliating to face the returns when they came in?"

"Yes," was the frank reply. "I noticed the shrinkage and was surprised and sorry to see how 'men's hearts failed them for fear.' But it only shows how strong the old ties and the old arguments are. Men were besought to vote 'just once more' with the 'old party,' in order to 'save the country.' A good many thought their business interests would be ruined if they didn't do so, and workmen were afraid of loss of position and decreased wages. Mills and manufactories were placarded with Republican protection sentiments, and even pay envelopes were stamped with the same, implying disaster and also intimidation as the employés well understood—why, I was walking on the street with a gentleman, when he pointed to a man just ahead of us, and said, 'There's a man who would vote the Prohibition ticket if he dared.' And here's another case. One member of our club was a young man named Jenkins. He was in the mill working hard for low wages. His wife was in poor health and they had three little children. One day the boss of his room came to him and said, 'I can give you a better job than this, Jenkins, where you can make three dollars a week more; and you shall have it if you will act like a man next Tuesday.' Of course Jenkins knew what was meant, and he said he grew fairly dizzy for a minute, he was so overcome. Then he asked for a little time to think it over. When he went home he found his wife sick in bed. He started for the doctor, called on his way to see the boss, and told him it was all right, he would vote the Democratic ticket. He got his place, but the poor fellow was so distressed over it that he came to me and told me all about it."

"That's too bad. But, David, there are a great many good men in the old parties."

"Of course there are," said the minister, "I was there myself only a few months ago! They mean to be good, but they are off the track, living and working under purely selfish principles. We have got to find our way back to the 'Golden Rule,' as the basis of all true legislation. Then the removal of the drink curse, with all this blood-stained revenue, will be the first thing to attend to."

Mr. Steele looked at the minister with a skeptical smile. "Think it can ever be done?" he asked. "If so, I wish you would tell me how and when."

"You're like Nicodemus: 'How can these things be?' I cannot tell you when, but I can tell you how," said Mr. Douglas. "A single sinner is born again, when he repents and receives spiritual regeneration; a nation of sinners can come into the kingdom by the same process, and I believe that is just what is coming to pass. Why? Well, first, because our need is so great. We have machinery enough, but it is only splendid machinery, worked up to the limit of human ability. But when God's power, sought and acknowledged, thrills through the entire network of spiritual, moral, and political appliances, then we shall have a government of righteousness, and the dawning of the millennium."

*Copyrighted.

David Douglas looked as though he saw that dawning as he paused, but his brother-in law only shook his head.

"I see your faith," said he, "and I don't wish to disturb it. No, David, I declare you've got a better outlook than I have, if you are going to mix politics with religion of the genuine kind; but I can't afford it! I'm in the world and of the world; but if the downfall of God's power comes upon us, so that I can feel it, I promise you that I'll not stand in its way."

"Amen!" said the minister.

The two women who had been working and listening with intent faces, looked at their brother beloved, with tear-filled eyes, and Esther said softly: "Blessed are those who shall help prepare the way for that coming of the Lord."

Norwich, Conn.

(To be continued.)

SIDE-LIGHTS FOR WORKERS—THE PERSONAL EQUATION.

THE TEMPERANCE COFFEE-POT.

J. S. V. says: The sewer is being put through the street upon which I live, and the peaceful, almost country quiet is completely vanquished. Muddy coats and heavy shirts decorate the fence pickets, and a gang of hard-working, hard-talking, thirsty men are before my very doors. If ever one might talk about "doing the duty which lies nearest" temperance work, it is now. The simplest one of having plenty of cold water and a drinking cup at hand was obvious enough, but knowing how numerous would be the pails of beer consumed that day in front of my door, I found myself thinking of that Halsted Street coffee wagon and saying to myself, "What a pity that so many are ready to sell these men beer and no one is ready to sell them coffee!" "Why should not you?" spoke the inner voice, which is often more ready with suggestion than we who listen are for action. I thought at once of a neighbor's boy who could be pressed into coöperation, with my own little girl as partner in the background, and I set the plan afoot.

The grocer wondered at the children's zeal for coffee, and I explained. "It's no use," was his prompt judgment. "These men will have their beer. They wouldn't take coffee if you gave it to them." This we did not intend to do, but to sell it, and sell it we did, not to all, but to many, who declared that it was "better than beer," as my boy-peddler triumphantly quoted when he rushed into the kitchen with empty pail and "more orders." My venture, as is often the case, was successful beyond my hopes, for the boy and his widowed mother, finding there is money in it, even at my price of two cups for five cents, promptly decided to continue the business until the sewer is finished.

These men will, however, in a few weeks pass out of the neighborhood where they have had the rare opportunity of choosing between coffee and beer, but they will hardly go to a neighborhood where there is not some temperance woman who can do for them what was done here. Let the W. C. T. U. women pass along this act of humble service, and many a tempted man will have new reason to bless them.

Such opportunities do not beset every door, but every one can fortify against temptation. The thirsty coal driver who has left his load in the coal shed must drive back to the yard, with saloons along the way. Offer him a cup of hot coffee in winter, or a cooling drink in summer, and "you shall not lose your reward."

Chicago, Ill.

A THOUGHT FOR TOBACCO USERS.

Another brother in-law asks: "Why should this civilization be called on to provide any conveniences for tobacco users, spittoons, for instance? Why any self-respecting person, young or old, male or female, janitor or proprietor, should be required to clean up after the tobacco user?" These questions are pertinent, and relegate the tobacco slaves to the cattle pen or the frontiers of civilization; they have already been declared a "public nuisance," by "one-half the people."

WHO WAS RESPONSIBLE?

Nellie, the friend of my childhood, lived near me at the foot of the Catskill mountains. Her father was a professing Christian, tender and careful in his family. Occasionally there were rumors of an appetite for strong drink, followed by seasons of terrible remorse, that my child's heart was slow to understand. But one day I overheard my mother say to a neighbor: "He cannot help drinking; it's born in him; before his birth his mother would go again and again to the cider barrel and drink to intoxication."

The next few years were a terrific struggle with appetite. Finally he despaired, and under a sense of the deep disgrace he was to his family, he drank a bottle of laudanum on his way to his home, where he died in great agony. The question is, who was responsible? It is better to fall into the hand of God than of man for the answer. The righteous Judge cannot err.

THE POWER OF THE WORD.

Have you room for a word from a "brother-in-law"? Two or three years ago I saw a "Temperance Reading" or the references were given in THE UNION SIGNAL. I took the time and trouble to copy them all word for word from the Bible, and found that it made a powerful weapon in the hands of an aggressive temperance Christian. A friend of mine, who like myself has been through the fiery crucible of strong drink, and has been by God's grace redeemed therefrom, has the misfortune to belong to a church which is not as outspoken as it should be, on the question of temperance; he was appointed to conduct the services some months since on review Sunday, and chose, instead of the review, to give them some temperance gospel.

He and I knowing the depths to which man can fall, and realizing the feelings of the soldier when he can "touch elbows" with his comrades, frequently counsel together; so he asked me to assist him to as much gospel temperance as I could. I remembered my UNION SIGNAL Temperance Reading, and gave it to him.

On the day appointed he had to stand an almost solitary witness for the true light. The reading had not progressed very far when angry mutterings and grumblings were heard in various parts of the room, and first this red-nosed brother, and that bloated, beer-soaked pillar of the church broke out in angry words at the devoted leader. When they had been wrought up to almost fighting pitch, and one or two tippling "members in good standing" had left the room, the brother stopped and asked, "Why do you get angry with me? I have not written a word of this lesson. I am only having you read God's words upon the subject. How do your lives square by God's unchangeable rule? Which will you change, your lives to correspond with God's standard, or the standard to agree with your lives?" The good brother has not been called upon to lead the Sunday-school since then, but the members are doing some tremendous thinking, and the brother who has stood so valiantly for the right is now treated with great respect since he has shown that his politics and his religion are both founded upon the Word.

Peotone, Ill.

"AWAKE, THOU THAT SLEEPEST!"

Our county superintendent of narcotics dropped in the other day, and I noticed her troubled look as she seated herself with a sigh and I was not unprepared for the exclamation which followed. "I do not understand why I have not heard from B—. I have written several times to the local superintendent, but she pays no heed. I have learned very recently, though, that one of her sons is an inveterate cigarette smoker, and perhaps she feels that if she cannot begin her work at her home she can do nothing outside of it." After my caller had gone I seemed to be possessed by a great and almost living Why?

I meant to know something of B—. and what had, or had not been done in the narcotic work, and above all, what needed to be done. And here is the sad, true story:

A business man residing in B—. had two sons, handsome, manly little fellows, three and five years old. One day, after starting to his place of business, the man was seen to return hurriedly to the house, which he entered and immediately ascended to the chamber where his sons were supposed to be innocently playing. The father entered the room and demanded the cigar which he had seen his five-year-old boy smoking at the window. With a ready falsehood the child sought to cover his act; but upon examining a box full of cigars on a table, left there by himself, not one but several cigars were discovered to be on fire, having caught from the lighted one thrust recklessly among the others by the detected young smoker.

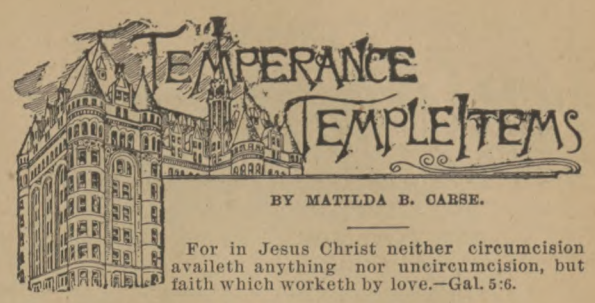
Fourteen years later friends were called to the bedside of this son. Thin as a skeleton, with yellow skin, deep purple rings under the sunken eyes, lips parched and black, no food had passed his lips for days, no food ever again could reach the stomach which was so drawn and puckered and ridged, that a common washboard resembled it most, so stated the attending physician. But the most terrible trouble was the throat, completely closed to food.

"Oh, mother! mother, I am willing to die, if by my death Charlie can be saved. Tell him to come to me. Oh, Charlie! brother!" catching his brother's hands with a death grip, "promise me to quit cigarettee smoking; look at me, I can't stop now, I will be dead in a short time, but you can save yourself. Will you promise me, Charlie?" Charlie's fingers grew cold, while his whole frame shook with convulsive weeping. "I can't! I can't stop now," was the stifled, agonizing cry of this slave—only sixteen years of age.

A day or two more and Charlie's only brother was dead. The father, home from his business, the aged grandfather in his easy chair, and Charlie, sit about in the darkened rooms all through the civilized, waiting days before the interment of the hope of the household—the eldest born. Where did they turn for consolation? to the Lord who gives and takes away? No! no—but the very air was blue and heavy with tobacco smoke. The dead boy was laid away in the church-yard. Did keen sorrow or remorse fill each breast with contrition? If so, it was soon drowned with the fumes of pipe, cigar and cigarette.

What civilized, not to say Christian man, having at heart the welfare of his only remaining son, with the terrible experience of the effects of nicotine poison on the system of one son, would not have tried to save the other? Only a befogged intellect, a heart with the washboard ridges—descriptive of the fallen son's digestive organs—thickened and brutalized, could have presented such an inhuman picture as the above has shown to us.

The family described above were neighbors of that silent local superintendent of narcotics. Is she, too, becoming so benumbed with the fumes of her son's cigarette that, at least for the sake of other mothers' sons, she cannot, while gazing on that millionth victim of self-indulgence, arise and shake off her lethargy?



BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love.—Gal. 5:6.

Our National President, Miss Frances E. Willard, has sent a circular letter to all the leading Christian and temperance weekly papers of the country making an appeal for the Temple. Below will be found extracts from it. She writes: "The object of this letter is to ask your influence and help for the W. C. T. U., which has done so many helpful things for every temperance paper in the land.

"We wish to ask if there are not scores and hundreds among the readers of this paper who will be glad to send one dollar to Miss Esther Pugh, the Temple, Chicago, as a token of their interest in this great movement whereby the World's and National W. C. T. U. have a beautiful home for their work and a prospect of such sure income from rents as shall enable them to greatly enlarge and strengthen the movement which is now extending, not only throughout our own land, but to every corner of the civilized world. A dollar is but little for any one of us to give, while the aggregate of these small gifts, if promptly sent, would make the Temple our own before the National Convention meets in Denver, Col., Oct. 28, 1892. It is a moderate request that I make here and now, but it represents purpose and power for the great society which must have, not only a name, but a local habitation; not only an inward spiritual life, but outward form and substance. The world has never had an object lesson in philanthropy that appealed so strongly to the eye as this noble pile standing on one of Chicago's most notable streets, and capable of bringing in such a splendid revenue. This, however, cannot be done until we own all the stock. Will you not, good friend and brother, earnest-hearted white ribbon sister, whoever you may be, purchase a postoffice order for one dollar the next time you have opportunity and let it go in to swell the constantly deepening current of that money power which must be an element in every good cause, as well as every evil undertaking on the face of the earth? The touch of that fabled king, Midas, turned everything to gold; give us this little wedge of gold and we will turn it into everything good for the great reform that means purity and patriotism, progress and prohibition, health and happiness."

***

Willard Hall is, and has been for months past, full of workmen finishing up the exquisite interior. The corridor leading into it has been completed for some time, with the exception of putting the glass in the doors, and placing the Chautauqua fountain in the corner reserved for it. The auditorium proper, it is now hoped, will be completed and fit for occupancy the first week in November, so that it can be informally dedicated on the return of Miss Willard from the National Convention at Denver. The Chicago Central W. C. T. U. has taken the hall at a rental of $3,500 a year, and proposes holding a gospel temperance noon-day prayer-meeting from twelve to one o'clock every day except Sunday. On Sundays at 4 p. m. gospel services will be held and a gospel temperance address delivered by some noted temperance speaker. The National W. C. T. U. will have free use of the hall when it is required. The hall will be rented by the union for entertainments, as they must secure money enough in this way to pay the rental. In the hope of getting some money ahead for the purpose, the executive committee of the Central union voted some time ago to rent the hall for one month to the Commercial and Traveling Men's Republican Club (composed of business men of the city) while it was in an unfinished state, for an hour each day at $20 per hour. The union now deeply regrets that it rented the hall for this purpose as it has caused great misunderstanding and offense to our prohibition friends, and it has notified the Republican Club that they can hold no meetings in Willard Hall after October 19, and the union has fully decided that no political meetings shall be held in it hereafter, for they do not wish, much as they need money, to do anything that will have even the appearance of evil. We trust this explanation will be sufficient to explain any misunderstanding that may have been entertained in regard to the matter.

***

The North Carolina W. C. T. U. sends $43.75 which completes its gift of $100 to the Mary C. Woody tablet. Seventeen dollars and a half come from the Wisconsin W. C. T. U.—first installment on a pledge of $100 for a tablet in honor of Mrs. Amy Kellogg Morse, their beloved retiring president; from the W. C. T. U., of Beatrice, Neb., $17.55 for the Mrs. Hitchcock tablet. Tecumseh, Neb., W. C. T. U. sends $25 for the Jennie Holmes tablet, and $1 from the same union for the Whittier clock; twenty-five cents from Alice Brown, Lookout, Cal., for clock, also $7 for the same purpose from Rhode Island W. C. T. U.; $5 from Delaware county, Ohio W. C. T. U. for Mrs. Trego tablet; $10 from the Jamestown, R. I., W. C. T. U. for Elizabeth L. Comstock tablet. The following unions have completed their gift of $100 by sending the sums noted below: Armory Hill, Springfield, Mass., $62.65; Lansingborough, N. Y., $40; Harrisonville, Mo., $53 Jacksonville, Ill., $5.

***

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite box, descriptive card and bulletin; remember, all who fill a mite box ($3.65) before next April will receive a photographic group consisting of Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple. All drafts should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh. All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

W. C. T. U. COURSE OF STUDY—NOVEMBER READINGS.

Bible.—"Bringing in the Sheaves." Bessie V. Cushman, M. D.
Responsive.—Harvest. Bessie V. Cushman, M. D.
Topical.—Selections made during the year by members of the union answering the question, "Why should we, as W. C. T. U. women, be thankful?"

Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts.—Mal. 3:7.

COLUMBIAN HOLIDAYS.

Compared with the opening of the Columbian year, the pageants of history were local and limited. This was not the event of a nation, a continent, or a hemisphere. It was the gala day of the world. On the 12th of October, the anniversary by the Julian calendar, of Columbus' landing, Madrid and Melbourne, Huelva and Havana, Berlin, Genoa and Amsterdam joined New York in celebrating the anniversary of the day when the Old World found the New, and they were no more twain, but one, rounded and complete. Old Madrid was draped in flaming red and gold, with here and there the cool red, white and blue. Many of the rural Spaniards had never seen our flag before and were charmed with its beauty. Masses in honor of Columbus were said in all the churches, but the great event was the university procession, in which professors and students were dressed in the garb of four hundred years ago.

The demonstration in New York was essentially military, and was the greatest in the United States since that day when the victorious Union armies passed through Washington for final review.

If Gotham remembered that her little upstart sister, Chicago, won the prize away from her, she showed no disposition to pout, but entered heartily and generously into the celebration of their common glory. The city was in party dress, and it was estimated that over two million people viewed the great parade, which was six hours in passing a given point. An imposing feature, which could only be in New York, was the grand sunrise salute, when the guns boomed from the warships of all nations anchored in the bay. Of the beautiful allegoric pageant two designs specially interest us: "The Car of the Press" was occupied by a beautiful woman, dressed in inky black, with a retinue of type setters and all the essentials of newspaper work. Was this hint or prophecy that women should take precedent in affairs of the press? The other car which excited most applause of any in the procession was "The American Woman," showing one of our uncrowned queens sitting in a rocking chair surmounting the globe. To all appearances she had the earth under her feet.

The same day the Italians of Chicago, numbering some 30,000, held their festivities, and it was worth noticing that the red, white and blue of their adopted country predominated over the red, white and green of their native land. It is a good sign that these children of the sun and masters of art join us so loyally. Two years ago there were rumors of war, where now there is marching shoulder to shoulder.

The general holiday began in Chicago a week later. Streets along the march of the great parade were gay with bunting of many colors but the attempt to introduce special colors and coat of arms for the city met with little favor. The terra cotta and white—"liver and lard" it was contemptuously called on the street—was no rival for the brilliant national hue. One hotel, in the attempt to be both patriotic and hospitable, presented a front like the "fancy stripe" of an old-fashioned rag carpet. A few decorations had historic significance. At one street corner the prow of the famous caravel, full-rigged, pushed out over the heads of the people, as if to ride a great wave. One facetious shopkeeper put up a painting of heroic size, draped in Spanish and American colors, which represents Columbus landing just in the midst of an exciting game of base-ball by native teams.

Our beautiful Temple was a-quiver with stars and stripes from cellar to spire, three flags being placed in every window, while the alcove above the "gates" afforded resting place for the finest decorative device in the city. The Santa Maria with sails full set and Spanish streamers flying, lies to the south, while the gray-haired admiral with sword and banner takes possession of his great discovery, little knowing how great it is. A very copper colored Indian, skulking in terror among the tin palms of the mimic island, lends spirit to the scene, while ideality is supplied in the background, where in a throne-like shrine, rising above all, is the figure of the woman upon whose immortal brow history sets the glory of the ever brightening gem of the ocean. Not having seen, Isabella yet believed. Higher continents still wait upon the joint endeavor of woman's faith and man's prowess to bring them to the knowledge of the world.

Most realistic of all decorations was the figure of "Chicago" set over the entrance of a beer-vault. There she stood, strident, brazen, in shortened skirts of parti-color. Shame to Chicago! When she "will," she can make the backbone of the beer business in America to be as a bow that is broken.

Palms and smilax, but no flowers, were mingled with American and Spanish colors in the Auditorium, where a great reception the night of October 19th inaugurated the dedication season. Mrs. Potter Palmer "received" with General Miles, and was queen of the evening. The beauty and splendor of this republican court in what they have been accustomed to consider a provincial town was dazzling, especially to members of the diplomatic corps, who do not come inland, save to open a World's Fair. Representatives of twenty nations were on the floor of the great ball-room, and the Spanish delegation was notably large and manifestly delighted with the generous display of red and yellow on every hand.

Our own Cabinet came in force, with members of the Supreme Court and their wives. A guest of historic interest was the English envoy, Mr. Arthur Robert Peel, grandson of Sir Robert. Cardinal Gibbons, in his red robes, accompanied by Archbishop Satolli in Episcopal purple, sustained the honor of the church to which Columbus was so devotedly loyal.

Forty one governors were in line, from the executive of blue laws in old Massachusetts, to the chief officer of little Oklahoma. Mr. Whitelaw Reid was present, and expressed his opinion "as one who has seen more than one World's Fair," that "in effect, in the buildings, in the general arrangements thus far made, the exposition at Chicago will clearly surpass any previous exposition which the world has seen." Not least among the guests was the venerable Frederick Douglass.

The supper was sumptuous, and tickets included wine without further expense. Let our readers who fondly fancy that intoxicants have gone out of good society take note, and judge whether it be wise to relax any effort for total abstinence, which must always be the groundwork of prohibition. Liquors were again free the following night at the Fellowship Club, where the most distinguished guests were banqueted. It is with pain that we uncover this blot upon the brightness of our holiday. If it must be, we would gladly omit it from the record, but our readers should know the urgent need of greater temperance effort in the social world.

The civic parade of October 20th was interesting as a demonstration of peace and good-will rather than of the pomp of force. When the military appears it no longer presents the grim visaged front of mediæval war. Then a soldier was an animated standard upon which to hang a glittering array of trappings, and on the field brute force strove with its own sort in hand to hand grapple. Now, Minerva rules the battle field with tactics, armor is reduced to the lowest terms, and since weapons have become so deadly that no shield can turn them, our hero enters the fight all uncovered. It is the man of valor, not the soldier laden with tinsel, that wins the modern maiden's heart. We are coming upon times when a man shall be more precious than the gold of Ophir.

Many nations marched to the same music that day when Sousa's band led all the rest. We were glad to wave handkerchiefs to the dozen Catholic temperance societies in line, as well as to the six companies of Indian lads from the government industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., who were greeted with cheers as they went by, bearing aloft the wares of their own manufacture. But the procession was the smallest part of the tidal wave of humanity that overflowed Chicago that day, imposing in its potentiality. If once its will were set what could withstand it? These masses when united will prove resistless for good or for evil.

The National Commission, holding a conference during the week, had set apart one session to hear petitions and discussions relative to the closing of the Exposition on Sunday. When that time arrived, Commissioner Hundly promptly offered a resolution rescinding that promise, inasmuch as Congress had ordered the gates closed. After considerable debate, it was adopted. Then a commissioner from Iowa offered a resolution declaring the desire of the National Commission for the Fair to be open seven days a week. It was promptly tabled. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts and J. N. Stearns were present to protest against the sale of liquor in the Exposition. Dr. Crafts urged that two statutes will be broken if intoxicating liquors are sold there—the local option law of Hyde Park, and the state law prohibiting sale of liquors at fairs in Illinois. Commissioner King, of Iowa, strengthened this by citing the act of Congress creating the Columbian Exposition, which stipulated that nothing in the act shall be so construed as to interfere with the laws of any state, and that all contracts given for exposition purposes in any state shall be subject to the laws of that state.

This answers the objection that the Commission would be liable for more than a half million dollars damages for contracts already made for sale of intoxicants, those contracts being illegal, hence void. Mr. Stearns brought a memorial from the National Temperance Society; Commissioner Rucker, of North Dakota, "hoped the Commission would not dodge this issue, but meet it like men."

Mr. Hundly, who seemed to take the right side of the Sunday question, took the wrong side of the liquor question. The Commission tendered Mr. Stearns and Dr. Crafts a vote of thanks for their addresses, but took no action upon the subject. Meanwhile the danger of fire entails one form of prohibition in Jackson Park, very grateful to ladies visiting there. Boards are nailed on trees and in buildings, stating in naked terms: "Smoking prohibited." The commissioners are not yet awake to the peril from fires of strong drink.

In spite of the cloudy sunset, and the croaking of the raven in the signal service station, Friday, the great day, dawned cloudless, and kept its record clean of showers to the last moment. Every one tried to "get down town before the crowd," and no one succeeded, yet good-nature prevailed. The police had little use for their clubs, and the facilities for transportation proved equal to the need. The way of managing the embarkment was unique, and hinted at experience gained in the stock-yards. The people were admitted, a train load at a time, into a picketed pen beside the track. The gates closed on the waiting crowd, until that pen full was "loaded" and another train came up. There will be no trouble about transportation next year. The various railway systems of the city apprehend the magnitude of the task and will be in readiness to perform it.

Inside the park there was no crowding, and the arrangements everywhere were excellent. Arrived in the Manufactures Building, people ceased to be counted by thousands and instead were estimated by acres, variously from thirty-five to fifty. In the galleries and on the floor there was room for as many more. Some idea of its capacity may be formed from the fact that when the procession arrived, the cavalry at the head of the column rode right through the portals in full marching order, halting in one of the wings. From the seats in the center they looked like tin soldiery. The plans for seating were enforced without friction by uniformed guards. The speakers' stand was near the center, and rising behind it, in graduated tiers, were the seats of the managers, lady managers, cabinet, court diplomats, and governors with staff, and the ladies accompanying them. A squad of men and women wearing the red cross on their arms were stationed in improvised "hospitals" in the wings. About thirty persons required their attention during the day.

This occasion was more heraldic than commemorative. We are, perhaps, too near to see the event in its true perspective. but history may write that on this 21st of October, when men, women and children united in the consecration of a worldwide undertaking, civilization stood and marked time, preparatory to change of step. Mrs. Palmer excited an ovation when she came forward to address the mighty gathering, which made the historic audiences of the Coliseum small. She began with generous recognition of the power that brings woman on her brightening way, declaring that "the magnificent material exhibit will not so truly represent the great advance of modern thought as does the fact that man's silent partner has been beckoned from her retirement to assist in the great enterprise." Her closing paragraph scintillates with charming wit and suggestion: "Even more important than the discovery which we are gathered here to celebrate is the fact that the general government has discovered woman. It has sent out a flash-light from its heights, so inaccessible to us, which we shall answer by a return signal when the Exposition is opened. What will be its next message to us?"

Mrs. Sarah LeMoyne, who rendered the recitations of the Columbian ode, vindicated woman's rhetorical capacity, as her voice was not surpassed by any in tone or hearing qualities. After the rendition of the ode, President Palmer led forward its dainty authoress and presented her to the enthusiastic audience. There was nothing patronizing in the manner of the men; they rather carried a grateful sort of air, as much as to say: "'Twouldn't be half so nice without you." The master effort of the dedication, however, was the grand chorus of five thousand voices, rendering as one, the matchless creations of Handel and Haydn, and our national airs.

The only attempt at solo was when the twelve hundred children sang without the adult voices. The effect was bewitching. Mr. Watterson in his oration paid a fine tribute to the little people: "Better than these we have nothing to exhibit. They are our crown jewels; the truest, though the inevitable offspring of our civilization and development; the representatives of a manhood vitalized and invigorated by toil and care, of a womanhood elevated and inspired by liberty and education. God bless the children and their mothers!"

Dr. Depew was not, it seemed to us, at his best, or the occasion did not challenge him at his forte. His speech was "good," but not so "great" as sometimes elsewhere. He touched the order of the day in referring to Isabella's part in the great discovery: "It was a happy omen to the position which woman was to hold in America, that the gracious Queen of Castile was the first to comprehend the majestic scope of Columbus' plans."

The dedication closed with Cardinal Gibbons' prayer, and the tide went out.

There was a minor chord in every strain, echo of the sadness in that home at Washington, which touches the life of all our people. Probably not one of those hundred thousand hearts failed to give its throb of sympathy for our sorrowing President.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

The political situation is extraordinary and perplexing to even experienced politicians. It is only a fortnight before the election, and there is no enthusiasm, scarcely even a mild interest. There are spasms of effort here and there to create an interest, but they result in only momentary mitigation of the torpor. The one problem to be solved by those who feel responsible for the campaign is how to get the voters to the polls, or in other words, how to overcome the prevailing indifference.

This state of things doubtless has a cause, perhaps several causes. One of the principal of these we take to be the new method of voting in several states, the "Australian Ballot." Most of the "activity," "fine work" or "enthusiasm" in campaigns is due to professional politicians and the purchasable voters among whom they operate. These, according to a late remarkable article in the Forum, constitute more than one-fifth of the voters. Under the old régime, when votes could be bought in open market and watched till they dropped in the ballot-box, money and work told, but the Australian method interrupts this arrangement by completely emancipating the voter, leaving him to vote as he pleases in spite of anything he may have agreed to beforehand. The buyer has no way of knowing whether the seller votes according to contract or not. He may have made another contract with the other party. This fact strikes the business of "practical politics" with mortal sickness. The "curses not loud but deep" pronounced against the new ballot law by "political fine workers" attest the tendency and results of this measure.

By the way, it is a marvel how so beneficent and far-reaching a reform came to this country. We hope all patriots are duly thankful.

Another reason for indifference is a conviction that no disaster is impending, and no great material advantage to be expected. No matter which party wins, it will make no perceptible difference in the activities and enjoyments of life. The country has prospered, both before the McKinley tariff bill and after it. Whether this prosperity is caused by the tariff, or in spite of it, the majority of voters do not care to decide. The advocate of protection makes a strong and convincing argument which stands well till the other side is heard from. The voter, when all is over, has a secret conviction that it is of little consequence whether he votes or not, or which one of the candidates shall finally be the choice of the electoral college.

Of course, all eyes are turned towards the states where elections have been held. Some of these, as Maine and Vermont, strengthen the conviction of profound indifference in the old parties. The only party showing gains in these states is the Prohibition party, but there is no general movement among "temperance men." Arkansas, Georgia and Florida have had elections with results exceedingly gratifying to the democracy.

In Arkansas the "People's party" cast a large vote, but in Georgia and Florida there seems to have been an utter rout of the party which two years ago made a formidable onslaught on the "rock-rooted democracy." These last are now reported to have swept the field, and in consequence the democracy, strong in the faith of a "solid South," is free to turn its attention to "the doubtful states." This list is strangely changed. It is no longer New York, Connecticut and Indiana, but Minnesota, Iowa and Kansas must be added, and many are quite sure it must be extended to embrace Illinois, Michigan and Ohio.

On the other hand the Republicans ridicule these pretensions and refuse to allow that any northern state will give its electoral vote for any other than Mr. Harrison. That great efforts will be made to rouse the jaded enthusiasm of the "masses" is beyond doubt. Possibly they may succeed.

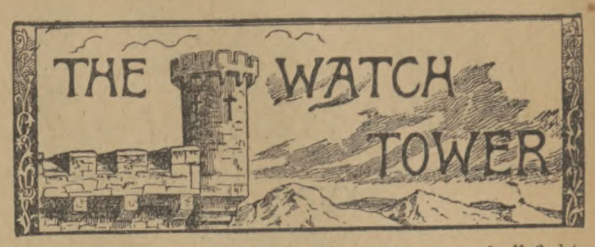
The prospects of the "Third party" or "populists" do not appear brilliant. The overwhelming defeat in Florida and Georgia, and the very small vote in Maine and Vermont, are not balanced by the vote in Arkansas and Alabama. But these elections are not the most significant features of the situation. The party is nothing if not triumphant. "Success" is so necessary to its constitution that defeat is deadly. It differs entirely in this important regard from the Prohibition party which expects nothing except a moderate addition to its vote. The cultivation of fortitude, the training of citizens to stand for a principle whether alone or in company, is not a characteristic of the People's party. Perhaps the most obvious and conclusive proof of these allegations is found in the efforts at fusion which constantly appear. In Kansas this tendency is conspicuous, and in other western states. If the party had on its banner the motto "we work for success," it would seem appropriate.

The Prohibition party is in marked contrast to this. It is not a political parrot pronouncing evermore the same sentences. It has opinions on the living questions before the people, and does not hesitate to express them, but its main contention is the issue which all other parties profess to admire, but diligently avoid; an issue which immensely more than all others affects the health, morals and happiness of the people—the suppression of the licensed liquor traffic. The monstrous anomaly which this traffic presents bewilders us by its enormity. That at least 300,000 men are engaged in making and vending under all sorts of seductive combinations, a poison which destroys tens of thousands of our fellow citizens in the most horrible and revolting way, and that these men are licensed, taken into partnership by the government for purposes of revenue, permitted to erect and maintain inviting places of resort where vice is propagated and crime finds a hiding place is a condition so appalling that a stranger might be excused for refusing to believe it. But this is only a partial presentation of the enormity. These 300,000 are the most active and potent factors in municipal, state and national affairs, doing more to shape legislation and practical government than any other equal number of citizens.

This syndicate, for such it practically is, knows but one thing of which to be afraid. It cares little what the Republican or Democratic parties may say; it has been accustomed to handle them. It took good care to prevent any hostile declaration by the People's party, and that organization it does not fear. But the Prohibition party is a pronounced and deadly enemy. Although small, it is more formidable and dreaded than all other parties together. All it needs is to get big enough and alcoholism is doomed. And it persists in living and growing. In spite of abuse and violence it increases its vote. It resorts to no secret expedients, enters into no fusions or trades. It thunders the truth into the ears of the American people, "whether they will hear or forbear." It expects them to wake up, dismiss their dreams and delusions and suppress the liquor traffic.

Calm in this faith, the Prohibitionist can afford to wait. "He that believeth shall not make haste." He has washed his hands from blood. He has done what he can. He hopes for half a million votes this time. To be sure, Bidwell ought to have four million votes, but no matter whether few or many, he intends to cast a vote which nobody misunderstands, a vote for prohibition.

It is perhaps well to repeat that the temperance meetings are "fixed and settled" to be held the first week in June. They are preceded by the Woman's Council which begins May 15. The moral impetus of having women and their work so early brought before the public is strongly emphasized by our good friend, Judge Bonney, who is at the head of all the congresses connected with the World's Fair. He also emphasizes as we must all do if we think about it, the value to the Exposition of the impetus in the direction of sobriety that would result from holding all the temperance conventions so early in the season. These temperance conventions include that of the World's W. C. T. U., the Good Templars of the world, the Total Abstinence Society and the National Temperance Congress, presided over by Archbishop Ireland, in which members of all the societies referred to will participate. The Good Templars claim that they will have a thousand women delegates from all parts of the world at this great triennial meeting. Of course the W. C. T. U. will not be behind in delegated members. It may be fairly said that this is the greatest day for temperance that the world has ever seen. We doubt not our brothers of the Prohibition party will "lend a hand" and call a meeting during this rally of the clans. We are sorry that the labor conventions of the world are not held at the same time, or immediately following ours, but we think they are set down for August.



Queen Christina of Spain discountenances bull-fighting.

***

A noble thought or a noble feeling amounts to nothing unless crowned with a noble action.

***

The wife of Congressman Johnson of North Dakota refuses to assist in any reception or participate in anything where liquor is served.

***

Death, like school examinations, is only to be dreaded by those who have spent their time in idleness and folly. The faithful student has nothing to fear.

***

Rutger's Woman's College, New York City, has created a new chair, that of literature and journalism. Mrs Croly (Jennie June) has been called to and the accepted chair.

***

I suggest that the sum total of good-will in many communities might be increased by forming a club for winter reading and conversation called the Optimists' Club, and fining every person who speaks in a downcast or derogatory way of anybody or anything, the weather not excepted.

***

A ship is made of pine and oak, the pine for ornament, the oak for strength, but there must be a vast deal more oak than pine in any ship on which any one of us would be willing to sail the treacherous sea; and what is true of ocean greyhounds is true of the victorious greyhounds of human character.

***

Hon. E. B. Fairfield, United States Consul, to France, has sent an American flag to Lady Henry Somerset in token of his admiration for her and her Christian work. This flag is to be placed beside the Union Jack in the rooms of the World's W. C. T. U. at 47 Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. W.

***

The National Indian Congress with from five to ten thousand delegates meets at Bombay, India, December 26. It is made up of the best men of the high caste of India, and at the last sessions ten women also participated, which was a great advance. This congress sets forth the grievances and hopes of the native people that the English government in India may better understand the situation of the people under its care. Miss Pash, whom Lady Henry Somerset and the World's W. C. T. U. are sending out to India, will be present at this congress and explain the work of the white ribbon. She will carry letters to the congress from Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset.

***

Gen. Booth has nominated his daughter, La Marechale Booth, to succeed him in command of the Salvation Army. In so doing he passes over Lieut. Gen. Bramwell Booth, who naturally expected to succeed his father some day. The General gives his reasons very briefly. "Women are the best rulers," he says. "If you refer to the capacity shown on several occasions by Queen Victoria, you will agree with me that she acted while her advisers were seeking how to act. I am arranging that the work of saving human souls may go on after my death. All title deeds will be transferred to my daughter's name." Her husband coincides, saying he has long been himself in happy subjection to La Marechale.

***

A most encouraging letter has recently been received from the Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg, Christiana, Norway, expressing her earnest interest in the W. C. T. U. of which it is hoped she will become president for Norway. This is mentioned as probable by Miss Esmark, who, in a more detailed account of the situation, speaks of Mrs. Leavitt's earnest desire that the W. C. T. U. should be organized in Norway, and mentions the work of Miss Gray, saying that on September 27 leading women were to meet for the purpose of forming a central committee out of which should come an organization to be auxiliary to the W. C. T. U. with the white ribbon as its badge and the Countess Wedel as president and Miss Esmark, secretary. This is one of the best news items that has come to the Headquarters of the W. C. T. U. in many a day. Americans are sufficiently familiar with Norwegian character to know that seeds of the modern temperance reform among women thus planted will take sure and certain root. It is probable that within a year the World's W. C. T. U. President and Lady Henry Somerset will visit Norway to help on this brave beginning.

On Duty.

KANSAS.

FEAST OF INGATHERING.

"Sowing in the sunshine, sowing in the shadows,
Fearing neither clouds, nor winter's chilling breeze,
By and by the harvest, and the labor ended
We shall come rejoicing, bringing in the sheaves."

When unable to be present and enjoy the intellectual feast of a convention program, the next best thing is to get a good report of the same from one who was there, with eyes and ears opened to see and hear, and the capacity to relate her experience for the benefit of others. Such a letter has reached me from Mrs. Olive Stubblefield, of Liberal, who says:

"The fourteenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U., October 4–6, was the most successful ever held in the state. The preparation made by the ladies of Pittsburg for our reception, entertainment and pleasure were perfect. Great interest was evinced as the many questions of importance, both to Kansas and to the nation, were discussed. The program was executed with great promptness, so much so that time was found for several beautiful songs, recitations and impromptu addresses. Great executive ability was manifested by Mrs. Grubb as she presided with gentle, but firm dignity, preserving perfect order. About one hundred and forty delegates and visitors were in attendance from abroad, and a large audience each evening greeted the speakers, who were Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, editor of the Christian Statesman, who made an eloquent appeal for 'Sabbath Observance' and 'Social Purity'; Rev. Eugenia F. St. John, who, in her earnest and persuasive manner, gave many practical methods of suppressing the liquor traffic and advancing the temperance cause; Miss Susan B. Anthony, who, in her usual terse and convincing manner gave a very striking account of the ground gained for temperance and other moral and political principles from that of twenty to fifty years ago, and Mrs. Clara Hoffman, president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., who delighted her audience with her logical and clearly defined arguments.

"Great affection was shown for our own state president. This was her first state convention. Her annual address was one to inspire the workers with zeal and courage for the ensuing year. Her broad and clear exposition of the moral and political condition of our country showed a knowledge worthy of emulation by many of our statesmen. The watchword which she gave for the coming year was 'One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight.'

"The reports of work done in the different departments displayed faithfulness and good results, but also showed that some of the 'lower officials' should send in their reports with greater promptness. All the state officers of the preceding year were reëlected, namely, Mrs. S. F. Grubb, of Lawrence, president; Mrs. S. M. Hartough, of Leavenworth, recording secretary; Mrs. S. A. Thurston, of Topeka, corresponding secretary; Mrs. M. L. Berry, of Cawker City, treasurer, and Miss Olive P. Bray, of Topeka, editor of Our Messenger."

NOTES.

The receipts and expenditures of Our Messenger balanced.

Mrs. Ella W. Brown, a lawyer of Holton, gave parliamentary drills.

Mrs. Dora Evans sang several very delightful solos.

Misses Kettler and Martin were appointed as "messengers" of the convention, Miss Helen Kimber was selected as "sergeant" of the meeting, and Mrs. Geo. Howard, committee on courtesies.

The total receipts were $2,318.08, the increase over last year being $284.01, which means a paying membership nearly four hundred greater than last year. The total number of paying members is 3,090. There were seventy-five persons present who were entitled to a vote in the convention.

The convention dined together at a restaurant.

During one of the evening sessions a vote was taken on the question of liquor selling at the World's Fair with a result showing one audience at least not in its favor.

Mrs. S. A. Thurston was presented with a basket of flowers in honor of her forty-fourth birthday anniversary, and her reëlection as corresponding secretary, both occurring on the same day. Mrs. Evans was given a basket of candy, as a reward for some sweet thing said, no doubt.

Beautiful and tender memorial services were conducted by Rev. E. F. St. John, who reported eighteen members of the W. C. T. U. as having passed over the river, from labor to reward, during the past year; a short biographical sketch of each was read, and after prayer a song, entitled "Roses on the Other Side," was sung by Mrs. Evans while many eyes were wet with tears.

DISTRICT CONVENTIONS.

The ninth annual meeting of the third district was held at Sedan with twenty voting members. The greeting was by Mrs. Maggie Kilmer, of Sedan, and response by Miss M. E. Scott, of Parsons. Reports were heard from twenty two superintendents. Four county presidents were on the program. Mrs. S. A. Thurston, state superintendent of organization, gave a talk on her department, also a parliamentary drill. A reading was given from the statutes of Kansas relating to our work, by Miss Julia A. Wilson, of Baxter Springs. It was felt to be so necessary and instructive that general regret was expressed when the "ten minutes limit" was reached. We should know the law in order to be able to assist in its enforcement. The Bible reading, "Girls of the Bible," was much enjoyed. The executive committee planned for local needs, and as usual the burdens fall on the local few whose hands are already full with saving our own, but who must put shoulder to the wheel to save the country, too. Blessed are the(se) busybodies in all lines of saving work, for "the reward of their hands shall be given them," "for they serve the Lord Christ." All the officers were reëlected.

The evening lecture was by James Troutman. A pleasant reception was held the first evening. The little union in Sedan has saloon drug stores enough to intimidate weaker hearts, but strong "in His name" they are "planting and watering" and He will "settle, confirm and establish" and "give the increase." Wherever the workers go the best homes are open, the true hearts welcome us, and links in the chain of friendship are added, we are brought closer to each other and to Him by the "bands of ribbon white."

Mrs. Emma Ogle, of Pittsburg, social purity superintendent, gave such a pathetic experience in her year's work that all were touched and helped, and we go forward encouraged, for "woman's work for woman" is bringing in blessed results.

The fourth district held its "annual" at Osage City. Twenty-three delegates were present. An interesting platform meeting was the principal feature of the first evening session, subject discussed, "Why I belong to the W. C. T. U." The addresses of welcome were bright and interesting. Mrs. Grubb gave the response. The president, Mrs. Haines, read a paper on the relation of temperance to missions, and a ladies' quartette rendered excellent music.

Twenty reports were read, a "School of Methods" was conducted by the state superintendent, Miss Bray, and Mrs. Grubb gave her instructive lecture on "Ballots versus Influence," in the evening. Mrs. Thurston conducted the question drawer. The officers elected were, Mrs. J. C. Haines, of Augusta, president; Miss E. M. Jaquith, of Americus, secretary, and Mrs. Dora Wells, of Yates Center, treasurer. The reports showed this district to be taking advanced ground. Mrs. Haines has been very successful in medal contest work, has held five silver, one gold medal and one "book contest" since April. At the gold medal contest a second prize, Miss Willard's picture framed, was presented, and an easel was given as a third prize. An El Dorado daily sent a reporter to the contest, to take notes. The decorations were of the golden sunflower. Lyon county in this district held an excellent convention at Emporia, at which five unions and fourteen delegates reported. Twenty superintendents were doing active work. The colored union was especially active in the juvenile department. Coffey county had a "woman's rest" at the county fair, the work being done by Burlington union. Miss Mantie Armstrong, of the same union, conducted a silver medal contest in one of the halls on the fair grounds, thus proclaiming the gospel of prohibition to the assembled throng.

The annual convention of the seventh district was held at Wellington, Sumner county. This youthful city, though so recently visited by the destructive cyclone, looked like a capital as the train laden with white-ribboners entered its boundaries. A most royal welcome was extended by the W. C. T. U., the church and citizens. Special interest was just being awakened in the temperance work by the people of Wellington, from various causes. A mass-meeting had been called for the evening by the ministers and citizens, the conduct of which was turned over to the convention. Mrs. Jennie Harlan voiced the cordial welcome which was responded to in behalf of the convention by Mrs. Anna M. Taylor, of Wichita. Mrs. Fannie Clark, president of the colored union, gave an interesting talk on temperance work among her people. Mrs. Sallie Glassbrenner, of Jeffersonville, Ind., described her travels through California and the West generally, the past eighteen months, relating many instances of rescue from sin and misery accomplished by the W. C. T. U., stating also that the famous Amelia Palace at Salt Lake City has been confiscated by our government. An address by Mrs. Belle Knappenberger told "why women want to vote." This should have been heard to be fully appreciated. Miss Eva Benton, of Wellington, gave a beautiful recitation, after which Mrs. Grubb delivered an address. A parliamentary drill each day by Mrs. F. E. Shaffer, of Wichita, who also delivered an address—"Woman's Place in the World's Work." The president, Mrs. Woodrow, delivered her annual address, and Mrs. Hoyt, of Lyons, read a paper on woman's influence. Each received deserved praise. Thursday evening's program consisted of recitations by Mrs. Shaffer and Miss Mollie Walter, and Mrs. Grubb's address on "Ballots versus Influence."

The question drawer Friday morning was in the hands of Mrs. Grubb. Many valuable suggestions were offered to the benefit of all, but the chief feature of the morning was a discussion on the dangers that menace our prohibitory law, led by Rev. Botkin. Mrs. H. L. Mason, of Wichita, read a paper on "Non-alcoholic Medication." A deaconess from Omaha, Neb., gave a short talk on their work. A paper on "Scientific Temperance Instruction" was read by Dr. Carrie E. Tiffany, of Kingman. Mrs. Taylor gave an illustrated talk on "Dress Reform." Four young ladies of Wellington favored the convention with appropriate solos.

Mrs. Henry Fellows, of Wichita, was introduced, having the honor of being the only "Crusader" present, she having been a delegate to the first state convention of Indiana. Pastors of the city and surrounding towns were also introduced and spoke words of encouragement and sympathy. Rev. Botkin, in proof of his position, stated that a little daughter had recently arrived at their home, and it was promptly named Frances Willard Botkin. Many of the delegates visited the smelting works and were shown around the city by the hospitable citizens.

Mrs. Grubb and Miss Bray were each presented with a basket of beautiful flowers.

The Pittsburg L. T. L's bearing banners, and under the guidance of Miss Addie Gaylord and Mrs. Brown, entertained the convention with marching songs and recitations. The Warrentown Sabbath school was also out in full force. This school is the result of the mission work of the W. C. T. U., Miss Anna Graves, superintendent.

The leading workers of the state were called to the platform to face the audience as an object lesson, and were each presented with a zinc ore and metal souvenir in remembrance of the Pittsburg convention. Mrs. Wright made the presentation.

Delegates to tha National Convention are Mrs. Kemp (at large), from third district; Mrs. Anna Fisher, first; Mrs. Lewis, second; Mrs. Haines, fourth; Mrs. Evans, fifth; Mrs. Candis, sixth, and Mrs. Woodrow, seventh. Junction City was selected as the place in which to hold the state convention the coming year.

The unions were urged by plan of work committee to have persons appointed to attend each voting precinct in the state to see that the word "for," referring to constitutional convention, be stricken from the ballots on election day. A number of new names were secured for the local union. Thirty-two delegates were in attendance, representing unions in seven counties. The officers elected were Mrs. W. A. Woodrow, president; Dr. Harriet Messenger, secretary; Mrs. R. G. Stubbs, treasurer, and Mrs. M. R. Ruggles, organizer. A motto was adopted by the convention, "Learn to love each other more, bear with each other's failings, and try to see something good in every one."

MRS. S. S. WEATHERBY,
State Reporter, LeRoy.

VERMONT.

EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

Bellows Falls nestled among the hills on the banks of the Connecticut river, was a gala place September 21–23.

The eighteenth annual convention of the Vermont Women's Christian Temperance Union was held in the Methodist church with 150 delegates and visitors present, from all parts of the state, also 300 participants in the annual festival of Episcopal choirs. The good people of the place seemed not at all disconcerted at the presence of so many strangers but vied with each other in their hospitality, making every one feel at home.

It is difficult to conceive of more bright, perfect autumn days than we enjoyed during the entire convention. Wednesday afternoon and evening was occupied with business session, which proved all too short for the perfecting of plans of work for the year. Thursday morning the convention proper met in the audience room of the church which was tastefully decorated with the stars and stripes, banners, mottoes and flowers. Hundreds of red, white and blue autograph cards, forming the children's chain encircling the entire church, suggested faithful work, and was an inspiration as we looked down through the years to the time when these boys and girls should take our places, and carry on our great work.

Above the pulpit in full view hung the portrait of Miss Willard. We thought of her as separated from us by the boundless expanse of old ocean—in spirit with us, and our hearts went out in prayer for her safe return, and that she might find rest and consolation in this her hour of bereavement. Vermont claims the preëminent distinction of being the birthplace of Madam Willard. A schoolhouse now stands on the ground where she first saw the light. A tender memorial service was held in the schoolhouse, and in many other places in the state.

The consecration meeting, led by Miss V. C. Terrill, was a fitting preparation for the duties of the day. Abiding in Christ was the theme. Earnest prayers were offered for God's blessing on our work. The state president, Mrs. Esther T. Housh, called the convention to order; after the responsive service, all joined in the old Crusade hymn. Rev. Mr. Fullerton led in prayer, showing himself to be an earnest temperance man and in sympathy with the W. C. T. U. The addresses of welcome from Mrs. Dr. Campbell and the pastors of the churches were cordial and full of encouragement. The responses from Mrs. Niles, of Coventry, and Mrs. A. F. Smith, of Manchester Center, were full of determination and perseverance.

There was sadness in our greeting to our state president as she came forward to present her annual message. For seven years she has labored faithfully, endearing herself to all. She is going to Boston to reside and another must fill her place. In her own calm and dignified way she reviewed the work of the year, told of her love for the Vermont W. C. T. U. and the dear women to whose homes she had been welcomed. She rejoiced in the successes of the past and spoke encouragingly of the future.

The morning session closed with a Bible talk by Mrs. H. H. Read, on "Higher Education in the Christian Life." "We must not," she said, "be content in the Christian life with common schools, but reach after something higher." The devotional exercises were all of an intensely spiritual character. The reports from county presidents and state superintendents showed much earnest work accomplished and an increase in membership.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Boston, was present and addressed the convention, urging the ladies to interest themselves in the scientific temperance instruction law and insisted that it be as thoroughly taught as other branches. She has truly said, "The star of hope of the temperance reform stands over the school house." Mrs. M. E. Bell, of Morrisville, presented the subject of a Mercy Home for friendless women and girls and reported $11,000 already pledged for that purpose. She has spent most of her time during the past year in soliciting and receiving pledges for the home.

Thursday evening was occupied with a gold medal contest, six young ladies participating. All did credit to themselves and were listened to with close attention, Miss Brown, of Springfield, receiving the medal and Miss Etta Franklin, of Rutland, honorable mention. Following the contest Miss Fessenden, of Boston, general secretary Massachusetts Y's, addressed the convention; her subject was "Uncle Sam's Garden." The address throughout was original and an ingenious way of showing that this nation is rum-cursed and that the women are laboring for the utter extermination of this curse.

We were cheered and encouraged by the presence of Mrs. R. R. Johnston, former president of Northern California who is now a resident of our state. She occupied considerable time Friday evening speaking of the importance of our work, much to the delight of all who listened.

The crowning event of the convention was the address by Mrs. J. K. Barney, National and World's superintendent of jail and prison work. In visiting prisons and jails in this country and across the water she has had an opportunity of seeing the wretchedness and misery caused by intemperance, and has a happy faculty of arousing her audience, and causing them to desire to do more for the Master, and for the uplifting of humanity.

NOTES.

Secretary Mrs. G. E. Davidson being detained by the critical illness of her husband, a telegram of love and sympathy was sent. She was unanimously reëlected.

"Queen Esther," our retiring president, was made honorary president, a dozen or more rising simultaneously to second the motion, with words of love and appreciation. One hundred dollars was pledged for the purpose of placing her name on a marble tablet in the Temple at Chicago.

Mrs. H. H. Read, of Shelburne, was elected president, and we unitedly extend to her our hearty support. Mrs. Read is not a stranger to us, having served as a state superintendent for some years.

The next annual convention will be held at Montpelier.

The delegates to the National Convention are Mrs. M. E. Bell, Mrs. P. S. Beeman; delegate at large, Mrs. Dr. Wiswell; alternates, Mrs. Housh, Mrs. Nelson and Mrs. Franklin.

MRS. A. F. SMITH,
State Reporter, Middlebury.

MISSOURI.

AN INSPIRING CONVENTION.

The tenth annual convention of the Missouri W. C. T. U. met in the Stone Chapel, Drury College Campus, in the beautiful "Queen City of the Ozarks" (Springfield) from September 30 to October 3, 1892, with a large attendance of representative women from every portion of the state. The chapel was handsomely decorated with flags, bunting, flowers and appropriate mottoes. Noticeable among these were such sayings as "Study both sides of every question," "High license for the state is high treason against the decalogue."

Promptly at ten o'clock Mrs. Hoffman's gavel fell. "Nearer, My God, to Thee" was sung and prayer was fervently offered by the president.

We were welcomed to the city in a tender and delightful fashion by one of the energetic presidents of the W. C. T. U. of Springfield, Mrs. Neva Thomas. Mayor Parce assured us that so far as his authority extended, we were welcome. Greetings were also extended to the delegates from the Y. M. C. A., the W. S. C., the Y. P. S. C. E. and the W. M. S. Mrs. J. H. Laughlin, a returned missionary, spoke very touchingly of the appreciation she had of the work of the W. C. T. U. since Mary Clement Leavitt visited her mission on the Sandwich Islands. Mrs. Kate Newton, of Bolivar, voiced the sentiment of the convention in a witty and appropriate response which assured the citizens and organizations that their hospitality and sympathetic words were appreciated.

Mrs. Julia Glazier, state treasurer, submitted her report which showed that the total receipts during the year had been $2,937.54. The report of our state corresponding secretary, Miss Ellen D. Morris, showed that much hard work had been done; indeed the efficiency of our secretary cannot be overestimated.

Miss Lillian Wood conducted the memorial exercises with a touching and eloquent address concerning those who have passed away. She announced that twenty members have crossed the river of death since our last meeting. "The coral insects," she said, "do not devote their lives to building the reef, but bend their energies toward seeking the light. Though they may not attain it during life, after the death of myriads of them the reef rises above the waves and basks in the sunshine. So it may be with the workers in our cause." Remarks in respect to each of the deceased were made by the delegates.

The annual address by our president, Clara C. Hoffman, was highly appreciated. She closed by saying that the good time is coming, and among the agencies to bring it about are the Y. M. C. A., W. C. T. U., Y. P. S. C. E. and last, but not least, the Salvation Army.

Mrs. J. D. Newly, of Kansas City, gave an address on physical culture which was favorably received. Mrs. Ida Burr spoke with no uncertain sound, and urged every woman to take THE UNION SIGNAL. Many delegates sent this valuable messenger to their hostess for the coming year, as she suggested. Mrs. Clara Hoffman was reëlected unanimously, this being the tenth year she has been chosen our leader. Miss Ellen D. Morris, state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Kate Newton, recording secretary, Mrs. Julia Glazier, treasurer, were reëlected, and when escorted to the platform all were greeted with the Chautauqua salute.

Our noon-tide prayer service was conducted by our newly elected superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Rebecca Hall, of Stockton. Her Bible reading on patience fell like a benediction. Mrs. Virginia Hedges read an able paper on Missouri laws which was discussed at length and many points of interest to women brought out. The Missouri Home Guard was presented by Mrs. Sarah H. King.

Mrs. E. B. Ingalls read an able paper on finance, and in it presented a most excellent plan, which was adopted with a few slight changes. Mrs. L. E. Allen spoke of the Industrial Home and emphasized the necessity for the extension of this branch of the W. C. T. U. A pleasing feature of the program was the two minute speeches by the district presidents and the five minute reports by the superintendents.

The faculty of Drury College and students invited the convention to attend the chapel exercises and asked Mrs. Hoffman and Miss Carrie L. Carter to address them. This invitation was accepted with thanks and all who attended will never forget the earnest words spoken by those who had part in the exercises.

Y night brought out many of Springfield's most representative people. Miss Carrie Lee Carter, state superintendent of Y work, gave the opening address in an admirable speech, and presided during the remainder of the evening's program. Able papers were read, and charming recitations were rendered by some of Missouri's fairest daughters. Appropriate music added to the evening's entertainment.

State organizer, Mrs. J. H. Clark, showed by her report that much work had been accomplished. On Saturday night Stone Chapel was crowded to its utmost capacity, to listen to the grand gold medal contest. The occasion brought together some of the best talent in the state as contestants. The program was in charge of Mrs. A. E. Carmen, who presided. All the contestants acquitted themselves admirably, and the grand gold medal was awarded to Miss Millicent Ashley, of Lamar. Prof. Adams, president of Drury College, in a brief and eloquent address, presented the medal. It is hoped that Miss Ashley will contest at Denver for the diamond medal, and will bring the glittering trophy to Missouri.

Our constitution was amended and a new office created, that of vice-president-at large, this officer to hold the office of president in case of a vacancy. Miss Lillian Wood, of Maryville, was elected to fill this office. The state was divided into small W. C. T. U. districts, without regard to the political arrangement, and it is hoped by all that this division will prove a great benefit to our work.

On Sunday many of the leading workers in the state occupied the pulpits in the various churches. Grace M. E. church was packed with earnest listeners to hear the truth expounded in a Christian manner by Clara Hoffman. At night she spoke in the First Congregational church.

Mrs. Alice Williams was greeted by an overflowing house of devoted people at the South St. Christian church where she spoke on purity. Her lecture was preceded by a Bible reading of rare merit by Mrs. D. H. McNary. Other pulpits were acceptably filled by Misses Ida Burr and Rebecca Hall, also by Miss Wood and Miss Carter. At Stone Chapel the L. T. L. of Springfield at 2 p. m. on Sunday gave one of the most attractive entertainments, consisting of music, recitations, etc., of our whole program, and was listened to with great pleasure by all. At 3 p. m. an immense mass-meeting was presided over by Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, National superintendent of narcotics, in a dignified manner. She said that this was just such a meeting as she had long been wishing for and introduced as the speaker of the afternoon Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, of Boston, National lecturer of this department, who spoke of the evil effects of tobacco in every shape, but especially emphasized the evils of cigarette smoking, while she denounced chloral, morphine and other drugs. We welcome with all our hearts this goodly woman, and hope and believe her stay in our state will be beneficial.

At night another mass-meeting was presided over by Mrs. M. E. Golliday. The address of the evening was delivered by Albert F. Smith, of Decatur, Ill. He spoke as a business man from a business standpoint on "The Relation of the Liquor Traffic to American Industries." The address was logical and quite original.

The music was furnished by Mrs. Stiles of Springfield, who sang a beautiful solo, "Calvary;" "The Jinglers," whose music is beyond description—one must hear them to appreciate them; Miss Neal Hawkins, who has a charming voice, and the delightful music by the "Wise" and L. T. L. Beautiful baskets of flowers were presented to the state officers by the members of the L. T. L. who, in a brief presentation speech handed each their tribute.

Everything that Springfield could do to entertain this convention was done, and at no former convention have we been more comfortably and royally entertained; we owe our sincere gratitude to Mrs. Neva Thomas and Mrs. Brubaker. Mrs. J. B. Eversol, committee, the press of the city and the citizens in general for their untiring efforts to make us all happy. Many of the clergy and representative citizens were introduced to the convention. Miss Dowden presented the plan of orphans' homes and this department was taken up by our state W. C. T. U.

A generous amount of money was pledged for state work, appropriate resolutions were adopted, the benediction pronounced and thus we separated.

MRS. MARY E. JONES,
State Reporter, Humansville.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

YEARLY GATHERING.

The annual convention was fraught with interest; two days were spent in blessed fellowship, October 5 and 6. The meeting was held at the 16th St. Baptist church, a large and commodious edifice. Across the front of the platform was draped the dear old flag, while suspended above the arch of the organ loft was the motto, "Loyal Until Death." Plants and flowers adorned the platform. Mrs. Cohen led the devotional exercises at the first session which consisted of prayer, Scripture reading and experiences. "It was good to be there." At the close, Rev. Chas. Stakely, D. D., made a strong address of welcome, extending to us the cordial hospitality of the church which he said was in hearty accord with the purpose of the organization. Mrs. La Fetra's address covered a great many points, claiming the legal prohibition of the saloon, woman's ballot and woman's ecclesiastical emancipation, which are among the cardinal doctrines of our faith and effort to be nearer at hand than we think. The grand army encampment was a source of rejoicing and a glorious monument to our cause of total abstinence. Through the efforts of our district president, President Harrison sent an order to Col. Ernst, superintendent of public buildings and grounds, that no liquors should be sold on government grounds during the encampment, and that the police should enforce this order.

The first evening of the convention a mass meeting was held, addressed by Rev. S. M. Vernon, D. D., of Philadelphia. The report of young woman's work was given and a beautiful banner presented to the Y securing the largest number of new members. The following officers were elected: Mrs. G. D. La Fetra, president; Miss Louise Weightman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Emma Shelton, recording secretary; Mrs. Clinton Smith, treasurer; Miss Kessler, auditor.

A pleasant incident occurred, when Mrs. La Fetra was presented by the ladies of the union with a very handsome lamp. In that way their good wishes were conveyed to Mrs. La Fetra who had reached the twenty-fifth anniversary of her wedding. Mrs. G. R. Alden (Pansy) made the presentation speech.

We regret exceedingly the removal of Rev. and Mrs. Geo. W. Moore from our city; they have been indefatigable in their efforts to advance our cause and largely deserve the credit for helping to clean out the saloons in what was once known as "Hell's Bottom," a dreadful locality. Mrs. M. L. Wells, National organizer, was with us during the convention.

The treasurer reported total receipts $3,806.50, expenditures, $1,703.88. The corresponding secretary's report showed that there were 25 auxiliaries, 757 members, 5 honoraries, seven Y's, membership 214, 16 Loyal Temperance Legions, membership 4,117. Five unions organized the past year, of which four were Y's. The unions all reported good work done; many of them held mass-meetings. The District union has held 40 mass-meetings; many of these I have written of before. On August 28th a service was held at the First Congregational church in the interest of kindergarten work, which had been taken up in Willow Tree Alley. This is a new branch of work to us, but is growing, and doing much good; the rumsellers who surround this alley are endeavoring to poison the minds of the people who live in the alley against our work. It reminds one of Demetrius when Paul preached in Asia.

On September 11th Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman addressed a mass meeting at Metropolitan M. E. church. Sabbath, September 25th, there was a meeting of Loyal Temperance Legions at the Congregational church. Mrs. M. M. Snell spoke to a large audience from the Gospel Wagon, which is the property of a successful mission in our city. Some of the unions have held mothers' meetings.

On September 24 a reception was given at Hotel Fredonia to the Woman's Relief Corps and all white-ribboners who were visiting the city. Refreshments were served. Rosalie Bartlett recited. Prominent workers from the W. R. C. made short addresses.

A protest has been sent recently to the district commissioners in regard to the removal of Assistant District Attorney Dumont, said removal being, as we believe, plainly and positively in the interest of lawless rumsellers.

The superintendent of prison and jail work reported that the jail had been visited twenty-two times, almshouse and hospital seventeen, papers given, five thousand, books, two hundred and forty-eight, pages of literature, five thousand seven hundred and twenty-two, besides three hundred Easter cards. A number of visits have been made in the interests of prisoners. One thousand one hundred and sixty seven leaflets have been distributed and much good work done.

The Sabbath observance department has done petition work to close the gates at the World's Fair on Sabbath and received much encouragement when the vote was finally taken by Congress on the matter. There have been prepared during the year, petitions representing 332,006 signatures beside many churches and other societies who failed to give the number voting. Many visits to the capitol have been made to deposit these and to converse with members and senators in regard to the subject. The memorial from the World's and National W. C. T. U. in regard to Sunday closing and the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants on the Fair grounds was presented in both houses of Congress. An appeal was made to the secretary of the treasury in behalf of the workmen in the barge office at New York, that he would do what he could to secure to them their rest day. A call was made on the Postmaster General about closing the post-office at Demorest, Ga. Two Sabbath-schools have been spoken to and leaflets distributed. A protest was sent against plying the barge to Glen Echo on Sabbath. Thirty-eight postals and seventeen letters have been written and over 1,500 pages of literature distributed.

The superintendent of unfermented wine, while summering in Loudoun county, Va., where fermented wine is used at the Lord's table, wrote to the ministers and urged the use of the unfermented juice of the grape; she also sent leaflets and the receipt for making unfermented wine and has distributed one hundred pages of literature.

One hundred and sixty thousand pages have been distributed by the superintendent of literature. Considerable work has been done in barber shops, endeavoring to displace the Police Gazette, and like papers, with good, clean reading matter. Some work has been done in engine houses and with railroad gate keepers, papers and leaflets having been given them to occupy their spare moments; 7,850 copies of The Young Crusader Sunday-School lesson supplement were used.

The superintendent of narcotics has seen the superintendent and presidents of every street railway line in the city, for the purpose of inducing them to abolish smoking on the cars of their respective lines. She has received and sent to Congress quite a number of petitions in support of the bill prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes in the United States.

The superintendent of flower mission reports: Visits to sick, 228; to hospitals, 34; to homes for women, 10; almshouse, 9; potted plants given, 18; bouquets, 635; boxes of flowers, 3; a large quantity of fruit, provisions and clothing given to poor families; literature distributed, 12,051 pages; money expended, $128.90.

The superintendent of purity in literature and art has waited upon the House of Representatives Committee on Post offices and Roads, to look after Bill 120, relating to the sending of obscene literature through the mails, which has been read twice and referred to the committee, where it now rests and will continue so to do unless some persistent effort is made to persuade the committee to take it up for further consideration. She has visited book stands and found many trashy books, but none obcsene. She cut from an exchange an advertisement of books which were said to be very obscene, and sent the same to Anthony Comstock for investigation. The suppression of the Police Gazette has given much trouble. There is a great decrease in the display of impure pictures in windows, on signs and bill boards in our city.

Five thousand five hundred leaflets and other literature have been distributed among foreigners.

One hundred and five evangelistic services are reported by the evangelistic department. Five visits were made to Providence Hospital; one hundred visits to the sick carrying flowers and nourishment. Two missions have been opened in alleys.

Four public addresses have been made in the interest of hygiene and heredity, two of them illustrated by chart. Sixty two health calendars were sold, which doubtless proved teachers in many homes. Fifteen dollars have been expended in health literature and for the department.

The membership has greatly increased in the juvenile department, and more interest manifested than in previous years. Four public meetings have been held. Autograph cards for the World's Fair have been thoroughly distributed among the members.

The legislative and petition department has presented several memorials, remonstrances and petitions, both of a national and local character. Many protests have been circulated against the re-issue of licenses. The number of judges (both in our higher and lower courts) is increasing in favor of prohibition, and more frequently they decide in favor of temperance measures.

The memorial ordered by the World's and National Convention, to promote peace and arbitration, was presented in the Senate and House of Representatives. We have seen district commissioners in relation to closing saloons in localities near public schools.

Five new Y's have been organized this year. Ninth street Christian church Y had largest percentage in membership. Vermont Ave. Y prepared a list of temperance grocers and sent to the city pastors, asking that their members deal with such. Calvary Y has been efficient in alley work, also in flower mission. Ryland Y, through its social work, has secured a large number of honorary members, also distributed a large amount of literature.

L. C. Kessler,
District Reporter, Washington.

NORTH CAROLINA.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC CONVENTION.

The state convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, held in Greensboro, N. C., September 15, 16 and 17, was the most enthusiastic and successful in every way ever held by our organization. Thirty-six delegates were present besides the ex-officio members which include, according to our state constitution, not only the superintendents of departments, but all local presidents and state members.

The corresponding secretary's report showed more work accomplished all along the lines than ever before. Reports were given in full by the superintendents of twenty-four departments of work. One new department was added, that of home and foreign missionary work among the colored people.

Addresses of welcome were tendered the convention by the mayor on behalf of the town; Rev. L. H. Hilliard, on behalf of the churches; Mr. C. H. Ireland, on behalf of the Y. M. C. A., Mrs. L. H. Robertson, on behalf of the W. C. T. U. All of which were responded to in a happy manner by Miss Ida Vail, of Charlotte. Our president's addresses are always most excellent; this year she surpassed herself.

The homes of the citizens were thrown open to delegates. The cordiality of the hospitality extended beyond anything we could have expected. Lunches were served in the basement of the church, making it seem like a National convention on a smaller scale. One evening was occupied by the Y. W. C. T. U. whose state superintendent had arranged a most interesting program, a full account of which will appear in the Oak and Ivy Leaf.

The last evening was devoted to scientific temperance instruction in the public school. Our own Mrs. M. M. Hobbs, newly appointed superintendent of this department, and who so ably presented it at the teachers' assembly this summer at Morehead City, gave a lecture which would have rejoiced the heart of Mrs. Hunt.

Prof. Charles D. McIver, president of our state normal college, followed with an interesting account of his own work, heartily indorsing the position we take on the subject, but declaring that he did not like to talk war in the presence of Hannibal, and Mrs. Hobbs had shown herself a Hannibal in this fight for the enforcement of our law, which is the best in any state. Professor McIver is the man who secured an appropriation from our legislature for the establishing of a State Normal college for girls. Through his efforts the state was made to recognize the fact that girls as well as boys should be aided in obtaining an education. Prof. McIver has done a good work which is to do so much for our girls. His is a work that is to live long after others have been forgotten. This appropriation is the first ever made for the white girls of our state.

There has been an increase in our membership of one hundred and twenty-three members the past year. Every woman added to our ranks should count two, so great has been the pressure, so earnest the effort to keep woman "in her sphere," by our opposers. For the first time in our history as a state union, we have held our state convention without sending the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," to our more advanced sisters. Conservative North Carolina women have learned that they can talk in public, and actually seem to like it. I believe every woman returned to her home from this convention more than ever determined that the W. C. T. U. should stay until the object for which it is organized is accomplished.

Sue V. Tomlinson,
Cor. Sec.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

Mrs. Dora Evans, of Clay Center, Kan., has made a tour of Wyoming and has organized six new unions, reorganizing four. She made warm friends wherever she visited and the W. C. T. U. of Wyoming appreciate her efforts.

A prayerful, faithful and sacrificing Christian was Mrs. G. W. Barnes, wife of the Baptist pastor at Richville, N. Y. Many fellow workers of the W. C. T. U. in the various localities in which she has resided will be sad at learning that her death occurred September 12. "Her children rise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

There has recently been placed in the Eau Claire cemetery, at the grave of Mrs. Mary E. Russell, mother of Miss Lois Russell, Wisconsin's state organizer, a beautiful memorial stone bearing this inscription: "Erected by the Wisconsin Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in memory of a beloved comrade." It is a granite tablet of peculiar and beautiful design and is a fitting tribute to the memory of one whose loving deeds are as imperishable as the granite that marks her resting place.

Buell Union, Bridgeport, Conn., is still doing earnest work for the cause. The jail, hospital and almshouse are visited and services held there. Many religious papers, Bibles and Testaments are distributed. The superintendents report every week, and they have just appointed a committee to hold cottage meetings with those who are unable to be present at the meetings.

Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, one of the World's W. C. T. U. superintendents, since her election at Boston last year, has sent communications concerning this work, to 700 newspapers and periodicals. Mrs. Edholm is writing a book detailing the efforts and progress of the Florence Crittenton Missions in California—the rescue homes for betrayed women—which will be of great value to the social purity workers.

The Michigan third district W. C. T. U. convention assembled in Jackson, October 11-14. Miss Frances E. Griffin, Rev. Henrietta Moore and a gold medal contest were the evening attractions. "Who is Responsible for the Saloon?" "Franchise." "What Next?" "Women in Politics." "How Shall Our Local Union be Made More Efficient?" are the titles to papers, discussions and conversations which interested the delegates and the audiences.

A North Dakota correspondent writes to the point thus: "When I read in the Flower Mission number of The Union Signal of those poor fallen women in the cities that the white ribbon sisters are trying to reclaim and find it so hard on account of their surroundings, I thought if they could be induced to come out to Dakota, they would have less temptation, for we are fighting liquor hard here. Girls to do housework are very, very scarce; if a carload or two came through the Red River Valley on the Northern Pacific road, and it was known they were coming, it would be like the time the first negro women were brought to the North to work, there would not be enough to go round! North Dakota housekeepers are worn out with overwork and cannot get help at any price."

The hearts of our old Crusader readers will tingle with warm and sympathetic interest on hearing of the bold action of three young women in a well-known prohibition town. Their home is quite near the railroad. One evening this summer they found that a keg of beer had been rolled from the evening train in close proximity to their door. Fired at the sight they procured a hammer and broke open the keg, allowing the foamy liquid to spill upon the ground. They were discovered by the owners who hurried towards them using vile and threatening language. The young women were entirely alone, their parents being absent that day, but were not molested. Their moral courage will certainly be rewarded, and was then by the protecting care of the Heavenly Father.

Mrs. C. H. Fitzgerald is one of our chieftains in the Loyal Temperance Legion work. She has been at the head of the juvenile movement in Maine for many years, and many admirable ideas have been received from her. In a recent letter Mrs. Fitzgerald has the following trenchant utterance: "I go constantly into the drunkards' homes. I listen to their tales of woe and close the eyes of their dying children. The story has never half been told of the suffering of women and children in the home because of the drink curse. Most of our leaders have had only a bird's eye view but we who are hand to hand workers have looked upon this curse in the dive and the attic, in the cellar and the sub-cellar. As the years have multiplied I have become more and more convinced that we must train the children if there is to be an end of all this horror, and that here our strongest strokes of work should be put in."

Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, formerly president of Louisiana W. C. T. U., writes as follows to the mother of her new grandson: "I am glad the baby is a boy, and belongs to the ruling aristocracy of the land—the dominant sex. I do not wish him to tyrannize over his little sister, or to rule his mother, as he certainly will without asking his grandmother's leave; but he is lucky to come into the world with a fair chance for liberty and the pursuit of happiness, with no higher power to dictate what he may do, and what he shall have, and put him in leading strings for life, restricting every natural impulse, and controlling every action. Men say we have all the freedom which is good for us. Like Tony Lumpkin I wish sometimes that they would let us and our good alone for awhile. I have never yet heard of any freedman rushing around in search of somebody to buy him and put him back into slavery. As little sense as some of them have, none are so foolish as to pine for their former condition, and if women were once emancipated and put on a level with their former slaves, I think they would learn to appreciate and value their liberty, and would thereafter be content to call no man master, but the blessed Christ himself. Nevertheless I congratulate you on the birth of your son, and my grandson; may he prove a good 'brother of girls,' and a blessing to his parents and the world."

HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS AT DENVER.

Letters are constantly coming to the entertainment committee from persons desiring to attend the convention as visitors, relative to accommodations. Many want entertainment at one dollar per day and some at four dollars per week, within walking distance of the place of meeting. As it is about impossible for one person to answer all letters of this nature that come, a general statement will have to suffice. Hotel rates have been secured and published, on convenient car lines, but usually at such distances that walking a number of times daily is out of the question; excellent places can be secured at very reasonable rates. To those wishing to secure any of the places scheduled, the better way is to communicate directly with the places specified and the sooner the better. Within close walking distance are desirable places and prices not at all exorbitant. Where persons take rooms far out, there are excellent restaurants, some on the European plan, not far from the church. Delegates of course will be entertained free.

Hotels and hotel rates for visitors at the National W. C. T. U. Convention to be held in Denver, October 28 to November 2, and for delegates preferring hotels, are given below.

One noticeable feature of Denver is the large number of family hotels or first-class boarding houses, not devoted to the transient trade. These have been taken into consideration as well as the regular hotels within a convenient distance of Trinity M. E. Church, in which the Convention is to be held, and convenient, also, to rapid transit by cable and electric lines.

Brown's Palace, very close to the church, will furnish entertainment at $3 and $4 per day according to location of rooms. This includes meals, as the hotel is conducted on the American plan. The Palace, just completed and furnished, is probably the finest west of Chicago, and superbly located. These rates are given upon the contingency of securing not less than fifty guests.

The Albany, corner of 17th and Stout, offers most reasonable rates, considering the excellence of the hotel, its advantageous location and admirable management. Room and meals, $3 per day, two persons occupying a room, $5 per day. The Albany is a favorite place for conventions. The use of the club rooms will be donated to the executive and delegates, if the Albany is chosen as headquarters. Its distance from the church is about four blocks and the managers are noted for their attention to the comfort of guests.

The Gilsey, 18th and Stout, will furnish rooms by the week, price $4 to $6, two occupying a room will pay nothing extra. Meals, short order. The proprietress is willing to do everything possible for the guests.

The Albert, 17th, between Glenarm and Welton, and distant three blocks from the church, offers pleasant and newly furnished rooms for $1, $1.25 and $1.50 per day. An attractive café gives meals at $1 per day; no bar.

St. James Hotel, Curtis, between 15th and 16th, makes reasonable rates. Cars pass the door.

Broadway Hotel: Rooms and board, $3 per day; two occupying the same room, $2.50 each; very convenient to the church; no bar.

L'Imperial, Court Place and 14th, and other family hotels conveniently located, will make reasonable rates, conditional upon having rooms to spare.

The Woman's Christian Association furnishes rooms and board at exceedingly moderate prices.

The Woman's Exchange—auxiliary to the W. C. T. U.—is conveniently located, furnishes meals on the short order system, and is convenient to many places where rooms can be secured.

The Cooper, 1404 South 13th street, can accommodate twenty-five people, four in each room if desired, with room and board at $1.50 per day.

Curtis Block, 1518 Curtis street, guarantees first-class accommodations at low prices, with or without board. Table excellent.

Glenarm Hotel, corner 15th and Glenarm, three blocks from the church, submits a rate of $2 per day each, room and board, where two occupy a room, and $2.50 per day for one person in a room.

The Earl, Tremont near 14th; first-class entertainment, about $2.25 per day.

1958 Logan Avenue. Can accommodate four persons in two rooms. Terms, $1 per day. The Gilman near by furnishes meals.

The Tyrone, 22 W. 12th Avenue, two persons in one room, $1 per day each, room and board.

The Dinsmore, 1148 Broadway, $2 per day, room and board.

Ramona, $2 per day, room and board, corner 14th Avenue and S. 14th street.

Capitol Hill Hotel, rooms $3 per week; meals at Euclid Place, directly opposite, $6 per week.

The Holland, 18th and Pennsylvania, room and board, $2 per day.

On car lines, Mrs. Kreuzer, 2445 Clarkson street, two in a room, $1.25 or $1.50 per day each, room and board.

Mrs. C. Kelsey, 1657 Humbolt street. A party willing to share rooms can be accommodated with rooms and board at $1 per day each.

No. 19, 24th Avenue, can accommodate two at $6 per week each.

2160 Downing Avenue can entertain from ten to twenty, at $1 per day for room and breakfast; 22d Avenue car.

440 South Broadway can room two ladies at 50 cents each; reasonable restaurant near by.

1270 Logan Avenue, three ladies, room 75 cents each, but no board.

432 S. Broadway, "Jefferson Block," twelve ladies, two in a room, 25 cents each per day. In same building meals furnished at 25 cents. Car line direct and convenient.

All who come can be accommodated, not perhaps at eastern prices, but the advance will be very slight, and places are selected with a view to comfort and attractiveness. Other localities are being listed as rapidly as possible and will be in the hands of the information bureau so that there will be no difficulty in finding them. The committee should know as soon as possible the number of delegates and visitors.

Mrs. Frances Belford,
1323 Evans St., Denver. Cha'm Com.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

Driving the Brain

at the expense of the Body. While we drive the brain we must build up the body. Exercise, pure air—foods that make healthy flesh—refreshing sleep—such are methods. When loss of flesh, strength and nerve become apparent your physician will doubtless tell you that the quickest builder of all three is of Cod Liver Oil, which not only creates flesh of and in itself, but stimulates the appetite for other foods.

Scott's Emulsion

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N Y. All druggists.

GALVANIZED GEARED AERMOTOR

Re-designed and much improved, furnishes power to

PUMP, GRIND, CUT FEED, and SAW WOOD.

Price Cut to $75

For 12-ft. Steel Geared Aermotor.

Does the work of 4 horses at half the cost of one, and is always harnessed and never gets tired. With our Steel Stub Tower it is easy to put on barn. Send for elaborate designs for putting power in barn.

AERMOTOR CO. 12th & Rockwell Sts., Chicago, & 29 Beale St., San Francisco.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Do you want to buy a

PIANO OR ORGAN?

If so you will save money by addressing BEETHOVEN CO., P. O. Box 701 WASHINGTON, Warren Co., New Jersey. Information FREE.

CONCERNING ACCOMMODATIONS FOR VISITORS ATTENDING THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

THE LEADING HOTELS OF DENVER.

SYSTEM OF SANITATION MOST PERFECT IN EXISTENCE.

When you are away from home you consider PERSONAL SAFETY fully as much as you do comfort and good eating, and this you feel sure you cannot obtain unless you are housed in ABSOLUTELY FIRE PROOF HOTELS. DENVER HAS ONLY TWO possessing that wonderful advantage; once in them your mind is at rest, and you are able to enjoy more thoroughly your stay in the city. THE HOTEL METROPOLE is one of the ABSOLUTELY FIRE PROOF HOTELS, conducted on the EUROPEAN PLAN, with rates from $1.50 per day and upward, rate including heat in every room, and is an hotel of quiet refinement, with a choice and varied cuisine, restaurant and café, a la carte. THE BROWN PALACE HOTEL is the other ABSOLUTELY FIRE PROOF HOTEL, conducted on the AMERICAN PLAN, with rates from $3 per day and upward, rate including steam heat in every room, and is an hotel furnishing every known comfort, besides possessing the advantage of EVERY ROOM FACING THE STREETS surrounding the building, offering you the privilege of a room where the sun will either shine in it in the morning, at mid day or in the afternoon. There are 100 rooms at $3, 100 rooms at $4, 100 rooms at $4.50, 100 rooms at $5 per day and upwards. The public and private dining rooms and ordinaries, banquet hall and kitchen are on the eighth floor, affording a 300 mile uninterrupted view from any table of Pike's Peak, Gray's Peak, James' Peak, and other well-known snowy heights of this vast mountain range, and a bird's-eye view of the entire city.

Schiffmann's Asthma Cure

Is used by inhalation, thus reaching the seat of the disease direct. Its action is immediate and certain. No waiting for results. Ask any druggist, or address Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn., for a free trial package.

Publisher's Notes.

OUR DAY

For November will maintain its always high standard. Frederic P. Noble will tell about Africa at the World's Fair, and ex-president G. F. Magoun will describe Mr. Moody's schools at Northfield and Chicago. Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, D. D., will tell of "Aggressive Christianity Among the Pariahs and Brahmins." Rev. Joseph Cook's Monday Lecture is on "Fraudulent Elections North and South." "The Vital Points of Expert Opinion" are of unusual interest, as are the Questions to Specialists and Editorial Notes. Subscribe now. Price per year, $2.50; per copy, 20c; to ministers and students, price per year, $2; per copy, 20c. Address,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Joseph Cook is the sum and essence of Our Day. What with poetry and Monday Lectures, and the editorial departments, his publication is strongly and peculiarly his this month, a fact which will in no way detract from its value in the eyes of most people.—The Interior.

While We Are at the Convention

we hope you will read this.

Because

You will be so busy later, reading the Convention UNION SIGNAL that you will forget to send for things that are probably just what you want.

FREE RUM ON THE CONGO. The temperance committees of C. E. societies, Epworth Leagues, etc., can find in this abundant material for temperance meetings. Every Christian should be familiar with its contents. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

UNANSWERED PRAYER. A book for Christian parents, by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. It exposes with a firm but kindly hand the secrets of many a failure in home life. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

BUGLE NOTES FOR THE HOME. Our children should send these temperance bugle notes ringing through the land. Let us have more temperance recitations in schools, Sunday-schools and homes. Price, paper, 10 cents.

CRUSADER PROGRAMS I AND II. Programs for evening entertainments, dialogues for "special" days and everyday times. Mostly temperance. Price, paper, 25 cents, each.

HELPS FOR HEALTH MEETINGS. What its name indicates. Full of suggestions by specialists in the department of health. Menus for hygienic "suppers" combined with W. C. T. U. socials, outlines for study, etc. Price, 10 cents.

OUR TOILING CHILDREN. What can we do—what ought we to do toward the solution of the problem of child labor? It faces us daily—it is a vital factor in the question of life or death of this republic. We can, at least, inform ourselves, so as to be able to act intelligently. Read what a specialist in this line says in the book named above. Price 10 cents.

We issue no quarterly temperance lesson for December this year for two reasons: 1. The date fixed is December 25, and we are sure that most schools will prefer the Christmas lesson at that time. 2. The Scripture chosen is the same as for September 17, 1893, and we deem it unwise to duplicate the lesson.

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS

With Its Stirring Music is just THE THING for Your Public Meetings It will help Immensely

YOUNG PEOPLE LIKE IT.
The CHILDREN ENJOY it.
Old Folks are Interested.

PRICE 35c. PER COPY.
Send for Sample Copy to

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
THE TEMPLE
CHICAGO.

OVER 700 KINDS AND SIZES FROM $10.00 TO $75.00

THE GENUINE ALL BEAR THIS TRADE MARK. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

GARLAND STOVES AND RANGES

"The World's Best"

Do you need a magazine for the children?

JOHN G. WHITTIER wrote: "It is little to say of ST. NICHOLAS that it is the best child's periodical in the world."

Try the November "ST. NICHOLAS."

It begins a new volume and contains

First chapters of a new serial story for girls, "Polly Oliver's Problem," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, author of "Timothy's Quest," etc. Illustrated.

First chapters of a new serial story for boys, "The White Cave," by W. O. Stoddard. A story of life in Australia. Illustrated.

An exquisite three-page poem by John G. Whittier,—describing the visit of a party of young girls to the poet's home.

"A Young Marsh-hawk," an out-of-door paper by John Burroughs. Illustrated.

"Uncle Jack's Great Run," by Tudor Jenks. Illustrated.

"Inanimate Things Animated." The first of a new series of funny pictures.

"The Siren," a sea-story by Henry Bacon. Illustrated.

"Winter at the Zoo." With eighteen illustrations of animals.

"From Reveille to Taps." About soldiers. Illustrated.

These are only a few of the good things in this beautiful number of ST. NICHOLAS. There are poems by Harriet Prescott Spofford, Margaret Johnson and others, a capital fairy story, several stories of adventure, instruction in "Our Neighbor John," etc., etc.

This is the time to begin subscriptions to ST. NICHOLAS. November opens the new volume. Buy it on the news-stands (25 cents), or send $3.00 and subscribe for a year. December will be a beautiful Christmas number. Address

THE CENTURY CO., 33 East 17th Street, New York.

WOMAN'S CANNING & PRESERVING CO.

MAKERS OF CHOICE PUDDINGS, LUNCH TONGUES, FRUIT PRESERVES AND GENERAL CANNED GOODS.

All put up by competent women. Neatness and care exercised, insuring a perfect product.

Our business is "woman's work for women;" we supply table necessities and luxuries ready for use.

Secure our price list (sent free to any address) before making purchases. It is a revelation.

Our stockholders are requested to insist upon having our goods. By so doing they will further their own financial interests, by increasing the demand for our products, and at the same time secure the best in the market.

Woman's Canning and Preserving Co.,
19 Michigan Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

THIS MACHINE FREE to examine in any home. Sent anywhere without one cent in advance. Warranted the best sewing machine ever made. Our terms, conditions and everything far more liberal than any other house ever offered. For full particulars, etc., cut this advt. out and send to us to-day. Address [illegible] Dpt. 19 Chicago, Ill.

THE WHOLE FAMILY.

Something for Every Member.

The greatest value for the least money of any magazine in the world. Five serial stories and over 100 short stories for young and old, by best authors. Hundreds of poems, anecdotes, &c. Departments on The Household, Farm and Flowers, Popular Science, Current Events, Fashions, Music, Religious and Moral Questions, New Books, etc. $250 Valuable Prizes.

10 Cts. in Stamps for a 3 months' subscription. Over 300 pages and 250 Superb Illustrations.

RUSSELL PUBLISHING CO., 196 Summer St., BOSTON.

FREE NOT A CENT

Until after full examination. The grandest offer ever made. The finest watch ever advertised by any firm in the world. Solid gold stiffened cases, made by a new process, guaranteed for 20 years or money refunded. Goods cannot be had elsewhere. Beware of imitations. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address and this watch will be sent to your nearest express packaged in an elegant plush case. You examine it at the express office and if satisfactory the agent will sell it to you for $13.85, with the understanding that if you can buy the same grade of watch elsewhere for less than $40 your money will be refunded.

FREE. If you will forward cash, $13.85, direct to us with your order, we will send you free a warranted 10 year gold chain. As to our reliability, ask any wholesale jeweller or bank in Boston. Address at once. This offer will not be made again. Both ladies' and gents' sizes.

KEENE'S MAMMOTH WATCH HOUSE,
1301 Washington St., Dept. 37 Boston, Mass.

HOW THEY BUILT.

BY A. E. V.

Two children played one afternoon,
Down by the sea in the shining sand.
Said Willie, "I'll make a big saloon,"
Said Winnie, "And I, a temple grand."

He builded close by the water's side,
She built on a rock with the greatest care.
The saloon went out in the foaming tide,
But the Temple stood, so tall and fair.

New Douglas, Ill.

A HOME OF YOUR OWN.

BY REV. J. P. HUTCHINSON.

It was the rent day and work had not been quite as brisk as usual when Mrs. Wilson reminded her husband that the rent was due and she hadn't the money to pay it. Mr. Wilson muttered something to the effect that the landlord would just have to wait for his rent till the money came in, and lighting his pipe he was about to go out.

"Papa," asked Jennie, his bonny, bright eyed little daughter, "Papa, why do you pay rent?"

"Because I have to." He was about to add, "everybody has to," but he stopped short.

"You needn't have to unless you like," she replied; "Mr. Robinson doesn't pay any; his house is his own; and I'm sure you are as good a man as he is, for I have heard you say you can make as much money as he does. I don't see why you shouldn't give up paying rent and have a home of your own."

"A home of your own!"

He went out, but the words kept ringing in his ears, and echoed through his brain. On his way to the town a young woman was heard playing a piano, and the refrain seemed to be "a home of your own." At all events the music appeared to keep step to these words. Even the milkman's bell, as the clapper struck the silvery sides seemed to ring out to him "a home of your own, a home of your own."

The words of his little daughter Jennie had set him thinking. They were good seed, these little words, and surely no soil should be more favorable than a loving father's heart. It was true, he made as much money as Robinson; he had as careful a wife—and he could not help thinking—one who was just as good looking—but he could not as yet see how Robinson could own a residence, while he, Steve Wilson was but a tenant, and could hardly manage to pay the rent.

Robinson, Steve tried to persuade himself, was a lucky sort of individual. Some men have so much better luck than others. One man has a continual up hill fight with sickness and want of work, while his neighbor gets on splendidly and everything he undertakes seems to prosper. Men are like ships at sea; the same storm that wrecks one vessel only sends another the quicker to its harbor.

That night when Steve retired he had strange dreams. For his day thoughts took on peculiar forms in the realms of sleep. His little daughter was seated on his knee, so he dreamed, and he told her that he was going to have a home of his own. And yet it wouldn't be his, but theirs, her's and mamma's. And how beautiful it would be, for luck was coming his way. They would have carpets and pictures, and an organ or a piano, that she should learn to play and soothe them when they were sad or solace them when they were weary. Mamma was not to know anything about it until it was all ready and complete. And the little one leaned her head upon her father's bosom as though it were a living golden seal to his vision and they were happy.

Then suddenly there came as from an inner chamber a sound of song; it was not his wife's voice; she had not, alas, sung for many a long day, but, nevertheless, it was quite familiar. It was his mother's voice singing a favorite tune of hers, a tune he had often heard her hum in the sweet old days gone forevermore. But the words were new. They fitted in with sweet adaptability, however, to the old music. He will never forget the words

"A home of your own, a home of your own,
For living and loving, a home of your own."

He awoke. He remembered that his mother had been dead these many years.

A few days afterwards Robinson was standing at his door when Steve approached him. "I say, neighbor, you've got a really nice looking house; it's your own too, while I can hardly pay the rent of the place I hire. I wish you would tell me how I could manage to own such a nice place."

Robinson seemed somewhat flattered by this testimony to his prudence and good taste and invited the other into his parlor.

Steve assented, and when seated in the cozy room took a hasty glance at the plainly but neatly furnished apartment. There were nice comfortable chairs, a sofa, a cabinet organ and a table in the center on which was a family Bible and some evidently favorite volumes. The wall, clean and white, was relieved by a few engravings and one or two portraits, but Steve's eyes dwelt especially upon a motto neatly executed and suitably framed.

GOD BLESS OUR HOME.

Robinson took his seat opposite Steve and said, "I'll be glad, my friend, to let you know how I have got my house and lot. In the first place I gave up my fire and smoke."

"Fire and smoke! what do you mean?"

"The fire that doesn't warm your family and the smoke that cures no bacon—whisky and tobacco. Let us figure a little; how much do you spend on drink?"

Steve muttered something to the effect that he could not exactly tell.

"Well," said Robinson, "I feel almost ashamed myself to confess but I had my glass of beer on an average three times a day, and then, sometimes I indulged in a dime's worth of something stronger. That made twenty-five cents a day with the extras on Saturday night. We have said nothing about the supply for Sunday. I reckon I spent about six dollars a month on fire water—beer and whisky. How is that with your experience?" he asked.

"I fear," replied Steve, thinking about how he treated and otherwise frittered away a considerable portion of his earnings; "I fear I spend more than that."

"Never mind, we'll just put it at that at present. Then for tobacco I spent at least a dime a day."

"That would hardly do in my case," said Steve, "my smoking and chewing would come to more than that. I'm getting rather hard on tobacco."

"Well," replied Robinson, "let us put three dollars a month for tobacco. There's nine dollars a month."

"But you haven't got this house and lot for nine dollars a month, have you?"

"No," was the reply, "but I talked the matter over with my wife. She said she could manage to save something by extra care. I made her treasurer, and she's a good one. We have paid twelve dollars a month and are still paying that, until we get the amount cleared. Instead of paying the money for rent we are paying a little extra and paying it for a purchase."

"But I can't give up my drinks and my tobacco," said Steve, rising.

"Then you can't have your own home. You are likely to be always a renter. However, you asked me how I managed to get a house of my own and I have told you. And by the way, Steve, I'm a happier, healthier, and, I trust, a better man, since I gave up these bad habits, and thank God there are enjoyments of a higher and better kind than we ever had before. Good day, Steve."

Steve went on his way. He passed the saloon without entering. By very force of habit he put a piece of tobacco in his mouth and then hurriedly spat it out again. But a struggle was going on. He was accustomed to his drinks; he had formed the tobacco habit and he knew now that in various ways he spent more money than would in a comparatively short time secure him and his family a comfortable home.

His little Jennie, too, had said that he was as good a man as Robinson. He would prove that she was right. Yes, his wife and daughter should, God helping him, have a home of their own.

One evening, Steve, his wife and Jennie, went together to take shares in the local building and loan society. Steve told the secretary his plans. In return that official gave them kind and cheering words. In parting he addressed Steve as Mr. Wilson, his wife as Mrs. Wilson and the daughter as Miss Jennie.

Steve was in luck. His wife improved in health, while he was happier and more cheerful.

Some months afterwards Steve bought a lot and built a convenient little house. He has been offered a high price for the property which has considerably risen in value, but he persistently clings to the house which he and his better half conjointly planned and which is being so rapidly paid for. And inside upon the parlor wall there is the usual motto, "God bless our home," but opposite to it there is another printed in plain, but well formed characters and which reads

A HOME OF OUR OWN.

Clinton, Ind.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Monday evening, October 31, is Hallow-e'en, as the night preceding Hallow-day or All Saints' Day (November 1) is always called. All Saints' Day was first so named in honor of the martyrs of the early Christian church in the fourth century. Then when the old heathen Pantheon at Rome was converted into a place of Christian worship, a similar festival was introduced into the Roman church to celebrate that event.

Many of the observances on Hallow-e'en, however, you will all agree, are more on the old heathen order, and very much different from Christian customs. Some of the queer practices attached to the day have come down to us through many generations. The customs of removing gates, tapping on windows and throwing cabbages are continued by the youth of the present day who are the only "witches, goblins and fairies" I have ever seen or ever expect to.

Aside from these questionable and sometimes dangerous frolics, a Hallow-e'en celebration can be one of genuine and harmless sport, and can be gotten up on short notice. I heard of one about which I want to tell you. The boys and girls were invited the very morning of Hallow-e'en. On their arrival they found the rooms were lighted by candles instead of gas or lamps. Pumpkin jack o'lanterns stood in unexpected places. Apples were hung from the ceilings, and there were tubs of water on which rosy cheeked apples were floating about. In an upper room, a pretty witch stirred a flaming cauldron and as each one passed out, a fairy handed him a fortune written on a slip of paper. Then came the sport; a sheet was drawn across a double door-way and shadow scenes were acted out for the company to guess. Merry groups gathered around the tubs and tried to seize the bobbing apples with their teeth. Others, with arms behind them, made similar attacks upon the suspended fruit. Nuts were cracked and the brightly polished apples stacked on the mantel were devoured. Everybody had a good time. Why not try something of this sort in our Cozy Corner circles? Yours for a good time,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

Though older than most of your nieces and nephews who write for the Cozy Corner, will you adopt me for your niece? I love the temperance cause and am willing to work for it. ETHEL E. BANKS.

Detroit, Mich.

A lover of the temperance cause is sure of a warm welcome here. The Cozy Corner salute again, children!

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

113.

CITIES DEFINED.

1. A city of England, three syllables; the first two are the name of a part of the human body; the third is the name of a body of stagnant water. What is the name of the city?

2. A city of Persia, two syllables; the first is a personal pronoun; the second, the name of a small animal.

3. A city of Persia, three syllables; the first, a letter of of the alphabet; the second, a personal pronoun; the third, a verb, the past tense.

4. A city of Scotland, two syllables; the first the name of a useful article in every day use; the second, a verb of locomotion.

5. A city of Massachusetts, four syllables; first, not old; second and third, to enter; fourth, a harbor.

6. A city of Maine, three syllables; first, a letter of alphabet; second, a protuberance; third, native of Scotland.

114.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of eighteen letters.
My 5, 6, 12, 18, 10, 7 is more than good.
My 2, 4, 9 is a kind of animal.
My 14, 16, 1, 17, 8 is frozen dew.
My 3, 15, 11, 13 is very small.
My whole is an important day we celebrate this month.

BETH S. SARGENT.

115.

DOUBLE ACROSTIC.

To aid; that which destroys; to bang; a snare; lazy; close to; a Hebrew measure of fifteen solid inches; twelve o'clock; a skiff of a galley; rest. Primals, a word which means self-denial; finals, a word which confers wisdom on all who practice its precepts.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED OCTOBER 6.

103. UNION SIGNAL (AND WORLD'S) WHITE RIBBON.

104.
T Y N E
Y O U R
N U T S
E R S T

105. Temperance Temple.

106. S-tale. T-one. N-eat. K-ill. F-ear.

Correct answers: Leonora Perrine; Clara McClelland; Rebecca.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals
are used in the preparation of
W. BAKER & CO.'S
BreakfastCocoa
which is absolutely pure and soluble.
It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.
Sold by Grocers everywhere.
W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

VOSE & SONS PIANOS ESTABLISHED IN 1851.
Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue.
170 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.,
OR
LYON, POTTER & CO.,
176 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILL.

GOING TO BUILD
SEE THESE NEW 1892 DESIGNS IN BOOKS 4 and 5, "HOUSES and COTTAGES."
Size, 8x 10 inches. Contains new designs, new styles. No. 4 has 35 designs, classified from $150 up to $1500, about half under $1000. No. 5, contains 39 designs of dwellings costing over $1 500, many $1800 to $3000. $1 each, or the two $1.50.
D. S. HOPKINS, Architect
72 Ottawa Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

How TO MAKE A Fortune
WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser; patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen to whom we give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new, will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., 184 Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.

NEW MAGIC LANTERN
STEREOPTICONS AND LANTERN SLIDES
For Amateurs. Public Lectures, and the Home Circle. PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENTS ARE PROFITABLE.
J. B. COLT & CO., manfrs., 16 Beekman St., New York
189 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. Mention this paper.

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.
Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town.
Send 2ct. stamp for Catal'ge.
THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB Co.
180 S. Canal St. Chicago.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis.

"SILVER TONES!"
NEW PROHIBITION SONG BOOK
Just out, by the Silver Lake Quartette and W. A. Williams. Selling rapidly; best in the field; just the book for campaign, W. C. T. U. and contest work; special terms to quartettes; 35c.; $3.60 per doz., postpaid. Address W. A. WILLIAMS, Warnock, O.

DEAFNESS CURED
BY ELECTRICITY.
Send 10 cents for our 100 page "Electro-Medical Theory and Practice."
B. B. BLISS, Iowa Falls, Iowa.

BEATTY Pianos, Organs, $23 up. Want agents. Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Wase'ton, N.J.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15
Per 100 copies	1.00

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A UNIVERSITY IN THE HOME.

A college education has ceased to be a luxury. It is now an absolute necessity to every young man who would enter upon life with an unclouded prospect. Talk as one may about the superfluity of higher education, it cannot be gainsaid that its absence makes a successful man's progress less pleasant, even if it does not impede it very seriously. There is no wise young man who would refuse the opportunity of university study if he could get it. But of course it costs money. You cannot enjoy the privileges of such an institution unless you can afford to pay liberally for them.

Why not set up a university in your own home?

It can be done, and at an expense so trifling as to be of no moment.

The expense consists of an outlay of ten cents a day for a short time only.

Some years ago many eminent teachers were paid a high price to write down in plain language all that was known of the branch of learning that each teacher had made his own. Thus the great mathematician was to write down plainly and succinctly the great truths of mathematics. The historian wrote of history, and the geographer of the countries of the world. And so with every branch of human knowledge.

These great teachers labored for years and finally completed their task. The result was gathered together in logical order and printed in clear, plain type and illustrated with beautifully clear engravings as an assistance to the memory and to vivify the text. The whole was strongly and neatly bound. Then it was given to that portion of the world who could afford to pay a high price for the wonderful work, which was called the Encyclopedia Britannica.

In the revised edition which we offer you, the Britannica has been condensed, revised and added to, with the intention of adapting it specially to the needs of American readers, while at the same time bringing it within the reach of the purses of many who could not possibly obtain the original work.

It is a University in itself, this work, for it neglects no branch of knowledge in which men are interested.

American enterprise has at last brought it within easy reach of all. You can have it in your own home for ten cents a day.

The poor young man can have no better University.

The presence of the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica makes a University of the humblest cottage.

We are anxious to have this great library placed in the home of every one of our readers. You cannot now offer any excuse for not having it, for you can pay for it on almost your own terms. What home can afford to be without it when it can be secured by the saving of only ten cents a day for the short period of 90 days? Recollect we send the entire 20 volumes at once on receipt of but one dollar, the other $9.00 to be paid at the rate of ten cents a day, payable monthly.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

MISS WILLARD'S ANNUAL ADDRESS

will appear in the first number of THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL, which will be mailed to subscribers on October 28, the day the address is delivered. The message of the illustrious leader of the white-ribbon army will be eagerly sought this year, for it has been a year of unusual experiences. In addition to this address, the DAILY will contain full stenographic reports of each day's proceedings. All white-ribbon workers and all their friends will want each number, beginning with this important first number. So send subscriptions without delay. Price for five days, 25c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

"The advance over all that had preceded for a century has proven so important as to raise the inventor,
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SHAW,
of America, to distinction as the compeer of William Lee, of England, the inventor of the first stocking-frame."—London Illustrated News.

Shawknit
TRADE MARK.
THE ONLY HALF-HOSE THAT FIT WELL, LOOK WELL, WEAR WELL.
They are the only half-hose that fit well because they are the only half-hose that are
SO KNITTED AS TO FIT.
They are the only half-hose that look well and wear well because they are the only half-hose that fit well and because they are made in the MOST ATTRACTIVE COLOR-EFFECTS and of the BEST YARNS.
Look for the trade-mark on the toe. Send for Descriptive Price-List.
SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass.

YPSILANTI DRESS REFORM UNDERWEAR
[For FALL and WINTER WEAR.]
NEW IMPROVEMENTS
—IN—
YPSILANTI EQUESTRIENNE TIGHTS.
TRADE HEALTH Ypsilanti UNDERWEAR MARK PATENTS FEBY 1887 JUNE 10 1890 DEC 8 91
O. N. S.
"Our New Shape" Combination Suits are now on sale. See new Fall Catalogue for particulars.
DON'T BE DECEIVED!
See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark—
"Ypsilanti Health Underwear."
Ypsilanti Underwear is warranted perfect by the manufacturers, when stamped with the above trade-mark, and sold at regular prices.
Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Price List. Where we have no Agent, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.
HAY & TODD MFG. CO., YPSILANTI, MICH.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address
THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE
Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10 cts. to intending agents. F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St. Chicago, Ill.

A NEW Twilled Lace Thread FOR CROCHETING. BEST in the world! Send 10c. for sample spool.
Crocheting Book No. 3 50 Illustrated Patterns. TEN CENTS.
Series of 24 Beautiful Illus. Tidy and Bed Spread Patterns from London and Paris. 5 cents each, or 60 cents a dozen including copy of above Book—No. 3.
GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D. W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on.
Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid.
Keeps the hair in curl for days Innocent as cologne. A toilet necessity. Not sent on trial.
30,000 Ladies Have Endorsed It
At druggists, or prepaid, 50c.
LADY AGENTS wanted.
DENISON CHEMICAL CO.,
56 (H) LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

A COMPLETE LINE OF
DRESS REFORM GOODS,
including the famous EQUIPOISE and DELSARTE Waists, Jenness-Miller Specialties, &c., &c. Send stamp for free illustrated pamphlet on healthful dress. Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 75 Madison St., Chicago.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory.
Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York.
Also 111 State Street, Chicago Ill.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS 25 CTS

FAT PEOPLE
YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of
DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.
Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.
DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address
Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

THIS SOLID GOLD GENUINE DIAMOND RING
FREE to any girl who will do a few hours work showing our new goods to their friends. Send No Money.
I. M. ASSOCIATION, 269 Dearborn St. Chicago, Ill.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to
H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.
Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets, Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES.
Agents Wanted. Catalogue free.
Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago.

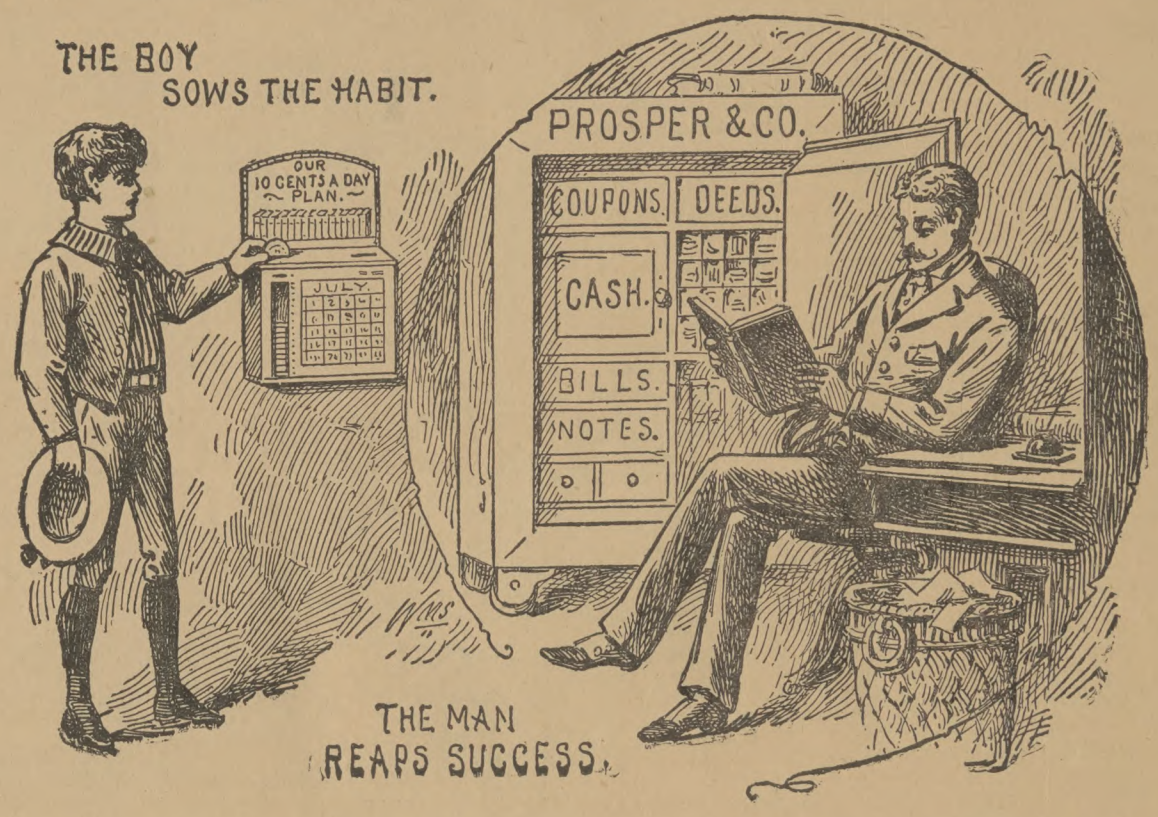
AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY
or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

AGENT made $71 in four days, selling my Electric Corsets, Belts, Brushes, Rings. 100 per ct profit Cash Prizes. Samples free. DR. BRIDGMAN, B'way, N. Y.

CARDS FOR 1893. 50 SAMPLE STYLES AND LIST OF PREMIUMS FOR 10 CTS. NEW ENGLAND PUB. CO. CADIZ, OHIO.

"As the twig is bent so is the tree inclined."

The Boy is Father to the Man.



ECONOMY IS TAUGHT, AN EDUCATION IS GIVEN

BY OUR PLAN FOR PLACING THE

REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA

IN THE HOME OF EVERY ONE OF OUR READERS.

Teach your boy the Value of a Dime. He will then know what to do with his dollars later in life.

If this lesson in economy was the only end in view it would still be worth your attention, but how infinitely more valuable is it when you know that this end is but a means to a greater end, the bringing into your home of the greatest literary work the world has ever known; the placing of a liberal education within the reach of every member of your family; the making of your home the peer of any public library in the world, so far as the facts of history, the discoveries of science and the practical knowledge of the world are concerned.

Isn't it worth trying? Investigate the matter at once. We don't want you to act till you think. If you think we know how you will act.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO THE UNION SIGNAL.

PUBLISHERS UNION SIGNAL:

Please deliver to me the entire set of 20 volumes of Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, as above described, together with your Dime Savings Bank, for which I enclose One Dollar, and further agree to remit 10 cents a day (remitting the same monthly) until the remaining $9.00 is fully paid.

*Name*_____

*Postoffice*_____

*County*_____

*State*_____

READ OUR PROPOSITION.

On receipt of only ONE DOLLAR we will forward to you, charges prepaid, the entire set of 20 volumes, the remaining $9.00 to be paid at the rate of 10 cents a day (to be remitted monthly). A beautiful dime savings bank will be sent with the books, in which the dime may be deposited each day. This edition is printed from new, large type on a fine quality of paper, and is strongly bound in heavy manilla paper covers, which with proper care will last a lifetime. Bear in mind that the entire 20 volumes are delivered to your address, with all charges paid to any part of the United States, Mexico and Canada.

This is a special offer made to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, and will remain open for a limited time only.

Hotel keepers, grocers, druggists and private people have tried imported and domestic mineral water, and all with one voice agree that is the best. It is bottled pure just as it flows from the famous "Manitou" Soda Spring. It has more sparkle and effervescence than any other known mineral water. It is a splendid aid to digestion, and a panacea for the stomach, liver and kidney troubles, and as an appetizer it has no equal. People like it. If they use it once they want it again.

Manitou
Table Water

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use, packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints
Convenient forms for Dealer and Consumer
Address for literature
Manitou Mineral Water Co., Manitou Springs, Colo.
Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists.

BARBER'S
LATEST AND GREATEST

PRODUCTIONS IN RESIDENCE * ARCHITECTURE, are found in our New Book, The "Cottage Souvenir," Revised (1892) Edition Superbly Illustrated. This book is 8¾x11 in.; 180 pages, and contains over 200 designs and plans of Artistic Dwellings costing from $500 to $15,000 with reliable estimates of cost.
Hints to Home Builders and other information contained in this work makes House building truly easy and relieves one of many knotty problems. Price $2.00 post paid. Beautiful Prospectus and Sample Pages Free.
GEO. F. BARBER & CO., Architects,
KNOXVILLE, TENN.

DON'T CHEW TOBACCO.

Beeman's Pepsin Gum
Helps to overcome the Habit.
CAUTION—See that the name Beeman is on each wrapper. Each tablet contains one grain pure pepsin, sufficient to digest 1,000 grains of food. If it cannot be obtained from dealers, send five cents in stamps for sample package to
BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 64 Lake St., Cleveland, O.
ORIGINATORS OF PEPSIN CHEWING GUM.

THE BERKSHIRE HILLS SANATORIUM.
For the cure of Cancer in all its forms, without the use of the knife. Book with complete information mailed free. Dr. W. E. Brown & Son N. Adams, Mass.

Publisher's Notes.

COLUMBUS AND WHAT HE FOUND.

Everybody all around the world is now thinking of Columbus and what he found; but only a very few know what he was or what he discovered. The educators of the country are turning the attention of teachers and of pupils to this wonderful discoverer, and the results of his enterprise, faith and daring are now being celebrated in a great exposition such as the world has never witnessed. We have in press a very charming book, which tells with entertaining simplicity this story more completely than it has been told heretofore. The author, Mrs. Mary A. Hull, has secured data from abroad which settles some disputed points. The story is told in a charming manner, and will entertain old and young. Price $1. Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL IS NOW READY.

This book so long promised, is nearly ready, and will be used at the National Convention at Denver. Lady Henry Somerset has sent an order from England for five hundred copies to be forwarded to her as soon as issued. It will be a very popular book as it contains the favorite hymns of so many members of the W. C. T. U., besides new ones of great merit. The fact that it has been compiled by Miss Anna Gordon will in itself be evidence of its merit and destined popularity. It will doubtless be found in every union and the homes of most of the members of the W. C. T. U. To add to its value, a few pages have been devoted to appropriate selections of Scripture for W. C. T. U. meetings. Price per copy, 35c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE UNION SIGNAL'S SPECIAL FIVE DOLLAR PREMIUM.

To any person sending a new subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL who may indicate a desire to secure the advantage here offered, remitting $1 to pay for the paper, we will send a paid-up scholarship for one month's instruction in the Phillips Home Study Business College, Syracuse, N. Y., with a choice of studies in either shorthand, bookkeeping or penmanship. The instruction is suited to young people of either sex, and its special features are: Rapid advancement, thorough qualification, saving of time and money. Distance is no objection, the work being done by mail. The regular price of a month's tuition is $5 for each study taken, but by special arrangement with the Phillips College, we are enabled to make this very liberal offer, presenting a remarkable opportunity whereby any young man or woman may, without any expense whatever, secure a month's instruction at home, thereby laying the foundation for a business education which will undoubtedly lead to success in life. Every energetic young reader of THE UNION SIGNAL will at once set to work and secure the name of the subscriber required; this will be easily done, for your friends will assist you in so laudable an undertaking. The offer is limited to one month's instruction, but those desiring to continue the course after the expiration of this scholarship can make satisfactory arrangements with the college to do so.

Every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL should call the attention of young people to this offer, and all members of the W. C. T. U. who have not secured a business training should realize what a good opportunity is now offered at small cost.

The price of home instruction is $5 per month.

To repeat:

The price of THE UNION SIGNAL is $1 per year.

Send one new subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and we will send an order entitling you to one month's instruction from the Phillips Business College without extra charge.

A letter just received says:

"I am arranging to offer a new one hundred dollar type writer as a prize to the student who shall make the greatest progress during a given time."

Do not delay. Send one new name and $1 without delay and enroll yourself in the home instruction class now being organized. Address,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SEND orders at once for THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. Price 25c.

TIRED OUT HOUSECLEANERS

Playing at house cleaning is tiresome, but real house cleaning is more so.

Gold Dust Washing Powder

does the work so well, and makes it so much easier, that half the terrors of house cleaning are removed by its use. 4 lb. package 25 cents. At your grocers. Try it.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE

TOBACCO HABIT

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.

For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others. Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

EASILY CURED

Silver Ware
OF THE HIGHEST GRADE.
THE QUESTION: "WILL IT WEAR" need never be asked if your Goods bear the TRADE MARK 1847 ROGERS BROS.
as this in itself Guarantees THE QUALITY.
BE SURE THE PREFIX •1847
IS STAMPED ON EVERY ARTICLE.
THESE GOODS HAVE STOOD THE TEST FOR NEARLY • HALF A CENTURY •
SOLD BY FIRST CLASS DEALERS
IF YOU ARE NOT SURE WHERE THE GENUINE 1847 ROGERS GOODS CAN BE OBTAINED ADDRESS
THE MERIDEN BRITANNIA Co MERIDEN CONN.
ILLUSTRATIONS OF LATEST DESIGNS AND VALUABLE INFORMATION WILL BE MAILED YOU (MENTION THIS PAPER)

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT
OR LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE
A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.
A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. ☞ We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.
Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE
a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.
TAKE A COURSE IN THE SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW. (Incorporated.)
Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to
J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y,
DETROIT, MICH.
525 WHITNEY BLOCK.

"AUGITE"
The Women's Friend
Stove Mat.
Food of any kind can be cooked on this mat without stirring, and cannot scorch or burn. Can be placed on the blaze or on top of cook or gasoline stoves. Price 35 c. each.
Agents Wanted.
KEESTER & CO.,
81 S. Clark St., Chicago.

Barry's Tricopherous for the hair and skin. Druggists or by mail 50 cents. 44 Stone St., N. Y.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DIAMOND DYES give the fastest, brightest handsomest colors, and make the old clothes look like new. They are the original and only reliable package dyes. Sample card free, WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

MAGIC HEATER—Ingersoll Heat Battery. Metal Table. Elegant Mammoth Lamp. Heat, Light, Comfort, Convenience and Economy. All for $10. Send for facts. INGERSOLL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Lansing, Mich.

"ACTINA"
Makes the Blind See and the Deaf Hear; cures Catarrh, Hay Fever and Asthma. New York & London Electric Ass'n, 1113-14 Masonic Temple, Chicago. Prof. J. H. Gilbert, Mgr. Main Of. & Fac. 1021 Main-st, K.C. Mo.

AGENTS Coin Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Every woman buys. Best and cheapest cooker sold. Big Profits to good workers, male or female. Sample's weight 12 oz. Adv'g matter furnished
For circulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS
CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.
Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.
N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,
163-165 DEARBORN ST. - CHICAGO, ILL.
New York. Boston.

HEADQUARTERS for LOW PRICES

We save all our good cash customers from 25 to 75 per cent. on a large variety of useful articles besides
400 Kinds of SCALES which we manufacture. Send for Circulars and Prices. The following are among the Articles we sell: Bicycles, Watches, Organs, Pianos, Safes, Sewing Machines, Carriages, Wagons, Road Carts, Sleighs, Buggies, Harness, Portable Forges, Anvils, Vises, Feed Mills, Bone Mills, Cider Mills, Etc. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago.

EDUCATIONAL.

Education Ends Only with Life

It is never too late to do mental work, to grow wiser and better. We are the slaves of phrases. "Finishing an Education" is one of them. Chautauqua urges its members to continued and persevering self improvement. A definite plan of daily home reading is a part of the system. The year 1892-3 will be the American Greek year. American Diplomatic History, Greek History, Literature and Art, are the subjects. The Columbian Exposition will be fully treated. Address THE CHAUTAUQUA OFFICE, Drawer 194, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Sargent's Normal School
Of Physical Training for Women,
at CAMBRIDGE, MASS., will open its Twelfth Session on October 20 instead of November 1, as heretofore.

Signal Notes.

A PENNY library of good fiction to take the place of the penny "dreadful" is the latest work of this sort in England.

OF the eight thousand children attending the free kindergartens of San Francisco, it is said that not one has ever appeared in a police court.

"YOU cannot fence your children from danger by many regulations and restraints. If it could be done, it would conduce to weakness and not to strength of character."

THE opinion of great capitalists on the ever present labor question has always an interest. In a recent interview, the many times millionaire, Baron de Rothschild, expressed the belief that there is more to be feared from governing powers than from the working classes who are on the whole well content, although he does not think their condition in all respects to be very satisfactory. He believes, too, that it is unwise to reduce the number of hours for labor, for it simply means more hours spent in the wine shop.

ONE of the most interesting speakers at the Northfield, Mass., meetings this year was Mrs. Tel Sono, a cultivated Christian Japanese woman. She is of high descent, her father being a philosopher and physician. With his approval she studied law, being the first woman lawyer of Japan. During her experience in the courts she came to realize the condition of her countrywomen. She came to America to study how to improve their condition. In San Francisco she was converted and was finally led into the plan that now engages all her time, viz.: To prepare herself and to raise money to establish a Christian school in Tokio for the higher education of high class girls. Every penny given she lays aside and calls it "Jesus money."

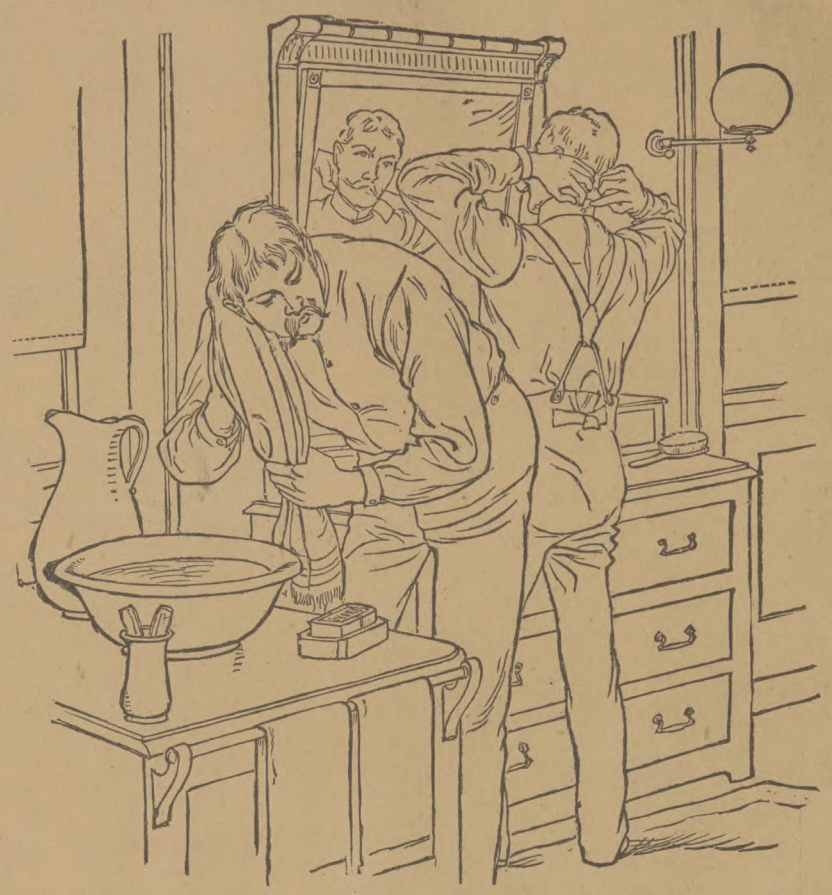
The Light of the Valley, a Montana religious exchange, makes the following pertinent suggestion:

"While our World's Fair commissioners are busily engaged in collecting rare specimens and arranging for the exposition of our products, we sincerely hope they will not overlook our high licensed saloon industry. There is no end to the choice specimens of our saloon products that might be exhibited at the Columbian Exposition. A large iron cage, 500 feet square, could easily be filled with blear-eyed drunkards, driveling idiots, lunatics, desperate gamblers, and then on elevated seats around the cage arrange the broken-hearted mothers, the weeping sisters, the disappointed fathers, despairing wives and hungry children, clothed in rags. Outside of this, on another tier of elevated seats, display a few hundred typical specimens of our paupers, tramps and such like. Why not have a national display of Uncle Sam's high license manufacturers?"

REV. Dr. GRAMBELL, of Mississippi, a prohibition leader in that state, said: "One saloon in the South has more power in municipal government than three churches. In Jackson, Miss., we have twenty churches and eleven saloons; but the latter dictate who shall be elected mayor, marshal and any other city officer. The editors of southern papers are slaves to the saloons and seem to have gone out of the business of telling the truth or taking stock in religion. The educated and intelligent colored people are in favor of sobriety; the uneducated are not. We have made a great deal of progress, but we need to go farther. The Baptists and Methodists together control ninety-five per cent of the people in my state, and if they would work unitedly they could crush out the saloon. It is hard for me to say so, Baptist preacher that I am, that these two denominations are responsible for the saloons that are running in Mississippi. Some time ago there was a constitutional convention at Jackson, and I tried to have a temperance plank inserted in the platform. There were a number of Baptists and Methodists present, but out of one hundred and thirty of them only seventeen voted for my measure. Their excuses were that it was not a proper time. The saloon exists to-day because these people allow it to exist, but the people are slowly coming to their senses, and from a business, political, moral and religious point of view they are beginning to see that they have not done right. If we can destroy the saloons, it will settle the race question, for it will make education possible for all classes of our people."

False Economy

Is practiced by many people who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.



When you hear a person express surprise that Ivory Soap should be used for the FACE AND HANDS, you can be perfectly sure that they have never tried it.

Once bathe the face with Ivory Soap and you will never go back to any other kind. The sensation of absolute cleanliness is a new and peculiar experience. You do not get it with any other soap. It amounts to a refreshment of the physical powers.

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

RAMEY'S CATARRH MEDICATOR FOR HEAD THROAT AND LUNGS

GUARANTEED.

WILL CURE YOUR CATARRH

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Headache, La-Grippe, Etc., Or Money Refunded!

We mean just what we say. Medicine enough to last four months with each medicator. Price complete by mail $1.50.

The medicine is put on sponge in enlarged part of medicator. Insert twin tubes in nostrils, single tube in mouth, then blow; thus your lungs force highly medicated air into all parts of the head and throat.

AGENTS ARE REAPING A RICH HARVEST.

Send for terms, testimonials and further particulars.

Ramey & Co., 85 Dearborn street, Chicago.

TOKOLOGY A COMPLETE LADIES' GUIDE In Health and Disease, By ALICE B. STOCKHAM, M. D., OVER 25 YEARS PRACTICE.

A mother writes: "We have a TOKOLOGY baby. She came before the nurse could get in from the next room. We did not have a doctor in the house. I never got along so well before, and this is our tenth baby.'. Prepaid. $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agts ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison-st. Chicago.

Bickford Family Knitter.

Knits everything required by the household, of any quality, texture and weight desired. A. M. LAWSON, 783 Broadway, N. Y.

Beware of cheap and worthless knitters.

YOUNG LADIES } SHOULD WEAR { GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAISTS. Permit full breathing

BICYCLES ON EASY PAYMENTS No extra charge. All makes new or 2d hand. Lowest prices guaranteed. Send for cata and save money. Rouse, Hazard & Co., 77 G St. Peoria, Ill

HARVEY'S HISTORY Send your address to The Harvey Land Association, The Rookery, Chicago, mentioning this paper, and you will receive the Unique, Interesting, Illustrated History, free.

The story of the most successful manufacturing town in America.

Send for the New Apron Clasp

Does away with apron strings. Can be readily attached to any apron. Price, by mail, 50c.

W. G. BERTRAM,

R. 530, 334 Dearborn Street, - - CHICAGO.

ESTABLISHED 1850.

"Out of each nook by dingle and brook
The Healing blossoms lean and look."

A POT OF PRECIOUS OINTMENT | Dr. O. P. Brown's HERBAL OINTMENT (Great External Remedy) reaches disease through the pores, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25cts. Druggists or by mail. J. Gibson Brown, 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

California's fruit crop for 1892 is valued at over $50,000,000. If you want to know where to go to raise fine fruits, and at what profit, address California Bureau of Information, Box 289, Chicago, Ill.

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S PILE COMPOUND Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.

CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.

References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont. Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

PRETIOSA CREAM... PELLETS

The infallible internal and external treatment for the removal of Humors of the Blood and Skin, whether simple or hereditary, from Pimples and Blotches to the most distressing Eczemas. Will give to the face the PURE, SMOOTH complexion so much to be desired. Is not a powder. No harmful or injurious ingredients. Sold everywhere. Price: Pretiosa Cream, $1; Pretiosa Pellets, 50c. Prepared by the AYOTTE DRUG & CHEMICAL CO., 70 State St., Chicago.

P. S.—To introduce this incomparable treatment to UNION SIGNAL readers, on all mail orders received up to Nov. 1st, we will send postpaid the Cream and Pellets for $1. Remit most convenient way. Money returned if dissatisfied.

SOUTH WAUKEGAN NO SALOONS

ANOTHER Factory Has Located at So. Waukegan.

THE Frank B. Barkley Manufacturing Co., after an extended search for a good location, have found it and will commence building at once. Now is the time to invest in property. You cannot make a mistake. The Morrow Bros. and the Lanyon Zinc Oxide & Paint Co. commenced operation October 17. The Washburn & Moen Co., the U. S. Starch Works and the U. S. Sugar Refinery are in operation. Plenty of work for all. New plat and pamphlet mailed on request.

MORRIS, GANSE & CO., 1300 CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BLDG., CHICAGO, ILL.

WOMAN'S LAND SYNDICATE!

THE FRANK B. BARKLEY MFG. CO. have just located in the midst of our lots at SOUTH WAUKEGAN. Foundations for their mammoth buildings are now going in. This makes 7 large manufacturing establishments now located within easy walking distance of all of our lots. Factories like these are what build up our large cities.

$112,500 will be credited to all bond owners in proportion to number owned by each; Bonds will be accepted by us at par value plus said credits in exchange for any of our lots as soon as Bonds are all sold

ONLY 2,446 BONDS REMAIN UNSOLD

These when sold completes the entire issue of Bonds, which are secured by above-named 2,000 lots which are held in trust by the Commercial Loan and Trust Co. of Chicago. Lots will be sold, Bonds redeemed and one-half the profits divided among the Bond owners, in proportion to number owned by each.

BONDS ARE STILL $10 EACH.

They are worth much more, but we want to close them out quick, and begin selling our lots. A deposit, no matter how small, sent in at once, will secure as many Bonds as you desire until you can arrange your money matters to pay for them. In case Bonds are all sold when your deposit is received, it will be immediately returned.

Printed matter containing full information will be sent on request. Make checks, money orders, etc., payable to

Woman's Land Syndicate Mrs. R. A. EMMONS MANAGER. The Temple, Chicago

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

VOL. VII. DENVER, COLORADO, OCTOBER 28, 1892. No. 1.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

Price, Five Issues, 25 Cents.

Frances E. Willard, Mary Allen West, } . . . . . Editors-in-Chief
Lady Henry Somerset . . . . . Contributing Editor
Margaret A. Sudduth . . . . . Managing Editor
Mrs. Harriet B. Kells . . . . . Office Editor

Mrs. F. H. Rastall . . . . . Business Manager

Greeting To the National W. C. T. U.—1892.

BY MRS. FRANCES BELFORD.

(President of Frances E. Willard Union, Denver.)

From peaks wrapped in radiance and summits in blue,
Take the welcome, dear friends, they are giving to you;
Where the foot-hills bend low to the continent's crest—
Here let God's evangels find greeting and rest.
Oh, white-ribboned army, lift your wondering eyes
To where the sharp crags cut deep through the skies;
Flung from amethyst heights o'er gulches and bars,
Streams your emblem of white held down by the stars.

You come not as strangers. Were human tongues still,
Through granite-locked cañons would come the low thrill
Of a greeting so tender, wafted down to the plain
On the ripple of streamlets—a rythmic refrain.
But better than welcome of rainbow-hued hills,
Than the murmur of pine trees and music of rills,
Are the hands swinging censers of incense—while prayer
From hearts turned to altars fills all the glad air.

Take then the strength of the hills and give in return
Your crystalized thoughts that quiver and burn,
As the aims of the present hidden treasures unfold,
And bring from the mountains their trophies of gold;
So come with grace Christ-like, plant deep in new soil
The truths won by conflict, made holy by toil;
Give as you've garner'd in sunshine and rain,
The fruits of your brain and your soul-wealth again.

There are camps, cabins lowly, where your work and your aims
Are words of all households—gold pictures in frames;
Your great cause they make theirs; the vile sin that is sore
Grows world-wide, and stealthily enters each door.
Then welcome, Crusaders, to this city so fair,
No battlements threat you, no menace is there;
'Tis yours! make it holy—this ground where you stand—
Your watch-word our motto—"God, Home, Native Land."

Five states are represented by presidential substitutes.

Mrs. Lucy B. Tyng, of Illinois, is committee on telegrams.

Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Maine, is time-keeper for the convention.

Mrs. Sarah L. Teetor, of Denver, presided at the piano during the day session.

A royal welcome has been extended to the National W. C. T. U. by the "Queen City of the Plains."

Overflow meetings will be held in the First Baptist, First Congregational and other churches near by.

Mrs. E. A. Hill, Florida's new president, is feasting her eyes upon snow for the first time in twenty-one years.

There are two new state presidents of the same name—Mrs. Ida H. Reid, of Vermont and Mrs. Carolina H. Reid, of Utah.

A full description of the beautiful Trinity Church, in which the Convention is held, will be given in Saturday's DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

The lunches and suppers for the convention delegates will be served in the First Congregational church, on Glenarm street, between 16th and 17th.

The committee on entertainment, which has had its headquarters in the Albany hotel, has established itself in one of the basement rooms of Trinity church.

Probably no state president has travelled as far to attend this convention as Mrs. M. L. N. Stevens of Maine. She is the efficient assistant recording secretary.

The Y conferences will be held at 8 o'clock a. m. and 1 o'clock p. m., each day commencing with a one o'clock conference on Friday. A special and helpful programme has been printed outlining the details of each day.

Looking upon the solid buildings of this stirring city, one can hardly believe that only thirty-three years ago Denver was an indiscriminate collection of miners' shanties, tents and wagons 700 miles from the nearest railway.

Mrs. Mary L. Burt sits proudly at the head of her magnificent delegation making the most of her magnificent presence, as the leader of the largest State W. C. T. U. delegation in the world—New York having just fifty representatives.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, called the Daniel Webster of the Temperance reform, is unexpectedly and happily in attendance. Mrs. Lathrap has just finished a lecture tour in New York and, for the first time in her strong life, almost succumbed, like ordinary folks, to the retributions of over-work.

The trustees of Trinity Church seem to have adopted the watchword, "Anything for the ladies," and even removed the altar railing to make room for the reporters' tables. They show, in every way, their appreciation of the fact that gold mines and real estate are found in brains and great-hearted deeds for humanity.

Evangelist Charles N. Crittenton came over with the California delegation. Mr. Crittenton is distinguished as the originator of the Florence Missions, scattered in many cities. He spends $25,000 a year to rescue tempted girls, and is known as the millionaire evangelist. He is to present Miss Willard at this convention with $5,000 for the Social Purity work.

Arkansas, Georgia, Indiana, New Jersey, Kentucky, Nevada, Tennessee and Texas are the only states that have not secured from their legislatures a law requiring scientific instruction in the public schools, concerning the effects of alcohol and narcotics upon the human system, taught in connection with physiology and hygiene. This has been Mrs. Mary H. Hunt's great work.

Mrs. Francis J. Barnes left New York, Sept. 24th and has been en route ever since visiting the state conventions of Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and Missouri, addressing meetings at many points. She arrived here Wednesday night from Colorado Springs and Pueblo, which were the last places visited. Since arriving she has been occupied in arranging for the Y conferences for Y evening and in taking some needed rest after her long and fatiguing journey.

The following State Presidents are in attendance: Mrs. Eva Higgins, Colorado; Mrs. S. B. Forbes, Connecticut; Miss Adelaide Kinnear, North Dakota; Mrs. Emma Cranmer, South Dakota; Mrs. E. A. Hill, Orange City, Fla.; Mrs. Sarah H. Black, Idaho; Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, Illinois; Mrs. W. C. Sibley, Georgia; Mrs. M. H. Dunham, Iowa; Mrs. S. F. Grubb, Kansas; Mrs. N. E. Munnell, Kentucky; Mrs. M. R. Goodale, Louisiana; Mrs. Lena Beck, Indiana; Mrs. M. L. N. Stevens, Maine; Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, Massachusetts; Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Michigan; Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Missouri; Mrs. M. L. Cummins, Montana; Mrs. M. A. Hitchcock, Nebraska; Mrs. Emma Bourne, New Jersey; Mrs. M. J. Borden, New Mexico; Mrs. Mary T. Burt, New York; Mrs. H. L. Monroe, Ohio; Mrs A. G. Murray, Oklahoma; Mrs. A. G. Riggs, Oregon; Mrs. Mary A. Babcock, Rhode Island; Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, Texas; Mrs. Vie. H. Campbell, Wisconsin; Mrs. L. A. Northrup, Wyoming; Mrs. Jane Stapler, Indian Territory.

The National Treasurer, Miss Esther Pugh, reports:

Total Receipts from States	$22,243.33
For Temple Fund	23,509.52
Total Expenses	20,731.20

Mrs. Mary C. Woody, president of North Carolina W. C. T. U., is in attendance much to the pleasure of her many friends, who feared her trip to Europe had not done all for her health that was hoped. Mrs. Woody is one of the sweet Quaker State Presidents, of which we have had several, who never knows when she has worked enough for all the Christ-causes.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association of Chicago, the official publishing house of the W. C. T. U., has a fine showing of its numerous publications on the platform of the lecture-room of the Trinity church. Its beautiful Crusade souvenir spoons are attractively displayed, and a full supply of books and leaflets are for sale. Subscriptions for the DAILY UNION SIGNAL will be taken there.

Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, National Evangelistic Superintendent, is present just from the Pennsylvania State Annual Convention, which had a representation as large as this National gathering. Every day from 11 a. m. till noon, Mrs. Greenwood conducted a Bible exposition, and no pressure of business was permitted to control the moments of this hour. Miss Greenwood will take charge of the Bible expositions at 11 a. m. every day during this convention.

The summing up of the year's work in the national secretary's report, results in an increase of membership and a deepening of white-ribbon principles. The number of auxiliary Unions, is 7,864; total membership, 154,213; total number of Young Woman's Branch Auxiliaries, 756; total Y membership, 12,3[illegible]; Loyal Temperance Legions, 2,887; total membership of same, 159,299; there are 250,000 children enrolled in these societies, but above membership figures are based on payment of dues.

A wave of emotion like the rustling of the breeze passed over the crowded audience, a solemn hush fell and tears came to the vision as with trembling voice, and moistened eyes, our National leader, during the reading of her annual address, referred in touching terms to those who have gone "farther on"—"Saint Courageous," the Woman's Laureate—John G. Whittier, the beloved mother of our National corresponding secretary, Miss Julia Ames; and the fond father of Anna and Bessie Gordon.

The Convention has a subject of important congratulation in the cordiality of the Press of Denver. Every paper reports white-ribbon news in a most friendly spirit and will have one or two reporters present during all the sessions. The Associated press and United press with equal good-will, have prepared to forward the deeds of each day to every great center in America, and to London. The courtesy and helpfulness of the reporters is unlimited, and delightful to women who have sometimes to resort to "coaxing" to get their cold-water news before the people.

Mrs. Ella C. Benton, chairman of the local press committee and a member of the staff of the Rocky Mountain News, has shown a rare amount of executive ability and tact in arrangements for accommodation of the press, and in general is an indispensable to the great National gathering. Mrs. Benton had her origin amid New England granite, but has added to this solid foundation, the free spirit and golden gains of the Great West, where her home has been for a dozen years, and is a leading woman of Denver and the W. C. T. U. She is to have a series of three letters descriptive of Denver in the DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

To the regret of everyone, the beloved state president of Colorado, Mrs. Eva Higgins, has been seriously ill, and is yet hardly able to attend the convention. She was present at the executive session yesterday, sitting in a reclining chair attended by her faithful physician. A handsome basket of flowers was presented by that body as a testimonial.

DECORATIONS — The beauty of the church interior with its polished oak furnishings and carved rails, its frescoed walls and handsome stained glass windows demands but little further embellishment. With true artistic taste the decorating committee has added only such touches as indicate the character of the important gathering. Suspended from the high ceiling directly over the platform hangs the famous globe, encircled by the white ribbon which made its first appearance at the initial gathering of the World's W. C. T. U., at Boston, last year. Beautiful white silk banners on brass standards, prominent among which is that of the Lady Henry Somerset Union of St. Paul, Minn., and pictured upon this are the well known features of our gracious English leader. Stripes of yellow and white are woven through the chancel rails most effectively, the same thought carried out in red, white and blue, being in the balcony railing circling the auditorium. Upon the platform, just sufficient decoration has been introduced to allow perfect freedom to the occupants. A stand of magnificent paling being the main feature. Flanking the rostrum on either side are the large and attractive banners of the Colorado and the Missouri W. C. T. U. The English and American flags appear frequently in juxtaposition. The right balcony, loge and side wall overlooking the platform tell the story of woman suffrage with Wyoming's large lone star flag, the colors of white and gold and the motto "No Sex in Citizenship." On the left are the special decorations of the National W. C. T. U., its beautiful starry banner and the motto "The Child of the Crusade," and a suspended snow white dove carrying the white ribbon in its beak. The large flags dependent from the balcony, have each a history; those upon either side of the auditorium came from St. Patrick's total abstinence society and are very valuable. The beautiful dark blue ensign and the American flag at the center of the gallery were sent by the Governor of Colorado; the former bears the State arms and was prepared especially for the dedicatory exercises in Chicago where it was carried by the Governor and staff. The local and State W. C. T. U., banners overhang the gallery, the National motto is displayed, and festooned around the church are loops of our red, white and blue children's signed pledge cards. The whole combining to form a decoration at once significant and attractive reflecting much credit upon the committee.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION CONVENTION.

The Nineteenth Annual Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, opened its first session in Trinity M. E. church, Denver, Colo., Friday morning, October 28, 1892.

The great audience was called to order soon after nine o'clock by the president, Miss Frances E. Willard.

MISS WILLARD—The convention will please come to order. As you know, we are in the habit of commencing very promptly at these meetings, but I met with an accident this morning which made me late. I lost my glasses and had to go to four different opticians before I could be suited. We have always begun our meetings by a reading of the Crusade Psalm. The old Crusade Bible has been in charge of Mrs. Thompson, who lives in Hillsborough, Ohio, but her increasing age and infirmities have prevented her coming, and I do not think they would intrust this old Presbyterian bible with any one else. But we can read our Crusade Psalm from some other Bible, and Lady Henry Somerset will do so. Then we will join in singing the Crusade hymn, after which she will lead us in prayer, closing with the Lord's Prayer.

Reading of Crusade, Psalm 146.

Singing of Crusade Hymn, "Give to the Winds thy Fears."

PRAYER.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET:—Heavenly Father, we thank Thee because we know that Thou art in our midst today. We ask Thee to come consciously into the presence of this great audience. We ask Thee to speak audibly to every heart here. We ask Thee to lay Thy hand of blessing upon every head. We ask Thee to guide the minds of those who shall meet in council here. We ask Thee to bless the deliberations of this great assembly. We would put these meetings at this opening hour into Thy hands because they are Thine own. Thou has called this great assembly and not the voice of man. We are met here because Thou willest not that any should perish. We come with one desire, to lift humanity to that higher and nobler plane for which Thou hast created them. We thank Thee that Thou hast brought many across devious ways of life to this one spot together. We thank Thee as we look back for all the sunshine of life which Thou hast given us, for the sunny valleys and the good places in life. We thank Thee for the smooth roads and for the happy joyous hours, and we thank Thee for the thorny paths, and for the rough and rocky roads that have made us see, perhaps the more, the sorrow of humanity; and we pray Thee this day so to take our hearts and so to consecrate them and bless them to Thy use that Thou may'st be able to hold and to use our wills for the purposes for which Thou has created us. We bless Thee that we believe that Thou hast great intentions for this world. We thank Thee for all the noble purposes that we see in the hearts of men and women, and we ask Thee to give us strength to roll away those stones that are sealing the sepulchres of many lives, and to bring forth those who are dead in trespass and in sin into the light and life of thy presence. We thank Thee for this assemblage. We praise Thee for all Thou hast given women to do in this great and glorious day. We thank Thee that our hearts can magnify Thee for all that Thou hast called us to do for Thy service and for Thy honor. We ask that Thou wouldst bless every individual member of this great assemblage; that Thou wouldst still all that is not of Thee and ripen all that is beautiful and bright with the sunshine of Thy glorious presence.

Be with her who presides over this great assembly; give her Thy divine wisdom, strengthen her with Thy might. Grant that her arm may be stretched forth with all the power that Thou hast given to her to lead in this glorious work and to unfold the banner of the cross before the eyes of the waiting world.

Bless the officers of this great organization, give to them all the wisdom that Thou knowest they need. Bless every soul here in the ranks of this great army. Bless all who walk along the dusty way of life attempting to lift the burdens from the shoulders of those who walk by their sides. We thank Thee, not only for those that stand here upon this earth, ready to do Thy service, but we thank Thee also for those who have passed beyond the vale from the church militant on earth to the church triumphant in glory. We place all our wants and all our needs and all our deficiencies in Thy hands. Bless those streams of will that are set heavenward; give them the mighty impetus of Thy divine blessing.

We ask these things in the name of Him who lived and suffered and died for each one here, Jesus Christ, Thy Son.

Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven; Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever and ever. AMEN.

Roll call of officers, vice-presidents, superintendents, and ex-officio members was made by the corresponding secretary, Miss Mary A. Woodbridge.

On motion, the chair appointed the following committee on credentials: Mrs. Buell, chairman, Miss Henderson, Texas; Miss Morris, Mo., and Mrs. Stevenson, Mass.

Announcements for local meetings followed.

MISS WILLARD—It took Denver to give us a daily paper out and out, I don't know that we ever had that before. It took Denver to get us up a program, free gratis for nothing. This program has set me thinking about our own programs. It took Denver Council to vote an allotment for an allowance of money for us. So if we were men in a convention we would say; "Three cheers for Denver!" but we are like the Indian, who said he said everything in his heart. We will say it in our hearts. However, we won't say much about Indians here, they are not popular in this locality.

Report of executive meetings of Wednesday and Thursday was given by the corresponding secretary. On motion it was accepted.

A delegate stated that there were many delegates struggling to get into the house.

MISS WILLARD—There is perhaps a way out of the difficulty:—if this were a men's convention I suppose they would have some blue coats here to clear the aisles, but that is not our way out of the difficulty. At the Unity church, corner Nineteenth and Broadway, at this hour, Lady Henry Somerset and Mrs. Hunt will speak, but no delegates can go under pains and penalties. Lady Somerset did this favor for us in Boston when the streets were thronged, and I think you will be better entertained there than here.

MISS WILLARD—The Unity church is crowded to overflow, and another church nearby will be opened, the Central Christian church, corner Sixteenth and Broadway.

"Guide Me, Oh, Thou Great Jehovah," was sung by the audience.

It was announced that at the second overflow meeting addresses would be made by Mrs. Hunt, and other ladies to be announced later.

The convention proceeded to the appointment of the following committees:

Finance—Mrs. Buell, chairman; Mrs. Purdum, Ohio, and Mrs. Abernathy, Tenn.

Publication—Mrs. Fannie H. Rastall and Miss Esther Pugh.

Courtesies—Mrs. Mary T. Burt, New York, chairman; Mrs. Benjamin, Michigan, and Mrs. Galliday, Mo.

MISS WILLARD—There are many whom we shall be glad to present to this audience and whom you will be glad to meet with the usual honor. They are good and true men and women, some of Denver, and Colorado delegates from other associations, and we have appointed this committee on courtesies so that they may give to the chair at the close of each session a list of names of such friends, that they may be duly presented to this convention. The chair would like to take up a dropped stitch by asking any delegate from an outside organization to come forward. We have here Mrs. Emery from the Workman's Association who will be present. I saw coming down the aisle Mother Stewart, that old tried leader. Three of our friends from the Indian Territory have been led to the platform, headed by Mrs. Stapler, that noble Cherokee woman.

Singing—Blest be the Tie that Binds.

MISS WILLARD—As an act of international courtesy, the Vice-President at Large of the Women's Christian Union and President of the British Women's Temperance Association, Lady Henry Somerset, will please take the chair during the reading of the President's Annual Address.

It is among those things that come to us when we are not looking for them, to receive from a little namesake this bunch of flowers, and from the Indian Territory, to which I went in 1881, this bunch from the hand of my Cherokee friend, Mrs. Jane Stapler, of Talequa, Indian Territory. Do not fear that I am going to inflict on you the full amount of the address that I have here, and which will be in the UNION SIGNAL DAILY, to be published and circulated throughout the audience this afternoon, and I have to say in recognition and thanks to my friends of the press, that they will give as copious extracts as the present exceedingly heated term in politics will permit, and as we do not belong to any very popular subdivision of the great map of political movements, we shall say, "small favors thankfully received, and larger ones in proportion."

(Annual Address, on page 3.)

On motion the Annual Address of the President was adopted.

The devotional exercises were next taken up, and were conducted by Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, National Superintendent of Evangelistic Work.

Singing—"Love Divine, all Love Excelling."
Contralto Solo—Miss Dorothy Howard—"Out of the Dark and Dreary Streets."

On motion the chair appointed the following Committee on Overflow Meetings: Rev. Anna Shaw, Miss Kinnear, Mrs. Bourne, and Mrs. Beck.

The Convention adjourned to meet at two o'clock p. m.

(Continued in next issue.)

Is practiced by many people who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate MANAGER.

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. RASTALL. All of Chicago.

ANNUAL ADDRESS

OF

FRANCES E. WILLARD, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

Nineteenth Convention, Denver, Colorado, Oct. 28—Nov. 2, 1892.

Beloved Comrades of the White Ribbon Army:

It has been stated by military experts that forty well-trained soldiers are able to resist ten thousand who have had no discipline. If the temperance army compared with the great army of the world is as small as this comparison between the figures forty and ten thousand would indicate, and no doubt it is, we must remember that those who have their hearts set as a flint, those whose eyes look straight on, and who have caught step one with another so that they march as an unbroken host, must in the nature of things, make mighty inroads on the great mobocracy of thoughtless, ignorant, careless opponents who, except when they are drinkers and sellers of drink, need but the arrest of thought to bring them to our ranks. It is for this reason that I regard the women's temperance movement as without a parallel and without a peer because it does not expect to win through any sleight of hand, it does not expect to surprise the enemy by skirmishes or night attacks, but in the strong daylight of reason, conscience, faith, it does expect to put to rout the armies of aliens—those aliens of appetite, ignorance and greed which form the only hope of whisky makers and beer politicians.

We are to encourage our hearts by the remembrance that the Master said "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," and though our work seems small when compared with the great world-work of the good; still, if it brings about the wondrous transformation from thoughtlessness to thoughtfulness, everything else that we desire must surely follow.

There are tens of thousands of women today who think themselves a little too good to be white-ribboners—a little too cultivated, perhaps a trifle too critical;—in short, "they do not see their way." They prefer to trip along in their trim shoes on the sidewalk with the better cared-for procession of the average well-to-do. But we, who have taken to the street and are marching along in the dust with the rank and file, sing many a time as we go forward in the difficult way, a song whose meaning is well described in the old Scotch rhyme:

"And ye'll tak' the byeway,
And I'll tak' the highway,
And I'll be in Scotland afore ye"

It has been well said:—

"How is a soldier made? Whence comes the soldier of a man? A lad taken out of your street, dressed in a soldier's uniform, fed on a soldier's rations, carrying a soldier's weapon and marching to a soldier's music is not a soldier; he is only a lad clothed, fed, armed, marched like a soldier. But the soldier in a man generated by fiercer processes, it is worried in by long marches, it is pressed in by long watches on the picket line, it is filtered in by the dews of night, it is washed in by the rains of heaven, it is starved in by half a biscuit a day, it is baked in by the fever in the hospital cot, it is blown in by shot and shell, it is thrust in by sabre and bayonet:—that is where the soldier comes from."

In the great spiritual army where the weapons are not carnal it is equally true that a soldier is made as well as born, and the white-ribbon host has as truly gone through the processes described as any patriot who ever exchanged the softness of home life for the rigors of the field. It is this discipline alone has made us comrades: it is the "slings of arrows of outrageous fortune" that have compressed the lines that might have wavered: it is the bivouac out under the dark skies of apathy, the steadfast watch maintained in the trenches of the long adverse campaign: it is the cannonade of criticism: it is the slow march retarded at every step by the ingenious attacks of an enemy unrelenting and that never sleeps:—all these have made us soldiers, and the touch of comradeship means more to many of us than the tie of kindred or the companionship of years. It is this that draws us across wide seas and wearisome stretches of land that we may stand face to face once more; may catch the glance of welcome and the light of loving smiles.

Life is full of compensations and the white-ribbon army in all nations knows already the compensation of a love stronger than death for our Divine Leader who has passed into the heavens but sheds forth His power upon the earth as steadily as falls His sunshine; for our divine cause, worthy of any sacrifice that we can make even unto death; and for each other, the sturdy veterans and radiant young recruits of one great patient army wherein each loves the other, "for the dangers she has passed."

It would seem as if the figures of the year are, on the whole depressing. The total product of beer for the revenue from April 30th, 1891, to the same date 1892, amounts to 31,475,000 barrels, a net increase of 1,000,453 barrels over the product of the former year, or a little less than one-half a barrel for every man, woman and child in the United States. On the principle that misery loves company we may recall the fact that England, with her thirty-seven millions of population, has a much larger drink bill this year than America with her sixty-three millions. But it is not upon figures that we base our hopes. We know the darkest hour is just before the dawn; we have learned not to expect too much success in our own lifetime, but just to keep "pegging away," building ourselves into that wondrous dyke made up of educated thought, purpose, and affection, that shall yet shut out the tawny, seething, foaming tide, not only from the land we love the best, but from every nation under heaven.

Thus saith the Lord: "Gather my saints together unto me. Those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."

The true reformer is the one who sits at the prow and sees only God. But evermore God works by means.

The brain has the hand as its instrument. The individual has an organized society as his most cogent weapon and most powerful ally. The hand can do but little without a tool through which it may employ and diversify its power: he who holds the strongest instrument and handles it most skillfully accomplishes the most. We women are more fortunate than we can at all comprehend in having at hand such an instrument as the W. C. T. U., to which we can carry our best inspirations and see them wrought into deeds, a warm home-center of progressive ideas and achievements. I cannot express to you my growing sense of the power that dwells in these groups of faithful and true women in every quarter of the world, animated by one spirit, attentive in mind, motherly in heart, helpful in hand, and hospitable in soul: ready to respond to every appeal that comes to them from the bugle notes of their great fireside camps where the Conventions plan the work of the year that lies ahead.

Looking out over the great world-picture where humanity struggles against the dragon in God's name, we see that a white banner, lifted in gentle hands, is at the very center of the onmoving force. "Our flag is there." Thank God.

In the last analysis we want what every church and philanthropic movement has wanted since the world began, and this is power. It is the one cry—"give us power." The engine is useless to the engineer until its valves are filled with steam. The telegraph is but so much dead metal until the electric flash makes it a thing of life. Even a human being without vitality is but so much avoirdupois. Perhaps all power is a unit. We cannot tell. Perhaps it flows out from that reservoir behind all life that we call God. At all events, until the splendid engine of the W. C. T. U. is filled with those manifestations of God in Jesus Christ, that we call "the Spirit's power," it stands idle on the track, no matter how well that track is ballasted, nor how strong the steel of its straight road. Power—we know what it is—we have had it—we have it still—we may have more of it just for the asking, we may have all of it that we will. God grant us power from on high—the giving of heaven's own steam into the engine, of Christ's own electric light of love into the telegraphic network of organization that we have spread over the whole world and most of all into your heart and mine. More than for any other object we meet here to concentrate thought, purpose, and affection in the consecration that evokes and brings down from heaven the power of God.

The will is the king-bolt of the faculties—the keystone in the arch of character—the engine that trains after it the remainder of what we suppose ourselves to be.

To hesitate is to be lost. We must make up "what we are pleased to call our minds," but we must set our wills as a switchman does his brake. The best and briefest formula was given us by our English leader, and came to her in a heavenly voice at the parting of the ways seven years ago when she resolved to be a Christian. "Act as if God were, and you shall know He is." We must begin by doing, that is the changeless law. Do His will and you shall know of the doctrine. A river is not judged by its shoals but by its current, and in like manner a life is not judged by its eddies of temptation but by its tendency, its direction, its goal; if our life is headed toward God and immortality people will know it, we shall know it, God will know it; and we must not be discouraged by any instance on our part of failure, if we fall we must just get up and try again. We are not here to float the float of faith but to fight the fight of faith.

The will is the final factor of our life. We can not make the weak excuse that we are unable to believe, it is our business to believe the best things we have heard and known—the things from which the best character has been evolved. Scientists, inventors, explorers all go forward by a working hypothesis: they lay down a certain plan of supposition and fill that in by action. The architect goes by his working plan in building; and the Christian goes by his, in building that noblest of all edifices—character. To my mind the whole primer of Christain living may be condensed into these words: "Act as if God were and you shall know He is." If force is the nearest approach we make to God in the material universe, may not force of will approach Him closest in the spiritual realm? The difference between a man and a mollusk is that one has resolute aim, and the other, for all we know, has aimless reverie. The German poet, Hoffman, pitifully said with his last breath, "We must then think of God also." Happy is he who early determines not to put God among the 'also's,' but to make Him the keystone of the arch. Often the most discursive and speculative minds are the very best at choosing, and so we must go out saying to them—'Choose ye this day whom ye will serve.'

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

"Why do not women open their great and successful societies to men?" is a question we begin to hear asked by the best and most liberal-minded among our brethren. The answer is that these organized movements are, as we think, God's great recruiting stations for the new war in which he is enrolling, drilling and disciplining. If men were at the front in these societies, as they would necessarily be if there at all, women would not develop so rapidly, or become so self-respecting and individual in character: they need to learn how to use the weapons with which the future is certain to equip them.

When men open the widest doors of all, those that lead to Municipal Council Hall, Congress and Parliament, and invite women to enter with them side by side, these temporary moulds will be quickly hewn from the then completed and majestic face of the New Republic,—but we hope not till then.

We work alone in order to become experts so that we can hold our own when we go into societies with men. That is the short of it. They would not have received us on terms of eqality if we had come to them before we could bring assorted minds and well-seasoned experience. We must first show power, for power is always respected whether it comes in the form of a cyclone or dewdrop, and generally, alas! in proportion to the announced method of its coming is the quota of respect accorded to it.

The great denominations have never classified women except as hewers of wood and drawers of water, and the same is true of some great missionary and temperance societies that could be named, because these movements like to utilize the ability of women but to keep the dimes and the distinctions to themselves.

DANGERS.

Two dangers confront our Christian workers, first: that they will have less spiritual; and secondly, that they will have less physical health as the years go on. The steady grind of their routine, the constant tendency to work at second rather than at first hand with those in need, in order that we may set forces going that shall eventually bring in a hundred helpers where but one now kneels beside the needy, this in itself tends towards spiritual lethargy: not that it ought or needs to do so, but because of the limitations of our minds and hearts. The unrelenting call of a work that grows so fast makes great demands upon physical as well as spiritual vigor; it is a wonder to me that more of us have not fallen under the awful spell of nervous prostration. Some one has described this visitation in terms so forcible that I have pondered them and set them here that you might do the same.

"Nervous prostration is as much to be dreaded as any disease which does not threaten speedy death. It is most treacherous, producing a condition more painful than pain, a weakness weaker than extreme fatigue, despondency more dejected than the lowest of low spirits, an instability of self-control destructive of confidence: making work, mental and physical, most distasteful to the once-energetic nature than to the constitutionally lazy: and yet the exterior aspect is one of health, and the only consolation the poor victim has who has thus foolishly mortgaged his future, is this: 'Oh, he is suffering from mere nervous prostration.' "

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

What we need beyond all things else is a crusade for total abstinence; there are still too many people among us who twang away on their one Paganini string saying:—"God made alcohol." They might say with just as much force God made the Devil. What we must do is to get them to let the Devil alone whether in the form of alchohol or any other. As temperance specialists it is our work to close as many mouths as possible from being the drains through which this king of poisons finds its way into the organisms of mankind, where it debases, disintegrates, destroys. In one year over thirty thousand White Cross pledges were ordered from our publishing house; I wish I knew how many total abstinence pledges had been sent for in any given year,—not so many I am afraid. The circulation of the pledge is falling into disuse for which we must all be sincerely sorry, but let us console ourselves by the certainty that the temperance tide is rising; the progress of inventions which require clear brains for their handling; the competition among manufacturers which makes it essential that steady hands shall work their factories and forges; the dangers of locomotion on land and sea which require clear heads to steer the engine and the ship; the splendid development of athletic sports and the constantly increasing practice of physical culture; the reducing of hygiene to a science, and sanitation to a public govermental department, the experiments of chemists, the verdicts of physicians; all these are mightier levers for lifting people out of the sodden quagmire of strong drink than all the pledge signing that has ever been sought or secured. It is this view of mighty forces arrayed to push the mightiest of reforms which must give us perpetual courage: we are the forty experts against ten thousand of our fellow beings, who, though all of them expert in other things, have not studied and practiced total abstinence. We are the torch bearers moving ahead of the column, but we must remember that the mass presses on us, by the slow but steady lift of the experiences and interest to which I have referred.

Still must we flash the torch aloft, but the great train is following, and the ear of faith and courage catches its far-off whistle and knows that it will soon come thundering along the line, bringing the great majority abreast of us who early struck into the forest of ignorance and prejudice and blazed the trees.

With a reiteration that may have seemed wearisome I have insisted for many years that our State Unions ought to petition their legislatures to build homes for men who are under the drink hallucination and to pass laws compelling the detention of drunkards within these friendly walls where work should be provided for them, and every effort made to give them back the self-control which they have as thoroughly lost as any wild, bewildered steed that runs amuck along the streets with the bit in his teeth and his driver overthrown. Nothing less than this will help us over the emergency of drunkenness in which we find ourselves so that the homes of the English-speaking world may not be transformed by the presence of a drunkard into what I have heard them called namely "small compacts of perdition." There is no outrage greater than the continued presence of a drunkard in the midst of a home. Not only on account of the incalculable misery that such a presence continually creates, but for the sake of future generations deteriorated by the awful inheritance of drunken parentage. If it were any other disease, the person manifesting the disgusting and terrifying symptoms of drunkenness would be speedily removed by the order of the state to a place prepared for him, and nothing but the heart-breaking familiarity that the centuries have wrought with this form of human misery, and its diabolical effects, holds the civilized world from rising en masse and placing the drunkard beyond the reach of the man who makes him drunk and beyond the power of cursing every home of which he is a part.

Just before I left England a report was published in the London papers of a meeting held by experts in the study of inebriates, presided over by Norman Kerr whose name has long been familiar to us. The Daily Telegraph has been publishing for some weeks a series of articles entitled "A National Shame" in which in trenchant terms it deals with the terrible increase of intemperance among women, of which it is believed that the causes are the grocer's license, under which they can send written orders for liquor describing it as "goods," or even designating it under the ghastly head of "ditto."

It was the opinion of the meeting to which I have referred that English legislators should be up and doing not something only but a great deal toward removing the foul blot of the drunkard in the home. One of the physicians said: "I have no hesitation in declaring that the habitual drunkard is a lunatic to all intents and purposes, and as a lunatic should be dealt with: on the mere ground of the preservation of health the inebriate should be given some chance of reforming." We have no business to go on enduring the presence of the drunkard, going on day by day in his drunkenness without let or hindrance and making of himself a focus for everything in the world that is bad.

All this we steadfastly believe, and I wish we might act accordingly by seeking the establishment of these industrial refuges for drunkards by which the homes of the nation should be relieved of their incumbency. But our great work is not only to remove the man from the liquor but most of all to remove the liquor from the man, and while we strive in varied ways for that great consummation, let us not commit the irretrievable mistake of forsaking the trail of the wolf for the trail of the rabbit; it is the liquor wolf we have gone forth to hunt and no power on earth can beguile us from the track of home's most deadly foe.

Years of strenuous study have brought me to the utterance of these words, and they are spoken with just as much of sisterly tenderness and good-will toward men who drink as I felt when holding my daily gospel meeting for them in Farwell Hall at the beginning of our work. I am sure that no white-ribboner feels other than unutterable pity and tender good-will toward those who are under this awful bondage; it is as much for their sake, as for the sake of the homes that we are organized to guard, that we urge these drastic measures; but we remind ourselves of that great hope set before us in the Gospel, upon which if these men would only seize, they would be saved. Our attitude towards them is well expressed in these gentle lines written by a famous woman:

"Ah! look thou largely, with lenient eyes,
On whatso' beside thee may creep and cling,
For the possible beauty that underlies
The passing phase of the meanest thing!

What if God's angels, whose waiting love
Beholdeth our pitiful life below,
From the holy height of their heaven above,
Could n't bear with the worm till the wings should [grow!"

WOMEN AND DRINK IN ENGLAND.

It is an astounding fact that 8,373 women have been arrested in the streets of London within the last year for being what the police call "drunk and disorderly." The worst of it is that this number does not at all reveal the actual enormity of the situation, for it is almost wholly the lower classes that these figures represent. There are regular sets of drinking women who club together and treat each other and do not allow themselves to fall into the hands of the police, while the secret drinking of the most aristocratic classes swells still further the pitiable army, wholly from the mother sex, who are giving themselves to the devil through the voluntary insanity of alcohol.

There could hardly be less brain applied to any subject than is evinced by the treatment of these women drinkers. Prison, fine and compulsion do very little to reform women who are subject to their compulsory code. The open selection of barmaids as the very best caterers between the rum-seller and his patron is to-day the foulest blot upon English civilization. I asked one of the noblest of English women how she accounted for the fact that it is no disgrace for a woman to be thus engaged, or to enter a dram-shop in England, for we saw them coming and going just as men do, and bowed our heads as we noticed how many had little babies in their arms. The English woman answered that to America from England went the best survivals in brain and brawn of womanhood in the pioneer days of the Republic: their lives, character, and habits set the keynote for all that is high, pure and true in the conduct of life. The customs that centered around them have not yet died out, but will most assuredly pass away with the enormous influx of foreign population, if the mother country does not itself reform in respect to the customs and habits of the English-speaking women represented throughout its vast empire. For the ocean touches all shores, and the customs tolerated in London are as sure to spread as any other form of pestilence, so that in our outcry and warfare against the abomiation of desolation represented by English women engaged in the liquor traffic we are but protecting American women from the same awful level of practice and opinion. The cry is now in England that the Government must establish refuges for its women drunkards.

Is practiced by many people who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate MANAGER.

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

The precautions with which our country has this year guarded the people from the ravages of Asiatic cholera have been peremptory in the extreme, and although we must ever deeply regret that a panic-stricken population behaved with inhumanity to helpless and unprotected travelers, we applaud the foresight that has thus guarded our shores. Is it unreasonable therefore, to hope that the same protecting care may some day be extended to a disease more devastating than the dreaded contagion —transmitted as it is by the laws of heredity and the miasmatic conditions of impure homes.

Last year a saloon-keeper made the attempt to import barmaids from London. Twenty-four hours after this announcement was made, telegrams and letters had gone to the white-ribboners urging them to concentrate against this new outrage upon woman. Their petitions were immediately drawn up and issued by Mrs. Mary T. Burt and her sturdy clan—22,000 women of the Empire State concentrated their efforts upon Albany and a law was passed prohibiting the hire of women in the dram-shops of the commonwealth.

SCIENTIFIC CURES FOR DRUNKENNESS.

Again I reiterate that the white-ribboners are among the most earnest helpers of such scientific cures as commend themselves by their results. We are held from the specific indorsement of any, because there are several so similar and among them there is such vigorous rivalry that we do not deem it wise to take sides. But we are continually helping men who are willing to try what these cures can effect in their individual cases.

It seems to me that it would be well to establish an institution of our own entirely superior in its motive to any of those just referred to, because its income over and above expenses would be used in the prosecution of our temperance work, and the entire management would be in the hands of competent women physicians who were philanthropists as well as specialists.

During the last year we have had recommended to us on excellent authority Dr. Susan Nivison, of New Jersey, whose plans will be brought before the Executive Committee.

REST ISLAND.

Our brother, John G. Woolley, is having marked success with his Gospel enterprise for reformed men. (The postoffice address is Rest Island, Minnesota.) The W. C. T. U. has from the first been his helper and friend, because we know him to be true and tried. Lady Henry Somerset did no greater service for us than when she helped to bring this mission magnificently before the public.

I feel free and glad to urge white-ribboners everywhere to do the utmost for this restful home, in which the powers of God working in the human soul and body are the only remedy proposed. Not that we object to scientific remedies; we think all should be tried, but we well know that this is as much the best of all as God in a man is better than man's medicine.

PROHIBITION.

There is no object that we white-ribboners so much desire to photograph upon the brain of every voter as the American saloon. It is a larger picture in this country than it can be in any other, because we are the largest of republics. The most portentous factor in American politics is the saloon. It has been recently stated that there are nine thousand saloons in New York City, and that on these saloons there are four thousand chattel mortgages, held almost wholly by twenty wholesale dealers, brewers and distillers. These saloons control the votes of forty thousand men, and these forty thousand constitute the balance of power, so that we have twenty men who can swing the vote of New York City; but as the city goes so goes the State; and as the State, so goes the nation. We want the saloon photographed with this shadow in the picture. Whoever speaks of it as an isolated institution, speaks ignorantly. It is an institution the character of which becomes each year more clearly defined, and one that, because of our form of government, exposes us more than any other people to political corruption. Because these things are true the temperance women of America have gone into politics, and have taken sides with the men who first, last, and all the time cast their ballots against candidates for office who are pledged to the saloon. We could not do less; if we could we would do more.

We found our faith in Prohibition upon no surface reasons but upon principles that are settled as gravitation. Every rational mind knows that in all controversies by which mankind has been advanced along the path of progress there are three mile-stones. The first is set up in the camp of the savage when the theory of personal rights is propounded, the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Some more progressive mind has a dim vision that these things ought to be and states it to his kinsmen, but his principle is laughed at and his practice trodden under foot. The second mile-stone is set in the midst of what we call society as contra-distinguished from a tribe: men have now become developed sufficiently to recognize the law of meum et tuum and to say "Thou shalt, and thou shalt not." But the only way in which they can establish this principle is by formulating it in law and punishing those by whom the law is disregarded. The third mile-stone is set up in the midst of a Christian State wherein development has reached such a point that in a fashion, rough, but recognizable, the Golden Rule prevails. Here government by law is exchanged for that mightiest of all governments—public sentiment. The moral tone of society declares by resistless common consent what the law demanded by fines and penalties. In this third stage the law has become written on the hearts of the people.

The path along which woman is daily moving to her destined goal is marked by these three mile-stones. The first ought to be shrouded in mourning, the second crowned with flowers, the third illumined by torches of victory. At first she furnished the spoils and booty of the tribe; in the second the law established her as a human being with certain inalienable rights, and is rapidly declaring that her rights shall be limited only by her powers; but the third mile-stone is even now outlined before us in its gleaming beauty, for the time is not far distant when it shall be as a tale that is told that artificial inequalities were ever permitted as between men and women. Dwelling in her heritage of rights, limited only by powers, the moral concensus of opinion among the people will be a law stronger than Bessemer steel, more impregnable than adamant.

Precisely through these stages we are passing in the evolution of the Prohibition movement; it is the changeless law for the education of the race—first barbarism in the use of drink, everybody making it and using it according to their stolid notions; next the liquor traffic segregated from all other forms of trade because its miasma harms all others and its necessary state is isolation, for the reason that mankind through the consequences they have reaped from its use have in the best survivals of the race become the foes of alcohol. Now the law deals with it, and says that it is not a commodity, it is not a producer or wealth, it is simply a form of investment, and a false form at that, for it gives no equivalent for value received, and that judged by its results it must be classed with other poisons, and its sale hedged round by the legal safeguards through which we are protected from the indiscriminate use of poisons as articles of commerce. But all the while the modern temperance movement is spending itself to so implant in every brain the arrest of thought that some day there shall be a concensus of opinion so resistless that no law shall be needed as a dyke to protect humanity against the inroads of intoxicating drink.

It is idle to say that the Prohibition movement is not one of continual progress. We admit that we have passed the stage of enthusiasm and are now advancing with the sturdy steps of veterans. The province of Manitoba by a plebiscite has recently declared by a large majority in favor of prohibition, and its next legislature is practically certain to pass a law to that effect. South Carolina has shown its colors in similar fashion, though by a different method, and is likely to be the next state falling into line for freedom from the sway of the saloon.

Well has it been said: famine has killed its thousands, pestilence its tens of thousands, and war its hundreds of thousands: for famine we have great ship loads of grain, for pestilence a rigid quarantine, for war Triple Alliances and gatling guns—but for intemperance we have legalized saloons at every street corner.

The presidential campaign will soon be over, and from the legislators of 1893 we think there is much to hope. The great danger is as always when sentiment has been made and is crystalizing into conviction and ballots, that a compromise will be foisted upon the temperance people. The Royal Commission appointed in Canada to investigate the liquor traffic furnishes a salient illustration of such compromise. The temperance people by immense exertions had gathered up one of the largest petitions known in the Dominion asking for prohibition, that was the bread for which they were hungering, but Parliament gave them the stone of a so-called Royal Commission to investigate the liquor traffic, but which was really what it has often been called—"A committee for the prevention of cruelty to saloon-keepers." In like manner the temperance people of the United States will be urged to accept the nationalizing of the traffic as a compromise, because prohibition is the direst nightmare and the waking dread of the brewer and distiller.

So far as ascertained no white-ribboner has been deflected in her onward march by the cry of nationalism. We have studied the outcome in Sweden and Norway, we do not deny that some good results have been realized since those terrible days when if a man were seen rolling in the streets of Gothenburg, the only question concerning him was whether he was rolling from too much drink or too little food! But the conditions in the Scandinavian peninsula and in the Great Republic are altogether different. We have already tested prohibition for well nigh half a century and we do not propose such a right-about-face as shall make the government itself a monopolist in alcoholic drinks. We are experts and not A B C Darians; we know that prohibition does more to arrest drunkenness, wife-beating and murder than any other one law on our statute books. We know that prohibition cities have more empty jails and fewer locked up criminals in proportion to their population than any other cities. We know that when women have the ballot they help to choose such officers in a State and municipality as will enforce the law.

Concerning prohibition by woman's ballot a noted British writer who has widely observed the conditions of our American life, gives the following clear-cut statement of opinion as he studied it in Kansas.

"The Kansas people argue that if you were told that there existed in some ideal country, two great sections of a race, the members of the one often gross, often vicious, often given to loud talking, to swearing, to drinking, spitting, chewing, not infrequently corrupt: those of the other branch mild, kind, quiet, pure, devout, with none of the habitual vices of the first named State and if you were also told that one of these branches was alone to elect rulers and to govern, you would at once say: "Tell us where this happy country is that basks in the rule of such a God-like people." "Stop a minute," says your informant, "it is the creatures that I described first, it is the men who rule, the others are only women, poor silly fools, imperfect men, I assure you, nothing more."

Kansas Republicans have come out nobly for a constitutional amendment that shall give women the full ballot. That means prohibition universally enforced. May the movement become general. If so it will be warmly supported by the W. C. T. U.

WYOMING.

The question is often asked, Why has not Wyoming, the only free state in the world, where women have every legal privilege enjoyed by men—why has not Wyoming a prohibitory law? The answer is not far to seek. Wyoming is a mountainous State, most of whose towns are isolated from railroads, and whose population is transient, as must be the case when mining and grazing are the two chief employments. No two classes of the population are so little likely to hear a voice behind them saying "move on" in reform work, as are these two, (the isolated and the transient), hence Wyoming's population lacks cohesion and esprit de corps, and has not yet asserted itself along religious or philanthropic lines; these naturally coming later than the lines of power indicated by political parties and financial trusts. A roving and well-nigh inaccessible population furnishes the most discouraging field to the reformer. Then we must remember that in the population of Wyoming, women form but one-fifth; the temperance movement has had no such leadership and attention as it has received in older States, nor, I am frank to say, as it should have received from us. Wyoming has been urged as a strategic position on the National W. C. T. U., year after year; and it is my earnest hope that on this western soil and in this inspiring atmosphere we may gain a truer rapport with our sisters in the gigantic young commonwealths that have sprung up amid the clear air of the mountains, and that we may solemnly declare that "the strength of the hills is His also," who sent forth our crusade mothers to the peaceful war.

It is also true that the Republican party gave women the ballot in Wyoming; all honor to them for this action. And President Harrison signed the bill establishing statehood: all honor to him, a conservative Presbyterian elder, for taking this position. Women are above all things grateful, and in Wyoming they naturally stand by the great political organization to which they owe their freedom. But unhappily that organization is committed to high license, as its favorite method of handling the liquor traffic, hence high license prevails and curses the beautiful free State. But it will not always be, nor need it be so, long. A thorough organization of the women involves the co-operation of the best men; the women of Wyoming have become a proverb by reason of their opposition to candidates of known impurity of life, so that their moral efficiency in that State stands far higher than that of women in any other of equally heterogeneous and transitory population. With this as a solid basis on which to build, be it ours to help the women of Wyoming to realize and act so that the protection of their homes shall be "the first concern of their good government."

POLITICS.

The rationale of the recruiting process that adds each year to the political contingent of the prohibition movement; (but, alas, adds not largely,) is illustrated by an incident that recently occurred in a Massachusetts High School, where a vote was taken as to the candidates for Governor. In the room where the oldest boys were gathered many stood up for Republican and a goodly number for the Democratic candidate, but one arose to declare himself a Prohibitionist. When I thanked this boy, who is a young friend of mine, for acting as he did, he said—"And there was another boy who would have stood up if he had not thought he would be all alone." The Prohibition army is made up of men who have stood up for their principles without turning their heads on a pivot to look round and see whether anybody else stood up or not; they are the band of forty opposed to the ten thousand, even as are we their friends and allies. The question is only a question of time; the battering-ram is getting in its work on the mossy ramparts of the old political fortress, its steady thump, thump, thump, will never cease until a breach is made in those frowning walls, and a temperance Joshua heads the imperial guard as it leaps over the ramparts and takes possession of the guns of power.

"After all, character is the jewel that God and the angels are seeking on this planet."

It is glorious to be in the minority when it is right, and infamous to be in the majority when it is wrong.

One of our most brilliant leaders, who as much as any other, traverses the country, said to me in a private letter recently:

"I think in steady purpose and method that reaches out into the future, the W. C. T. U. is stronger to-day than ever. This is shown by plans, investments and organizations that mean an outlook on the work yet to be done, rather than living on the glories of the past. The State Conventions which I attended this year were larger and better than those of other years. The political campaign touches our organization very lightly in 1892. Our women are interested and intelligent upon the situation, but not to the degree that they were in 1884 and 1888. I am at a loss to account for some things I see and others that I do not see."

Why is there so little political enthusiasm? Because a great people can be stirred only by a great cause. Tennyson said that every horse on the highway now-a-days pounded out by its very trot the word, "Property, property, property." In our own land commercialism has held its dollars so close to the average voter's eyes that he seems absolutely hypnotized. No wonder the campaign interests chiefly those who have or who want office. Meanwhile the liquor power stands at the middle of the see-saw and adds the balance of its campaign subscription wherever in either of the two parties, that or its allies, its local interests lead it to deem investments most advantageous to its ascendency.

I do not know how it may be with you, beloved sisters, but for myself I am more than ever a Christian politician. It is a thorny path. Politics is the science of God's goodness applied to man's needs on public lines, and in the most practical manner. Every political party is as good as it dares be. No good—no positive advance has ever been rendered by abusing any party—or any political leader. The more we can keep our principles clean and free from the dross of personalities, the better we shall succeed. I firmly believe it to be our duty, not only not to speak ill, but to say all the good we can of our opponents. My own course has been severely criticised by those whom I respect and love, because at the beginning of the present presidential campaign I expressed (in my capacity of editor of the Union Signal) my honest opinion of the good qualities of the candidates, and especially mentioned that I was glad Mr. Harrison had secured the nomination as against Mr. Blaine, not because I, as a politician, felt an interest in either of these men, but because I believed it was an unworthy political trick to try to side-track President Harrison and bring forward Mr. Blaine after the public assurances the latter had given that he was not a candidate. The record presented by the four men now in the presidential race has been often commented upon in our columns, and it did not seem to me to be necessary in that article to recount it. For this I suffered the criticism of my friends, but it is "a part of the price," and I am as much as ever determined never to be so much of a partisan that I cannot speak with kindness and good-will of any manly quality possessed by any candidate. While my honest fealty is given to General Bidwell and Rev. J. B. Cranfil—our own ticket—by which I mean the ticket to which the white-ribboners "lend their influence," (having neither money nor ballots to lend,) I can still rejoice in the strong help given to the cause of Civil Service Reform by the Democratic candidate, while I grieve to learn, since my arrival, of his subservience to the tigers of Tammany Hall, and I remember proudly as a patriot the clean, personal record of the present President, while I bemoan his use of wine, and the fact that he can by no means return to power without the liquor vote. None of us, at this time, when the shadow of a great bereavement hangs over the head of our chief Magistrate, should fail to tender him our sympathy and prayers. Let us do our best to brighten the turbid stream of politics—to plant along its bank sweet flowers and trees whose leaves shall be for the healing of the nations. Women are slowly and surely coming to their own. Their own is to work side by side with men everywhere, for the place in which a pure woman may not work, no man should ever enter. In the illimitable future I see a long avenue, stately and fair in which through every line of life the two shall go together, blessing and blessed.

No more remarkable proof has been given in the annals of our time of the realization that the obligation for pure morals rests on man and woman equally, than is to be found in the political history of Sir Charles Dilke. Probably England has not had a more brilliant statesman in this era than was the leading member of the Liberal Cabinet, who did much to give larger liberty to England, but this noble record is to-day no offset to the fact that he has been co-respondent in one of the most odious divorce cases of this century. In the eyes of a majority of his countrymen, past services count as nothing before his present disgrace. When Gladstone on the eve of his return to power, was gathering his forces, it was feared by some that the exigencies of the situation and the great capability of the ex-minister might cause the coming Premier to waver as to the line of conduct which he had taken with regard to Charles Stuart Parnell, and that he would weaken on the lines he had then so admirably laid down. The Women's Liberal Federation was then in council; the whisper of such possibility was heard among its members, when in an instant a petition was set on foot which left no roam for doubt that the women on whose work many Liberal candidates were depending, would make it impossible for any quarter to be given to one who had proved himself an enemy to all the interests they held most dear. They had learned at least this much that in this cause of purity "when one woman suffers, all the members suffer with her." The effect of this petition was instantaneous; all doubt was dispelled by an incisive reply from Mr. Gladstone, and the name of Sir Charles Dilke is conspicuous by its absence from the newly formed Cabinet. The present English Government is wise enough to read the signs of these times, and Parnell, the greatest party leader of our day, the man to whom at least Ireland owes as great a debt of gratitude as to any of her brilliant patriots, lost the proud position of "uncrowned king" of Ireland, when final success was just before him — because a woman's honor suffered through him, and his fame could not be counted beside the loss of her fair name. With such a record it would have beem impossible even to have approached the country with a suggestion in favor of giving office to Sir Charles Dilke. This grievous political calamity, and this ruin of personal character is not without a deep significance; for let it be remembered that no cause, however great can afford to choose men as its expounders whose private life is not as spotless as the principles for which they publicly contend, and any party that will place men before principles, and adhere to a leader, because he has been a leader, rather than seek a righteous man because he is righteous, will invite shipwreck, desertion and destruction. Sir Charles Dilke was returned to Parliament by the votes of men who had been as low in moral status as any in Great Britain, for only such would have given him their suffrages. He had for some years made himself popular among them by espousing the labor cause. But no greater calamity can befall any party than in recognizing the leadship of any man whose name is erased from the records of the pure and good. There is probably not a statesman in England of more brilliant powers than Sir Charles Dilke, nor one whose views on all public questions, save the mighty question of purity, are more consonant with those of Lady Henry Somerset, but because of his defection and gross disloyalty to woman, she stood up against him on their behalf in the presence of a howling mob of coal miners, ready to utter her protest had they been civilized enough to listen. God grant that should a like calamity fall upon any political party in America, its leader shall not escape a like denunciation from lips as pure as hers.

Is practiced by many people who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate MANAGER.

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

THE WOMAN QUESTION.

Statisticians report that during the year 1890 there were well nigh 4,000 fewer marriages in France than in 1889. Another companion statement is that in the same year there were over 5,000 divorces in the same country. But be it remembered there is no woman question in France. This is a coincidence that should attract the careful study of certain among our leading men who oppose the advancement of women to the status of individuality as if this most natural and reasonable degree of progress must involve the extinguishment of every fireside hearth.

THE RECENT NATIONAL CENSUS

has facts enough to furnish forth the Temperance, Labor and Suffrage Reforms for the next decade. I wrote recently to the Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, asking him to give me the number of women of foreign and of native birth in the United States. From A. F. Childs, Acting Superintendent of the Census came the following reply:

Dear Madam—In response to your request of the 16th instant to Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, which has been referred to this office for reply, I beg leave to state that the number of females of foreign birth in the United States is four million, one hundred eighty-two thousand, four hundred seventeen (4,182,417,) and the number of females of native birth, twenty-six million, three hundred seventy-one thousand, nine hundred fifty-three, (26,371,953,) as determined by the first detailed count of the returns made under the Eleventh Census. Very respectfully,

A. F. CHILDS,
Active Superintendent of Census.

To my mind these figures are the ultimatum of statistics in our favor because they show that in the Republic, let it be repeated a thousand and a thousand times, the proportion of native to foreign born women is as six to one. We talk about the decadence of the national spirit, the outcrop in our legislation of foreign principles and purposes, the practical sway exerted by nations thousands of miles away upon the politics of city, state and nation,—we lament this, and cry out despairingly, "Who shall show us any good?" but all the while we have in America a reserve force of native brain, opinion, education, patriotism, and we have neither the wisdom nor the statesmanship to utilize this mighty mass of power.

In view of the exigencies of politics, the degeneracy of municipal government, the debauching of the ballot box, conventions of men meet, discuss, resolve and adjourn, but all the while they had a remedy thoroughly practicable and reasonable within their easy grasp. Their obliquity of vision reminds us of these famous lines:

"Oh, ship ahoy,' rang out the cry
'Oh, give us water or we die.'
A voice came o'er the waters far
'Just drop your bucket where you are.'"

And then they dipped and drank their fill
Of water fresh from mead and hill.
And then they knew they sailed upon
The broad breast of the Amazon."

To-day in the homes of America, among its teachers and its working women are the ballots for which our purblind statesmen imagine themselves to be looking; to-day the captains on the ship of state crying out for help needs but to lay to heart the poet's words "Just drop your bucket where you are."

The W. C. T. U. was originally founded by the inspiration given to some few brave women to take up arms against the drink. That is a splendid Genesis, to be sure, but it is only a Genesis. If you want to go on to the full revelation you must not stop with Genesis. You must go on till you have the whole message, the complete revelation, the Gospel itself. Now in our cause the movement against the saloon was the Genesis, and the first formation of that W. C. T. U. was the Exodus. But we did not cross Jordan until we proclaimed the right of women to vote, and we shall not enter into the Promised Land to possess it until the full right of women to full citizenship is fully recognized in every State in our land and in the Federal Government. The more I reflect upon the world, and the way in which its affairs are managed, the more I see that the right to vote in a democratic age is an acknowledgment by the States of the value of the individual, a recognition by the States of the right of the citizen to have an opinion and a right to tender it for the guidance of her fellow citizens whenever the occasion arises. The voteless adult is no where, whose rights, whose individuality, whose common nature even, are all held by sufferance, permitted rather than recognized, and as a consequence, minimized beyond endurance. But we all know that anything that minimizes the self respect of any class is an offense and injury to that class. Women are never treated as if they were citizens except in bearing liabilities, paying taxes, and suffering the mischief which mismanagement brings upon the community. If we are ever to save the State, we must enfranchise the sex which at this moment has to bear the most painful burdens imposed by nature upon humanity, and which is much more acclimatised to self sacrifice for others than the sex which at present monopolizes the franchise. What lies at the root of everything? Give us the vote, that we may be recognized as if we were capable citizens. Give us the vote, in order that we may help in purifying politics, which at present can hardly be said to be so ideally pure that you can afford to refuse a helping hand. Give us the vote, in order that we may use it, and in using it exercise ourselves in the discharge of responsible duties, in the administration of affairs which form so large a part of the realms of most men. They accuse us of frivolity, but in the same breath deny us serious and responsible duties which we are eager to attempt. They sneer at us as unpractical, and at the same time shut us out of the school of practicability which is opened in every legislature, and then when they have endeavored to destroy in our minds the very conception of patriotism and enthusiasm, they marvel that the boys whom women bear and rear, do not dedicate themselves with enthusiasm to the unpaid service of their fellow men. For the mother is the level which measures the rise of the rate of progress of the race. What men make their mothers to-day they will make their sons to-morrow. If ever there was a sacred cause which strikes at the root of the secret sorrows of the world it is this which claims for women all the privileges and all the duties and all the rights of citizenship. We are not mere foolish women clamoring for they know not what, we are humble-minded, but in dead earnest. We do not propose for the elevation and protection of women, any mere spic and span scheme of our own invention. We have no such presumption. We have a much more simple and direct clue to the mystery of progress. We watch you to see what you consider indispensable for your own defense, for your own amelioration, and as we know that we are weaker and in many respects more backward than men, so much the more do we feel the necessity of demanding for the protection and development of woman the weak, at least all the political privileges which are regarded as indispensable for the protection and development of man the strong. For our own sake we claim the suffrage as an indefeasable human right. The heir to the ages should not be defrauded of her birthright by any new Salic Laws of the male monopolist and usurper. We do not ask this with bated breath and whispering sycophancy—we claim it as our natural right. We are human, and we ought to be treated as such. And whenever human society finds out that all of its affairs are really affairs of the family, it will learn that they should be managed not by one sex, but by two. The segregation of the sexes is an offense against nature's first law. The great word of the coming century is the career open to all that are capable, even if they are women. We make no limitations other than those imposed by nature, which are much too inexorable to need reinforcing by man-made legislation. We do not ask that women should do what they cannot do. If they cannot, that ends the controversy. But there must be no a priori masculine decision as to what women can or cannot do. They must be allowed to put their capacity to the test, nor must the gate of the testing-house in State or in Church be barred against the entry of any candidate for trial, even if she be a woman. What we want is the recognition of the fact that there should be no more discrimination against a sex than there is against a sect. There is, indeed, more to be said in favor of religious persecution than against female disability. If you plied the rack vigorously, the heretic would sometimes undergo compulsory conversion to the creed of the persecutor. But no amount of evil disabilities inflicted upon woman can, in the nature of things, make them anything else but women. Therefore, we claim the Woman's Ballot, as one of the most important objects for which we are working; indeed it includes prohibition and it includes everything else that is worth having. They are but corollaries and deductions from the right to vote. The woman's vote is needed, first, for the woman herself, for self-respect is permanently impaired when you tell any class of persons that they are, as it were, born under an irrevocable curse which renders their opinions valueless to the State. But it is needed, secondly, for the man. It is not good for man to be alone in Church and in State, any more than in the family. Man deteriorates when deprived of the constant alliance and co-operation of women.

Imagine how idiotic we should think it to confer the whole government of the world upon women and only women. They would not be so brutal but they would be just as mistaken as men. The half is less than the whole, whether the half is the male half or the female half, and if each is to do its best it must be joined to its natural complement. It has been said that the best gauge of the civilization of any society is the estimate it has of its women. Hence the women's vote which would instantly and automatically raise the value of every man in the Republic, would tend to raise the standard of our civilization, and so, if woman's suffrage is a necessity for the woman and for the man, it is no less a necessity for the state as a whole. It is not enough that women should be home makers, but they must make the world itself a larger home. But to this end we must first of all set them at liberty. If we look over the world we find that most of the duties of the household, which were formerly vested almost entirely in the woman are now interfered with at every turn by local or state or national legislature and administrations from which women are zealously excluded. This is the case in the great province of education. The education laws are framed by men, and administered by men, although necessity compels the employment of many women as teachers. Sanitation laws are all framed and administered by men, even the laws of female labor which must restrict at every turn the liberty of the adult American woman are framed by the legislatures in which no woman sits, elected by voters not one of whom is a woman. It is the same with the question of the time when our children shall begin to labor, that also lies no longer in our hands. So far as the state is concerned, there has been for the last hundred years, and more especially for the last twenty-five, a steady, stealthy usurpation by the exclusively male sex of many of the privileges and perogatives that were once almost exclusively woman's. To demand the vote is therefore no monstrous piece of unregulated female ambition, it is the only way we can re-assert in the sphere into which so many of our household affairs are being removed, the rightful influences which we exercised in the home. The home was once almost a world apart in which the outside state interfered but little. In that home woman was queen. Now that kingdom has been invaded, her crown despoiled, her very children are taken possession of by the state. These changes were inevitable. With the progress of civilization the claims of society grow, the domain of the unlimited freedom of individual relationship contracts. But woman, the dethroned queen, demands and has a right to demand that her position of equal authority in the home be recognized in the state, and that whenever the law interferes with the independence, the liberty, the children, or the property of a woman, she shall have as much right as men to be consulted at the ballot-box before that law goes into force.

I object to the fatuity that sets the woman who would 'mother' a State, a Nation, or a race, over against the one who mothers her own offspring, as if the former lacked the motherly nature and character. Any one broad minded enough to enquire into the experience of history, and cosmopolitan enough to generalise therefrom, knows that there is no real antagonism between women nobly famous and women heroically obscure.

Men give the ballot to unmarried women and to widows: at most they give it to women who are rate-payers. But when they do so, they strike a direct blow against their own theories, and begin to hew down the very altar of marriage. I hold that the woman who has given sons and daughters to the state should be the first as she is the trustiest to have the ballot.

We take religion as a working hypothesis, let us take the woman of the future in the same way. She is already here and "speaks for herself" like John Alden—like him she does so in melodious phrase.

I believe in married hands and heads as well as married hearts; the world aches for them. Women must apply the serious mindedness of men to the problem of their own elevation. Imagine the chaos that would result from changing the elliptical form of the earth's orbit to a circle, but I doubt whether such a calamity would be greater than has been wrought throughout the centuries by the compression of the ellipse which was the natural form of woman's waist into the circle. Scientific studies alone will lift women out of the ignorance and follies that now make them slaves of "the mode"—whatever it may be and give us the depressing spectacle of deformed waists and dress-skirts trailing on the filthy streets.

Who shall roll away the stone from the tomb of prejudice and let out the Redeemer of Progress? Women cannot do this alone; they cannot ignore men any more than men can ignore women. So far as the stone has been rolled away, men have had a great deal to do with the rolling.

The sturdy shoulders of the best men are to-day set against every stone that shuts in the true and gentle comrades whom God gave to be helpmates unto them, and to-morrow men shall come with shouts of rejoicing, bearing from the last sepulchre the latest liberated entombed by them and by them set free.

WOMAN'S ECCLESIASTICAL PROGRESS.

No year has witnessed more rapid progress towards the emancipation of women in pulpit and pew. The General Conference of the M. E. Church took such action as will certainly result within a few years in the admission of women to the highest councils. The Methodist Protestant Church admitted four women delegates and agreed that women should, hereafter, be eligible to its chief court. The Cumberland Presbyterian Church voted to admit women as ruling elders, although there was a very lively discussion in the course of which a good deacon declared that it was a bitter pill, but that he "had no recourse but to swallow it." The United Presbyterian Church admitted a woman to speak before its highest Sanhedrin, and the conservative Presbyterian Church took the preliminary step toward providing for women deaconesses.

These are but the more salient features of the steady advance in church circles which keeps step with the equally steady advance in governmental circles, both of these being but thermometers of the great change of climate in the educational and industrial world so far as women are concerned: for a stored brain and a stored purse are the keys that will as surely open the whole world to women as they have opened it to men.

Seventeen churches are now built in the United States each day, two-thirds of their members are women and they will come into their kingdom by that steady evolution whose text book is the Bible and whose culmination the Kingdom of Heaven. Well sings our last living Laureate of America, Oliver Wendell Holmes:

Would that the heart of woman warmed our creeds?
Not from the sad eyed hermit's lonely cell,
Not from the conclave where the holy men
Glare on each other, as with angry eyes
They battle for God's glory and their own,
Till, sick of wordy strife, a show of hands
Fixes the faith of ages yet unborn—
Ah, not for these the listening soul can hear
The Father's voice that speaks itself divine!
Love must be still our Master: till we learn
What he can teach us of a woman's heart,
We know not His whose love embraces all.

LABOR.

Cowper said describing a humble cottage in the England of his day, "Content, though mean." The true poet of this age would rather say: "Not mean, and of a noble discontent."

The two hands are a picture of the contending forces of capital and labor. The left, less skilled, more choice, served often by its fellows, and decked with rings; the right, forceful, ingenious, busy, unadorned. Only by bringing them together can harmony be had and a full day's toil accomplished. If they contend, they work each other's ruin; if they combine, they reach each one its utmost. Met for work and clasped in prayer, these hands of capital and labor shall bring that social compact which it is their office to develop and defend, up to its best estate. Fighting each other, they will but mar and finally destroy the social fabric—and the left hand of capital will first give away under the pitiless blows of labor's strong right hand.

The word co-education constantly takes a wider meaning. As related to the education of young women, it is a fact accomplished, but the co-education of mind and hand is now a living issue among leaders. The words of the wise thinkers are becoming the works of the practical doers. Carlyle said long ago that "the idle man is a monster;" Rousseau declared that "rich or poor, strong or weak, every idle citizen is a knave." It will hardly be another generation until all education will be based upon the training of the hand, and not to know some useful trade or art will be to confess oneself below the pauper-line in intellect. There are few objects more pitiful than the graduate from college who can turn his hand to no useful pursuit. The cunning of the human hand has wrought all the marvels of material civilization, by it man is more widely separated from the brutes than by any other member. In a high sense these words of a great philosopher must appeal to all. In order "to know the truth it is necessary to do the truth." Balance of character which is its highest culmination, cannot be adequately reached until mind, heart and hand, that splendid trinity, become co-ordinate and move as smoothly as the wheels of the great Corliss engine.

He who is anointed with God's oil "to wrestle not to reign," has gained "the better part."

Some regard it as a misfortune that this has been a year unparalleled in our country in respect to strikes, lockouts, riots, indeed of every symptom that can confirm the truth of a mighty and growing unrest in the will and purpose of the masses. To me these symptoms are most hopeful. If disease is in the body politic by all means let it come to the surface; the poorest physician among us knows that no outward application can cure the difficulty, only a blood medicine will reach it, for the difficulty is organic and deep-seated as nature itself. The failure of severe measures is the precursor of more gentle and reasonable treatment of the disease. In England, they have, in one particular at least, gone further than we toward a solution of the problem; their boards of conciliation, made up of employés chosen by their fellows and employers in equal numbers, have been able to settle countless disputes without their ever getting to the public at all, and when conciliation fails there stands the board of arbitration, made up of three, one chosen by the employer, one by the employés, and these choosing a third; the decision of these three to be final. If this simple method could but be enacted as the required legal method of settling disputes we should have gone a long way toward the adjustment of the mightiest difficulty in the material forces of civilization. It is a most hopeful fact that the president of one of our largest consolidated railway combinations declares that only by profit-sharing can strikes be prevented; the employé must feel that he owns part of the road, that he may own all that he will by steadfast industry. Women are peaceable by nature and practice. I sometimes

Is practiced by many people ... cles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. it is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate MANAGER.

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.: Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

wonder if our department of peace and arbitration might not be more of a felt factor in these great emergencies. We sent our gently expressed protest to the leaders of capital and labor in the great Homestead war, but the pope's bull fired off at a comet had not less efficiency. If this department would put in circulation a petition to Congress and the State legislatures urging that laws be so framed as to require these boards of reconciliation and arbitration, the White Ribbons might bring their flag of truce on many a field where wrathful men contend in strife that promises to reach ere long the full dimensions of civil war.

In England the Labor Question is more simple than with us, because the sturdy working class is made up of native-born men and women who devotedly love the land of their birth, and only wish to see it become more equal in its justice toward all its sons and daughters. The infinite patience of the poor in England is one of the best proofs that human nature has in it something divine, and no lover of his kind can help believing that such steadfast devotion to country and romantic loyalty to old traditions and relationships, shall be ere long rewarded through the peaceful revolution at the ballot-box, by which that glorious land shall become in form, what it is in fact fast becoming—the greatest of republics.

One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the interest taken by men and women of the highest opportunity in England in the progressive movements of the working classes. Lord Rosebery spoke recently at the opening of a new Polytechnic Institute in London, on the dignity of manual labor, and expressed his rejoicing at the decline of prejudice against hand-work. He ranked the artizan above the clerk, saying that he earned more, had a better future be-fore him, and that it was a proud thing for England that she was able to say that to-day, beside the first peer of the realm there sits in the London County Council a working man; that the same is true in the Government offices; that a working man is a minister in Gladstone's cabinet; and that in the House of Commons there are half a dozen already members. No career is now closed to the artizan. The key-note of the future will be the yoking of head and hand-work, and those who now seek starvation in the from of clerkships, as Lord Roseberry said, will find that the delicate white hand is by no means so sure to waive the flag of success and the laurel of achievement as the strong, hard hand of the builder, the mechanic, the engineer.

The outcome of all this education is sure to be the rehabilitation of labor, and I fully believe those are now living who will feel disgraced if they have not the power ingeniously to set themselves to some handicraft and prove by their results the skill they have attained. In a socialistic condition, union between head and hand-work will be the chief corner stone.

In Glasgow, Scotland, municipal socialism is a success so far as tried. No city has a better supply of water, and the works are controlled and owned by the citizens. The manufacture and supply of gas, the power of generating and supplying electricity, public markets, and ere long street railways, which are already the property of the municipality, will be controlled and worked for the benefit of the citizens.

The picture of each man with an umbrella bumping along the street in the rain, to the discomfiture of every other man's hat and every woman's bonnet, is Edward Bellamy's ingenious emblem of our present civilization. Meanwhile he says that the municipal authorities ought to spread an umbrella for the whole populace by an attachment that should draw out in time of storm, and do this literally while by "pooling our issues" we should ensure in return for honest toil, food, clothes and shelter to every human being

But while I am heart and soul in sympathy with every movement for the uplifting of labor, even when that movement may not be so "wise and well considered" as our Republican friends desire their temperance movements to be (?) and while I see far more in the question than temperance itself involves, which once I did not see, it remains true that three-fourths of the whole labor question is summed up in the following:

"Where are our carriages?" said an anarchist, as some capitalists drove by.

"Why," replied a red-nosed follower, "to tell you the truth, a saloon-keeper is yonder riding in mine."

The labor people are among our truest patriots. As a class they do not deserve to be looked upon as a herd of foreigners. Appealing to them as one patriot to another, I would say, and I hope that every White Ribboner will join in the chorus,

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
He never to himself hath said,
Drink blights and blasts my native land."

Or, if not my "native" land, that dear adopted country that has given me my best possibilities of manhood.

It is natural for Prohibitionists to say as they do with sufficient frequency, that the labor people and ourselves can never act in harmony; but it is also well to remember that no saloon-keeper is allowed to join the Knights of Labor, that no word in favor of the traffic has ever been secured from any Labor Society yet in any country; and as the last straw on the surface of the rising tide, be it often repeated among us that the great Labor Congress that met in Glasgow in September, 1892, after having received a large delegation from the most notable of the Scottish Temperance Societies, and listened to a memorial offered by it, refused next day to receive or listen to a reply to that Memorial presented by the leading brewers and liquor dealers of the city. We are in a great hour and a crisis momentous to humanity. I hold that he or she who does not in these crucial days make for harmony of action among reformers, writes a record thereby which posterity will cover with infamy, and which will rankle in the hearts of those who promote discord rather than unity, deeper than any other wounds their lives have known.

Upon the earliest flags of the Revolutionary War we find the words, "Unite or die." Well might they be inscribed on the flags of the three great armies now moving with more certain tread than ever hitherto toward a common point of attack upon the plain of that great battle which shall close and consecrate and crown the twentieth century. The Temperance Army, the Labor Army, the Women's Suffrage Army must "unite or die."

The difficult point in the whole controversy is this: capitalists can combine to say that they will not give work to anybody who belongs to a labor association. But this is precisely equivalent to saying that capital declines to give employment to any laborers who are able to utilize the power of association in defense of wages: but this power of association is the only power that labor has; when you take it away you have reduced labor to the grade of serfs, and in every country except a republic you can hold it in that condition perpetually.

Yet every one of these laborers has a vote and their highest wisdom will be to combine their ballots;—nobody can hinder them from doing that, against capitalism as represented by political parties. For capitalists would like to have a monopoly of combination as well of everything else. This monopoly however they must not be allowed to attain. The employment of mercenary troops to paralyze the laborer's power of combination by putting a Pinkerton rifle in his face is something that Americans will not permit: this at least has been proved by the outcome of the great strikes of '92. But the surest way out of all these difficulties is to our vision the combinations of ballots by temperance men, working men, and woman suffragists, the very first use to be made of such combination being to unclasp the fetters that hold the hands of women from the ballot-box. The time is not yet, but it will come, for the subtle affinities of great reforms and the dire necessities of reformers will draw their representatives together whether they will or not. Robert Browning left his best legacy to humanity when he spoke in those words that were echoed back after he had passed beyond the strife of time:

"One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward:
Never doubted clouds would break, never dreamed that Right were worsted, wrong would triumph; held we Fall to rise: are baffled to fight better; sleep to wake."

In the difficulties of the present political crisis. may we make these words our own.

Alfred Krupp is known as the founder of the greatest steel works in the world at Essen, Germany. He died in 1888, and although the authorities of his own town erected a statue in his memory, the workmen who had been in his employ resolved that this was not sufficient to mark their love and devotion to the man who had ever by his counsel and acts of benevolence been their father and friend. These workmen therefore started a subscription resulting in a noble statue of their beloved employer. On the occasion of the unveiling of this statue, the son of the great steel manufacturer announced with deep feeling that in recognition of the generous appreciation of his father thus manifested by the employés, $100,000 had been set apart by the steel works company for the purpose of erecting on a healthful and convenient spot a sufficient number of cottages with gardens, for the infirm and invalid among his men, and for the widows of all men who had died in his employ. Seventeen thousand working men listened to this announcement with quickly beating hearts. It is no little thing for those who are unable to lay up property if they can feel that in their old age or in invalid estate, or if they pass away in the midst of their years, there is positive security of shelter, food and clothing for their loved ones. Such a scene as that was worthy of a painter, the men generously giving of their earnings, to build a statue of the great capitalist whose brotherly conduct had endeared him to them, and his son signalizing his entrance upon business life by the announcement of such provision as should remove from their minds forever the greatest anxiety that they had ever known relating to matters of this world. It was a fore gleam of the good time coming, toward which the W. C. T. U. so far as it is able, is working, "without haste and without rest."

There are two sides to the question, "What constitutes this brotherhood of man of which we speak so much?" The progress of science develops every year more clearly the significant fact that all men are brothers whether they will or not, if not for weal, then for woe. It is believed that "la grippe" which has carried away so many of our loved ones in the last year, and barely spared so many of ourselves, is one of the results of a mighty inundation in China concerning which we read from time to time with a careless eye in the daily newspaper. Innumerable dead bodies resulting from that inundation were left to fill the air with poison, which developed germs that were the basis of the most awful visitation that our country has known in many a year.

The clothing of the rich comes home infected from the pestilential garrets of the ill-paid poor. The famine in Russia of which the heartless speculator in grain has read with pleasure because it 'would make the price of wheat go up,' was but the precursor of a pestilence which has already crossed the seas and reached our own New World. God has said it, not by any arbitrary decree, for this he never does so far as our studies of nature indicate, but in the constitution and course of things, he has said, "All ye are brethren." Only by making this the major premise of our lives can we attain true happiness; the sooner we find it out the better for us, the sooner we learn that it is true, the sooner we clasp hands in concerted purpose and endeavor to enact brotherhood upon earth the more shall we be made in the image of man rather than show forth the lineaments of serpents and of beasts; for the hiss of the snake, and the teeth of the hyena are not more savage, relentless and cruel, than those laws and customs by which the greater number are steadily ground under the heels of the lesser, and a human being becomes the cheapest thing on earth, the least desired and the worst cared for.

PURITY WORK.

It is well known to our constituency that seven years ago (under the impulse of the mighty movement in Great Britain, indeed throughout the world, that came as a result of Mr. Stead's disclosures in the Pall Mall Gazette) I urged, in my annual address, that we put special emphasis upon the work of social purity, making it a department and coordinating efforts in this line with those for total abstinence and total prohibition. At my request, Mrs. Chas. Coffin of Chicago, an eminent Quaker, and a most capable white ribboner, was placed in charge of this department. She was however compelled to resign before entering on her duties, and there being no one to take the work, I agreed, at the earnest request of the general officers, to stand in the gap. This I have done to the best of my ability, but find myself wholly unable to work up the department as I desire: a great deal has been accomplished through the efforts of our State and local superintendents, and in the legal work. Mrs. Dr. Kellogg of Battle Creek, Michigan, has been my most helpful associate in the introduction of literature and mother's meetings. Several lecturers have been developed who are not excelled by any in the world in this difficult department of speech. It seems to me the department should now go into other hands, and I suggest that we place at its head, Dr. Mary Wood Allen, of Toledo, Ohio, who has been with us as a lecturer for many years, and whose work has been highly appreciated and praised by our most thoughtful women. I will do all I can in speaking and writing on this subject, but to organize the National Union thoroughly for this mighty endeavor is an undertaking that should command the entire time and attention of a woman who has been for years a successful specialist.

Charles Crittenton, of New York City, founder of the Florence Midnight Mission, has offered the W. C. T. U. $5,000 to help found five homes for wayward girls, in five cities that we may select. This offer has been considered by the department, and as a result we expect to carry out the purpose of this great-hearted 'brother of girls.'

The white cross work as it is popularly called, is the glorious crown of the W. C. T. U. Woman in olden times and alas even in these days is held to exist simply and solely as the indispensible appendage of man. He is the unit she the cipher. Woman is necessary to help man. Nor have any women yet arisen who are so presumptuous as to say that man was created to help woman. We have seen thus far the jealous exclusion of women from every sphere but that which man compels them to occupy for the purposes of his pleasure and for the perpetuation of the race. Here in America we have made some progress towards the recognition of a higher and better deal. But it is necessary to supplement the attempt to restore woman to her rightful position as a human being, by another attempt not less strenuous and to elevate man above the merely brutal or even worse than brutal mire of animalism into which he has sunk, in all save Christian homes. The mere concession of justice will do much to remove a great deal of the misery which the habit of degradation inflicts upon women. But if it were possible to have a society of men and women all economically independent and all equal before the law and the ballot-box it would still be possible to have a corrupt and immoral society. I do not say that you would have such a society. I hope, pray and believe that you would not. But what is quite obvious to any who reflect is that if you had such a society there would no longer be two standards of morality. There would only be one standard, and the question which we have to help to decide is which standard it must be. Are our girls to be as free to please themselves by indulging in the lawless gratification of every instinct of curiosity and passion as our boys? That is the question which will come home to us more and more with every advance in the emancipation of women from her old conditions of vassalage. We must not blind ourselves to the fact that when woman is recognized as a human being as distinct as man, with equal rights, equal privileges and an equal claim to develop her own nature and to shape her own destiny, she will either accept man's standard of morality, or she will induce him to accept her own. There is much in man's standard which women will do well to accept, but in relation to the question of morality as between men and women, the acceptance of the male standard would be a degradation unspeakable. For instance, there are many men among nominally Chrisian nations who maintain that the house of shame is a necessary appendage of human society. At present these houses are kept for the satisfaction of the appetites of men. In the future when we have levelled up the inequality between the sexes, we do not think that this will continue to be the case. The purity of snow soon melts. It is only the purity of fire that consumes dross. The fire of woman's ballot will burn out the haunt of infamy and burn in the single standard of a white life for two.

Robert Browning has the true philosophy. Woman must be perpetually wooed;—then will the noble, spirited and spiritual race be born to replace the downward-looking drudges born of slave-mothers. Financial independence for women alone will solve the problem of her happy marriage and oblige him who would win her to be himself worth having.

Thus it appears that with the woman's movement that of the White Cross is vitally intertwined, and the one cannot be solved without the other. What was the first fundamental idea of the movement which found its latent expression in the great crusade? I know that of Home Protection was the key-note of all our work. We are for women in everything that builds up the home; while everything that injures or destroys the Home has our implacable hostility. Now what is the Home? It is the nest in which those who have become one, rear the new citizens. But this implies that there are two in one, the perfect home postulates father and mother. Therefore to keep the home intact lies at the root of all our work, and nothing more fatally destroys the Home than anything which practically destroys either integer of parentage. This it is which compels us to take up the labor question; this it is which compels us to identify the cause of women with the cause of labor everywhere. Women and labor are but two different sides of the same hard diamond; they have one heritage, they are one life.

I am not to-day going to enter into the vexed question of the proper remuneration of labor, that is a matter upon which it is possible to dogmatize and it is wiser to stick to phases of the labor question which are capable of being dealt with practically. The demand of toilers everywhere for leisure, for more leisure in which to live, is one which must commend our heartiest sympathy. For it is in leisure alone that man for the most part has a home; in the workshop, in the mine, on the trail, in the ship, he is a worker among other workers. It is only when his work is over that he has a home, and can attempt to fulfil the duties and enjoy the pleasures of home.

At once, home protection, therefore involves as its corollary, the leisure of the heads of the household. It was recognized by the W. C. T. U., that the first great charter of human leisure was the Sabbath. This was the great security which religion provided for humanity, and that it has been one duty to endeavor to strengthen and protect by every available means. Sunday is the father's day to the children of the home; it is the one day in the week when the family can breakfast, dine and sup together, the one day in which they have common family life from sunrise to sunset. This precious heritage is the advance wall which we must man with strong defense. The Sabbath for man was the word of olden times, but we say still more the Sabbath for the women and the children. The Sunday is the leisure day, the day on which family life alone is possible. In the cause of home protection we must fight for the Sunday as the very central citadel of the position.

It is not enough, however, that the father shold have a chance of being a father only one day in seven. We believe in parentage; we are for strengthening, developing, and widening the conception of the responsibilities of fatherhood. God is the Father, but how many families there are where the prototype of the Divine is practically invisible from Sunday to Sunday. We must get fatherhood, both divine and human, back into the life of the world, not only on Sundays but on every day in the week. This makes the W. C. T. U. support as a matter of principle, as a root question, all attempts to shorten the worker's day. We do not dogmatise and say the day must be so many hours. We do dogmatise to say the working week shall be short enough to allow leisure at both ends for family life and family worship. We do not dogmatise as to how the six days week and working day with leisure at both ends must be obtained. We are not committed to any theory as to how it could be secured. We are, however, quite clear about this, that if we cannot get it by one road, we must get it by another, and that whatever difficulties there may be, leisure for home life has got to come, and when it comes it must come to stay.

JUVENILE WORK.

The work among young people and children is our ever present problem; more has been wrought here than the flesh, the devil and the liquor-traffic dream of. But in our loyal temperance legions, to develop the spirit of enthusiasm, to train them from volunteers to veterans, by means of a skilful manual of arms; to keep them in line when the boy begins the folly of feeling that his mother's apron-strings are fetters,—this is the difficulty. I can but believe now, as I have believed from the first, that if we could introduce music, to which the restless feet could be trained to keep time, rhythmic athletic exercises, and some of the rudimentary and unobjectionable features of military drill, we should best serve the boys and the great cause. The warfare against bad habits, the soldiership for righteousness, are images among the purest and the best, afforded us in Holy Writ. We must meet people on their own plane; we must show at the very beginning our sympathy and appreciation of the different epochs in life's chronology. There is a sense, and not a bad one, in which "boys will be boys," and that girls will be girls is just as true. Let us, then, by the correlation of forces, which is the great principle of change and progress in the world about us, turn the blythesome love of motion that is predominant in our young people into the march, the marking time, the motion, the music of the Temperance Army.

Is practiced by many people ... cles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. it is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate ... MANAGER.
P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

If we cannot have a military drill, let us have a musical drill, which will do much to effect the same end, namely, the discipline of the body, the ability better to control the wild elements in our towns and cities, and to give an impetus to our work among the children. I suggest that we incorporate, as a part of the plan of work, the organization of bands of music in the Loyal Temperance Legions, so that the children can march for the cause as well as live for it. I am glad to know that a series of marching movements have been introduced, all of them set to music, into the Loyal Temperance Legions, as one of the features of the opening of the regular local meeting.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

The study of God's word through the Quarterly Temperance Lesson is becoming a settled feature in the churches.

Our National Superintendent, Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, has received from the Rev. Dr. Warren Randolph, Secretary of the Lesson Committee, the last of the Quarterly Temperance Lessons for 1893, and pronounces them better than those for 1892. Largely has the great and beautiful Sunday school realm been conquered for the cause of a clear brain.

EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT.

Our true friend and brother, Rev. Dr. Alfred A. Wright, thinks he can no longer carry on the department of Biblical instruction. His duties as editor and publisher of the Boston Academy, occupy his time so closely that he cannot give it to us further. He says in his hearty way:

"The course is all that I can make it. I believe it to be ample for the needs of the department, and I feel sure there are many women in your organization who can take all this work and carry it forward successfully, while you may depend on me to lend them every assistance in my power."

No better friend of woman's ecclesiastical emancipation can anywhere be found than this favored scholar and Christian gentleman. I hope a resolution will be adopted expressing our hearty thanks for the help he has given us these many years. Doubtless our Superintendent, Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, will place plans before us for the future conduct of the department, which is constantly growing in power under her management.

OUR ENTERPRISES.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.—This is the largest publishing society of women in the world. Its postage bill for the past year was over ten thousand dollars, and it pays ten thousand a year for rent. The number of letters received and recorded as containing orders foots up 61,958, which is 6,316 more than for the previous year. The number of pages printed was 135,000,000; several million beyond any previous year. The amount of insurance carried is $65,000. The permanent property of the office is valued at about $79,000. The value of publication on hand is over $21,000, about one-third more than the amount sold during the year.

The Union Signal has a circulation of 70,000. The Oak and Ivy Leaf, 5,000. The Young Crusader, 39,000.

There are four hundred and seventy-six more local superintendents of publications than there were last year, and an increase of $3,463 in the sales through these superintendents. The number of those raising clubs for the Union Signal is 1,476. The cash receipts for last year, $214,000 in round numbers. This year $230,000 in round numbers. The earnings of the Printing Department, nearly $79,000.

These, of course, speak for themselves, and in view of them I think that our business manager, Mrs. F. H. Rastall, should receive a vote of thanks from the Convention, and the pledge of our more hearty co-operation in the future.

The National Temperance Hospital located in Chicago, Illinois, and one of our most important departments, we are happy to report is in a very promising condition. It has outgrown its former quarters, where it was located for six years, and has been removed to 1619 Diversey avenue—only three blocks from Lincoln Park. The present building has forty-three rooms, and is delightfully and healthfully situated. The building is not only attractive in appearance, but admirably adapted to the requirements of a hospital.

Non-alcoholic treatment of disease is meeting with great success—only two and a quarter per cent. of the patients have died the past year. Our principles are being more generally approved and our influence extended by means of this noble institution.

There are still several unfurnished rooms, and very few endowed beds. It costs only three hundred and fifty dollars annually to endow a bed, and if there were more such, a larger number of free patients could be accommodated and our sick white-ribboners could have the benefit of these beds.

A free dispensary is much needed and one thousand dollars would provide it.

We are very proud of our Hospital and hope that every delegate who can will take occasion while in Chicago to visit the institution, and see how homelike, cheery and delightful a hospital can be. We celebrated the birthday of Mrs. Marilla M. Hobbs, who has been continuously its gentle leading spirit, in July last, and gathered in the beautiful parlors with the Board of Directors headed by the President, Mrs. M. E. Kline, to express our thanks to the Good Father who has raised up such friends for an enterprise that is a beacon-light of hope on yonder lake-shore, than which the city has no other more significant. That its bright gleam shines far is proved by the fact that two enthusiastic young women from Japan are now in the Hospital taking the course of study that has turned out so many first-class nurses with white ribbons on their breasts, who will return to Japan thoroughly prepared to treat disease without the use of alcoholic spirits.

The master of the Lambeth workhouse, London, one of the largest in the Kingdom, has this month given the following significant testimony: "In this workhouse when the drink bill was large owing to the free administration of liquor under a doctor's prescription, the percentage of "drunks" among the inmates when permitted to go out for a day's holiday was seldom less than twenty-five; today, under our new rule by which alcoholics are not administered as formerly, not more than two are on the list. A very important improvement is seen in the health of the inmates and in the tone of discipline maintained; police court cases are rare, and insubordination seldom encountered."

This is bed-rock testimony, and whenever we have struck down the use of alcohol as a necessary concomitant of the medical practice, we shall have won our cause before the public.

The White-Ribbon Temple.

Well do I remember the scene in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, Nashville, Tennessee, when in the Convention of 1887, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse stood forward and gave us an account of what she believed women could do if they would arise and build a beautiful temple, which should be a source of revenue to the society, besides furnishing it with attractive headquarters of its own, and a hall for Gospel temperance meetings. Never has a greater enthusiasm been awakened in our National Convention, and subscriptions were then and there made representing nearly every state in the Union. Five years have passed, the Temple is the most beautiful office building in the world: this fact has already passed into a proverb, and is as freely conceded in London and Paris as it is freely claimed in the electric city of the West. The building does not yet belong to us in fee simple, nor did we in the least expect that it could so belong when five years ago we resolved it should be built: but everything looks hopeful, the stock is already controlled by us, and we have ten years in which to raise the money that will enable us to call this splendid edifice all our own. We have now the leverage of the rentals to help us in the great enterprise of paying for the Temple. No office building has ever been more popular among business men or rented more readily in its first year: but Mrs. Carse will tell you the details and I am only summing up the situation.

The mite-boxes have been in great demand this year, and if we could but unify our work a little more, through them would come in the entire sum necessary to be raised. But our women have done nobly, and it would be indeed ungracious to offer a criticism upon a host so loyal. The building has cost $1,100,000; but only because it was so costly, could we have hoped for the return in rentals of which we are now sure. The situation, finish, plan, embellishments of the Temple have been its great attraction to the business community: no liquor or tobacco can be sold under its beautiful roof. It is lined throughout all its thirteen stories in white marble. It has two beautiful fountains, one furnished by the women of Chautauqua county, New York, at the entrance to the Hall, the other, designed by Miss Whitney the great sculptor, and to be unveiled during the Columbian Exposition, will stand in the midst of the beautiful Entrance Court, as the gift of white-ribbon children the world over, and represents a little child playfully pulling a water lily over its head, from which falls the fountain spray, inclosing the exquisite figure. We believe the Temple is the child of Providence; it has gone straight on and up, and will do so until with shouts of rejoicing the financial cap-stone is set, even as the architectural cap-stone is already in place. We rejoice that this wonderful monument—the greatest in the world—of woman's perseverance, faith and courage, stands on one of the most notable streets in Chicago: the great monument of the modern temperance reform, the milepost of the century's philanthropy.

The Mite Box system is still the one way out for our Temple Enterprise. This comes heavily on none but equally represents all. It is idle to say that this Building Fund has oppressed the local unions. Look at the record: Of the ten thousand Unions in the United States only one hundred and eight have paid one hundred dollars for the privilege of having a place on the marble walls of Willard Hall. Of course many more have pledged that amount, but the number is comparatively small. The total amount of money received for the Temple fund up to October first was $76,618.05.

When we own the balance of stock I hope we shall call our beautiful mountain of marble and stone the Woman's Temple, or the White Ribbon Temple. It has now, as everybody knows who has seen it, cut in deep letters on the corner-stone and at the entrance, the name of our Society: it stands out uncompromisingly before the world as the home of the W. C. T. U., not only of America but of all nations. Having now a local habitation and a name, it remains only to put the two together. I wish the Temple had a beautiful white flag of its own, large enough to be seen from all about where the words "W. C. T. U. Temple" might wave in the eyes of assembled nations throughout the duration of the World's Columbian Exposition.

How wonderful are the orderings of Heaven! When a great deed is to be done the doer always comes to the front, passes his apprenticeship, gains the seal of public approbation, then moves forward to his mighty task.

In 1874, when I first timidly took up the work of temperance, I found no ally more loving and devoted than Mrs. Matilda B. Carse; her busy mind was always planning something helpful along financial lines. It was she who begged the money for the rent of the first office ever established by white-ribboners; it was she who went from office to office until one hundred business men had promised to give us ten dollars a year, which was the first basis of support that ever came to me as a local temperance leader. It was she who declared that we must have a weekly paper, something then considered unnecessary and unheard of by our comrades. This was her first great stroke, because only through the paper could the influences be concentrated for the building of a Temple. Masterly as was the sequence, it was still more inevitable. The Union Signal has been her weapon of war in the herculean task of embodying in brick, stone and marble fair, the holy dream of the Crusade.

Nearly thirty years ago when I first entered St. Paul's Cathedral in London, I saw in great letters encircling its dome, this matchless tribute to its architect, Sir Christopher Wren: "Would you behold his monument? Look around you."

Just as fittingly may we place the same declaration after the name of Matilda B. Carse, which shall one day adorn the Temple we have helped her to rear toward heaven under the bright skies of the New World's metropolis.

COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

The World's Fair is bound to be the world's wonder. Women have a hand in it this time and will add the touch of homelikeness that has never been present in any other exhibition of the kind in like degree. The Woman's Building, the Woman's Dormitory, the Children's Pavilion, these are new names, full of suggestions, dear to the heart as well as to the head. It was left for Chicago, (a city so young that it is but a few weeks since that a lady died who was the first white girl ever born within its limits, but which has now nearly a million and a half of people, all of which have congregated at the head of Lake Michigan within the lifetime of one fragile woman) to present to the world the many-sided possibilities of this mightiest object-lesson. White-ribboners will be out in force at that great gathering of the nations, and the World's W. C. T. U. backed up by the National society can make itself one of the most palpable and ameliorating forces of those gala days.

SUNDAY CLOSING.

So much has been said by me in previous addresses, and so thoroughly is the subject understood by our white-ribboners, through the capable and constant presentation of it by Mrs. Jane C. Bateman, superintendent of the department for Sabbath Observance, that it would be superfluous for me to dwell at length upon the subject now. Suffice it that we should constantly reiterate the standard arguments so frequently repeated:—

This question is between the native and foreign-born people. Americans must be on their guard. State legislatures, so far as they have acted at all, have ordered their State exhibits closed. Petitions to Congress against Sunday opening represent forty millions of our population. The act of Congress authorizing the Exposition requires that the laws of the State in which it is held shall be obeyed: the laws of Illinois forbid Sunday work. No International Fair conducted by English-speaking people has ever opened its doors on Sunday. Out of forty-four States and five Territories all but two have laws against Sunday toil, traffic and turmoil. At least fifty thousand employés would be necessary if the Fair were kept open.

Twenty-five thousand locomotive engineers have petitioned against Sunday opening, and numerous associations of laboring men have done the same. It is unfair to the better element of Chicago to pour in upon them hundreds of thousands of Sunday excursionists during the Exposition. The best exhibition we could make during the Exposition is the American Sabbath. It has universally been considered by our greatest statesmen from the beginning as one of the chief causes of the stability of the Republic.

This is a Christian country and Christians are commanded to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Whatever our personal views concerning the details of this plan, we must stand solidly as an association in the emergency that faces us.

We must make a general attack on State legislatures to cover their State exhibits in case the Congress does not continue (after election!) to stand by Sunday closing.

Chicago, Illinois, will be the National battle-ground for the next year. Every possible attempt will be made to secure from our legislation the repeal of such laws as give us a measure of protection at the World's Fair from the uprising tide of strong drink that is determined to break down every barrier and flow in to take possession of the great Exposition. The same effort will be made in the municipality if dram shop politicians can summon the brain or the "boodle" to bring this about. The utmost power of the W. C. T. U. should be put forth to help the gallant division of the army in Illinois, and Chicago, which have from the first "fought with the beasts at Ephesus."

WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

This year Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt has pioneered the way to South America. Her report will show that the heroic courage manifested by her in traveling and working on our behalf since 1883, increases with the years. Never let it be forgotten that without an invitation before or a dollar hehind her she became the "forlorn hope" of our most daring enterprise.

It seems to me, beloved comrades, that it is incumbent upon me to call your attention to the following facts: Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt of Boston, has invested eight of the best years of her life in the unparalleled work of introducing the W. C. T. U. and polyglot petition to all countries where they were not known; a work which has exhausted her vitality and left her incurably broken in health. In view of this, I think, we should create a fund, amounting to ten thousand dollars, to be called the Mary Clement Leavitt Fund, which should be invested, and only the interest thereof be used, Mrs. Leavitt having at her entire disposal said interest during her lifetime, after which the whole or any part of said interest should be voted for any period that might be designated, to the use of White Ribboners who had distinguished themselves in the work of the World's W. C. T. U. To do less than this is most unjust, and I am confident that our women never have intended to recognize the heroic work of Mrs. Leavitt simply by resolutions and tokens of honor and esteem that had no value at the bank. The world and the devil reward their own; it will be a great day for the Kingdom of our Lord when with equal care we remember those who have been faithful to Him who said "The laborer is worthy of his hire.

Miss Jessie Ackerman has cultivated her mighty parish of Australia as President of the great organization founded by herself. She has gone by this time for six months work in India, but will return in season to hold the tri-annual convention in Australia.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Doctor Bushnell are in Australia, and we hear from them as from all, of continued and growing success. Miss Alice Palmer has reached South Africa, but owing to my absence in England, I have no further account of her movements. Miss Mary Allen West, has been warmly welcomed to Japan, and Miss Pash, of London, a young English-woman (graduate of Girton College), has started for India, having been sent out by Lady Henry Somerset and the World's W. C. T. U. Committee of Great Britain.

It is the united opinion of our white-ribbon missionaries that we must send to each country women who will remain, working up our interests there. One writes, "We do not need specialties so much as good all round women." Miss Ackerman thinks that we should keep at least one world's Missionary constantly in the field, who should be assured of the making good of any deficiency in her current expenses, and we should maintain at least one settled missionary in every foreign country.

The visit of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge and Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, as our official representatives, to the International Missionary Union, held at Clifton Springs last winter, was productive of excellent results; the great petition being signed by leaders whose names carry with them great weight, and have back of them hundreds of thousands of the best men and women in the world.

We expect to convene the World's W. C. T. U., the first week in June at the Columbian Exposition, and we hope that the National will be held at the same time.

We can have temperance talks by experts during the whole of the six months of the Exposition, and I hope our Corresponding Secretary will be requested to see that such meetings are held on behalf of the National W. C. T. U., even as other societies will no doubt hold theirs; and I trust we shall have our School of Methods in full blast a large part of that time. We shall have an exhibit besides all this—Madame Demorest of New York being our chairman for the National, and Mrs. J. R. Nichols for the World's Unions.

In the absence of our faithful Miss Helen L. Hood, Mrs. Helen M. Barker has been made Secretary of the World's Women's Temperance Committee; she has been our loyal friend at court, and is the best informed woman we have concerning all phases of our interests at the Exposition. It is most significant and agreeable to us that the White Ribboners have several of their ablest leaders in the circle of power at the great fair.

It is proposed to hold our Conventions in the usual manner, the particular features being a general statement of the genius, spirit and method of the movement, reports of work accomplished and projected, and papers and speeches by those who have made a specialty of our different departments. This gives play to personality in the largest way and has always proved most helpful and attractive to the public, our audience from the first having been limited only by the size of the auditorium in which the Convention has been held, and having varied from 1,500 to 5,000.

It is planned also, to hold daily gospel temperance meetings in Willard Hall, from the time of its opening in October. This hall will be dedicated in May, next, by Lady Henry Somerset, but meanwhile it will be utilized to the greatest extent possible in advancing our work. Would it not also be well to use our influence in establishing a daily meeting of like character at the Exposition, since the hall is too far away for those to attend who have come to attend the fair?

It should be carefully noted that each State must select its delegates to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention before its next State meeting. Perhaps this had better be done at the winter meeting of the Executive Committee which is held in most States. Where this is not the case it might be well to empower the officers of each State to select delegates. It will be observed that the Constitution of the is practiced by many people who buy cles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate MANAGER.

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

World's W. C. T. U. explicitly names the basis of representation, which is as follows:

"The Convention of the World's W. C. T. U. shall be composed of the Executive Committee, national Secretaries and Treasurers, the World's Superintendents of Departments, the Editors and Publishers of the Official Organ, and one delegate for every one thousand members of affiliated national unions."

Each State knows the number of its membership, and can choose not only delegates but alternates in accordance with the foregoing Article 7 of the Constitution of the World's W. C. T. U. This constitution calls for a meeting of the World's Union once in two years, but in adopting that regulation in Fanuil Hall, Boston, we protected ourselves from its effect by declaring that we would hold a World's W. C. T. U. Convention in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition in '93.

This second Convention of the World's W. C. T. U. would not have been fixed for so early a date except that we saw the advantage to the whole cause of gathering up at the time of the International Congresses of men and women, and setting our forces in battle array. No opportunity so strategic has ever been known in history; not to take it would be to decline taking the tide at its flood.

The meetings are to be held in the first week or ten days of the month of June, and as the Right Worthy Grand Lodge of the Good Templars is to be held at the same time, also the International Temperance Congress, presided over by Archbishop Ireland, some of the routine meetings through the day of these three Societies will be at the same time, and in the evening we shall, perhaps, have two great audiences addressed by experts from all parts of the world.

The W. C. T. U. will hold its meetings as a society with a delegated membership, and it is of vital importance that the National W. C. T. U. should hold its annual meeting at the same time; for the National is much the greatest auxiliary of the World's White Ribbon Society, and not to have the two held in conjunction, although on separate days, would be the temperance drama of Hamlet with Hamlet missing. Therefore it is most earnestly desired by our sisters in all parts of the world that we should agree at this convention to hold such a meeting in June. It is without precedent to be sure, and may well be for the precedent will not bring us annoyance, since no other Columbian Exhibition will be held for a century, at the close of which period we may well hope the world will be lifted up above the seething sea of alcoholic drinks. The tonic effect, in a temperance sense, of having the great meetings mentioned in June at the beginning of the Exposition rather than at its close, should be carefully studied by us. The Good Templars claim that they will have a thousand women delegates present from all parts of the world, surely the White Ribboners can congregate as many.

It is significant that the International Congress of Women is to be held May 15th, and for one week thereafter. This will strike the key-note of all the Congresses and women will be first in the field in woman's city of greatest opportunity and woman's country of largest hope. Our White Ribboners will universally desire to be present at that Congress, which will be followed by the Temperance Meetings which we hope to make a crescendo; but we can do this only by a long stroke, a strong stroke, and a stroke all together, with the splendid big drum of the National in the center of the orchestra.

SOMERSET W. C. T. U.

Not in years has any plan suggested been received with so much enthusiasm as the one fore-shadowed in the columns of our official organ some months ago, namely the organization of a "Somerset W. C. T. U." Two specimen letters are here inserted, one from Massachusetts:

Why cannot this suggestion be speedily carried out? I have long been a pronounced total abstinence woman and should esteem it a high honor to belong to the Somerset Union; though unable to work, my heart is earnestly with you, and the UNION SIGNAL is valued by me above all price.

Another is from Baltimore:

I wonder if there are not many in cities who are shut in their homes with care of little ones and the thousand and one duties of the housewife, so that we are practically just as isolated as the farmer's wives? I should like to belong to the Somerset Union that I might feel free to wear the white ribbon and thus show my colors if nothing more. The UNION SIGNAL is my inspiration, I cannot tell you how welcome it is, nor how eagerly or earnestly read.

Similar letters have come to us from every quarter of the globe, saying, "that is exactly what we want, tell us what are the conditions of membership and they shall be at once complied with."

The plan is very simple. We propose to name in honor of Lady Henry Somerset a Union to be made up of members who are not connected with any local auxiliary, either because they live in distant and isolated places, or for some personal reason to themselves sufficient, but whose hearts are warm towards the white-ribbon work in its method, plan and spirit. All such women in joining, send their names to our corresponding secretary, with the name of the State or Territory in which they live, and by this act agree to be total abstainers, to wear the white-ribbon, to observe the noontide hour of prayer, to pay the sum of 50 cents a year, sending the same to the National Treasurer, Miss Esther Pugh, W. C. T. U. Temple, Chicago; and also agree to take one copy of the Union Signal, or to secure one new subscriber. This much they do in token of their active interest and participation in the modern temperance movement. Men may join as well as women, being classified as Honorary Members, and their duties are the same as those of the women, except they are not required, although advised, to wear the white ribbon. To all these the Annual Leaflet will be sent and our Catalogue of Publications, the President's Annual Address, the Corresponding Secretary's and Treasurer's Annual Reports: that they may know what we are doing, so that there may be reciprocity, help and inspiration. The National Treasurer is expected to report annually by States the number of men and women joining the Somerset W. C. T. U. I suggest that we furnish a pretty card of membership to all who join this Union.

We in America felicitate ourselves that we were the first in the field with this suggestion, but Lady Henry Somerset and her branch of the W. C. T. U. were first in action, having already adopted the plan and secured a large number of names, reciprocating our loving courtesy by substituting for the British Empire the name of one of our own officers.

The women in farming communities have written numerous letters the last year asking that some one be especially appointed to work up an organized movement in rural communities; they declare that they feel themselves "left out in the cold," when here we have the bright sunny hearth of the W. C. T. U. We have given thoughtful attention to their request and believe the Somerset Union will help to meet the difficulty. Of this Union (which the World's W. C. T. U. is certain and the National is invited to adopt,) it may truly be said that "its center will be everywhere and its circumference nowhere," except as bounded by the earth's great meridians, even as the sympathies of her whose name it bears include the wide, wide world.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

The Polyglot Petition has been indorsed and signed this year by 1,112,735 persons. The present prospect is that with the putting down of all the names thus gained the petition will be over twelve miles long. Names are coming in constantly from all parts of the world. Let it be said to the credit of human nature that a large proportion have been secured by invalids and women from sixty-five years of age and upwards. The most pathetic phrase is that where women sign with these words: "Homeless from drink," and the most hopeful where a woman signs herself, "Mother of six prohibition voters." There is no "homelessness" in that! All the way through, one may find signatures from the trembling hand of old age, to the strong determined stroke of the man and woman in the prime of life. Here an old grandmother signs with the phrase, "aged, 87;" "aged, 90;" "aged, 95." Frequently a boy is permitted the honor of putting his name to this "State paper," with the interesting information, "twelve years of age," others follow their signatures with words like these: "Crush the demon." "By one redeemed." "For our homes and our altars." Often a mother places a short petition in connection with her name—"God grant this prayer."

Especially in this the great petition of the poor and lowly, the class of men ruined by the dram shops, while almost as a unit the churches and various beneficiary associations and lodges unite to invoke the powers of government against the liquor traffic. Mrs. Rebecca Shuman, Evanston, Ill., has made the petition, which Mrs. Woodbridge has sent out and Miss Briggs gathered in. Mrs. Shuman writes these stirring words:

"To me, this mighty document signed in fifty different languages, and by representatives of all nations of the earth, asking for protection against the liquor and opium trades, and for every woman, child and home, is a vast power encircling the earth, and embracing the islands of the sea. It has impressed me from the first as I have woven into this great stretch of canvas the tens of thousands of signatures from all lands and nations, that I was weaving together the groans of the dying and tears of the saints. The canvas is already about three miles in length actually prepared for use. The indorsements like those of the Christian Endeavor Society, the Baptist Young People's Union, the Good Templars, the National Temperance Society would make up the twelve miles, were they written out in full.

Men sign as indorsers and women as petitioners; this action representing the relative relation to life, alas! of these two halves of the human race.

Dear sisters, although the prime movers in this petition, we have never done it justice. The proportion from the American Republic is still smallest of all. The great Polyglot is like the prophet—without honor in his own country. I know how many interests we have, but I do not believe we are willing to come to the Columbian Exposition, where this petition will be "on view" as an offset to the product of the brewer and distiller, and have it still a fact that our petitions come in numerically at the foot of the list. I have urged this so often that you must be tired of it, but it is my duty still to blow the bugle-call, even though the echoes—like those of Tennyson's famous song—shall be only "dying, dying, dying." Remember, I beg of you, that I am not speaking one word of blame, only stirring up your pure minds by way of loving and sisterly remembrance.

LEADERS.

The White Ribbon host has always insisted on the prime value of helpful leadership. This impetus was doubtless given when groups of crusaders gathered round the women whom they had chosen to go before them into the place of danger—the saloon, the gambling house, the haunt of infamy: they then learned the value of having one who did not hesitate and was not afraid to take what came of it: who did not seek a position of all others most difficult, but was willing to march to the head of the line if her comrades gave the signal. From those wondrous days to these, hardly less wondrous, possibly even more so, the leader in Local Unions, the county, district,

State, and all along the line has been much talked about for good or ill, but (blessed be their generous hearts) mostly for good not ill. Whether for weal or woe, she is in whatever group she may appear the key-stone of the arch, and they help the cause best who hinder least her utmost helpfulness. She should be providentially chosen or else not chosen at all. The advice of the Apostle Paul repeats itself in the exigencies of our intricate endeavor. "Lay hands on no (wo)man suddenly," but trust the steady, tried and true. Treat them as you would be treated if you were in their places; give them the benefit of doubt, and never give doubt the benefit of them; rally round them with a right good will, tell them wherein they fail or make mistakes. "Tell it out" in a full, kind voice, and do not whisper it behind your hand in the ear of the first comer nor of the last. If there is misunderstanding, if something has been overlooked, if a slight, real or fancied has been incurred, let it come to the surface, not in the whisper to No. 2, but in the frank avowal to No. 1. Go to your leader, tell her all about it, ask her how it came to be, and in nine hundred cases out of a thousand you will find that you two women who have thus holily and highly met in a sisterly effort to understand each other better, will part the best of friends, the warmest of allies.

Above all things, leaders prize loyalty in those who are grouped about them. Without this cohesive power we cannot hold our own, to say nothing of making any advance. In proportion to their solidarity, all movements of the people have succeeded, and if ours is not a movement, of the people, for the people, by the people; there has been none in the 19th century. William H. Seward, a man so great that he is now claimed by South as well as North,—a noble National heritage,—said in one of his speeches during the controversy, now happily long passed: "This generation will not declare it, but I believe that the next will, and I mean that it shall, say 'He was faithful.'" The great statesman was speaking of himself. The multitudinous, merciless years passed on; he wrought the best he knew for what he held most dear, and the words he used in that memorable speech are carved on his tombstone,—"He was faithful."

Leaders, like everybody else, have the faults of their qualities and the criticisms that they must endure are in two categories. They are classified as ambitious or incompetent. If they sit back enjoying the distinction of office but doing very little to merit the same then they are regarded as stupid and inadequate. On the other hand if they are energetic, individual and progressive they are certain to be called ambitious and the very efforts they make to serve the cause are ridiculed as having been put forth in their own personal interest. Nor will any fling at them the epithet "ambitious" with more emphasis that those whose greatest desire is to succeed them in the positions that they hold. It is the rank and file alone who make and mar the future of a leader. If they abide faithful to a faithful chief the detraction of competitors will have little effect, but beware of the leader whom the rank and file distrust.

Our friend Archdeacon Farrar has recently set forth his idea of the occupation of the angels, taking as his text, "Thy will be done as in Heaven so on earth." One passage is of prime interest to us who are striving amid so much difficulty and contradiction to neutralize in our natures, by God's grace, one of the most accursed distempers that has ever demoralized the human heart. He says:—"There is one thing the angels do not do, we may be sure, and that is to be jealous of each other. Gabriel does not envy Michael because the latter carries a celestial sword, nor does Michael vex Gabriel, for his radiant flight: and Raphael rejoices in Uriel's sun-like brightness, even as Uriel rejoices in Raphael's enchanting grace. It is characteristic of this world that envy rages against merit, but it is not so in Heaven."

Now that we have found out that there are at least two hundred million worlds, we are in a position to appreciate as never before, that it signifies but little to be famous on the one of the most obscure of these worlds, and fame is not so fascinating to a reflective mind as when we thought the stars were simply candles to light up the night of the great planet earth. Meanwhile the significance of character increases in proportion as the significance of fame lessens, for with character true and genuine, one may expect, in the long run, to belong to the best society of any and of every world, if it turns out as some of us expect, that we are to take the worlds one after another in the course of our unresting progress, as the swimmer takes the waves of a great sea.

The highest form of adoration is the imitation of God, and the highest form of admiration is the imitation of man. In one of these two occupations all enthusiastic and generous natures are sure to be engaged, and upon their choice of the finite or infinite depends the greatness of their character and achievement. Not all whom the world calls famed are great, not all the great are famed; each one of us can tell whether he is engaged in the imitation of God or the admiration of man as his objective point, as the final factor in the formation of his character.

In every progressive movement it is likely to be not so much the force of the enemy that wears upon the forces of the Lord, as the internal envy, jealousy, bickering and backbiting, and all the brood of harpies hatched in the nests of gossip and suspicion. Happily we have been almost miraculously free from this diabolical waste of power. May there come upon us such a Pentecost at this Convention as shall wash in with its mighty tidal wave and clear out every sewer, sink and cesspool of our natures, if there be such, in which the uncanny microbes brood. But besides this hindrance, which is always appreciable, often mighty, and not infrequently over-mastering, there is the stone wall built and ever faithfully guarded by a tribe whom we may aptly christen "the Waybackers of Way-back." "Their name betrayeth them," their habitat holds them from taking a single step except it be to the rear.

Cardinal Newman wrote that famous book "The Grammar of Assent," in which he defended the dogmas of the Church of Rome. Concerning that book, I have no intention to speak; but the phrase has struck me forcibly. I think the world of intelligent men and women is divided into two classes, one of whom constitute in the great scale of life the Grammar of Assent, and the other the Grammar of Dissent. The latter class, whenever a subject is presented to their minds, dissent; it is ingrained, inborn, inbred; they are the obstructionists, the antagonizers, the hold-back on the harness.

Take a single instance in the life of one of our greatest missionary pioneers, William Carey. Sidney Smith sneered at him as a consecrated cobbler going on a fool's errand to convert the heathen. England laughed to the echo as the sneer passed from lip to lip, but Carey went his way and built his life into missionary work in India. A Baptist preacher, he was visited on his death bed by the Bishop of India, the leader of the Church of England in that land, who bowed his head and invoked William Carey's blessing. The British authorities had denied him landing place on his arrival in Bengal, but when he died the Government drooped all its flags to half-mast in honor of the man who had done more for India than any British General. The universities of England, Germany and America paid tribute to his learning, and the Protestant world has crowned him as a king in intellect and a disciple in zeal.

"All that the Father hath given unto me, shall come to me." This is the great general principle of life. That which we attract to ourselves by our own inherent natures—our reason, affection and faith, is that which the Father hath given to us, and we have no right to expect to draw to ourselves that which we have not followed out in our own natures. It is a true and wise spirit that says, with sweet tranquility in the presence of much that goes wrong, and when we find ourselves missing many things that we should like to see, "all that the Father hath given unto me, shall come to me;" for in our little plane it is as true of us as it was true of that infinite circle in the midst of which He stood who first uttered these words of incomparable solace and hope.

To every leader present at this Convention, (and I am well aware that this is a Convention of leaders), as well as to every White Ribbon woman within the sound of my voice, let me repeat the stirring words of a modern poet. They have touched my heart, they will touch yours, they ought to make us each and every one more earnest and determined not to disappoint those who have put us in our places of honor and of trust. The poem is by Matthew Arnold and is entitled "On to the City of God:"

"See, in the rocks of the world,
Marches the host of mankind,
A feeble wavering line.
Where are they tending? A God
Marshalled them, gave them a goal.
Ah, but the way is so long!
Years they have been in the wild:
Sore thirst plagues them, the rocks,
Rising all round, overawe:
Factions divide them, their host
Threatens to break, to dissolve.
Ah, keep, keep them combined!

Then in such hour of need
Of our fainting, dispirited race,
Ye leaders of men, ye appear,
Radiant with ardor divine!
Beacons of hope, ye appear!
Ye fill up the gaps in our files,
Strengthen the wavering line,
'Stablish, continue our march
On, on to the bounds of the waste—
On to the City of God."

PROPINQUITY.

Very much of misunderstanding among associated workers arises from lack of consultation. Each one of us is so busy that we work in an isolation far more practical than perhaps we realize. Propinquity settles everything, and this is not more true in our ranks than it is throughout the world among those who are working for different departments of progress. The person who is just at hand, the comrade whom circumstances have placed within hailing distance is apt to be the one with whom we most consult. This arises from no intention to ignore those at a greater distance, it is just what they themselves are doing with those whose propinquity makes such action well nigh inevitable. There is more in it than we have time to consider, but it underlies the necessity I have always felt of not revising our constitution so as to make meetings of the society biennial. The leaders of states and nations need to see each other as often at least as once a year; if our Executive Committee held a mid-year meeting it would be most helpful, would prevent many misunderstandings, and give the work an added impetus. In the States this mid-year meeting is found to be of highest value.

This is simply a hint resulting from considerable reflection, and is thrown out for what it may be worth to our constituency.

NAMES IN THE NEWSPAPERS.

Few forms of hypocrisy are more common than these words upon the lips of women "I would on no account have my name in the newspapers," and a recent deliverence from a Presidential candidate to the effect that his brilliant and accomplished wife was "too sacred" by reason of her relationship to him and to their little one to have her name bruited about before the public, has set me thinking on this subject.

What is publicity but the knowing by many of that which otherwise but few would is practiced by many people ... cles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate MANAGER.
P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

know? If the great bulk of society consisted of enemies who wished to hide from one another what they did, then all would surely wish never to be named in newspapers, but if we are approaching something like friendliness, then a newspaper is simply an open letter passing from hand to hand and telling what has happened. If a woman has accomplished something helpful to humanity it is just as desirable to have it known as if a man had accomplished the same, indeed it is perhaps even more so in these transition days, because this knowledge will encourage other women to set their hands, perchance now idle, to some noble and beneficient employment. I have noticed that news concerning women at the court or in the aristocratic circles of Great Britain is just as much sought and as thoroughly given as the news concerning men of the same circle, and in my own land where self-constituted coteries label themselves society, I find that descriptions of what is worn, what is eaten, and what is danced, form the staple of reading in numberless society journals, and the dessert course in the heaviest metropolitan newspapers. When people say that they would on no account see their names in the newspapers they certainly seem out of line with the race to which they belong, which is above all things a gossiping, gabbling race, and has been ever since the days of the Athenians, and doubtless from the dawn of history previous to that time, most of all desirous to see and to hear some new thing. A nameless antedeluvian has lately re-enunciated the old saw that "the best women are those of whom the public hears the least." This was probably written by some soured celibate of the masculine persuasion, but it is absolutely in diametric opposition to the truth. In proportion to its degree of enlightenment the public "hears a great deal" about women who are as good as any living and whom everybody believes to be as good. I like the sturdy fashion in which one of our American journalists has recently stood up in his place and spoken out against the sentimental foolishness that condemns women whose names are in the newspapers. The only question is when your name is there, is it there for a good purpose, is it linked to a holy cause, does it arouse the nobler thoughts and emotions of those who see it? This is the touch stone, and separates mere notoriety from honest and well earned fame.

Now for what our journalistic brother says:

"Can anybody call the roll of great poets and not name Mrs. Browning, of great novelists, and omit George Eliot (Marian Evans,) Charlotte Bronte and Harriet Beecher Stowe; of distinguished artists, and fail to mention Rosa Bonheur and Harriet Hosmer? Are not these all women of whom the public hears a great deal, and knows most in proportion as it is enlightened? Does anybody presume to say that they are not or were not in their day among the "best women?"

The notion that it is somewhat discreditable for a woman to be talked about has no other basis of truth than such a notion would have in the case of a man. All depends on the kind of talk and the kind of talkers. The woman whose name is on everybody's tongue may be one whose womanliness has gained her a place in everybody's heart. To deny to women the right to achieve and enjoy an honorable fame is senseless. It is to rob them of one of the greatest incentives to and rewards for noble endeavor.

The disposition to do this is a relic of barbarism or semi-barbarism; of the time when women who wrote books did not dare to let their real authorship be known, of the time or clime when or where it was deemed a shame to a woman to be seen on the streets without a hood over her face, but no shame to her husband at home to beat her for not cooking his dinner to suit him."

RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Since we have proved beyond a peradventure that sea-sickness can be greatly ameliorated, the ocean with its splendid greyhounds becomes but a harmless ferry of inconvenient width, across which our White Ribboners will henceforth pass and re-pass in numbers far greater than the past has witnessed. It is well known to you that I did not do a stroke of work to help our cause in England: I did not go for that, but to seek seclusion, recuperation, rest. Nevertheless as President of the World's W. C. T. U. now that no sacred loyalty to the one most near and dear holds me to my native land, I am planning to put in the best strokes of work I can in England for the next few months. Anna Gordon will be of as much service in enlisting the children to help us as I hope to be among their mothers. It rejoices me to know that American White Ribboners will heartily second this plan as an act of reciprocity between the two greatest sections of the White Ribbon Army. Lady Henry Somerset did a work for us last year that remains on our books as a debt we must try to repay, but I am confident that she will add to her first works several months in our service when she comes to us next spring, heading the British delegation of the World's Congress of Temperance women: so that in the long run we shall be once more debtors to our mother land. It is my confident belief that within ten years the White Ribboners will be as well known in every country as they are to-day in America, but to this end we must send out more missionaries to embrace the whole field, and more experts who will take specific territories remaining in them until our society is thoroughly domesticated.

PERSONAL.

"Rest is not quitting the busy career,
Rest is the fitting of self to its sphere."

Thirty-five years of work in the fields of education, journalism and philanthropy, have brought me to the place where inactivity is irksome and inertia, weariness. And yet as time goes on, I am aware that the ceaseless round of responsibility tells on a spirit that has stood before the chilling blast of its life's greatest sorrow.

The tender consideration of White Ribboners which has ever made all toil a joy to me, after sixteen years steady and consecutive work, caused them to vote unanimously on two occasions, that I take a year's complete rest. The growing feebleness of her who made our house a home, permitted me to avail myself of their considerate kindness to this extent only, that I reduced the number of my platform engagements, but surrounded by stenographers and secretaries in my own study from nine o'clock until evening, I have worked with unceasing delight and diligence in the ever growing interest of our cause.

I had no wish for change so long as she whose presence was the completeness of my life went back and forth from her room to my own through the day's work, but when the sunset came and the chill twilight crept over our home that told me that the sweet light loved so long had faded, I felt the weariness that bade me seek for rest. Five weeks in England have shown me how much change of scene and action, and the absence of responsibility can restore the weary nerves. During my stay there, at Lady Henry Somerset's earnest request, I consulted two eminent physicians; but while they both assured me that I had no organic disease whatever, they earnestly advocated my staying in Europe for a while to repair lost nerve power. To this I could not consent and felt that the 6000 miles must be traversed sooner than that one White Ribboner should feel I had broken faith by my absence from our annual feast and fellowship. And indeed my whole spirit gravitated towards the spot where those should assemble who are to me sisters and comrades beloved. The opinions of the physicians, however, so impressed Lady Henry Somerset with the necessity of my being spared all strain, that she determined to accompany me, knowing that by this means she could save me much mental and physical fatigue.

Economy of bodily strength is a teaching as much needed as any other of the great lessons in God's laws which we of the W. C. T. U. seek to expound; and although I would not heed advice that I considered to militate against active duty, the words have given me pause, and I feel it would be wise to pay some heed to them in these coming months, more especially in view of the fact that the Exposition summer will bring with it an unusual strain.

It is also incumbent upon me to consider my duty as President of the World's W. C. T. U., and while it is true that the friend raised up for me, and sent divinely, as I believe, gave up engagements of transcendent importance that she might stand by me in my hour of need, it is also true that I urged her coming as the greatest possible service she could render to the largest auxiliary of the W. W. C. T. U., of which she is Vice-President at Large.

Anna Gordon, my true and ever loyal companion, is also World's Superintendent of work among the children, and I am firmly persuaded that between us we can put in some strokes that will help to give some hint at least of the love and gratitude we feel to our great-hearted English leader for all the loving kindness she has shown us, while exigencies with regard to the world's work in England, emphasize the importance of such aid as I may be able to render in my official capacity as President, and we must not forget the momentous value of strengthening the white-ribbon movement in the central country of the English-speaking race, with its mighty outreach of power to its great colonies.

While this program may not seem to you like rest, the principle enunciated at the head of this sub-division bears it out, and I believe it will prove sound when the sequel has come, for we expect to be on hand in good time for the spring conventions of the Chicago Exposition, of which I have spoken elsewhere.

IN MEMORIAM.

"We Follow That Way."

In the old pastures by the river I was wont to watch the beautiful green grub filling itself with food from the hazel twig, to which it was attached, and cradling itself for the mysterious change by which it should become etherial instead of cumbersome. It used to come to me then in the dim thought of childhood, that when the grub shelled out the facinating little air-ship of the skies, another grub crawling along the bough of my pretty hazel bushes, would not even know what had occurred, but so far as its dull intelligence could take in anything, would be sure to regard its disrupted comrade as having met with some great calamity, for the grub's eyes are too heavy to see the bright, etherial butterfly; perhaps, indeed, the change was looked upon as a disaster when its first birth-pangs and its last came on the now dead larva.

We have a right to think that so it may be —nay it must be—as between the soul and body. It is far more conformable to reason, that a viewless and beautiful being should rise from the ruins of the human form than from the ruins of the grub, for suppose a man should build a ship and freight it with the rarest works of art, and in the very building and the freighting should plan to convey the ship out into mid-ocean and there scuttle it with all its contents! Here is the human body, in itself an admirable piece of mechanism, the most delicate and wonderful of which we know; it is like a splendid ship but its cargo incomparably outruns the value of itself, for it is made up of love, hope, veneration, imagination "and all the lagess of man's unconquerable mind." Why should its maker scuttle such a ship with such a freightage? He who believes that this is done is capable of a credulity that far outruns the compass of our faith.

Death cannot be an evil for it is universal. It must be good to those that do good, because it crowns man's evolution on the planet earth.

"Lord, we can trust Thee for our holy dead."

This year has been one of great bereavements. To us as women, with the transfer of the two, who, beyond any others, were our heart-elected laureates, to other starry heavens than those of song, there came the tenderest sense of loss. Whittier has died, and Tennyson, whose "Princess" was the woman's Magna Charta, "but their echoes roll from soul to soul," helping to purify our hearts and lives. We have grieved over the strong and gentle spirit called by White Ribboners in later days, "the Women's Laureate," who left this for a better world in last September; the "choir invisible," will have few harps more tuneful than that of him whose 'Snow Bound' picture of his sacred home endeared him to home-makers everywhere. Women love poets and White Ribboners bring laurels for the beautiful brows of our brothers beloved and departed. The death of Julia Ames has called out the full diapason of our tenderness and already her bright memory and heroic work have been celebrated in the book entitled, "A Young Woman Journalist."

Two of our best known leaders have been smitten in home and heart—Mrs. Caroline Brown, mother of Mrs. Buell, and James M. Gordon, father of Anna Gordon, having left us, and in the terrible mid summer heat, the full blown rose of my heart's life-garden drooped on its sturdy stem.

"Some are born great, some achieve greatness, some have greatness thrust upon them." Of my blessed mother, all these affirmations are true. There are many men, and as yet but a few women of whom, when you think or speak, it occurs to you that they are great. What is the line that would mark out such a sphere? To my mind it must include this trinity—greatness of thought, of heart, of will. There have been men and women concerning whose greatness of intellect none disputed, but they were poverty-stricken in the region of the affections, or they were lilliputians in the realm of will. There have been mighty hearts, beating strong and full as a ship's engine, but they were mated to a "straightened forehead." There have been Napoleonic wills, but, unbalanced by strong power of thought and sentiment, they were like a cyclone or a wandering star. It takes force centrifugal and force centripetal to ballance and hold a character to the ellipse of a true orbit.

Our "St. Courageous" was great in the sense of this majestic symmetry. The classic writer who said, "I am human, and whatever touches humanity touches me," could not have been more worthy to utter the words than was this Methodist cosmopolite who spoke them to me within a few days of her ascent to heaven. She had no pettiness. It was the habit of her mind to study subjects from the point of harmony. She did not say, "Wherein does this Baptist or this Presbyterian differ from the creed in which I have been reared?" But it was as natural to her as it is to a rose to give forth fragrance, to say to herself and to others: "Wherein does this Presbyterian or Baptist harmonize with the views that are dear to me?" Then she dwelt upon that harmony, and through it brought those about her into oneness of sympathy with herself. She was occupied with great themes. I never heard a word of gossip from her lips. She had no time for it. Her life illustrated the poet's line:

"There is no finer flower on this green earth than courage."

She who left us lately had courage of intellect, heart and physical courage as well, beyond any woman that I have known.

"We are saved by hope," this was the motto of my mother's life; "This is our part and all the part we have, she used to say." "The existence and love of God are the pulse of our being whether we live or die."

Some characters have a great and varied landscape and a light like that of Raphael's pictures; others show forth some strong single feature in a light like that of Rembrandt; some have headlands and capes, bays and skies, meadows and prairies and seas; the more scenery there is in a character, the greater it is,—the more it ranges from the amusing to the sublime. My mother's nature had in it perspective, atmosphere, landscape of earth and sky.

She was not given to introspection, which is so often the worm in the bud of genius. "They are not great who counsel with their fears." Applied Christianity was the track along which the energy of her nature was driven by the Divine Spirit. She would have been just as great whether the world had ever learned of it or not. "Mute Miltons" are not all "inglorious," and, however small the circle might have been in which she spent her days, she whom we loved and for a while have lost, would inevitably have been recognized as one adequate to the ruling of a State or a Nation with mild and masterly sway. The fortunes of the great White Ribbon war gave her a pedestal to stand upon; she had been, in her beautiful home, a mother so beloved that she drew all her household toward her as the sun does the planets round about him, but she became a mother to our whole army. She came to the kingdom for a sorrowful time when homes were shadowed over all the land and her motherly nature found a circle as wide as the shadow cast upon the Republic by the Nation's dark eclipse. Perhaps, until then, she had not been a radical so pronounced as she became in these later battle years, but what she saw and learned and suffered out in the cross-currents of society and the great world, made her as strong a believer in the emancipation of woman as any person whom I have ever met. She had no harsh word for anybody; no criticism on the past. She recognized the present situation as the inevitable outcome of the age of force, but her great soul was suffused to its last fibre with the enthusiasm of woman. She believed in her sex; she had pride in it; she regarded its capacities of mental and moral improvement as illimitable, but at the same time she was a devoted friend to men. How could she be otherwise with a loving and genial son and with a husband true and loyal? All her ideas upon the woman question were but a commentary upon her devotion to that larger human question which is the great circle of which the woman question is but an arc. Oftentimes I have said to myself, "If this temperance movement had come to women in her day what a great magnetic leader she would have been. How wholly she would have given herself to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, seeing in it the outcome of all her hopes and prophecies for the protection of the home and the regnancy of 'two heads in counsel, two beside the hearth.'"

But she has gone from us, whose pathway from cradle to skies was one long trail of light. She who

"Allured to brighter worlds has led the way."

Let us go forward with the work we have in hand, inspired by the thought that not only does God work in us "to will and to do of His good pleasure," but that

"Eyes do regard us in Eternity's stillness,
And there is fullness, ye brave, to reward you;
Hope, and despair not."

IN CONCLUSION.

My Comrades: It is life to look into the faces of the women who dared; it is health to know you never hearken backward along the path of progress; it is heavenly inspiration to hear you sing, as did our crusade mothers, "Give to the wind thy fears." Here beneath these flashing skies in the magic city of man's indomitable power and purpose, on the white altar of these hills of God let us vow undying fealty to the cause of a clear brain and a protected home; to woman's enfranchisement and manhood's exaltation. Wherever these sacred watchwords lead, there let us go. We are explorers sailing on seas unknown; the new world is what we seek; the kingdom of heaven among men. The White Ribbon ship has all sails set; its prow points toward the untracked sea. We seek a land fit for the planting of our Savior's cross. Columbus harassed by his men was the prototype of all adventurous souls, hindered by the scruples of the timid and prejudices of the conservative. Well has the poet of the Sierras put the contrast, and in parting let me give my final message in his words:

"Behind him lay the gray Azores,
Behind the gates of Hercules;
Before him not the ghost of shores,
Before him only shoreless seas.
The good mate said: "Now must we pray,
For lo! the very stars are gone;
Brave Admiral, speak; what shall I say?"
"Why, say, 'sail on, sail on, and on.'"
My men grow mutinous day by day;
My men grow ghastly wan and weak."
The stout mate thought of home; a spray
Of salt wave washed his swarthy cheek,
"What shall I speak, brave Admiral, say,
If we sight naught but seas at dawn?"
"Why, you shall say at break of day,
'Sail on, sail on, sail on, and on.'"
They sailed and sailed, as winds might blow,
Until at last the scared mate said:
"Why, now not even God would know
Should I and all my men fall dead,
These very winds forget their way,
For God from these dread seas is gone.
Now speak, brave Admiral, speak and say,"
He said: "Sail on, sail on, and on."
They sailed. And sailed. Then spoke the mate:
"This mad sea shows his teeth to-night.
He curls his lip, he lies in wait,
With lifted teeth, as if to bite;
Brave Admiral, speak but one good word.
What shall we do when hope is gone?"
The words leaped as a leaping sword:
"Sail on, sail on, sail on, and on."
Then, pale and worn, he kept his deck,
And peered through darkness. Ah, that night
Of all dark nights. And then a speck—
A light, a light, a light, a light;
It grew: a starlit flag unfurled:
It grew to be Time's burst of dawn,
He gained a world! He gave that world
Its greatest watchword "On: and on."

TABULATED SUGGESTIONS.

WHAT NEXT?

What Next was the subject of an excellent symposium in a recent number of the Union Signal. Twenty-four of our State Presidents answered the question that I sent out to all. Some of the most salient points in their responses were as follows:

"Secure the attention of the average woman; lay down a course of study demonstrating the points most needful for effective legislative work." "Let leaflets be compiled for use in local Unions, containing the best laws relating to women and children, to temperance and education."

"Let each State Union provide a leaflet embodying existing statutes of its own commonwealth."

"Tell the story of the White Ribboners—nothing rouses the people like that."

"We need some plan which shall keep Unions at work after they are organized; some plan which shall be self-operative and in itself life-sustaining to the Union. We need a better financial scheme, for lack of funds causes lack of energy."

"Urge every son to vote at least once in his life as Mother wishes."

"Start a new Crusade for the Christian vote of the nation."

ORGANIZATION.

We are in special need of new recruits to go out and organize our work. We ought to have Corresponding Secretaries in each local union who are floated financially as a return for their work. I sincerely hope that this convention will make such a declaration, urging our local unions to have paid secretaries;

Is practiced by many people who buy ... cles of food because cheaper than standard goods. ... infants are entitled to the best food obtain- ... It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" ...rand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate MANAGER.

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

this would open to thousands of well-intentioned and well-taught young women beautiful and noble avocations. The way to find the women most fitted thus to help us would be to do as the foreign missionary women are now doing: namely, visit schools, seminaries, and colleges, speaking before girls and young women, showing them what a broad field there is in the W. C. T. U. for the noble and earnest-hearted who feel in themselves the power to organize, to speak, and to work up the separate departments of which there are now about fifty in our great society. This is done so far as practicable by our untiring General Secretary of Young Women's Work, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, but she ought to have at least a score of helpers in this department, which is as attractive and helpful as any woman could desire.

We especially need to strengthen our work among the colored people. We need speakers and organizers, and I hope the convention will instruct the Executive Committee to give careful consideration to this field of vital importance, not only in the South but everywhere.

We should, I think, designate a certain number of National Organizers, and set aside an organizing fund, leaving presidents of States to select from the list such as they think have proved themselves most efficient in securing new unions and strengthening old ones, and who have rendered explicit account of their work according to our rules, by filling out the blanks sent them by our corresponding secretary.

This Convention might well provide for a World's Committee on Reforms which should have as its members the presidents of the different philanthropic and reform societies of women throughout the world, carrying on its business by correspondence, so that the different departments of the one great host might thus keep in touch and help each other on.

LECTURE BUREAU.

The Woman's Lecture Bureau should be broadened to include, not only our own country but the world, and varied in its clientele to the largest extent possible, consistent with our rules and purposes.

CREDENTIALS.

In view of exigencies that have arisen, it is recommended that only speakers who have received credentials from presidents of National Societies at home shall be received by other nations. This is essential to a wise reciprocity of work and workers.

KINDERGARTEN.

It is a thousand pities that the W. C. T. U. does not more largely make itself a felt force in the establishment of the free kindergarten. What we hope is that it shall become an integral part of the public school system of America as it is already in England. We should try to bring this about wherever practicable and if we fail should found white ribbon kindergartens.

JUVENILE.

The recommendation for a change in our Constitution which shall declare a basis of representation for the Loyal Temperance Legion at our National Conventions, meets my warmest approval. When our senior grade L. T. L's. have shown their ability to conduct State Conventions of their own in Wisconsin and Pennsylvania with a grace and dignity that we, their elders, might well emulate, it is time we invited them to the annual gatherings of the great family circle to which they belong.

The journalistic missing link between children and "grown-ups" seems to have been found at last through the ingenuity of our juvenile leaders. That bright little magazine, The Advance Guard, bridges the difficulty; by all means if you have not seen it send for a copy to Miss Alice M. Guernsey, W. C. T. U. Temple, Chicago, and introduce it among your boys and girls of larger growth.

We have been strongly urged this year to publish once annually, a special number of the Union Signal for the Y Society, and a special number for the Loyal Temperance legions. After due consideration this seems to me desirable; it will not create an inconvenient precedent because these two great societies are branches of the National, and should have special hearing through our great organ. We should be glad to issue one number annually for each of the departments of work, but with the two already suggested it would take up every week in the year, which of course would never do, and we cannot make distinctions among the departments.

Y. W. C. T. U.

The Y societies can engage in no more helpful enterprise than to form Working Girl's Clubs. Miss Grace Dodge, of New York, has perfected this form of organization, so that we have only to employ her plans and methods. One of my pleasantest evenings of the last year was spent in attending and addressing the united clubs of Working Girls in Massachusetts. It is interesting to notice some of their subjects of debate on the year's programme: I will enumerate them for their suggestiveness:

Has a woman the right to earn money when she is supported by her father or husband? Shall we call ourselves ladies or women? What do we mean by marrying well? Sensible and healthy dress. How to talk correctly and well. Domestic service. Is the influence of the theatre good or bad? What is the cause of low wages? Historical places in our own city. An evening of proverbs.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

The School Savings Bank has been wisely, as I think, developed into a separate department of work. If the children of the nation could but be helped by their teachers to see the advantage of saving their pence for future use, rather than spending them for confectionary often tainted with alcoholics, it would be an immense total of gain for the nation from the standpoint of finance, and many a boy who squanders his money for cigarettes could be reached with the inspiration of becoming a proprietor when no other argument would in the least avail.

LITERATURE.

White-ribbon literature is making rapid gains. Our new Superintendent, Mrs. F. H. Rastall, reports the most encouraging patronage, much larger than we have usually enjoyed, although it has always been in its totality immense. We have now a World's Committee on white-ribbon literature, Lady Henry Somerset, Chairman, and Miss Guernsey, Mrs. Rastall, Miss Pugh and the President as her associates. Some admirable leaflets have been issued in England, of which specimens have no doubt reached you, and vastly more will be done in the year that is before us.

THE TOBACCO QUESTION.

Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, 4119 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo., is our specialist in the study of the tobacco problem. Those who have sons and brothers who are falling into the deteriorating habit of the use of nicotine, will do well to write her for advice as to the best reading to be placed in the hands of their tempted and misguided friends. There is now a great variety of excellent literature on this subject, but I wish specially to mention a book entitled "The Tobacco Problem," written by Meta Lander, and published by De Wolfe, Fiske & Co., 365 Washington street, Boston. It would be good work for our local unions to secure the admission of this book into libraries of all kinds.

SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Miss West has an admirable idea, which I will quote from a recent date.

Now for a plan I have for a session of the World's School of Methods. It is that we should hold a Methods, School in Chicago and have it include the time of the World's Temperance Conventions. It seems to me that each would be a valuable object lesson for the other. We should, I think, have half-day sessions in which the departments were brought out each by a leading specialist in attendance for that purpose.

Let us arrange to carry out this valuable suggestion if possible.

Let me emphasize the wish that we might establish in Chicago a school to train corresponding secretaries, or might persuade some existing institution to add such a course of study to its curriculum as would enable us to notify local unions, that we had trained secretaries, whose services they would be glad to secure. If we had one hundred such young women ready now, there would be places for them. May we not have a special committee appointed to bring before the convention a definite plan on this subject.

NATIONAL EVAGELISTS.

It has long seemed to me that our National Evangelists were not properly recognized in the general machinery of our work, and I hereby give notice of a suggested change in the constitution, by which National Evangelists, properly accredited and admitted, shall be members of the National Convention. We need the leaven of their presence and their consecrated power. One of my earnest desires is that we might have a school for Evangelists, in Brooklyn, N. Y., presided over by Miss Elizabeth Greenwood.

FRATERNAL DELEGATES.

Michigan has set a good example in not only appointing a State Superintendent of the relations of temperance and labor, but also in the appointment of fraternal delegates to the State Conventions of the various labor organizations. I hope that this may become universal, and that we may also send fraternal delegates to the International Missionary Union, held annually at Clifton Springs, N. Y., and to the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, inviting them to attend our meeting. I think we should do wisely to exercise the same sisterly spirit toward all State organizations, educational, ministerial, literary, etc., and by these means should accomplish an immense deal incidentally to bring about harmonious relations among groups formerly unacquainted with each other. Nothing, I am confident, would tend more truly to make us helpful in unifying the great forces of the world for God and home and every land.

NEW DEPARTMENT.

THE LOCAL UNION.

The only New Department of which I give notice this year is for the building up of the local auxiliaries. It we could put a capable woman at the head of the department of work for the local W. C. T. U., and this could be carried out into all our borders, we should find that this convention had not assembled in vain.

The local union is the unit of power, and by its success or failure everything in a movement which is now stretching out to every corner of the globe is determined. I am confident that one of the very best methods that could be employed would be, at all our Schools of Methods, Chautauquas and County Conventions, to have what we call a model meeting of the local union. We might introduce somewhat of the dramatic, letting the different officers act their parts, and going through all the detail of a monthly meeting of a local society. I wish our clear-headed Mary Allen West would write a leaflet on the local union, and that our thorough-going Mrs. Rastall would work up for it a circulation of 250,000 copies: it would mean more in the aggregate to our world-redeeming endeavor than a million of dollars in hand to-day. Efforts based on rendered reasons and work done according to a plan, with the spirit of God in every heart uplifted to receive it, and these make success in the truest sense certain,—and certainty is what we want.

The president of a local union might do a great amount of good by taking the newspaper with her to the local meeting, marking topics for query and discussion through the question-box or otherwise. The power of the human mind to resist knowledge is well nigh immeasurable, and we as women are not at home in our newspapers as men are, by any means. We need to read with more intelligence and care, and local presidents might do very much in five or ten minutes to cultivate a knowledge of great topics aside from those that specifically employ our thoughts, for he who knows no more than his work requires is after all a fragmentary worker.

PARLIAMENTARY TEXT-BOOK.

It is important that we should have a ten cent text-book of our own on parliamentary practice. The best one I know of up to date is that of Rev. T. B. Neely, entitled "Chautauqua Text Book of Parliamentary Practice." It is kept on hand, I think, at our publishing house, and until our own is prepared let me urge local officers to supply themselves with this little book.

DIRECTORY OF LOCAL UNIONS.

It would be helpful to our work in more ways than appear on the surface, if each State should issue a directory of its local unions. The Lecture Bureau could do much more effective work, also the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. But we have learned not to make these directories generally public because they are used for many purposes not germain to our association. They should be sent to the general officers, national superintendents, and the leaders of our national enterprises.

NATIONAL MINUTES.

The Minutes of our society seem to be in less and less demand, but they cost an immense sum every year. The question is, whether the money could not be better invested if the Convention should vote to set aside a sum equal to the amount spent for Minutes, to be used in strengthening and extending the local unions, and letting the Convention number of the Union Signal take the place of the bulky pamphlet, the postage of which is twelve cents in our own country, and twenty cents to foreign countries.

STATE OFFICERS.

The State Recording Secretary and the State Treasurer occupy two of the most self-sacrificing positions in our society; their work is endless, their recognition small, their pay a minus quantity. Permit the suggestion that they should have at least this much of a perquisite, namely:—that their tickets to the National W. C. T. U. Convention should be presented to them by the State society they serve.

CONVENTION DUTIES.

It is important that the floor should more steadily realize its privileges and duty toward the platform. I hold that it is incumbent on delegates to hlep the presiding officer more than they do, by calling time if it is not promptly called from the platform, and noting errors in the rulings of the President, and in every way gently and kindly holding her to her best. Promptness in making and seconding motions, in calling for the order of the day, in insisting that there shall be quietness in the delegations—would be of incalculable value to the Convention in the utilization of its time, and would make the presiding officer vastly more master of the situation than she can be unless steadily seconded by her associates.

NEW BY-LAW

I wish this convention might pass a by-law requiring that one-third of the number of Directors of the Woman's Temperance Publication house, one-third the number of Trustees of the Woman's Temple, and the Woman's Temperance Hospital, be appointed by the Executive Committee of the National W. C. T. U.

WORLD'S HAND BOOK.

Within a few months I hope to prepare a Hand Book of the World's W. C. T. U., embodying the best that we have learned or can devise about how to carry on our work.

SOMERSET W. C. T. U.

One of the most stereotyped mistakes of local workers is that, while eloquent and convincing appeals are made from the platform, they often allow the looked-for harvest of new names for the society to slip through their fingers by bad management. We do the same here at the National Convention; we are not at the top of our privilege: we do not begin to take the census of our audiences with the thoroughness that characterize the picket guard of the Salvation Army. No opportunity escapes them, no individual goes by any possibility unchallenged. It is this unwearied and minute persistence that has carried that great organization further toward the edge of humanity's great group than even we have gone. I wish the Convention might order a card envelope containing an invitation to join the Somerset W. C. T. U., which in the World's Society is to be the one great inclusive Union made up of men and women who do not belong to any local auxiliary, but who would like to be in somewise connected with us. The fees paid in by these members are to be divided pro rata among the States, and I would have an envelope reading something like this: "I . . . . of . . . hereby subscribe to the White Ribbon Pledge of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and enclose . . . . . as my membership fee. My post-office address is . . . . , and I should be glad to receive and circulate any literature that may be forwarded to me." These envelopes ought to fall "thick as the leaves of Vallambrosa," in every meeting held by us anywhere on the surface of the earth. Its harvest would be mighty in good will, good works, increased intelligence, and—last but not least, sinews of war.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

Let us pass a resolution at this Convention explicitly declaring that the W. C. T. U. endorses no business or speculation of any sort outside its own enterprises duly accredited by the convention itself.

RED LETTER DAYS.

We have kept pretty well to our Red Letter days this year, better perhaps, than ever before, though I do not think they have spread to the local unions of other countries, as was expected when the World's W. C. T. U. Convention set them apart.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

As editors we want a better quality of paper but it cannot be afforded at the subscription price of a dollar per year. Why not make it $1.25 or $1.50 for single subscribers. We want to issue fewer special numbers and carefully to guard, so far as our influence goes, against advertisements that negative the influence of this greatest among the woman's papers of the world.

SELF-DENIAL-WEEK, EXTENDING FROM APRIL 17TH TO 24TH.

I am confident that we could make of Self-Denial Week one of the greatest institutions of the W. C. T. U. But we do not yet work it up, and it is a divine law that where we have not sowed we shall not reap. The Salvation Army issues a special number of its magazine entitled All the World, and with the utmost ingenuity sets forth the meaning, purposes and advantages of Self-Denial Week. It strikes its keynote at £5, which is higher than I should feel that we could go as yet. I think one dollar is about what we ought to average. In a special issue of All the World a most interesting story is told of the work of a Salvation Army officer, then a statement is made or a question is asked, "Will you pay the expenses of an officer who will toil like the one of whom you have just read for a whole year? Will you deny yourself something to give him the opportunity of denying himself almost all things for the help of the world?" We might very appropriately paraphrase this by saying, "Will you give one dollar to put the Union Signal for a single year in a new home, or to send out so many pages of temperance literature, or to pay for so many bricks in the Woman's Temple, or the Woman's Temperance Hospital? About ten dollars will cover the cost of forming a new W. C. T. U. Will you be one of ten to form this group of loving mother hearts and hands, giving each one dollar?" It is plain to me that the self-denial fund has not yet reached its true status in the thoughts of our great host. Let me urge our treasurers from the largest nation to the smallest local auxiliary to stir their respective constituencies as they have never yet been stirred on the subject and see what can be done to quadruple the Self-Denial Fund in 1893.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION.

Prof. H. B. Adams of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md., said in reply to my suggestions of the incidental work I thought our local unions could accomplish in helping to introduce University extension:—"The women of this country can win success in all local experiments for higher popular education. They can best do the work of local organization and can best enlist public sympathy and social support." I am confident that in the development of this grand idea we are in a position to be most helpful. Whoever brings the young people of a town or village within the sound of a voice that can tell them of the "great fascinating far-off world" in its history, science, inventions, poetry, art,—has helped to keep them from the baser pleasures whose temptations are spread like a net for them on every side. Hospitable hearted, minded and handed as the white-ribboners pre eminently are, this suggestion is simply thrown out for their consideration.

LANTERN MISSION.

I have believed for a long time that if we would keep on hand magic lantern slides illustrative of every phase of our work that can be pictorially shown, interspersed with slides representing famous persons and places, offering an assortment of these to the local unions that would get a certain number of subscribers to our paper, we should be doing a double work that would result in great good. Our local unions would be glad to give dime entertainments with this outfit, the teaching of the entertainment itself would be most helpful, the money received would aid them in their work, and the Union Signal going into new homes would be steadily preaching the White Ribbon missionary gospel.

NEEDLE-WORK GUILD.

This year has come to me the knowledge of the Needle-work Guild of America, the General Secretary of which is Miss F. B. Hodge, 2040 North Twelfth Street, Philadelphia. This Guild is modeled after a society in London founded by Lady Wolverton and has many branches in America. Its object is to furnish new, plain, suitable garments to meet the great need of our hospitals, homes, and other institutions, and to form a channel in which all may work together in unity. It is obligatory for all members to provide two or more new articles of useful clothing. This is an outlet for the work of those who might not, perhaps, be able to work in other ways; those who knit may be specially helpful in this line, for which reason thinking of our elderly members, I have given an outline of the plan, which seems worthy of attention and co-operation.

PUNDITA RAMABAI.

I cannot too strongly urge my sisters to help forward the philanthropic work of Pundita Ramabai to the utmost of their power. I am in frequent correspondence with those who are devoted to her school, which is constantly growing and improving, and concerning which any can learn who will write to Pundita, as we love to call her, at Poona, India. Are there not many who will form a Ramabai circle of ten or more securing from each a dollar a year to help lift the high caste Hindoo widows to the level of human kindness and opportunity? Mrs. Judith W. Andrews of Boston, Chairman of the Executive Committee, is a dear friend of mine, and from her I have learned the situation, which is one of constantly growing encouragement. Nearly thirty-six thousand dollars have been received from the Ramabai circles: nearly fifteen thousand dollars from individuals. A building has been bought and furnished and what is now necessary is to keep the interest up to such a point that the needs of the school will be supplied and its capacities for usefulness steadily enlarged. Remember our beloved Ramabai in your prayers. It is stated in our religious weeklies that a great reinforcement of divine power came to this noblest and greatest of Hindoo women through the preaching of Dr. George Pentecost, the well-known American Evangelist, who has been working in India for a year or two past.

Is practiced by many people ... cles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate ... MANAGER.

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. BASTALL. All of Chicago.

CRUSADE ANNIVERSARY.

We are so busy that we might easily overlook the significant fact that "1893" numbers twenty years since the Crusade. I remember esteemed ladies of our movement who early predicted that this whole work "would be completed in twelve years." We all know better now, for the argument of events, the logic of defeat have schooled us. I wish that this Convention might plan a great camp-fire for the White Ribbon army round the world, to be held as near the Crusade date in 1893 as possible. We all know that December 23rd, that day of days in our chronology on which the first Crusade band bridged forever the distance between the home and dram shop with their blessed feet, is not the best time for our commemoration, for it was the world's new Christmas gift, that white gospel of purity and peace, only a fresh and holy strain out of the endless anthem sung by our Redeemer's conquering host. But the event must be signalized on a date that will best avail for all great purposes. What a thought is that! How full of romance, pathos, good-will to men, the twentieth celebration of the crusaders' earliest march! In these years the banyan tree of the W. C. T. U., always throwing out new and faithful branches, has grown and spread until its motherly shelter is now in every land. But if we move according to our light, what shall we be when twenty more electric years have passed with the momentum of the twenty on which we look back "sorrowful yet rejoicing."

Again, and yet again, comes from our general officers, the advice to set apart a fund for the South, for the new North-west, and especially for the women's free State, Wyoming. Close up the columns, concentrate the forces at these strategic points, and march on as good soldiers who have endured hardships without the camp, while, heaven be thanked, there has been love within. Now, though this last can truthfully be said, we can not shut our eyes to the spectacle of some temperance people on this planet who employ their time in hindering each other rather than in helping on the cause. To some extent, in every country, this is true and grows out of the humanity of the saints and the inhumanity of the sinners. Perhaps the less said about it the better, and more or less we have this miserable friction in the machinery of church and philanthropic guild, and we shall have it always in this world full of children on the way to being cherubs. We must meet it as best we may; emphasize it as little as we can; strengthen the "things that remain," and above all, throw out the life-line of the white-ribbon into every Nation, State, town and village on the globe. This we have well begun to do, and the moving stream, though somewhat muddy, shall clear itself again by its own onward force, whose impulse is in Heaven. The women of the Crusade, our revered and ever more-beloved forerunners stand yonder on the white hills of faith. While their memory lasts we need not lack for high ideals. Let us follow where they lead, with love toward men and faith in God.

APPENDIX.

TABULATED STATEMENT OF WOMEN'S PROGRESS—1891-92

Religious:

M. E. Church completes Plebiscite giving women ecclesiastical liberty, sixty-two per cent. vote in favor. Majority of pastors do the same. General Conference at Omaha, May 1, 1892, votes for plan by which women are practically certain to be enfranchised in general conference.

Methodist Protestant General Conference at Westminster, Md., has declared that the women delegates are eligible to ordination and to fill the office of delegate.

The General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Memphis, Tenn., May, 20, recognizes the validity of the election of women as elders or presbyters.

The woman question has been discussed also in Southern Baptist Convention, the Episcopal Convention of the Diocese of Mars, and other religious bodies, Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Western Michigan has unanimously given women suffrage in the election of parish wardens and vestrymen.

General Assembly of United Presbyterians in session at Pittsburg, Pa., has given the Woman's Missionary Board representation and a vote in the Assembly on the same footing as other boards.

One of the most influential churches in London has formed a choir of women arrayed in gowns and surplices, after the order of the Episcopal Cathedral choristers.

At the Friend's yearly meeting in Westminster, London, the question of woman's suffrage was brought forward as a great moral issue, for the first time, in the spring of 1892.

Political.

Women given seats for the first time as alternate delegates in National Republican Convention.

Woman Suffrage bill has passed both houses in New Zealand at last accounts, awaits only the signature of the governor.

Women factory inspectors formed an International Association at Hartford, Conn., in September.

Women vote this fall in New York for first time for state officers and county school commissioners.

English women have entered more largely than ever before into the political canvass.

Women have spoken before the Republican National Convention, People's, and Prohibition Party, also some women have been placed on the Executive Committee of these parties and their platform committees.

H. Martin Williams, of Missouri, one of the Presidential electors (Dem.) and also the reading clerk of the legislature is advocating Woman's Suffrage on the stump.

Ontario legislature at the last session empowered law society to admit women to study and practice of law.

September 8th, women voted for the first time in Mississippi on the stock law question, whether cattle shall be fenced out or fenced in.

College girls generally discussing politics and taking sides on the Presidential question.

Iowa, Rhode Island and other state societies have put into their plans of work the enrollment of suffragists (men and women) to influence the election of legislators in favor of Woman's Suffrage.

In New York women have been empowered to vote for county school commissioners.

Educational.

June 12, School Board, St. Paul, ordered equalized salaries of school teachers, also supervision irrespective of sex.

College girls have won honors everywhere. The Sargent prize of $100 offered by Harvard College for the best metrical translation of an ode of Horace, has been won by a young woman student of the Boston Annex.

April 6, in Joliet, 644 women voted for and elected a woman school trustee.

Women's days at state or county fairs and at Chatauquans, have drawn great audiences and awakened deep interest in woman's suffrage. At the New York Chatauqua, after an address by H. B. Blackwell, the audience voted almost unanimously in the affirmative.

Brown and Tuft's Colleges have become co-educational, and one-third of the students of the new Chicago University are women.

In England women have been admitted as Fellows in the Royal Geographical Society. It has been unanimously agreed henceforth to admit women Fellows on the same terms as men.

Mrs. John Logan has undertaken to raise one million dollars for a National Co-Educational American University for the benefit of women students.

Post graduate department at Yale between 20 and 30 women registered.

Mrs. Craig is a candidate for Minneapolis school board this fall; she is nominated by Republican Prohibitionists and Populists—not by Democrats.

Mississippi Valley U. S. Conference in Des Moines in September, was a great success; delegates from 14 states.

Several Greek letter fraternities in colleges admit women as members.

Literary.

The opening ode at the World's Columbian Exposition was written by a woman, Miss Monroe, and read by a woman, Miss Le Moyne.

Philanthropic.

Progress in employment of police matrons in Portland, Providence, Boston, Buffalo, New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans, San Francisco, Cambridge, Lawrence, Lynn, Lowell, New Bedford, Fall River, Worcester, Springfield, Holyoke, Massachusetts, Nashua and Manchester.

Miscellaneous.

The equal participation of women in all the privileges and powers of the World's Columbian Exposition.

Bycicling is generally recognized as a perfectly legitimate exercise for women.

Women serve as honorary pall-bearers at Whittier's and other funerals reported by the press.

Call and examine the different supplies in the lecture room, at the headquarters of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and stay long enough to leave your subscription to the DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The executive committee, composed of the five national officers and forty-eight state presidents, have held five sessions previous to the Convention, one being a joint session with the board of superintendents. By unanimous request, Lady Henry Somerset has been present at most of the meetings. A number of new members were present for the first time, among them being Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, of Wisconsin; Mrs. M. L. Cummins, of Montana; Mrs. E. A. Hill, of Florida, and Mrs. Cranmer, of Dakota. It was voted to send the following telegram to President Harrison:

Appreciating the aloneness of your bereft heart, the executive board of the National W. C. T. U. in Denver assembled, extend to you, the Chief Executive of the Nation, their tenderest sympathy in this hour of separation from your life-long companion.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, President.
MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Rec. Sec'y.

Mrs. Forbes, of Connecticut, was appointed sergeant-at-arms for the platform, and Mrs. Hoffman, of Missouri, Mrs. Martyn, of Maryland, and Miss Hay, of Indiana, the same for the aisle. It was decided to take a collection during the session for the sufferers from the great Newfoundland fire last summer, the same to be distributed through the W. C. T. U. of the Province.

The following committees were appointed to present a desirable plan for the representation of the W. C. T. U. at the Congress of the World's Columbian Exposition: Mrs. Stevens, chairman; Mrs. Hoffman, of Missouri; Mrs. Hitchcock, of Nebraska; Mrs. Dunham, of Iowa, and Mrs. Goodale, of Louisiana. The committee on ways and means for a Mrs. Leavitt fund are: Mrs. Lathrap, of Michigan; Mrs. Campbell, of Wisconsin; Mrs. Burt, of New York; Mrs. Reese, of W. Washington; Mrs. Bourne, of New Jersey; Mrs. Munnell, of Kentucky, and Mrs. Fessenden, of Massachusetts.

It was moved that the children appear promptly at two o'clock, Saturday, before the Convention, to be addressed by Mrs. Rice, National superintendent of juvenile work.

The following resolution was offered by Mrs. Lathrap:

Resolved, That the executive committee of the N. W. C. T. U. request Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt to write a book treating of life in the countries she has visited, under such form as would be covered by the title, "Woman and child-life as I have seen it in other lands," and that we will do all that is possible to make the book a success.

It was decided to hold a delegated session in Chicago, in connection with the World's W. C. T. U., at such date as shall be decided upon by the general officers, with the understanding that free entertainment will be an utter impossibility. This meeting will take the place of the regular annual gathering for 1893.

The report of the committee of the testimonial fund to Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt was as follows:

First—We recommend that a National fund be created to be called the Mary Clement Leavitt Fund.

Second—That each union be asked to contribute one dollar or more to the fund.

Third—That this fund be a permanent one, to be placed in the hands of a board of trustees, the interest to be paid to Mrs. Leavitt annually during her life-time.

Fourth—That the amount paid to Mrs. Leavitt yearly be not less than $600, and if the interest does not reach that sum, the amount shall be made up from the principal.

Fifth—That the subsequent disposition of this fund be placed with the executive committee.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The new White Ribbon Hymnal, by Miss Anna Gordon will be used throughout the Convention. A supply of these hymnals will be found in the lecture-room. Convention price, 25 cents.

The Daily Union Signal will be ready each evening instead of each morning, as in years past. It should enter every home in Denver, and as many homes throughout the land. Subscribe for yourselves and send to your friends. Price for five days, 25 cents. Subscriptions taken in the lecture-room of the Trinity church.

CALL AT

HEADQUARTERS

OF THE

WOMAN'S

Temperance Publishing Association

IN THE LECTURE ROOM,

TRINITY CHURCH,

For Books, Leaflets, Souvenir Spoons, Etc.

FULL SUPPLIES ON HAND.

F. H. RASTALL, Manager.

Is practiced by many people the ... cles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Woman's Land Syndicate ... MANAGER.

P. S. We refer by permission to JAS. B. HOBBS, President Commercial Loan and Trust Co.; Gen. SINGLETON, President Total Abstinence Life Association; Miss ESTHER PUGH, Mrs. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Mrs. F. H. RASTALL. All of Chicago.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

VOL. VII. DENVER, COLORADO, OCTOBER 29, 1892. NO. 2.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

Price, Five Issues, 25 Cents.

Frances E. Willard, } Mary Allen West, } . . . . . Editors-in-Chief
Lady Henry Somerset . . . . . Contributing Editor
Margaret A. Sudduth . . . . . Managing Editor
Mrs. Harriet B. Kells . . . . . Office Editor

Mrs. F. H. Rastall . . . . . Business Manager

Christus Consolator.

BY ROSSITER W. RAYMOND.

[For all White Ribboners who have suffered loss of loved ones since last Convention.]

Beside the dead I knelt for prayer,
And felt a presence as I prayed.
Lo! It was Jesus standing there.
He smiled: "Be not afraid!"

"Lord, Thou hast conquered death, we know.
Restore again to life," I said,
"This one who died an hour ago."
He smiled: "She is not dead!"

"Asleep, then, as Thyself didst say,
Yet Thou canst lift the lids that keep
Her prisoned eyes from ours away!"
He smiled: "She doth not sleep!"

"Nay, then, tho' hap'ly she do wake,
And look upon some fairer dawn,
Restore her to our hearts that ache!"
He smiled: "She is not gone!"

"Alas! too well we know our loss,
Nor hope again our joy to touch
Until the stream of death we cross."
He smiled: "There is no such!"

"Yet our beloved seemed so far,
The while we yearn to feel them near,
Albeit with Thee we trust they are."
He smiled: "And I am here!"

"Dear Lord, how shall we know that they
Still walk unseen with us and Thee,
Nor sleep, nor wander far away?"
He smiled: "Abide in me!"

DENVER.

CLIMATE, TOPOGRAPHY, CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

Endowed with nature's most lavish gifts, sublime, beautiful and fruitful, in the choicest portion of this grand continent, lies Colorado, America's unrivalled sanitarium; the land of promise to the health or fortune-seeker. In increasing hosts they flocked thither and wonderingly feasted their eyes upon the grandeur of the stupendous mountain peaks and the rugged cañons pierced by sturdy streams whose ice-cold waters fell in romatic cataracts, chanting weird music in unison with the murmuring pines. The invigorating, elixir-like air laden with life-stimulating ozone, lent courage to the disheartened and health to the invalid, and here they gladly remained to share in the phenomenal growth and prosperity of the Centennial State.

Thus was Colorado's wondrous advantages and resources noised abroad, attracting the best, most progressive minds and the flower of humanity from all the world. By common consent, Denver, located nearly midway between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, was made its commercial, social and educational center.

As the "Queen City of the Plains" bursts upon the view, after the monotonous, dusty jaunt over the plains of Nebraska or Kansas, it may not particularly prepossess the wearied traveller in its favor. But like many another city, it certainly wins fast and life-long friends, as do many people, upon intimate acquaintance. When the full measure of the thrift, enterprise and culture of its people becomes known, words fail to adequately express the admiration and surprise of delighted visitors. It is certainly a magical city, for, although but thirty-three years of age, havine been born in 1859, Denver's population, including the suburbs, is 154,000. Those best versed in such matters claim that no city in the world compares with it in its complete system of rapid transit; that it has more churches and more fine schools than any city numbering ten times its inhabitants. The most magnificent business blocks and the finest theaters upon the continent; the most palatial homes, constructed from granite, marble, brick or terra cotta, finished and furnished with every convenience and comfort that refined tastes can suggest or require, are not surpassed by any city its size.

Solidly championing the permanent prosperity of this beautiful modern city are the rapidly multiplying manufacturing, mining and agricultural interests of this vast and favored state. Within a very short distance are the, as yet, but partially explored, limitless fields of coal, iron and the precious metals, the vast quarries of granite, marble and sandstone; the oil fields; the extensiye fruit and grain districts and the lands devoted to the cattle and sheep interests. Within easy access by means of the complete system of railroads, monuments to the daring projectors who introduced them into the seemingly impenetrable fastnesses, are the indescribably grand mountain trips.

There are more than one hundred active church organizations in Denver. Many of them support flourishing mission schools at remote suburban points. The edifices are models of beauty and usefulness and accentuate the fact that the city's population is largely composed of law-abiding, God-fearing people.

The Methodist was the first denomination to gain a foothold among the Protestants. In 1859, their missionaries were sent out from the Kansas conference to minister to the spiritual needs of the pioneers. The Presbyterian organization dates from 1860, their first church having been established by the Board of Home Missions in that year. The first Baptist church was started in 1863 in a "dug-out," located opposite the present site of the Tabor opera house. The Congregationalists organized in 1864, meeting in the old district court room on Larimer street. St Mary's, the Catholic Cathedral, on Stout street, near Fifteenth, was the first place of worship erected in the city and is still in use. The Methodists still lead, having twenty-four churches, while the Baptist, Congregational and Presbyterian each have one-half that number, the Catholic and Episcopal each eight, Lutheran seven, Christian four, United Brethren three, Jewish three, the Unitarian and Universalist one each; while the balance are of other sects.

The noblest and largest of all the church edifices in the city is Trinity M. E., corner Broadway and Eighteenth avenue, in which the present National W. C. T. U. convention is being held. It was built in 1883, at a total cost of $179,000, of that sum $30,000 was expended for the grand organ, pronounced one of the finest extant. The material is Colorado stone of a delicate gray tint; the auditorium seats 1,500, the choir loft 120; this can be increased to 300 on special occasions; the Sunday school rooms seat 1,200. The architecture is upon the Gothic order of the most pleasing description.

That there is nothing more worthy of an honest pride than Denver's public schools, is conceded by the best judges. Throwing aside methods that have been proven detrimental or useless by past experience, a system has been carefully selected embodying all that is best and most progressive in educational lines.

The proportion of children of school age in attendance at the several schools is unusually large. According to the enrollment of 1891, twenty-three thousand shared in the advantages of the public schools, and two thousand five hundred at the private schools and colleges.

The buildings are commodious and well arranged, constructed in accordance with enlightened ideas of comfort and hygienic principles. Many of the school buildings cost from $60,000 to $70,000.

The magnificent East Denver High School, occupying one entire block, bounded by Stout, California, 19th and 20th streets, has, it is said, but one rival in the world. Its cost was $325,000. The lower floor of the west wing is devoted exclusively to a free public library, museum, reading and writing rooms, while above is a fine large assembly room for lyceum purposes.

The University of Denver was founded in 1867, by ex Governor John Evans and others of the Methodist Church. Through the tireless efforts of its friends and promoters, it has become the most extensive educational institution in the Middle West. Its buildings were originally situated on 14th street, in the heart of the city, but the encroachments of business caused the selection of a fine suburban site, University Park, and the down-town buildfngs are being abandoned for the new ones. University Hall, an imposing lava stone building, costing $80,000 is already completed and in use. Chamberlin Observatory, the $50,000 gift of Hon. H B. Chamberlin, is prepared for the reception of a $22,000 telescope. It is being manufactured but will not be put in place until after it has been exhibited at the World's Fair. The Iliff School of theology, the gift of Mrs. Henry W. Warren, is rapidly being constructed of red sandstone.

June 6th, 1891, the Westminster University (Presbyterian) was incorporated. Several hundred acres of land were platted seven miles north of the post-office, and a beautiful edifice of Manitou red stone, to cost $150,000 is nearly completed. Other buildings will be added as required.

ELLA C. BENTON.

SUNDAY APPOINTMENTS.

Mrs. Mary McGee Snell will deliver the Convention sermon in Trinity church at 3 p. m. on Sunday.

Lady Henry Somerset will fill the pulpit at Trinity on Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap will fill the pulpit at Christ M. E. Church on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, and Mrs. Anna M. Hammer at 7:30 p. m.

Mrs. Trego, of Ohio, First Congregational at 11 a. m. At 7:30 Mrs. Frances Barnes, assisted by Miss Clara Parish, of Illinois.

Mrs. S. B. Reese, will fill the pulpit at the People's Tabernacle in evening.

Mrs. Wood, of New Jersey, will speak at Plymouth Congregational church at 7:30 p. m., and Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens at 11 a. m.

Second Congregational—11 a. m., Mrs. F. Ellis, of New Jersey. Mrs. Louisa Rounds at 7:30 p. m.

Railroad Mission—Miss Jennie Smith, 3 p. m., for railroad men.

Mrs. Marian H. Dunham will fill Asbury M. E. church pulpit at 7:30 p. m.

Central Presbyterian—Rev. Anna Shaw will preach at Broadway theater at 11 a. m., and at St. James M. E. church at 7:30 p. m.

S. Broadway Congregational—Miss E. Greenwood, of New York, 7:30 p. m.

Boulevard Congregational—Rev. Mary J. Borden, 11 a. m. Mrs. Mary Wheeler Sparks at 7:30.

Morrison Memorial—Mrs. C. B. Buell, 11 a. m.

Washington Presbyterian—Mrs. Forbes, 7:30 p. m.

R. R. U. Mission—Mrs. Irons, S. S.

St. Paul Universalist—Rev. Ada Bowles, 7:30 p. m.

W. Denver Congregational—Mrs. Sophia F. Grubb, 11 a. m. Miss Frances E. Griffin, 7:30.

Simpson M. E.—Miss Frances Ensign, 7:30.

St. John M. E—"Mother Stewart," 11 a. m. Mrs. Blair to S. S.

St. Paul's Eng. Lutheran—Mrs. L. H. Washington, of New York, 7:30 p. m.

Unity Church—Mrs. C. C. Hoffman, 11 a. m. At 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Calkins, Indiana, Mrs. Law, Michigan, and Mrs. Monson, Michigan.

Twenty-third Avenue Presbyterian—Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, 11 a. m.

United Presbyterian—Mrs. MaryMcGee Snell, 11 a.m.

People's Tabernacle—Mrs. Mary T. Burt, 11 a. m. Mrs. Sarah B. Reese at 7:30 p. m.

Calvary Baptist—Mrs. S. F. Grubb, 7:30 p. m.

Broadway Baptist—Mrs. H. S. Benjamin, 11 a. m. Miss E. L. Benedict, 7:30 p. m.

Emanuel Baptist—Mrs. Homer A. Nelson, 11 a. m. Miss Ida Clothier, 7:30 p. m.

Central Christian—Mother Stewart, 7:30 p. m.

Highland Christian—Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, 7:30 p, m.

Grace M. E.—Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, 7:30 p. m.

Fifth Avenue M. E.—Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, 11 a.m. Mrs. Cox, of Oregon, 7:30 p. m.

St. Paul M. E.—Mrs. Emma Bourne, 7:30 p. m.

Grand Avenue M. E.—Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, 11 a m. Mrs. M. E. Cheney, 7:30 p. m.

United Brethren—Mrs. Denney, 11 a m.

Arapahoe County Jail—Mrs. Griffith, 11 a. m. Mrs. Jane Kinney, 7:30 p. m.

Berkley M. E—Mrs. Houghton, 7:30 a. m.

Highland Park—Miss Emma Goodwill, 11 a. m.

Y Evening to-night.

Nebraska leads in Demorest contest work.

The music of the lady quartette was charming to the ear.

The chorus, under its able director, furnishes choice and delightful selections.

"We're at one with Colorado, we all want 'free silver.'"—CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

A letter of greeting was sent to our absent, but present-in-the-spirit friend, Susan B. Anthony.

Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman and Mrs. Louise S. Rounds were never heard to better advantage than last evening.

A free excursion to the famous "Loop" will be given the delegates by the hostesses of the local W. C. T. U. on Thursday.

Separate music programmes, outlining the numbers for each session, are provided. They are dainty in execution and design.

Conferences of juvenile workers will be held every morning during the Convention at 8 o'clock in the lecture room of Trinity church.

Mrs. John MacFarland comes all the way from St. John, New Brunswick, traveling five days and nights to represent the Canadian W. C. T. U.

Conspicuous among the decorations is the beautiful memorial presented recently to Miss Willard by the World W. C. T. U. of Great Britain.

Mrs. Cranmer's timely motion, to send thanks to the Denver Times for its splendid special issue and the free distribution of 600 copies among the delegates, met with unanimous approval.

Three hundred and seventy-nine delegates representing 42 states, 5 territories and the District of Columbia are in attendance. "We'll call it 380," commented Miss Willard, "that other little woman will come in."

The Y's are happy over the action of the Executive Committee, which has constituted Mrs. Barnes, formerly known as their National Superintendent, General Secretary of the Y branch, and a member of the National Executive Committee.

The overflow meeting at the Christian Church, Friday evening, was presided over by Mrs. E. L. Calkins, of Indiana, and addressed by Mrs. Mary T. Burt and Lucy Washington, of New York, and Mrs. V. F. Cox, of New Jersey. The music was excellent.

On Friday morning at the opening of the sessions the large convention church was too small to hold the great audience, which finally overflowed into Unity church. Dr. Anna Shaw took the packed meeting in charge, and Lady Henry Somerset spoke so winningly that the audience forgot its disappointment at not hearing Miss Willard's address.

[CONTINUED ON PAGE 7.]

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION CONVENTION.

The second session of the Convention met at 2 o'clock p. m., pursuant to adjournment; Miss Willard in the chair.

Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese conducted the devotional exercises, reading the third chapter of Malachi. Nearer My God to Thee was sung by the audience.

The minutes of the morning session were read by the Secretary and accepted.

The annual report of Corresponding Secretary was presented by Mrs. C. B. Buell, of Connecticut:

In years past I have tried to give you a resume of of the work done during the year, or sometimes to make a little variety I have given you a birds-eye view of the work that has been accomplished in a certain number of years, taking sometimes the first ten years of our work as an organizaton and at other times taking the first fifteen years, or perhaps taking out a decade from the very middle of our life as an organization, and placing before you at other times a comparative review of the temperance reform, giving you some little idea of how it stood years ago, and then showing the statistics of it at the present time, but some of you who are in this audience this afternoon, and perhaps most of you know that this to me, as well as very many others of our state and National officers, has been a sorrowful year and my heart has been engrossed as well as my head and my hands in thoughts of others. This did not come all at one time. The first of the year was given to watching beside a sick bed, and so was the last of this year, and these two reasons are the ones that I give you this afternoon as an excuse, if that is the word to use, why I have not come before you as in previous years, to give you some little birds-eye view of the work which has been accomplished, and to try and give it in a form that should be pleasing to you, more pleasing than, probably, that which I shall give you this afternoon, for I am just going to give you the bare bones of the report—the statistics. These have been arranged every year in a tabulated statement, but I am afraid that some of you, feeling beforehand that the figures were rather dry reading, have, perhaps, not perused the tabulated statement with any great amount of interest, and so this afternoon I shall take a little time and give you some items by States that I have upon this tabulated sheet, and I trust that they may not be entirely uninteresting to you, because they really show some of the work that has been accomplished by us during this last year, and I am very sure that you will be glad to know in the beginning and see in the ending that we have gone "on and on and on" this year, as we hope to do in the future, and more rapidly, perhaps, than we have been going this present year. If any of the States lack figures under the subheads which I shall give, you may set it down to my not having received those figures upon the blank form which I sent out for a tabulated statement from each one of the States. I will begin with Alabama, and give you the States in alphabetical order.

STATEMENT.

Number Local Unions	7,864
Membership	154,213
Honorary Members	18.860
Y Unions	759
Membership Y's	15,363
Honorary	2,878
Loyal Temperance Legions	2.887
Membership L. T. L.	159.299
Medal Contests	2,588
Coffee Houses	283
Schools of Methods	142
Money raised by Local Unions	$336.244 71
Money received by State Unions	123.879 49

Report adopted.

MISS WILLARD—We will sing "America," one verse of it, and it is for America that all these groups of faithful women are working, and these groups of little children are being trained.

Treasurer's report by Miss Pugh:

In the tabulated statement, page 23, there are two or three points I want to call your attention to as deserving of it. There is an increase almost all along the line, there is very little decrease anywhere. Twenty-nine states and territories make the increase this year of 500 members over last year. The increase is not so large as sometimes, but it is a helpful growth. Southern California changed their treasurer and the new treasurer did not exactly understand how the matter was, and did not tell all that it was entitled to. It would have brought California along very nicely if the report could have reached me earlier. Louisiana had the misfortune to have a treasurer who is an invalid. New Jersey shows an apparent falling off, although it is not really so. Ohio shows an apparent falling off; it is not really one. Last year's dues paid for new unions and some changes that are made there, did not come up to the whole sum. Oregon found it had paid more dues than it really should. I want to say this one thing, that I have worked very hard. I wish the women would learn that twelve months make a year, and how much more agreeable the showing would be all around if the books could come in on time.

I had forgotten one thing, the Auditor's report. The books were not audited in time to put it on the Treasurer's report as it usually is.

TABULATED REPORT.

Dues	$15,507.16
Donations	65.90
a World's	65.90
Temple	23,509.52
Hospital	213.61
Other purposes	2,222.76
Total Expenditures	$20,731.20

Report adopted.

MISS WILLARD—The Auditor's report as I understand it, is folded into the Treasurer's report.

Auditor's report accepted.

The National organizers were then called to the platform.

MISS WILLARD—Mrs. Buell will make the first report, and then will preside during the hearing of the report of organizers.

The chair was requested to mention that the cut flowers that are in the auditorium are are from the Southern California Delegation. We like to have these tokens as a gift from the different sections of the country.

MRS. BUELL, Superintendent of Organization: In giving this report I have left each organizer to report the work she has done as she may see fit herself. I want to say Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens is not with us, and the primary cause is overwork. The first organizer upon the list is Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin of Charleston, S. C., who is absent. She has done a good deal of work as well in the state of Georgia.

Mrs. Buell's full report will be given in the regular convention number of the UNION SIGNAL.

MRS. LUCY L. H. WASHINGTON, Port Jervis, N. Y.: I have a very short report to make, but I am here with five hundred women as constituents and am a part of them, not to report for them, as the superintendent has told you. Your appropriation has been made for new fields and progress has been made. At this time no work has been arranged, and so my work has been self-appointed and self-provided. A brief report is as follows:

Addresses	48
Woman's meetings	12
Parlor meetlngs	4
Children's meetings	6
Sunday Schools	8
Conventions	5
Unions organized	4

MRS. MARY READ GOODALE, Baton Rogue, La.—I have no report at all to make as a National organizer, except for the first two months of this past year. During that time I did a good deal of organizing in my own state. I had a little queer experience that I will give you, as the report is not very long. In the country unions of our state they have a day that they call decoration day, when they go to the country cemetery and decorate the graves and clean it all out once a year. I got up into that part of the country just abont this time; the minister making the appointment with me said, I don't believe you can get a crowd anywhere unless you speak in the cemeteries. I never had done anything like that, and I felt a little nervous, still when I stood up there where the graves were cleaned off and smooth, not a blade of grass, only a few flowers lay around, I got along very well; indeed I believe I converted some of the ministers in this cemetery, into the W. C. T. U. work. One of them saying, "The white ribbon is the greatest preacher in the world." One said, "Put the white ribbon on me, I want to be the greatest minister in the world." I believe I did some good work in South Louisiana during those two months.

MISS WILLARD—The introduction of our fraternal delegates should have come in before the report of organizers, but before introducing them, there is a gentleman here who cannot be detained long, Mr. Chas. W. Everett, of this church, representing the Christian Endeavor Society.

MR. CHAS. W. EVERETT—I presume the word "fraternal" means brother. In looking in your faces I see no brothers, but I see a whole room full of sisters. Our Christian Endeavor Society and Christian Temperance Union are sisters. We are working for the same cause, under the same banner, to save the same race, from the same curse. You are here for God, and we go under the Banner of Christ, for Christ and the Church. And the only word that I would say, is this: Let us be thus united under one flag, let us join our hands under that banner and work together until the last vestige of the saloon shall be swept from the face of the earth.

MISS WILLARD—I am glad that through our young brother we shall be able to send our sisterly greeting to the Endeavorers, not only of Denver, but of the United States, and the world.

On motion Mrs. Tyng and Mrs. Ellis were appointed to send such greeting on behalf of the Convention to the Golden Rule, in Boston, through which grand paper such greeting will go out to millions of our young brothers and sisters.

Soprano Solo—"Just as I Am," by Miss Mattie Miner.

MRS. MARY T. BURT—Dear Madam President, on behalf of the New York members, I have the honor and tue pleasure of presenting you these flowers, and I wish to say that although the flowers may fade and the fragrance go out from them, that the love and devotion which inspired this simple gift will ever grow bright and brighter forever. And, beloved President, hidden away among these flowers are the kisses and the love and devotion of twenty-two thousand women.

MISS WILLARD—The kisses of twenty-two thousand women! I do myself proud. And women of my native State of New York; and the biggest of all that we have in all the Nation; more local unions, more members than in any other. In my own native county of Monroe, the banner county, the last time I heard—and I did not know they were going to do it. I saw these beautiful flowers coming up the aisle, and I said to myself, "Who is going to get them?" and I thought it would be Lady Henry. I believe I will give it to her to keep in charge. I remember over at Boston they gave her a bouquet of beautiful flowers, and she gave them right to me. You won't thank me if I obscure your view of her, so I will put them between us, and we will share them together. Mrs. Mary T. Burt has been my comrade for many years and nothing she says will surprise me, but I shall look very carefully in those posies with their sweet smelling odor to find the twenty-two thousand kisses of the women of New York.

MISS FRANCIS GRIFFIN, Montgomery, Ala.—I presume I am called for to give an account of my stewardship and to tell what has been become of me all these months since you last saw me. I have been in good company part of the time. Part of the time I have meandered with the Democratic convention up in Chicago. Part of the time I went over with the G. A. R's. to Philadelphia. So I have meandered a good deal. I have not done much organizing. I am a good deal like the little boy who was found disorderly in school and the teacher said, "Come here, sir, and continue to do what you were doing. What were you doing?" "I was making Jacob's ladder with a string." "Then continue to do that, sir," and he answers, "I can't do that, but I can make a cat's cradle."

Now I have not been organizing so much, but I have been doing those other things. The first part of the year after I left you, I took hold with an earnestness that meant more than it accomplished, to see if I could not assist the women who were trying to establish a School of Methods in the Southern country, that should represent a sectional part grocer and druggist keep it.

of that country, which should be called the Southern School of Methods. I proceeded, speaking always first for the W. C. T. U. and then for the School of Methods, whose aim and end and purpose was to advance W. C. T. U. interests. I spoke at many state conventions in this interest. Later on in the year I came into the North feeling that the North needed building up along the same lines, and especially Mrs. Lathrap's magnificent state. I have devoted my energies part of the time to Mrs Lathrap's glorious state. Part of the time I have been employed in the state that owns Mrs. Rounds and Miss Willard, known as Illinois. So I have had a very busy year; I have been organizing where I could organize and speaking where I did not organize. At none of our meetings have we gone away fruitless. We have invariably had an expression of a better sentiment than when we came together, so that we may say that we had the fruits of our labors all along, and I believe that is as much as you want to hear from me this afternoon.

MRS. HELEN L. BULLOCK, of Elmyra, New York:—During the month of April, 1892 I was privileged to serve our cause in the State of Delaware, speaking at three County Conventions, organizing five new Unions, and trying to strengthing many old ones. We sometimes call this State "Little Delaware," but I assure you the white ribboners of that State, are women of large brains, large hearts and large purposes. In one of these towns I asked my hostess to become a member of our Union; she replied, "yes, I am now ready for this work; my little boy has converted me to total abstinence. He was dangerously ill last winter with pneumonia; our physician, a christian gentlemen and a temperance man, advised brandy as the remedy to save his life, but he positively refused to take it, quoting what he had learned from the teacher in school, in regard to the effects of alchohol on heart, brain and other organs. Fearing too much excitement, the doctor said: "I will try something else." He afterwards said he had never had a patient so ill with pneumonia, who lived without alcohol, and he had never one who made as good a recovery.

In May I began work in northern New York, organizing five new unions and strengthening many old ones. In one of the loveliest towns in the Adirondack mountains, where hundreds of consumptives go in search of health, I found a large number of Christain young men who dared live elsewhere. These, without exception, were following the advice of the physician at the head of the noted sanitarium, in taking ale, brandy or whisky daily. Some of them had left temperance homes and had never before tasted intoxicating liquor. They refused to take our pledge because of the practice, concientiously believing alcohol to be the indispensable remedy, but acknowledging that the habit was growing upon them. We told them of the wonderful work of our Temperance Hospital in Chicago, gave them Dr. Nathan S. Davis' lecture on alcohol as a medicine. and our hopital leaflets.

During the year I have given sixty-nine public addresses, held thirty-three parlor meetings, addressed seven county conventions, conducted six schools of methods, organized ten new unions, securing six hundred and nine active and two hundred seventy-seven honorary members, and have traveled seven thousand, five hundred and eighty-nine miles.

It has been my privilege several times to speak in the interest of a rescue home for erring girls, and I found in many places even the pastors of the churches were afraid to have that subject presented, lest those who are wrapping their robes around them and passing by on the other side should criticise. However, I found the people ready to receive this truth when properly presented.

I find wherever the Unions are weak and discouraged it is from a lack of knowledge of our work and a want of method in taking it up according to our wonderful department system. Where members all take their State and National papers, circulating our literature, working along our departments with superintendents to lead them, and wearing the white ribbon at all times, there we find the prosperous, growing Union, doing aggressive work for Christ and humanity.

On my way to Denver I visited Fort Russel, Wyo., and accepted an invitation to speak to the soldiers there; but it was a problem to know how to organize a band of soldiers into a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. However, I could not miss the opportunity to enlist those men in the cause of temperance, so organized a society called "The Army and Navy Temperance Union," with a badge of red, white and blue. There were thirty-two members, ond we adopted the Constitution of our Local Unions, changing the article providing for a vice-president in each church to a vice-president in each company.

MRS. MARY BYNON REESE—I made a flying trip through South Dakota late in 1891, organizing a promising Loyal Temperance Legion in Deadwood, visiting a number of unions and holding a very profitable and enjoyable meeting with the veterans at the Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs.

En route to the northwest, I re-organized the Union at Evanston, Wyoming, and on December 2, met with the ladies of Utah in Territorial Convention, when a permanent organization was effected under very favorable auspices.

In February I traversed a large portion of my own State, West Washington, where the work was crowned with wonderful success. Some remote, and until recently, almost inaccessible points were visited, unions organized and successful department work inaugurated. Eight new Unions are the result of the trip, 116 accessions to old Unions and Ys', and hundreds of pledges signed, with an L. T. L. of 100 members. During the present year West Washington has gained in membership twenty-five per cent. Other workers from our own ranks have aided largely in the success, with the help of our president, arranged for a very successful day at our Puget Sound Chautauqua Assembly.

The month of October has been spent in southern Utah, where new territory has been pre-empted and three Unions organized.

Have held meetings in Mormon tabernacles, had the co-operation of their bishops and president of stakes, and been most heartily welcomed by their women, some of whom have joined our organization, two being officers of a local union. Was privileged to represent the National in a fifteen-minute speech at a Columbian Temperance mass meeting held in the Salt Lake theatre, under the auspices of the Father Mathew Total Abstinence Society—a wonderful meeting in which Mormons, Catholics and the W. C. T. U., were represented by their respective speakers.

Utah has three delegates in this Convention. The work of organizing in Utah must be for the present of a missionary character, as these will be outside of the three largest places. Small returns financially.

SUMMARY.

Number of addresses	102
Women's meetings	52
Old Unions visited	45
Unions organized	22
L. T. L's	3
Recruits to old Unions	200
Annual meetings	6
County Conventions and counties organized	1
Y's	2

Visited schools, Indian Reservation, filled pulpits, held meetings in jails, visited from house to honse, and held parlor meetings, whenever and wherever possible.

MISS IDA CLOTHIER, Manitou Springs, Colorado—Just one year ago to-day, friends, when the name of your organizer among young women was called, there was a silence. That silence was not because your organizer did not want to be with you, not because of miles of travel between that organizer and you, but because she was lying helpless. But as far as she knew anything she had a longing desire to be one of you and there, between life and death when the word came to me that this great convention had paused and thousands of hearts had gone up in silent prayer for my recovery it seemed to me that a new lease of life came to me and I felt that I must reconsecrate my life anew, take up the work as I never had before. It came home to me that my life work was to mean more than it ever had before and out from that illness in answer to the prayers of you women and the prayers of many hearts that went up, and in direct answer to prayer, I was raised from that sick bed in an hour's time. I have been feeling more and more ever since, that surely, life must mean more. There must be an earnestness, an inspiration, that never has been, and so I bring you the report of ten weeks' work only, a week or two before I left my eastern home and about eight weeks work done in the West, for I am an adopted child of Colorado, at least I have adopted myself.

I have not organized a Y. Union. I have not done definitely Y. work, but I have gone wherever the invitation has come, and have done the best I could in talking at public meetings of all kinds believing that our young women everywhere are ready to take hold of this work. So forty-one talks have been given, two state conventions have been visited as well as one Christian Endeavor convention, that of Nebraska.

And so my work has simply been in reaching these people, has been, if possible, to make our girls have a different idea of life, to take more thought for others and think less of self, reaching out and up, constantly willing to take a stand that meant something; willing to sacrifice, willing to do from the "may I" of love even if they could not see the "must I" of duty; to learn that the only life worth living is the life hid with Christ in God.

Mrs Woodbridge read the notice of the illness of Mrs. Eva Higgins of Colorado, and by consent of the convention Mrs. Ellis prayed for the speedy recovery of Mrs. Higgins.

Miss Belle Kearney of Flora, Miss., being the next organizer, called for, the following telegram was read by Mrs. Tyng:

MISS FRANCIS WILLARD,

Cordial greetings to the Convention. Read Psalms 90, 8, 1.

BELLE KEARNEY,

Miss Kearney's report was read by Mrs. Washington.

MRS. DELLE H. COX—My work has been in Oregon, Washington and Idaho—the land of magnificent distances and beautiful scenery. But, alas, the foe we fight has thrown over this lovely scene his black pall. Hundreds of boys and young men have left their eastern homes and rushing to these western states drift into the legalized dens of vice and iniquity. Could you have seen what I have seen during my two years' work in this coast country, visiting the prisons and jails—finding even the boys, boys, boys—boys with bright faces, so young that the lips have scarcely parted from the purity of homes polluted and stained by rum and impurity, surely you would plead with the mothers in your eastern states to cling to their loved ones a little more closely till we help to lessen the fearful vices that destroy so many in the far west. I do not know that these evils are so much more prevalent in the west than the east, but the breaking away from all restraining influences of home, renders men, and especially young men, almost powerless before the temptations of legalized vice.

I give as the result the following summary of the year's work:

ADDRESSES:

Lectures in Oregon	59
" " East Washington	32
" " West Washington	7
" " Idaho	17
Total	115

MEETINGS FOR METHOD WORK:

Oregon	19
East Washington	24
West Washington	3
Idaho	8
Total	54

MEMBERS RECEIVED (INCLUDING HONORARY).

Oregon	174
East Washington	387
West Washington	55
Idaho	65
Total	681
New unions organized	13
Defunct unions resusistated	5
Loyal legions	2
No. of miles traveled	6974
" letters written	893
" postals "	103

Have also visited three state penitentiaries, three county jails and two insane asylums, holding services with the inmates of the prisons and jails. Have attended and assisted in three state conventions, and one school of methods.

MRS. E. A. BLAIR—I represent the children of our land. I have just spied the little cards as they are looped around the church and it reminded me of our State convention in Nebraska, where we had ten thousand of those little cards, and I hope when you go to the World's Fair you will appreciate and realize what it will mean to have two hundred and fifty thousand children, thus far, and more we hope by and by, trained to take up the work which we are doing, in the near future.

My whole time has been given the past year to the work either at my desk or in the field. I have spoken in eight different states, given eighty-one chalk talks, organized twenty-three Loyal Temperance Legions and two unions. I have held juvenile conferences at three Chautauqua assemblies and four W. C. T. U. conventions; organized one county L. T. L. and aided a new company at Fort Robinson, Neb, which is supposed to have the only union and L. T. L. ever organized at an army post. But it has its canteen, which is often so crowded that the soldiers climb over the shoulders of four lines of men to secure their drinks.

I have sent out a larger number of outline charts for making chalk-talking easy than in any previous year, receiving most encouraging reports of their usefulness. Postage for the year has been over $41, this including the Demorest medal contest work in Nebraska, my own state, where we have used 2,287 medals, 248 gold, 25 large gold, and three diamond medals, also furnishing a contestant for the Cincinnati and Denver diamond medal contests this year—the grandest record of any state thus far, though Illinois is close behind us. I have corresponded with most of the state superintendents, gathering all new plans and snggestions from them possible. This has developed a plan for a circular correspondence among national, state and local superintendents and organizers which if adopted will, we believe, prove mutually helpful.

This is the shell of my work, but I have gathered the following needs and suggestions: First, One great need is a more hearty co-operation from our executive officers in local, district and state unions. Second, We need more interchange of thought and plans for best methods. Third, More care in organizing is necessary.

Since we, as organizers, are expected to help in all three branches, the W's, Y's. and L. T. L's., should we not confer together at our National Conventions? Why not a board of organizers as well as superintendents. Let us enlist more than ever before the children's help in our various lines of work. For this year we should urge gifts to the Willard Fountain and World's Fair (cards as decoration,)—but let us not forget our Temperance Hospital.

This year our L. T. L's. ask us to allow them representation in our National Conventions. A few states have already done this with good results, and recommend it to the National. Two states have already organized and held L. T. L. Conventions. In my seven years' experience as an organizer I am glad to report 1892 as best of all.

It has been said the greatest mistake the Christian church ever made, was in depending upon converting souls, rather than training them from childhood to serve Christ—O, may this never be said of the W. C. T. U.

MRS. MAUD L. GREEN, Manitou Springs, Colo.—Has any one in this great Convention a doubt that that department of work which has to do with the little men and women of our Nation is the most, or one of the most important. I read the negative answer in your kindly faces. You all remember Columbus Day, not so very far away, and perhaps some of you may remember the district school on Friday afternoon, when father and mother and aunt laid aside the work of the day to go over and hear Johnny speak his piece, and perhaps some of you remember Johnny as he mounted the platform with that grave little air, and looked for a moment over the sea of faces, and then gave the words "Little Boy Blue——," and then hesitated. Oh, those faces so frightened the little fellow, but you know the interest that all those hearers had in him. Even as the little chin drooped upon his breast, and the words would not come, and the cows in the corn grew very much confused in the little fellow's brain, so it is with us. The interest we have in the children, and all that pertains to their good, is of vital interest, all that leads to their eternal welfare and the building up of character.

During the past six months I have visited five states for work and have given seventy chalk talks, have attended one state convention, two county conventions, and held sixty workers' conferences; written three hundred and fifty letters; distributed twenty-five thousand pages of literature and spoken perhaps to thirty thousand of our little men and women. My work has been varied not only in the hamlets but in the towns and in the cities, not only to the L. T. L.'s and to our Sunday schools but to missions, in the prisons and in the darker places of our country. Wherever I could find a boy or girl—some of you say "Why, do you find boys and girls in the prisons?" Yes, boys and girls in our prisons. How came they there, friends? What have we to do about it? That is the dark picture. Then comes before me the bright picture. In my work with the crayon I have seen little faces brighten, and then at the close of the meeting that which gives me most pleasure is the gathering of the little ones around the platform. They come forward to give me their hands, they come forward to tell me how interested they are and sometimes they come with floral offerings with the love of the children and all these things cheer me in the work.

Those things have been of great encouragement to me in my work during the past six months of this year. This is all of my report. I am looking forward to still greater work for the little people, but I have this note of praise to leave with you. During all the past year, with its dark times, with its hard work, with its exposure, the dear Lord has so kindly cared for me in body, soul and spirit. He has kept me in perfect strength and perfect peace. Bless his dear name.

MRS. BUELL—Mrs. Mary Jewett Telford, Denver, Colorado, is absent in New York. Mrs. Nora T. Gause, Kokomo, Ind., is absent. It is her work to teach the children kindness to animals.

MRS. E. NORINNE LAW, Le Roy, Mich.—Because of the fact that I feel that I have been sailing under false colors during the year, I desire to make a little explanation; I have not the time to gather much of a report; perhaps you will remember, however, I was placed on the list as a National organizer for young women. I have not done much. It is not my fault, however, that I have been sailing under false colors. My line happened to fall in other places; under necessity I was obliged to take the upper peninsula of Michigan, which comprises the Twelfth district of Michigan. They are mining towns. I can show you towns of two hundred inhabitants that have from twenty to thirty saloons, towns from six to seven hundred inhabitants, have from sixty to seventy saloons, and so on in proportion. Any one who undertakes to lead the poor unfortunate women of those parts have not very much time to spare to other parts. I have been doing all I could at the State convention at the upper state of Michigan to try the strength of the Union. I wish you knew more about it than you do know, what the women have to endure to hold up temperance in this state. I have not kept account of all the work done; I have addressed Sunday schools in various ways, have done what I have been called upon to do when in town. I have kept no account of these meetings; I have endeavored to push the work and have spoken for our National organization where ever I could.

MRS. BUELL—Mrs. Mary Marriage Allen, works among the colored women in Virginia. Mrs. Allen was given a roving commission; she is from England, but spends a part of the time in this country.

Mrs. WOODY—Mrs. Allen has been called home to England, because of a change in the management of the mission work in Charles Square. She has done good work among the colored people.

MRS. BUELL—Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper, of Philadelphia, is not present with us. I would like Mrs. Ellen R. Denny, who has worked a month in the Indian Territory, to come to the platform and give us a few words of her work.

MRS. DENNY—It was my privilege in the early Spring to attend the convention in the Indian Territory; I never met such earnest women as I met in that convention. When I tell you the cause you will know something of the reason. It was true, in ten days two saloons opened in every town of that territory. With willing hearts and praying to God to know what they should do, they sent out an organizer and thirteen unions were organized in a very short time. They were kneeling before God asking him what they should do. The agent of the supplies said he had written to the authorities and could get no response. He said he would resign the commission and start out with the march. You know something of the work of Mrs. Stapler in this regard. I ask you brothers and sisters to pray for us; to pray that in every town there may be a Woman's Christian Temperance Union whose voice may be heard in every house and whose words may be heard not only in this territory but may be heard all over the land.

Reports of organizers approved.

MRS. EVANS of Kansas—I had not expected this privilege. I am really glad I have had the privilege of working in the state of Wyoming, the only state that has the star represented in the corner of the room. It made me feel very proud indeed. The question is asked, "If these women have the ballot why have they the American saloon? We answered in defense: "In Wyoming, we have only one woman for every five men, and our towns are sometimes one hundred and fifty miles apart. One woman can not do the work of five men. I have ridden all night in a stage coach, all the next day in the train, and the next night in a stage coach to make an appointment. We have organized in almost every county, and the best women in the country are interested in this work.

The following cablegrams were read:

Manchester, England.

TO LADY HENRY SOMERSET:

The women at Alliance send greeting and love.

MAYORESS OF MANCHESTER.

TO LADY HENRY SOMERSET:

The Alliance send greetings through you to the W. C. T. U. We co-operate with you in all efforts to elevate humanity.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON,
On behalf of the Annual Conference of the Alliance.

From World's W. C. T. U. to the National W. C. T. U. Convention, Denver:

Greetings from loving English sisters—Joshua 1: 9.

MISS WILLARD—Mrs. Mary C. Burt, chairman of courtesies has brought a list of fraternal delegates. The chair will call them forward in the order in which the names are given.

MRS. CAREY N. DOVE of Denver, representing the Grand Dodge, an independent order, said:—I want to say we are working to the same end as the W. C. T. U., the prohibition and the temperance work.

MRS. ANNIE STEELE, of Denver—Sisters, Mr. Powderly authorizes me to bring greeting of the Knights of Labor, to this convention, which I gladly do. I have been a member of that order for nine years, and a member of this union for fifteen years, and know we are very near alike and I know the work is to save mankind,—of both organizations, and in my feeble way I would like to say that the only trouble with the two organizations is that we do not understand each other as we should.

This courtesy helps, and I only hope that we will get better acquainted. Some of the Knights say to me—You women folks take all our liberties from us. I want to impress upon you that there is one way by which you can help on our work and that is the Saturday half-holiday. I think the W. C. T. U. can do a great deal to help us out to establish this Saturday half-holiday.

DR. ANNA H. SHAW: Dear Sisters: When Susan B. Anthony sent me my credentials I thought I would have to say something of suffrage, and when I saw the white ribbon on one side and the yellow on the other and came here and found the ladies with the white ribbon and the yellow I thought we had no need longer to send greetings to the W. C. T. U. We are one. I speak these words for Susan B. Anthony.

It was moved and seconded that greetings be sent to Susan B. Anthony.

REV. MR. BLANCHARD, pastor Second Congregational Church, Denver: I suppose I owe my seat on the platform to the kindness of a member of my church, who is a prominent member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, one whom we honor and one whom we have licensed to preach the Gospel. I am not here to make a speech. Of course it is an honor to sit here and listen, and it will be an honor for us to listen to two of you on the coming Lord's Day.

The corresponding secretary read the committee on resolutions as follows:

COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

Arkansas	Mrs. Julia A. Clark
North California	Mrs. Henrietta Shelton
South California	Mrs. Abbie Lee Button
North Carolina	Miss Ida Vail
South Carolina	Miss Anna C. Aston
Colorado	Mrs. S. B. Pickett
Connecticut	Mrs. C. H. Fitzgerald
North Dakota	Mrs. Elizabeth Preston
South Dakota	Mrs. Emma P. Meyers
District of Columbia	Mrs. Almea V. Davis
Florida	Mrs. E. A. Hill
Georgia
Idaho	Mrs. R. Mitchell
Illinois	Miss M. C. Brehm
Indiana	Mrs. E. L. Calkins
Indian Territory
Iowa	Clara A. Stephens
Kansas	Mrs. S. A. Thurston
Kentucky	Mrs. Frances Beauchamp
Louisiana	Mrs. Emma A. White
Maine	Mrs. L. M. W. Stevens
Maryland	Mrs. Lewis A. Dill
Massachusetts	Mrs. Blakemire
Mic igan	Mrs. Jennie Voorhees
Minnesota	Mrs. Fannie L. Ames
Mississippi	Mrs. Curlee
Missouri	Mrs. Kate Newton
Montana	Mrs. Bella Barnes
Mebraska	Mrs. C. H. Walker
New Hampshire	Mrs. C. W. Wallace
New Jersey	Mrs. V. F. Cox
New Mexico	Mrs. L. N. Higgins
New York	Mrs. Lucy H. Washington
Ohio	Miss Emma L. Goodwell
Oklahoma	Mrs. W. G. Miller
Oregon	Mrs. Narcissa W. Kinney
Pennsylvania	Mrs. H. C. Russell
Rhode Island	Mrs. G. F. Martin
Tennessee	Mrs. J. D. Allen
Texas	Miss Jennie Dixon
Utah	Miss Ida Day

Vermont . . . . . Mrs. M. E. Bell
Virginia . . . . . Mrs. Ella B. Charles
Virginia West . . . . . Mrs. Jennie Engell
Washington East . . . . . Mrs. M. E. Beach
Washington West . . . . . Mrs. E. Russell
Wisconsin . . . . . Mrs. M. F. Hanchett
Wyoming . . . . . Mrs. Wilhelmina Brown

After singing the temperance doxology the the meeting adjourned with the benediction, pronounced by Mother Stewart.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment at 7:30 P. M., with Miss Willard in the chair.

The devotional exercises were in charge of Mrs. Mary T. Burt of New York, who read the 33d Psalm.

Singing, "How Firm a Foundation."

MISS WILLARD—This is the evening for the addresses of welcome to the Convention and the responses to the same. This is the 19th year that we have been welcomed in different cities of the nation. I recall in later years the speech of Abram S. Hewitt, Mayor of New York City, in which he welcomed us in the Metropolitan Opera House, the speech of the Governor of Tennessee when we met at Nashville, and the Governor of Georgia when we more recently met at Atlanta. To-night we are to be welcomed by the Governor of the Commonwealth of Colorado, and I have the honor and pleasure to introduce Governor Rout.

GOVERNOR ROUTT:—Miss President, ladies and delegates: I only received my invitation to be present here to-night at 7 o'clock. I noticed in last night's paper that I was to be here to-night, but I thought it was one of those jokes that happens frequently in newspapers.

But I am delighted to be here to-night with you, and to look in your faces. I am a man, and my mother was a woman, and I am always happy when I am in the presence of the ladies. There is one thing I can say without preparation, and that is, that it gives me great pleasure to welcome such a distinguished body of women as you are to our young and beautiful state. I welcome you to everything we have, mountains thrown in, the light, health-giving air; I welcome you to our beautiful homes that were builded by sober men and are presided over by cultured and intellectual women, good women, temperance women. Ladies, we are building a young state, we are making society, we are building for the future, and we are delighted to have you here to help us start our young women and boys in the right direction. We will present you in the next twenty-five years with the grandest body of men and women on this globe. The climatic conditions and everything else are right; we never get tired; we are always looking ahead and going forward. That is the class of people we have; we are capable of doing a great deal of good or an immense amount of harm. We hope that your instruction and teachings here will help to build up and train our young people in the right direction.

If you could only vote now, we would have a good time. The fact is, I have been an advocate of woman's suffrage for twenty years, and I am not ashamed of it. You will never be able to accomplish this grand work you have undertaken until you are allowed the ballot; and if I had it in my power I would give every one of you the ballot before I left my present position. You are engaged in a great work; you have devoted and given your lives to the benefit and uplifting of the human race, it makes no difference of what country. We expect to make great improvements in this land, as we have done in the last quarter of a century. What has been accomplished in that quarter of a century, is simply marvelous.

I think when a man is done he had better stop. I am not much of a speech maker; when I ought to have been learning to make speeches I was shoving a jack-plane, and I am not ashamed of it, ladies, either. I am a good mechanic. My mother was a widow, was very poor, and she said to me, "John, if you try to be a man, you can be a man," and I have tried, and I am here just for what I am worth, serving the latter part of my third term as Governor of this young State.

Now I again, ladies, before I sit down, extend to you a most heart-felt welcome. I want you to take advantage of our air, and the beautiful scenery in the mountains, and of these beautiful homes that we have. President Harrison said to me once, "I judge the population by the character of its homes. Anybody that has money can build a business house, but you have to have culture and taste, and a little money, to make a nice home, and, if you have got a good wife, you are in pretty good shape." I thank you.

MISS WILLARD—I don't think we ever had any speech we liked any better than that.

GOVERNOR ROUTT—That is right. I am going to vote for you. (Laughter).

MISS WILLARD—We have had a welcome from a Governor with a good big head on his shoulders, and who has the manliness to say he used to shove the jack-plane. We are now going to be addressed by the Pastor of this church, who—I am going to get ahead of him and tell you—used to handle the trowel.

REV. ROBERT MCINTYRE—About two months ago I stood in famed Yosemite, by the side of Mirror Lake at dawn, gazing into that placid pool where every battlement and turret of Mariposa's mountain walls, was mirrored at our feet. Every dome and pinnacle hung pendulous in the void and we watched the sun rise over the shoulder of a mighty mountain. We saw down at our feet, first, a segment of color, then half the glowing disk of the sun. Then the full shield of Phoebus was hung on the highest horn of the mountain, We went from one terrace to another, till at last it seemed as if we were looking over the edge of time into eternity, and the soul shrank back. A lark rising from her dewy pass in the grass seemed to keep company with the soul, and with this cheery voyager we dared go deeper and deeper till the sun lit up all the place, and we heard the guide say, "now come here," and we went thirty feet along and saw the sun rise again. The same sun in the same pool, only that the view was broader and brighter. The guide hurrying us further along took us to another spot, where we had a third view, and so on till six times in thirty minutes, we saw the sun rise in the mirror at our feet, and then when the last grandest view of all was done, the great sun climbed the topmost height and drenched the valley with sunshine, and all was done.

There is a picture of the true Christian life. As we go through the years we get consecutive views of God. His glory shining into the soul, comes to us in various aspects, and we ought to feel every year that we have a new and a broader and brighter view of God.

No man should be able to pray the same prayer twice. No preacher should be able to preach the same sermon twice. Each year we should take a new angle of view and see new glory. In that mysterious hour which we call the hour of conversion, the glory of God shines into the soul and there we see the Saviour. The Christian forgets the thought of salvation and sees God as a great developer, slowly unfolding his wondrous plans through all the nations. First his song is,

"O Happy day that fixed my choice
On thee, my Saviour and my God."

That fact established, he rises to the next and sings,

"God moves in a mysterious way,"

and by and by he learns that God is not only a Saviour but a Father, and not only a Father but a worker, and invites to be co-laborers with him, until at last comes the last view, when nigh unto death he sings,

"I know I am nearing the heavenly ranks,
Of friends and kindred dear,
For I brushed the dew on Jordan's banks—
The crossing must be near,"

and then the full glory of God shines into his soul.

These women that come from various parts of the earth, come from many church circles and fire-sides; they have made their way by many paths to our door, and I stand here to bid you welcome.

Men and women, God never gave an orator power to break silence into speech to tell the weight of utterance of the welcome to you which we would offer. No man can do it. You don't know how we honor and respect you. Sometimes in the act of welcome, we say more than we mean, but this time we mean ten times more than we can say.

First I want to give my welcome to the honored president of this Society. We first feel that to-night we have something for which we have longed many years. I have said in my Chicago pulpit and again in this pulpit, that since Mrs. Browning laid down her pen and passed over to the majority, I considered Miss Willard the greatest woman living in the world, and I will tell you why. She belongs to the company of the epoch makers. We are entirely too near her now to know the stateliness of her character and the grand purpose of her soul. I think that fifty years from now the man who writes history will point to this woman as one of the noble products of America. I will tell you on what I base my faith. Our Hoosier poet in one of his quaint ballads tells of the queer old character in a country town who was what you might call a "bee expert." He would roll up the sleeves of his shirt and wade in among the trees where a swarm had settled and he'd take them with his naked hands right back to the hive again. This man would even take hold of the Queen bee and fetch her out and "as you might say, 'interview' her." Now this queer old man had a marvelous influence, a marvelous charm in handling bees. You couldn't do it and I couldn't do it. The bees knew him. He would gather them up into the hives and set them to making golden honey. Do you know that men are far harder to hive than bees are, and women I believe are harder than men. So far as I can ascertain, by a careful reading of history, there is in this house to-night the only woman who has ever succeeded in hiving women and setting them to work. This hiving faculty, what we call the organizing instinct, is one of the grandest of talents. Moses had it and the Jewish nation was his hive. Wesley had it and the Methodist Church is his hive, and Miss Willard has it and this W. C. T. U. is her hive.

We are glad to welcome the Queen Bee and all the workers; we are likewise glad to welcome the Queen Bee of the British hive. One of our great American orators has spoken eloquently of the measured roll of England's drum, keeping company with the hours and following the rising sun in its course girdling the globe. Beautiful figure, but what is it that follows the roll of the war drum? Listen and you will hear sobs and tears; you will see smoking cities and weeping widows and mourning children. But I will tell you of another belt put around the globe, not the red belt of war, but a belt that goes around the world, the white belt of Gospel temperance, girdling the globe and leaving as it goes no sobbing, no weeping, making no widows, no orphans, no poverty or wounds. This belt goes around the world, binding up bruised hearts and wiping away widows' tears, lifting up the drunkard and whispering hope into his ear, and bidding him brace himself for another trial, another effort to be a man.

And so I bid you welcome, I wish it were possible to sing or say in some way, give expression to, or utter in words the great joy we have in you, the pride we have in you.

Your President referred to me as a man who once earned his bread by the trowel. That is true. One day in a city in the West, we were building the foundations of a great house. In digging the foundations the workmen came upon a spring which bubbled right up in the foundation. We were called to stop it. It was flowing where the men wanted to work and hindering them, so we came with eight or ten barrels of cement and a lot of great, strong flagstone and we poured in the cement and set the flags and thought we had checked the stream. The next morning we found the little spring had crept around the edges of the pavement and was bubbling up and sparkling in the morning sun. We went at it again, and for three days we worked at it, but it was all in vain. An old and wise scholarly man, who sat on a bank looking at us and smiling, when asked why he was smiling said, "I am laughing at your puny efforts to check that stream; don't you know that the great hills over yonder are pushing down on you and you'd better not try to stop it, you can't do it." So we consulted the owner and we made a place for the spring, and so he had in his basement a clear stream of water, a source of comfort and health for his home.

Now I believe that this temperance spring has its source in the Heavenly Hills. I believe that the time will come when these holy women who have suffered will see that their sufferings, their tears of agony, are not in vain. God will give them faith to see either from this world, or from some better world, the triumph of their holy toils. I believe they will before long see the great and glorious church of the living God take up this movement, borrowing aspiration from these consecrated women, and go forward to throttle this unholy traffic.

Hold fast your faith, women, and as for your welcome here, make your homes here. You honor us when you say you are perfectly at home here. Make this church your family dwelling place while you are here. I speak for the official board and all the men and women of this church, who only seek to serve you while you are here. We only seek to send you home, feeling that you have been treated as well as possible. We cannot treat you as well as we want to, but God knows that in our hearts if you could cleave them down to the core like a pomegraninte you would find love for your work and love for you.

Robert Burns who was lowly born, like myself, said when he came from visiting up into the hills, "When death's dark stream has been passed and I shall come to the other side I ask no more than just a Highland welcome."

And to-night we ofier you a mountain welcome, as generous as the hills, as pure as the snow on yonder mountain, as true as the love we have for you. We pray that no accident may come to you, that you may have a pleasant week with us, strengthened and inspired and encouraged, and go home and remember this as a place where good-will followed you and where they heartily bade you "God-speed."

MISS WILLARD—I think the mountain welcome beats all the others.

The "Pilgrims Chorus" was then rendered by the choir.

MISS WILLARD—We have been welcomed by the Governor of this State and by the pastor of this church; now on behalf of the City, we will be welcomed by Mayor Rogers, whom I have the honor to introduce.

MAYOR ROGERS—Ladies, I always feel at a disadvantage when I am called to follow the Governor of this State; he speaks for a larger field than I, he has the whole State at his command; by his direction mountains make obeisance. But I can say, as you have already learned, that there is a good deal of Colorado in the city of Denver. (Laughter) He may tell you without fear of contradiction, of the beauties of our mountains, of our magnificent cañons and our streams, but I must be more circumspect, because I can only speak of those things which appeal to your senses in this city while you are here. We believe, with the Governor, that we have the greatest State in the Union; we believe with the Governor, that we are destined to produce the finest of the human species on this globe. And I can say further, that I am in hearty sympathy with the Governor, when he declares that many of the best measures which engage your attention, can only be carried to a successful completion when you have placed in your hands the ballot. We sometimes find lines upon which we can confer, and I think we have found one to-night, upon we are thoroughly agreed. I have recently been a traveler over the plains, and although I have been long acquainted in this city, I came here yesterday from the east with fresh wonder, that here at the foot of the Rocky Mountains toere should have been built this city. But I am astounded to-night that I have before me the select of the entire world, congregated in this city. And it is a measure of pride to me, that as the Mayor of the city, it is my privilege to welcome you in our midst.

We appreciate thoroughly the efficient work that is being done by the women throughout the world. In our own midst are those who are accomplishing great good for humanity. One of your own members, by whose solicitation I came here, has shown in the City Hall that even good can be done for the human race in that place. We greet you heartily and sincerely. The gates of Denver are thrown down and there is no latch string, because the doors are not closed; our homes are open, we give you a warm and hearty welcome, and I can only say for myself that I sincerely hope that the cause that you have at heart, the mission which you seek to perform will be greatly accelerated by this gathering upon the great desert of America. We hope when you leave us that it will be with the happy recollection that the most happy part of your existence was in the city of Denver, and in the state of Colorado.

MISS WILLARD—We have had the civic welcomes and now we are to have a journalistic welcome. Mr. J. D. Dillenbach, one of the editors, as I understand in this city, they did not tell me just which paper, is to welcome us on behalf of the journalistic fraternity.

When I was requested to deliver an address of welcome here to-night in behalf of the press of Colorado, I had first thought that I would write to thirty or forty editors in different parts of the State and ask for their opinion of the W. C. T. U., and what I ought to say to you, but I concluded that the time was too short; and so I watched my exchanges to see what they were saying about you. I found they were giving you a good share of attention and saying nothing but good of you, therefore I feel that my welcome to you to-night, on behalf of the press, is something more than a mere formality; it is the expression of a real sentiment.

The genuine newspaper worker despises above all things else insincerity and cant. He may not always fully sympathize with your work and your methods—so much the worse for him if he doesn't—but he respects your motives; for down in his heart of hearts he knows them to be good and true.

Some good people fall into a certain degree of cant as a sort of armor against the shafts of ridicule. But you do not find it necessary. You have so clothed yourselves with honesty and purity that the tongue of detraction is dumb in your presence. You are very radical. All your plans are free from the deadly taint of compromise. Standing here to night, before this assembly and in the sight of God, I assure you that I believe success will yet crown them every one, and that in some glad day you, or your successors in the holy work, will sing songs of rejoicing in a land wherein the people will no more permit a saloon to corrupt its manhood than they would turn a madman loose with a loaded gun and a torch.

We thank you for visiting us with your convention, and we hope that your meeting here will be pleasant to yourselves and profitable to your cause. We bid you a hearty welcome:

> The press that groans and thunders in its might,
> Welcomes you here to-night,
> And to your noble band bids me out-hold
> More hands than had Briareus of old,
> And pledge them at your back to carry forth
> Your message east and west and south and north.

MRS. WILLARD—Mrs. Eva Higgins, president of the State W. C. T. U., not being able to be present, has appointed Mrs. Shapleigh, the treasurer of the State Union, to read her welcome:

You have listened to words of cordial welcome from our Governor, our Mayor and the pastor of the church, and we now come before you with our hearts full of loving sympathy in the cause you represent, greeting you with hearty hand-clasp, hoping much from your gentle presence and wise counsel in our beautiful city, much to encourage us in our work, for the up building of humanity, and for the best interests of our children. In the name of childhood and womanhood of Colorado, we welcome you to our State, our city and our homes.

MISS WILLARD—Mrs. Cassell, president of the Local W. C. T. U., will now address you.

MRS. CASSELL—In the name of tne homes of Denver, we give you greeting; I come to you in behalf of the local unions of the city, and our friends who have so kindly opened their homes to entertain our guests. These homes are nestled in the shadows of the grand old Rockies; we boast of the health giving climate and the finest natural scenery in the world. But, sisters, as you make the circuit of the loop and as you wander through the Garden of the Gods, and up Pike's Peak, and up into the mountain streams and watch the speckled trout, and as you wander the remotest recesses of these mountains, you will find traces of the curse that has ruined our land in the shape of broken beer bottles scattered all along the way. Now, my dear sisters and friends, let me tell you a little secret, this Woman's Temperance Union will never cease their labors until prohibition is proclaimed with loud hurrah from ocean to ocean, and carried across the waters to every nation of the globe; knowing we have God on our side, whom shall we fear. In welcoming this assemblage of women of America we know we have the cream of the land. So in the name of God and home and every land we bid you welcome. With open arms and loving hearts we bid you thrice welcome to the homes of Denver.

A delightful quartette was rendered by the Lotus Club.

MISS WILLARD—We have doubly appreciated the words that have come to us from the white ribboners themselves, and now we are to have responses and show our own state of mind; and I have the pleasure of introducing to you a lady who has visited this convention, one who has come twelve thousand miles over land and sea to express for us our state of mind, all that has been done in the last few days, and especially this evening, I have the pleasure of introducing to you, Lady Henry Somerset.

Madam President, and ladies and gentlemen:

I cannot express how deeply I feel the honor that has been done me in asking me to respond to these addresses of welcome. I do so to-night in the name of the sisters of my own land. There are those who will speak far more eloquently than I for those they represent in this Convention; but I am glad to hear such greetings as I have heard to-night.

We now have heard your great welcome, and I believe that never in my life have I heard words which were so inspiring and seemed to make a city, so far away from one's native land, so much like home. I am almost afraid in England to allude much to America, because I am told that I am infatuated about this country. (MOTHER STEWART—Come to us, Lady Somerset). If ever a woman had occasion to be infatuated about a country I think I have an excuse, because I have received so many sweet courtesies, so many tender hand-clasps, that when I sailed the great Atlantic I left a great part of my heart in America. It seems to me it augurs well for our future, not only in our great cause, but for humanity, to see the folds of the Union Jack intermingled with those of the Stars and Stripes. It is refreshing to look upon this great uprising city of the new West. To see these magnificent buildings glittering in this bright sunshine, and to understand what this magnificent enterprise means that has transferred all this into this glorious city. It seems to fill one's heart with hope, coming, as I do, from a land where so much is crushed out, where so many are broken-hearted. When I look upon this great city, that rears its head here under the snow-capped Rockies, and I realize that where the prairie grass waved but so few years ago and the Indian camp-fires smoked, the intrepid pioneers have pushed their way, and, stone by stone, built up a city that is to endure for centuries. It seems to speak to me of better days to come, and yet as I have viewed all the glories of this that was once a wilderness it has come to me that every stone that is laid so well and true here in the city of Denver is the result of many an anxious day and many a tired and aching heart. When those first pioneers traversed these desert plains and sitting day and night in their emigrant wagons on hard seats holding their little ones in their arms and straining their eyes toward the spot where they would place their earthly hopes, every ache and every pain—every night and day of anxiety and trouble—all brought all this glitter to this great new city. All this wealth is built out of the sorrow of humanity, and all those nights and days so hardily spent have built for the men and women of this day these magnificent edifices, of which you are justly proud. When I look upon the splendid gathering here assembled in this hall I think of how every woman with intrepid step has bridged over the distance between the home and the saloon. Woven into the warp of character you have the best that can be produced, and is it any wonder that to-day, reaping the heritage of such an inspiration, the best that one can do along the road of life is to make the track plain for those that follow after, and those white ribbon women are treading down the way so that the feet of the fellow travellers shall find a path sure and true in the progress of life. Of all the beautiful writings of that most electric writer, whose description of South Africa in the wonderful book of dreams, none is more wonderful than that scene in which she describes a wanderer in the desert speaking to her guide, and when in the midst of that great and vast plain, she seems to know not which way to turn, the guide steps up to her and asks her whether she knows how the locusts crossed the stream. "Tell me," said the bewildered woman. "Why," said the guide, "they go down one by one, and the first comers are washed away by the flood, and no one sees where they have gone, and the next come on and on, and bye and bye their bodies are piled into a bridge, and thus they follow on and pass over in safety." "What of the first?" asked the questioner. "And they made the way," said the guide. And the best that can be said of us in the ages to come, the most glorious record that can be written for the women of the white ribbon army, is that "they made the way." The temperance cause is no more national, it is *inter*national. We have clasped hands in this national movement. We in England are fighting the same battle you are here. We are walking the same path, we are meeting with the same difficulties in the suppression of the liquor traffic. There is only one thing which in England I do not wish to adopt, and it is, perhaps, but a little thing. There is only one word which I hope will not become our watchword over there, and which I believe some day you will change here, and that is the word Prohibition. I believe in prohibition, "first and last and all the time," but I would rather you would call it a name that has rung through this land from the lips of one whom we honor to-night, the president of this association, and call it Home Protection. (Applause.)

In England we have that to fight against, of which, thank God, in America you know nothing. We have one aspect of this curse which weighs us down, which bows our heads in shame and breaks our hearts. We have a drunken womanhood, and when the mothers of the land are steeped in the vile poisons that destroy body and soul, it is time for that nation to rise with all the might and majesty which they possess in order to arrest this most deadly evil. But I believe the truest protection will come when we have been given that which has heen so ably defended already to-night, and when the women have it in their hands to protect the free homes, deeply as I believe in outlawing the liquor traffic, I believe that the quickest path to that desirable end is through the woman's ballot. We stand, I think, on the verge of attaining that great privilege in England, and as my time is short to-night I will not speak upon this subject, but will only just refer to the facts that during the last Parliament when the bill was brought before the House of Commons it was only thrown out by twenty-two votes in the whole of that great assembly. I believe that women will do more to wrench the curse from the land of this nation than any other power, and the W. C. T. U. will yet stand in its might a great army, having freed America from her greatest foe.

Of all the inspiring sights was the opening of the magnificent Chicago Exposition. It was not the dazzling whiteness of the buildings that appealed to me although all that is beautiful. It was the fact that woman stood there on that platform before that vast multitude, side by side, and as I looked at the vast assemblage and realized all that America means to this world I felt that you must lead the way into this greatest of reforms, and give woman her proper calling in the great progress of the world.

Of all the sights that has impressed me, perhaps none impressed me more in the opening of that Exposition, than the anniversary of our Queen. When that vast concourse met, when all that was noble in this world was assembled there to greet the noblest of women after her fifty years of reign, where their warriors from all courts and climes and nations were accoutered in the military decorations for which their countries were famous, there were the ladies of state who have rewards for great deeds done in the past. There were the soldiers all convened there, and there sat one clothed only as a citizen of the Nineteenth century, the Minister of the United States. He needed no military signs of power, he needed nothing but to be the representative of the great Republic of humanity of all that is to be, and I believe America will yet rise up in her might and tread under foot this deadly foe that is robbing her of her wealth, her hope and homes, and that the day should come when all that was mightiest should be seen in the progress of the world, when America should be all that was great and pure and noble.

Solo by Prof. Brierly.

MISS WILLARD—This convention abounds in eloquent women. You have heard one from across the seas. You shall now hear one from the borders of the big muddy, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, President of the W. C. T. U. Missouri, which, until she was President, we used to call Misery. Now we call it Missouri.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN—We thank you for the cordial and courteously multiplied welcomes you have poured upon us like refreshing showers upon the thirsty earth. We knew it was coming, we breathed it in with the first breath of ozone from your mountains, we felt it in the first clasp of hand with hand, we saw it in the gleam of kindly eyes and we heard it in the many words from friendliest lips. Our whole hearts were filled, our beings suffused with gladness because we are here, even before these multiplied welcomes were spoken. We are not one bit surprised, but we are a good bit delighted. Only twice before has the convention of the National W. C. T. U. received words of welcome and greeting from the chief executive of the state to which it was the invited guest, New York, Georgia and now in Colorado. Indeed, we feel mighty set up and we thank his Excellency, Governor Routt, for the cordial and homelike words of welcome that he has spoken to us. We thank him for bidding us such a hearty welcome to Colorado, this larger and grander Switzerland of the world. We thank him and are glad we have come. We glad in the first place, just to come, and in the second place, we are glad because you are glad and because you have told us you are glad, and we are glad that you told us you are glad, and we are glad that you told us when we came and not when we went away.

We are one with you in Colorado. We all want free silver; we believe in it; the freer the better. [Prolonged laughter.] It never has been half free enough to suit us. We want unlimited coinage and possession too.

So we thank the Governor most cordially for his welcome, and we thank his honor, the Mayor, for giving us the freedom of the city and we assure his honor that we pledge our sacred honor, that we will not abuse the gift. No fair, young life shall be imperilled, tempted, bewildered, because of our presence. No hotel bar need to be enlarged for our accommodation. We shall not give aid, nor comfort, nor presence to those government schools firmly established in law, wherein the beloved of mothers' hearts are trained and educated through the whole curriculum of rum and tobacco and lusts.

We assure his honor that because of our coming, no vice shall gather and deepen until like a swollen stream it bursts its banks to carry devastation and destruction through your fair city. We believe in peace, if we have to declare war to obtain it. For peace verily, but for purity always.

We are so grateful to our brother for the kind message he has brought us from the church. I am a Highlander myself, and it sounded natural to hear him talking about the Highlands. We are all children of the church, we are bound to her by ties most tender and memories most sacred. We have not forgotten her and we shall not forget her sweet communions and solemn voice, but sometimes with a little bit of soreness of heart we have feared the church had forgotten us and forgotten the great reforms for which we labor and pray. I am sure we may believe our brother when he says that every member of this church welcomes us. They never could have gotten up these doings if they had not. We are glad of all these things. We are glad of the prophetic vision whereby we see the time not distant when the traditions of man shall become traditions only, having no power to obstruct human progress. The time will come when the church will extend to man and to woman alike the liberty that maketh free indeed. When her pulpits, her offices, her recognition and her councils, her associates and assemblages shall open wide their doors that all may enter whose eyes are fixed on righteousness. Then shall the church arise and shine, her light of justice and equality having fully come.

We thank the press. Dear me, they have been so good to us always; we knew before they made any welcoming speech that they were the friendliest sympathizers that we have ever met. So we thank them, and we thank our dear white ribbon sisters. White ribboners of Colorado and white ribboners of Denver, surely beloved, with characteristic womanliness your deeds have spoken louder than words. They have been most abundant for our comfort, most thoughtful in Christian fellowship, and now with words so tender and gracious you have strengthened "the tie that binds." We give our hands, our hearts, our efforts, our lives, for the truth that has made us one.

Last year in Boston and in the months that followed, many of us learned to know and to love our dear English sister, Lady Somerset. We did not know then that we should have this opportunity to broaden and brighten his new friendship. No accident of birth, name, rank, lineage or fortuitous circumstances can hold apart those whose hopes and aims are one. We have learned that the life hid with Christ in God is ever the same in castle or in cabin, a life of love and sacrifice. We congratulate you women of Colorado on this added richness to your busy ranks, but we also congratulate dear Lady Somerset because she shall receive in full measure as she gives in the true friendship of these splendid Colorado women whose hopes are higher than their cloud-piercing peaks, and whose purposes for good are more immovable than their granite mountains.

We have had a welcome from the State, from the city, the welcome of the church and the welcome of the white ribbon host, and yet—and yet—with women's daring we ask for more. We ask for a hospitality that is broader and richer and rarer than any of these can give, the hospitality of minds, the hospitality that dares to open wide the gates of understanding; that dares to entertain ideas, charged with truth, even though they antagonize the established order of things. We have got these ideas with us; we did not so much bring them as they brought us, theo have taken possessionn of us, and they are a host, more numerous and more persistent than all the legions of imperial Rome. Under the impelling forces of these ideas, we have searched the book of nature and the book of Revelation until we have discovered the great sorrow in humanity. Not less father, but more, on infinitely more, mother does the world need. Poor old humanity, half orphaned all through the centuries of the world. Poor old humanity, homesick for mother love and mother voice and mother will. Male and female created he them, and gave them dominion. Perfect unity and perfect equality. The morning has fully dawned, all the skies east and west are streaked with light. From the orient and the occident, and the isles of the sea comes womanhood to share with her brother that good time of equality which was prepared from the foundation of the world. Then shall all the world read that wonderful lesson taught by a Saviour born of women, Jesus Christ, the Son of Mary and the Son of God. Then comes back to earth again paradise; then springs the common race of human kind.

Dear friends, will you entertain our ideas? Will you let them settle in Colorado?

MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS—To endeavor to catch the warm feelings that are pulsing in every heart to-night would be like trying to gather the rays of the sunshine of these beautiful days, and I fancy to-night as I look into your faces and try to find as best I may, the thoughts and sentiments of these white ribboners who have come from far and from near in a response to these glad and glorious welcomes, that I can but faintly do it, and so you must take us as we go in and out before you with glad faces and gladder hearts, and believe most thoroughly that we enjoy your hospitality, that we believe in you, and that some day we will come again when Denver shall be the capital city of the nation.

Looking into your faces to-night I am thinking of the beautiful words that have passed through my mind:

> "To make a happy fireside clime for bairns and wife,
> That is the true pathos and sublime of human life.

Is it not very true, dear friends, that the W. C. T. U. in its work is to make a happier clime for bairns and wife? As I look into your faces I see some who have come from far eastern shores where the waters of the Atlantic dash against their rocky borders, and others have come from far away toward the west, all meeting here for the one grand, glorious purpose of making happy homes in America. We have not come to say our say and sing our songs and go away, simply for the pleasure of convention days, but we have come with a mighty throbbing purpose in our hearts, every one of us. We have come bearing burdens of those who are outside; we have come with heavy burdens of pain in the echoing of the years that have gone bye, and we have come with our eyes set toward the future, when teat blessed day shall dawn in which "all men's weal shall be each man's care," and there shall be no legalized saloon in all the land to tempt the defeat of our brothers and our sons.

In the age in which occurred the French revolution, it is said that no slumbering energies were allowed to be wasted; that every man and every woman that was capable of understanding the needs of the time had to come to the front and express his thoughts, take hold of the work. I think I do not say too much when I say that we would all do it. Voicing as I beleive I do to-night, every grand thought and utterance in my feeble way of this white ribboned army of America, I tell you, dear white ribboners, we have come to take the world for Christ and temperance. Who will help? That is the questibn. Who will help? We come year after year to our national gatherings. Immense halls and churches are crowded to suffocation. People stand upon either side and in the aisles and look on and go away and say, "It is wonderful;" but we ask you what are you going to do after the convention goes away? You will go back into the walks of life, and we pray God that you may go with that desire that shall bring about the glorious day when every home shall be a happier clime for bairns and wife.

There is a word that to me is a wonderful word. That word is the word "combination." I look down at the mass at my feet and I think I hear each little spear saying to each otner, "Let's combine," and in the combination there comes the soft, green turf that is so welcome to our feet.

I look out upon the ocean, wild, stormy and tempestuous, and I fancy that I hear each little drop say to each other, "Let's combine," and in that combination the billows roll and swell and lift themselves mountains high or sink in peace at our feet. Looking into your faces, dear white-ribboners of Colorado, with this great constituency of white ribboners of this country, I say to you, "Let's combine," and in that combination we will move to the capture not only of this grand state of yours, and freeing this beautiful City of Denver from the strong drink curse, but we will combine to capture all the states and come at last into the full radiance and glory of a work that is so magnificent that history will record it as the outcome of the crusade.

And I think to-night that there is one more combination. I am thinking of hearts that have dropped out of ours, of lives that have slipped away from ours, so that we cannot look into their eyes and touch their hands as once we looked and touched, but somehow it comes to me to-night that if there has dropped a veil between we may say, each one of us, to those who have gone on before, "We will combine, we will combine," and they who, on the other shore, are watching us, are waiting to see what in this glorious combination shall come to this beloved land of ours.

Brothers, these are women's hands. We want yours, and yours and yours, your strong right hands; your hands that holds the ballots. Yours, Governor of the state; yours, Mayor of the city. We want your hands, brothers in this wonderful combination. Then shall Paradise be regained and the world come to its full glory, and its peace, and its strength.

MISS WILLARD: I read a story about Colorado with which you are familiar here. Two young men, one of them I think a tenderfoot, had come out to find geological specimens, and in the course of their wanderings they stumbled into the cabin of a miner, or a fisherman, who received them hospitably, and gave them supper, and said they might stay all night. They were sitting in great comfort around the glowing fire and began to tell about as sizable stories as they could find utterance for in their vocabulary. The young men from the East had told great things about what they had seen in their day, and the old fisherman couldn't let them get ahead of him, and so he said to them, "If you will go with me tomorrow I will show a fellow standing with a gun in his hand pointing right up, and he's peterfied." "Ah, but," says one of the young fellows, "that could not be, that would be against gravitation; no bird could stay up there in that condition." "Oh, bless your soul, gravitation is peterfied." I think if we have not peterfied gravitation to-night it never will be, and I think it is about time we sang "Dear Colorado" and quit. (Laughter.)

Singing, "Dear Colorado," chorus.

Convention adjourned to meet at nine o'clock Saturday morning.

BOARD OF SUPERINTENDENTS.

The Board of Superintendents, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, chairman, met on Wednesday morning and afternoon in Trinity Church Committee room. On Thursday morning they resumed their adjourned session and adopted a number of valuable recommendations to be presented at the joint session of the plan of work committee and board of superintendents. The recommendations referred to the Press Department, "Model Local Union Meetings," Penal and Reformatory work, Removing the Temperance lesson in the International Series from the Review Sunday, Sunday School Pledge Cards, Scientific Instruction enforcement, Freer Circulation of Temperance Literature and other equally important subjects. The wise prosecution of the work of the forty-two departments endorsed by the W. C. T. U., constitutes the solid strength of the White Ribbon organization. The superintendents present are:

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt . . . .Scientific Temp. Inst.
" Jane M. Kinney . . . . . Penal Work
" Hannah J. Bailey . . . . Peace Arbitration
" Margaret Watts . . . . . Police Matrons
" Sarah Morrison . . . . . Alms Houses
" W. F. English . . . Work Among Miners
" S. F. Grubb . . Work Among Foreigners
" M. C. Campfield . . . . . Fairs
" J. B. Hobbs . . . . Temperance Hospital
" F. H. Rastall . . . . . Literature
" Jennie Smith . . . . . Railroad Work
" Narcissia White Kinney . . . . Narcotics
" H. B. Kells . . . . . Press
Miss Mary G. Hay . . . . . Railroad Rates
" Anna Gordon . . . . . L. T. L's.
Mrs. Lodie Reed . . . . . Schools of Methods
(Proxy for Miss West)
" Frances J. Barnes Young Woman's Branch
" Elizabeth Greenwood . Evangelistic Work
" A. S. Benjamin . . . Parliamentary Usage
Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer . School Savings Banks
" W. H. Upham----Work for Lumbermen
" Frances Leiter . . . . . Physical Culture
" E. A. Russell . W. C. T. U. Coffee Houses

The overflow meeting at Unity church on Saturday night will be in charge of Mrs. Trego, of Ohio. The other speakers will be Mrs. M. L. Wells, of Pennsylvania, Mrs. Addie N. Field, Indiana, and Mr. Charles Crittenton, of Florence Missions fame.

The cabalistic letters W. C. T. U., two feet long, formed of yellow and white electric lights, placed upon each of the polished Colorado granite pillars of the Church entrance, send their rays far down the avenue, forming a beacon light of invitation.

A "mountain welcome" will always be the rarest in the memory of the White-Ribboners. Gov. Rout's whole-hearted salute, Mayor Rogers' earnest words of greeting and the welcome of Rev. Robt. McIntyre were like the mountain streamlets leaping straight from the heart.

The ladies of the local churches have charge of the lunches in turn. Yesterday we were served by the Baptists; to-day the Methodists have charge, and our hostesses for next week are: Monday, the Congregationalists; Tuesday, the Episcopalians; Wednesday, the Presbyterians.

A pleasant episode occurred when Mrs. Mary T. Burt, New York's appreciated President, presented a magnificent basket of bloom and fragrance, on behalf of the Empire State, to our presiding officer, saying happily, "and hidden among the flowers are the kisses, love and devotion of 22,000 women."

On Friday afternoon there was a splendid overflow meeting at Trinity church, presided over by Rev. Ada Bowles, of Boston, Mrs. Law, of Michigan, Mrs. C. C. Twing, of New York, Jennie Smith and Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, president of Michigan W. C. T, U. also spoke. There was a crowded house and a bag "full o'sille."

W. C. T. U. excursion to Silver Plum over the famous loop leaves Denver Thursday Nov. 3 at 8:30 a. m. For tickets all visitors will call at Union Pacific ticket office, 1703 Larimer street, the bureau of information in the church. $2.50 for round trip Delegates will have free transportation by courtesy of the Denver union.

On Friday night a great overflow meeting was presided over by Mrs. Emma Bourne, of New Jersey. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt spoke with great power on her own subject, on political issues and on woman suffrage. Miss Frances E. Griffin left the audience wondering what would happen to them if Miss Griffin once dared "to be as funny as she could." Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, of Washington, spoke strongly and practically on present conditions of the work, and was followed by Mrs. M. G. Snell, of Mississippi, in an eloquent and deeply spiritual presentation of the gospel side of the white ribbon movement.

EXAMINE

THE

W. C. T. U.

AUTOMATIC

FOUNTAIN

—AT—

HEADQUARTERS

—OF—

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association,

—IN THE—

LECTURE ROOM

BEFORE YOU LEAVE THE CITY.

CALL AT

HEADQUARTERS

OF THE

WOMAN'S

Temperance Publishing Association

IN THE LECTURE ROOM,

TRINITY CHURCH,

For Books, Leaflets, Souvenir Spoons, Etc

FULL SUPPLIES ON HAND.

F. H. RASTALL, Manager.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

VOL. VII. DENVER, COLORADO, OCTOBER 31, 1892. NO. 3.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

Price, Five Issues, 25 Cents.

Frances E. Willard, Mary Allen West, ... Editors-in-Chief
Lady Henry Somerset . . . . . Contributing Editor
Margaret A. Sudduth . . . . . Managing Editor
Mrs. Harriet B. Kells . . . . . Office Editor

Mrs. F. H. Rastall . . . . . Business Manager

Presented to Frances E. Willard.

"WE BELONG."

BY
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Air: "Long, Long Ago."

Drops in an ocean of infinite might,
We all belong, we all belong;
Rays in a prism of white, radiant light,
We all belong, we belong;
Strands in a cord reaching down from God's throne,
Links in a chain which now circles each zone,
Notes in the deepest of harmonies known,
We all belong, we belong.

Joined in God's cause, heart to heart, hand to hand,
We all belong, we all belong;
Each one a part of the White Ribbon band,
We all belong, we belong.
Each but a unit, yet each counts with all,
What though our place and our labor be small,
Our part be but to obey His great call,
We all belong, we belong.

Let the glad music ring out loud and clear,
We all belong, we all belong;
Sometime far off, by His grace now brought near,
Yes, we belong, we belong;
One with our Lord in His passion to save,
One in that love conquering death and the grave,
One by His grace who Himself for all gave,
Yes, we belong, we belong.

Lord, make us worthy Thy glorious call,
May we belong, may we belong!
Fill our hearts full of Thy longing for all,
May we belong, yes, belong!
Open our eyes to Thy truth's shining light,
Thrill all our souls with Thine infinite might,
Then send us forth to shine through sin's dark night,
Till all belong, all belong.

Mrs. Benjamin, National Superintendent Parliamentary Usage, is ever alert to prevent any departure from the rules and constitution.

The Great Petition should receive the immediate attention of W's and Y's. Every active worker should contribute some effort to make this the greatest petition ever known. Let the welkin ring, "Circulate the Petition!"

A "happy-go-lucky" reporter detailed to record proceedings of the National for one of Denver's leading daily papers was heard to exclaim: "Well, this enforced religious instruction is doing me up. But I tell you what, those women can talk."

Among the original crusaders now residing in Denver are: Mrs. T. M. Hopkins, wife of Dr. Hopkins of Westminster University; Mrs. Jeanette Tompkins and Mrs. Large, members of the Central W. C. T. U., also took part in that historical uprising.

To-morrow (Tuesday) evening by special request Miss Ruth Warren of Trinity M. E. Church will sing "The Ribbon White," from Miss Gordon's new W. C. T. U. Hymnal. This selection was received with immense applause on Y night, and repeated for the second time.

The tenacity of interest felt by White Ribboners in our great society has never been more forcibly illustrated than by the fact that of the fifty sub-divisions of the Republic, forty-eight—or all but South Carolina and Alaska, are represented by delegates regularly sent to the foot of the Rockies.

Hereafter the young folks are to be part and parcel of the National W. C. T. U. Convention—such action having been taken by the Convention October 31. A white ribbon woman may represent one thousand children who have paid fifty cents each into the National treasury. Hurrah for "the little feet a comin'," through their motherly proxies to the great hearthstone of the National.

Mrs. C. D. H. Thompson, of Longmont, Colo., former State President and founder of the Colorado W. C. T. U., is in attendance at Convention; also Mrs. S. J. Robins of the same city, for some years corresponding secretary for Colorado. It is a great joy to White Ribboners to once more look into their cheery faces so full of the gospel of healing to others, who, like themselves, have passed through the deep waters of affliction.

An interesting Juvenile Conference, presided over by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National Superintendent of Juvenile work, was held on Saturday at Unity Church. An important subject under discussion was the establishment of higher grade work for the graduates of the Loyal Temperance Legions—it being feared that the Christian Endeavor wave threatens to swallow up this class of Legioners. Miss Alice M. Guernsey edits the Advance Guard, published by the W. T. P. A., which admirably meets the wants of L. T. L. graduates. Mrs. Frances Barnes was appointed a committee of one to draft a plan of work.

An invitation to visit the Arapahoe county jail has been extended by our white ribbon sister, Mrs. James Havens, the matron.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton's is a welcome face among the white ribboners who take note of her many labors as an organizer on the Pacific coast.

Miss Schuff, of India, Mother Benedict, of Iowa, and Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, founder of the Florence Missions, addressed the Convention on "Rescue Work for Fallen Women."

She turned away. The porter spoke to the conductor. In two minutes the "gentlemen" (?) had been spoken to, the smoking in the drawing-room was stopped, and the car windows thrown wide open! So much for the power of organization.

The charming white silk banner, bearing Lady Henry Somerset's picture, which occupies a prominent position upon the platform, is the one over which the ladies of the Lady Henry Somerset W. C. T. U. of St. Paul, Minn., held a "felicitation" a few weeks ago. It is a work of art and was made by Mrs. Anne R. Groat, a prominent member of the union.

The following superintendents' meetings will be held to-morrow, Tuesday:
Dean Wright, Room A, 8:30-9:30 a. m.
Mrs. Esmond, Choir Room, 8:30-9.30 a. m.
Mrs. Kinney and Mrs. Morrison, Room B, 5-6 p.m.
Mrs. Watts, Room B, 8:30-9:30 a. m.
Mrs. Merrill, Lecture Room, 1-2 p. m.

Who shall be England's next Laureate? Miss Willard says Jean Ingelow. "She has written songs that will be sung for years after Swinburne is forgotten. The 'High Tide' is alive with tragedy and death. At any rate, before anybody lifts the chin in ridicule let the eyes be lowered over an edition of her poetical works for half a day."

On Saturday afternoon a Memorable Children's mass meeting at Unity Church was conducted by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, who rallies over 250,000 young temperance soldiers to her standards. Mrs. Maud Green, of Manitou, National Organizer, delighted the Juveniles with one of her rare "chalk-talks." Miss Lucy Gaston, of Illinois, made an entertaining talk. Then the children marched in a body to Trinity Church to give the "little people's" welcome to the convention, after which they returned to Unity Church, and Mrs. Ellen Blair, National Chalk Talker, made the blackboard tell wonders. Then Miss Anna Gordon, the children's friend and crusader, addressed the delighted young people, followed by a closing talk from Mrs. Rice.

As one of our state presidents was on the cars the other day she found not only the smoking-room of the sleeper, but the drawing-room filled with smoke. She called the porter and asked, "Are there two smoking-rooms on this car?"

"No, lady," he replied. "But—you see—those gentlemen have chartered that room and—"

"Have they paid for it any more than I've paid for my berth?"

"No, ma'am."

"Then could I smoke in my berth?"

"No, ma'am, but—you see—those gentlemen—"

The lady interrupted him. Touching her white ribbon she said, "Do you see this ribbon? It is the badge of the great society to which I belong. If that smoking is not stopped, I'll report every official on this train."

DENVER.

STREETS, VIEWS, CAR-LINES, CLUBS, PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND INSTITUTIONS.

The points of the compass are somewhat puzzling to new comers as the streets of the earliest portion of the town were laid out "across the compass,"—i. e.—running north-east to south-west. All streets running in that direction are numbered. A "tenderfoot" was heard to exclaim not long after his arrival in Denver, "I want to go home, the sun rises in the west and sets in the east, and I know I shall never get used to that." One is assisted very much, however, upon learning that beginning with Broadway, all the streets east are laid out directly north and south, and cross streets are east and west.

Visitors should avail themselves of the magnificent outlook embracing Denver and adjacent points, by ascending to the top of some of the many high buildings which grace the city. With the aid of a good glass and a friendly guide there will be imprinted upon the tablets of memory such a scene of natural grandeur as is unequalled the world over. Among the best points for observation are the Equitable building, the Court House and the tower of the Mining Exchange. In the back ground lies the magnificent panorama of hoary-headed peaks crowning the grand old Rockies; to the south may be singled out, Pike's Peak, 14,147 feet in height, about 75 miles distant, its age-worn crevices fringed with snow, glistening most dazzlingly in the perfect sunshine and in its purity proclaiming "The Hand, divine."

To the front of the range is Mt. Evans which rises 14,321 feet, than which there are but seven peaks higher. Looking toward the north-west, Long's Peak, 14,271 feet high, is the most prominent.

Fifty miles away upon the south is the Divide, and within the radius of vision, hemmed in by the foot-hills, lies a vast agricultural country, a lasting monument to the intelligent industry of those devoted to that interest, Closer still in the suburbs, are huge smelters and manufactories. Standing forth upon the north in bold relief is the smoke stack of the Omaha & Grant Smelter, 350 feet high, the tallest in America and the second in height in the world. Surrounding the observation point are the numberless imposing structures which contribute toward Denver's reputation as a phenomenally beautiful city, the public school buildings, the business blocks and fine hotels so substantially constructed in the upbuilding of this fair metropolis of the central west. Visitors who intend spending but a brief period in the city can take a nearer view by boarding the City Cable or Tramway car lines; as their combined roads cover a distance of more than one hundred miles, much can be seen. The service is admirable, the cars very comfortable and the open ones, in particular, delightful for sight-seeing on warm sunny days, of which Colorado has so many. Probably no city affords a longer ride for a five-cent fare than Denver, and with the liberal system of transfers, the possibilities for lengthy cable rides are very great. By the Broadway cable and its electric extension, University Park may be visited. By Colfax avenue tramway west, and Seventeenth avenue cable west, with their electric connections, Manhattan Beach, Elitch's Gardens, Berkeley Lake, Rocky Mountain Lake and Denver's other suburban resorts. The 17th cable and Colfax avenue east,—Montclair, South Montclair, also the best Art Gallery in the Rocky Mountain region, James Hall, Baptist Female Seminary and Fairmont cemetery. In fact every pretty portion of the city is brought within easy access by rapid transit, causing a vast expanse of territory outside to be more thickly populated, to be dotted with lovely homes in regions which but a few short years ago were overgrown with cacti and sage brush and inhabited only by the prairie dog or coyote.

That thousands of Denverites find time for literary culture is shown by the throngs who patronize the public libraries, of which the High School and the Mercantile are the principal ones. There are a large number of art, musical and literary organizations actively bent upon mutual improvement of the most progressive type. The largest is the Glenarm Club which numbers more than 800 members. Noted among women's clubs are the Denver Fortnightly and Monday Literary, composed of representative women whose influence is felt not only in our own city but in literary circles abroad.

The energy and enterprise of ex-Senator Tabor gave to the city the Grand Opera House which bears his name. For more than ten years it has been known as the most unique and complete temple of Thespis in existence. After a different, but equally beautiful style of architecture is the elegant new Broadway Theatre, which is also greatly admired.

The State Capitol, to cost three millions, leads in the enumeration of public buildings. It is rapidly nearing completion. From its commanding site and unusually striking material, fine Colorado gray granite, it will at once attract the attention of strangers. Others of prominence are the County Court House, City Hall and the new government building, Arapahoe and Sixteenth streets, which is nearly ready for occupancy.

The Brown Palace Hotel is a magnificent structure, nine stories in height, of dressed brown sandstone ornamented with bas-reliefs and cost $1,200,000. Mining men particularly pride themselves upon the imposing stone building crowned with the bronze statue of a "Miner," located at 15th and Arapahoe streets, designated as the Mining Exchange. Other fine buildings are, the Masonic Temple, Boston Block, Ernest and Cranmer Building, People's National Bank Building, the Metropole, Windsor and Albany Hotels, Kittredge Building (in which is established State and local W. C. T. U. headquarters), Railroad Building and many others.

DENVER. ELLA C. BENTON.

A good suggestion came from a Southern California member, that gentlemen be invited to be present at all the sessions of the Convention. The good brothers are welcome to come and see what a W. C. T. U. Convention is and to learn of our work.

National W. C. T. U. Convention.

SATURDAY MORNING SESSION.

Convention met at 9 o'clock a. m., Miss Willard in the chair.

Mrs. Rounds took charge of the devotional exercises, reading the sixty-seventh Psalm. The hymns "Christ for the World We Sing," and "A Charge to Keep I Have," were sung.

The Secretary's minutes of the previous session were read and adopted.

MRS. ROUNDS—As President of the third delegation and state, I find the sentiment of the women of my delegation, and doubtless of the entire convention, to be one of deep regret at the absence of Miss Helen Hood from us, and I would move that a letter of tenderness and greetings to her conveying our abiding love be prepared by the Secretary of this body, and that Lady Somerset be commissioned to take this letter to our beloved comrade.

Motion seconded and carried with the amendment that a special message be contained in the cablegram to be sent to the World's W. C. T. U. for Miss Hood.

MISS WILLARD—And may the chair thank those States which sent to her from their state conventions, cablegrams during her absence. They were received with the greatest delight; such messages come as the pulse, out of the heart of time, as Mrs. Elliot has said.

On motion of Mrs. Lathrap and after considerable discussion, the time for the reading of the President's annual address in future meetings of this body was fixed at 11:00 o'clock on the morning of the first session of such conventions.

Mrs. Forbes of Virginia, offered a change in the constitution, which admits to the Executive body the Secretary of the Young Women's Branch, notice having been given a year ago to that effect, and on motion the change was made.

MISS WILLARD — Mr. Cummings, the nephew of our old friend, Mr. Stearns, is here with the publications of the National Temperance Society, and we greet him as usual and would be glad to hear from him.

Mr. Cummings briefly addressed the Convention, expressing his sympathy and congratulations on the work accomplished by the Convention, and spoke particularly of a new publication of Mr. Stearns' called "Shot and Shell," culled from different writers on the subject of temperance.

Mrs. Jones of Virginia, gave notice that next year she would move that the Constitution shall be so amended as to add the Chairman of the Department of Juvenile Work to the Executive Committee.

Mrs. Buell presented the report of the Committee on Credentials, giving the following summary:

Forty-two States, five territories and the District of Columbia are represented, making forty-eight in all. General officers, five: general secretary of the young women's union, one; superintendents, fifteen; organizers, nine; editors, two; publisher of the Union Signal, one; president's private secretary, one; chairman of standing committee, one; vice-presidents, thirty-seven; state officers, fifty-three; delegates, two hundred and fifty-four, making a total of three hundred and seventy-nine.

MISS WILLARD—Practically three hundred and eighty; I think that other woman will come in. It is not quite as large a number as we had at Boston, but we will remember this country is divided in fifty sections, and forty-eight are represented in this great convention. It seems a propitious moment in which to bring forward one whom we always wish to honor in these conventions, Mother Stewart of Ohio.

MOTHER STEWART—I will not take your very valuable time only to say a word or two. I am so thankful to my Father that after I supposed it impossible for me to meet you again, I am here with you. My heart is filled with gladness as I look into your faces and note the progress of the work from hour to hour, and look back to that period when our great work was born through the throes of agony, the prayers and the tears of the Crusaders, low down at the feet of Christ. Oh, what a wonderful work has come to us! As I listen to our sweet president that we worship too much, this key-note came to me from her beautiful address: "The power of God within us!" Sisters, take that thought; carry it home with you; ponder it. How little we know of the power that God has given us to work for the salvation of the world. As I lay awake last night I said to myself: After all those beautiful welcomes there is only one thing more for these dear Denver and Colorado people to do for us, and that is to give us the key to their homes.

We are very happy here, but, oh, sisters will we carry this enthusiasm away with us and spread it all over the land? We are getting along very nicely, but we are not progressing half fast enough. The great throngs are being swept down to eternal woe every day and every hour, while we think our little puny efforts are accomplishing great results. We must make aggressive movements. Madam President, I think it was William Stead who laughed at you about our women standing and asking for the ballot. "Why don't you take it?" he said. We are able to take it; in God's name we will take it. We are looking for the coming of our Christ and you and I are trying to prepare the way. Let us hasten, for we already hear the rumbling of His chariot wheels. I saw an exhibition only a few days before I left home; a little miniature sort of an exhibition of what you Denver people have had in the laying of the corner stone of the Masonic Home in our city and the Sir Knights and the Masons came from everywhere, and we Springfield people thought it was a grand and glorious time. As I stood by the way looking at those grand men passing by I noticed our policemen. They are the grandest boys outside of Denver. Our policemen dressed in their best, with their batons black as night, made an advance guard, leaders of the host. They stood each holding to the baton, and they formed a line clear across the street and they swept all the obstructions for that great procession out of the way. Now the thought, sisters; let us join hand in hand, stand shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, and let us be the police force for our Lord Jesus Christ to clear all obstructions out of the way. I give you this as my last thought.

MRS. CRANMER, S. D.—I want to tell Mother Stewart that the people of Denver have commenced giving us the key to their homes. I have one here this morning.

On motion of Mrs. Cranmer a special vote of thanks was tendered to the Denver Times for the courtesy shown the Convention in giving to the members six hundred copies of their splendid issue of yesterday.

DEPARTMENT OF ORGANIZATION.

MRS. SOPHIA F. GRUBB—Within the next ten days there will stand at the ballot boxes at the various polling places in this country two millions of men with full privileges of citizenship, who can neither read, write nor speak the language in which their ballots are written. Added to these there are two or three million more of men who can speak the English language only enough to gain their daily living, but who know nothing of our institutions or our government, who have the full privileges of American citizenship, and will exercise them. These are gaining an entrance so that they are carrying the balance of power and are having a large influence on the future of our schools, our Sunday laws and our homes. Added to these there are coming to our shores five hundred thousand people every year, the males of over twenty-one years of age having the full privileges of citizenship in eighteen States within twelve months after landing, practically citizens when they come. We feel that these facts warrant that we should have this department of work among foreign-speaking people, that we may do something towards educating these people in the knowledge of what constitute the institutions of our government and good citizenship.

To be sure, to outsiders it seems a little like Mrs. Partington sweeping back the Atlantic Ocean with a broom, but we have nothing to do with the results. We must do the work before us and leave the results with God. When a house is on fire somebody must do something, and in this case, the something happens to be the W. C. T. U., so this department has been instituted so that we may carry to foreign-speaking people a better method and manner of living purer lives. There is in this connection a thought that perhaps the world has never seen before, a disfranchised class of native-born citizens who are trying to teach the beauties of citizenship to an alien foreign class. It is a pathetic thought.

During the past year my principal work has been in Ellis Island, where we have a missionary to meet emigrants. About seven hundred and fifty thousand pages of literature have been distributed, printed in seventeen different languages. We have added a Hungarian to our gift of tongues during the last year. These are attended to by twenty-three superintendents who are doing their work well, most of them. There are difficulties, but they do not come from the foreign-speaking people. They come from the indifference of our own people. Another difficulty would be overcome if we could have all of these tracts and leaflets put into the English language, so that our department shall know what they are circulating. Most of the translations are "Timely Talks," which can be procured of our W. T. P. A.

The objective point is the establishment of a missionary at Ellis Island. Miss Lindahl, a Swedish woman, has been very useful here, and when we have talked of discontinuing it, Col. Webber, the head of the United States Commission of Emigration, told us that he would be willing to do anything that lay in his power to carry this work on. The Superintendent has also given his testimony to the value and importance of this work. Miss Lindahl speaks several languages, she goes among these people and distributes these tracts, which have been especially prepared on the "Duty of Citizenship." To these people are given bread with one hand and kind messages with the other, and it comes very pleasantly to these strange people in a strange land, who know nothing about temperance or the Sunday law. But this is America, and they accept it as part of their coming to the new land, and they gladly read them and put them in their bosoms and carry them. I have known of these people handing these things out to their friends when they landed as a precious gift that reached them in coming to America. I would be glad to tell you how we are helping little heathen Chinese girls sold to houses of prostitution, rescuing them, paying their board, and bringing them to a better life. Our Scandinavian work, our Spanish work, all the different divisions of the work seem to be growing and gathering importance. Let us carry these good things to these strangers, let us reach out our hands of welcome to make them better citizens that they may help us in building up this great Republic.

MRS FRANCES J. BARNES, Gen'l Sec'y of Y. Branch:—I think I ought to preface my remarks with thanks. I hardly know in what words to express the gratitude I feel for the action this Convention has taken, because I trust it will mean so much to our young women.

I believe this has been the best year of our work, because it makes our young people feel a greater interest in the work. They take hold better, they feel there is more purpose in the work to which they are called. Although in some places there has been a falling off, in other places there has been an increase. Some old states report very late, and some new states, never heard of before, have sent us very encouraging news. Owing to your generosity last November, it has been possible for the work to go on much better; I have visited twelve states of the Union, and the most noble part of the work this year has been through the schools and colleges. We know that through the influence of the Convention of last year, and the action of Lady Somerset, that the girls of Wellesley College have been very much interested in this work. The girls of Vassar have organized a society there of over sixty members, and at this time are calling for some of our best workers.

More than that, we have a number of graduates this year. You know ours is an imperative department, because we have the young women for such a little while; it is a fluctuating department, because our girls grow up and go away, and they graduate from Y's into W's. The former editor of our Oak and Ivy Leaf is one of the editors of the UNION SIGNAL, whom we have trained for more advanced work. We believe if they go from the Y's into the W's they become doubly Y's, and so we ask this year for your co-operation and help because we believe the year before us is going to be a blessed one. We expect to come in with a larger paid up membership than we have ever had before, because of your kindness and your sisterly action to-day.

MRS. HELEN G. RICE:—Juvenile Work. The relation of the Juvenile Department to the temperance work should be the first part of my theme, according to the program.

But what is the relation of this juvenile work to the temperance work? Why sisters, these are voters that we are training up in these Loyal Temperance Legions. These are the coming fathers and mothers, and we are trying to make them what they should be, and these are the coming W. C. T. U's., so in whatever way you look at it, the relation of these young people of the Loyal Temperance Legions to the temperance work is a question of whether our mothers are to be pure, whether our voters in this land are to cast their ballot for truth and righteousness, and whether our W. C. T. U. is to have a lease of life and keep up in full strength and usefulness until its strength is no longer needed in this land.

Now in regard to the other part of the topic as put upon the program, I want to speak just a few words along the line of the encouragement that has come. So many words come from the state superintendents telling us that our work was never so well organized as it is now. We never had so many efficient and alive superintendents in our local legions, our districts and counties. Our W. C. T. U. women are at last waking up to see the importance of this work. Then among the encouraging features has been the department of our county conventions. There is a place made for the L. T. L. work in various States, and they are broadening out, making our boys and girls just as enthusiastic as they are; they are looking forward to their conventions just as you look forward to going to your state and National conventions. There have been organized this year so many loyal county L. T. L.'s with presidents, secretary and treasurer. We have our committee on resolutions, correspondence and all these things. We copy your work and the little folks are being trained right up into business-like methods. Then along the line of these county Loyal Legions and county conventions we have had the department of graduates. Our graduates are already numbering up into the hundreds. We had a most wonderful gathering of the State Legion in Wisconsin; the boys and girls took charge of the convention in the most business-like fashion. Then Pennsylvania wheeled into line with the second State convention of the country. Then we have representation for our Loyal Temperance Legion secured in several conventions already. Some will welcome them this year for the first time to their conventions then; others are moving in this matter and have given notice already of the change of constitution; and some of the states, not wanting to wait until this matter could be got into form by changing the constitution, are already receiving associate delegates until the time when they may be able to receive full delegates through their change of constitution.

We are learning more thorough work in Loyal Legion lines; we are learning to dignify the whole matter. We shall ask for a representation in our National Convention, and I hope the ladies will realize how this will dignify this work with the older boys and girls. We have a great deal to contend with in holding the older boys. We have the attitude of the government to contend with, confusing the ideas of the boys and girls and the example of influential citizens.

Now, dear W. C. T. U. sisters, if any of you are not in all this that I have been telling about, if you don't know the enthusiasm of the graduates and the feeling of the strength that comes from a contact of this work with the children, Oh, I am so sorry for you. Come in, dear friends, and know all the joys that come from this helping to train the children in the ways of truth and sobriety and righteousness.

MISS WILLARD—Are you not glad we have got such a nice general for the Juvenile Army?

MISS WILLARD—The decorators of this beautiful church have brightened our eyes, if we have not spoken of it before. There are many beautiful things as you see here and we are particularly proud of this banner of the W. C. T. U. at Minneapolis or St. Paul, I forget which. Some people think we are such a practical people, that there is nothing artistic about us; but that beautiful banner was made by the president of the local union, Mrs. Groat, and received the name of Lady Somerset.

Then I want you to notice my beautiful birthday present received on the other side of the water, which Lady Somerset brought over so carefully in her state room. It is as much too good for me as what Brother McIntyre said last night, but I want you all to see it.

MRS. CHENEY—I believe that every member of this Convention is entitled to hear the words of that birthday present to you, and I move that it be read from the platform.

Motion seconded, put by Mrs. Buell and carried. Singing, solo, "Some Glad Day," Mrs. Teetor.

MRS. FESSENDEN — Madam President, I am sure our friends would be interested to know that the words of this song were written by Mrs. Stevenson of Massachusetts.

MISS WILLARD—The chair was going to say that we have an oncoming laureate in Mrs. Stevenson, and this is only one of the beautiful things which she has written. For a long time I have had the rhythm of the words "We Belong, We Belong," and wanted to have somebody put it into shape so we could sing it, and Mrs. Stevenson has had an inspiration fitting those words to a poem. This afternoon we will have a copy all around and sing it.

The telegram committee read the following cable and telegraph messages:

To SIR WILFRED LAWSON,
Alliance Conference, England.
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled send greeting. Read Deut. 28:7.

To HELEN L. HOOD,
Secretary World's W. C. T. U.,
47 Victoria street, London, England:
Sisters send love to you. National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled send greeting to the World's W. C. T. U. 1st Chron. 28:20.

To the MAYORESS of MANCHESTER, England:
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled send greeting. Read Psa. 126:36.

To the EDITOR of THE GOLDEN RULE,
For the National Society of Christian Endeavor,
Boston, Mass.:
The N. W. C. T. U. in convention assembled at Denver, Colorado, would send through you greeting to the great Society of Christian Endeavor. Joel 2:28, 29.

To SUSAN B. ANTHONY,
Leavenworth, Kansas:
The N. W. C. T. U. in convention assembled send greeting. Read Titus 3:15.

MISS JENNIE CASSADY, Louisville, Ky.
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled send greeting. Read Num. 6:24, 26.

MISS WILLARD—I wish to introduce to you Mrs. McFarland, who represents our Canadian sisters.

MRS. MCFARLAND—When I was appointed by the Dominion, or rather when I was nominated to represent the Dominion of Canada, I was so astonished my breath was fairly taken away, that I should be selected to come more than three thousand miles to attend this convention at Denver. Well, I am here, after traveling five days and nights to reach you, and I am very glad and proud to stand here this morning. Now, I said to my sisters there, "Why, I am an American born, how can you expect me to represent Canada?" They said, "Oh, yes, you are one of us." Then I said, "If I go to the convention I shall stand up for Canada." These two countries are so close together they ought to be one, but I don't say that at home. I hope all this great continent will be under one flag. I am not ashamed of the British flag nor of the dear Queen that reigns over the sea. I am glad to be under the same flag, still it seems for many reasons, it ought to be one, and I think it will be in the good time coming. We have more square miles in Canada than you have in the United States. I want to say, and I do believe that we are going to have prohibitory law and franchise for women in Canada before you have it in the United States. I would like to name some women who are dear to us all. Dear Mrs. Youmans, mother of us all, who is now laid aside from active service; and then there are numbers of our women from the East. We live and love, and labor and hope to see the day ere long, when man to man will be united and every wrong thing righted and the whole world lighted as Eden was of old.

MISS WILLARD—We now have Mrs. McLaughlin of Canada:

MRS. MCLAUGHLIN—I simply say I endorse my sister preceding me, and will not tell you what I brought but what I take home to my sisters across the line. I must speak of the courtesy which I have received at this Convention, and from Denver. It reminds me of the story of two boys trying to cross the stream, and one said to the other, "John, I think we must be going lengthwise of the stream." Your president wishes me to tell you of what has been attempted in my country. It is simply to give us an opportunity to vote on the temperance question at the next election. She asks if we expect to carry it. Of course we do.

MISS WILLARD:—Introducing W. H. Crampton, delegate of the Royal Templar of Temperance, Lockport, N. Y.

W. H. CRAMPTON:—As a worker in the temperance reform, in the presence of this grand gathering of temperance workers, I am deeply impressed with the feeling that it is good to be here in behalf of the Supreme Council of the Royal Templars of Temperance, whom I have the honor to represent as a delegate to your body—I sincerely thank you for this kind reception. I feel at home in your convention for two reasons. In the first place, I am in full accord and have long been in full accord with the W. C. T. U. body on the temperance question. In the second place, I feel at home on account of the relationship I claim; my wife and my mother wear the white ribbon, my only sister is an active W. C. T. U. worker, and is present with you in this convention to-day, therefore I claim to be a brother-in-law in fact; but I realize that you are here for work and that your time is important, and I will only add in conclusion, that the Royal Templars of Temperance, forty thousand strong, send you words of cheer and greeting.

MISS WILLARD—We will request our brother to bear our goodwill to the society he represents.

MISS WILLARD—I want to introduce Miss Morley, to represent the Kindergarten of Chicago.

MISS MORLEY—In the heart of Chicago there is a place called the Black Hole. Chicago is a city of superlatives. This Black Hole is one of the worst holes on the earth; into this Black Hole about thirteen years ago a little company of men and women dropped a seed; this seed was a free kindergarten, this kindergarten gathered up the little children from the slums. In about a year after that these people organized themselves into the Free Kindergarten Association of Chicago, and to-day there are twenty-one free kindergartens in the slums of Chicago under the supervision of this association. They are the outgrowth of that one which was the first free kindergarten in Chicago.

This organization established not only free kindergartens through the city, but a free training class to prepare young women for the care of children; we have ninety young ladies now in training for teachers. The free kindergarten is the only one so far as I know that makes the use of Bible texts a part of its work. Train the child and there can be no abandoned manhood; that is what we are trying to do in the city of Chicago, and what we would like to do in every city of the United States.

MISS WILLARD then introduced Mrs. Esther Frame, representing the yearly meeting of the Friends of Ohio, held in Wilmington.

MRS. ESTHER FRAME spoke of her work as an evangelist and of her pleasure at being present at this Convention, and brought greetings from the Ohio Convention.

MISS WILLARD introduced Mrs. Likens, Police Matron of the W. C. T. U. in Denver.

MRS. LIKENS—I am very glad to stand before you for just one moment. I feel honored that I wear the white ribbon and am the matron of the police of Denver. I realize that the W. C. T. U. is praying that I may succeed, that I may do some good at the City Hall, that I may reach some unfortunates, and because of the success of the W. C. T. U. work, the Police Department is made easier. I speak of this because some never realize when they find one in trouble that they may come to me, and if I cannot relieve that want, I recommend them where they may go to some woman who will care for them. I am glad to welcome you to Denver. I hope you will not stop one moment until you have placed a police matron all over the land, give her work, and then hold up her hands that she may not fall.

The devotional hour was conducted by Miss Greenwood, assisted by Miss Willard.

After song and announcements, the morning session adjourned.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

The Convention met at 2 o'clock, Miss Willard in the chair, and while the delegates were coming in the "Old Oaken Bucket" was sung.

Devotional exercises in charge of Mrs. Bourne, of New Jersey.

The hymn "Nearer My God to Thee" was followed by the reading of the sixty-ninth Psalm, thirtieth verse, after which Mrs. Teetor, of Denver, sang a solo to the words of the following poem, written by Miss Willard:

ON HEIGHTS OF POWER.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

[Memorial Hymn of the White Ribboners.]

Love's light illumines the pathway ye trod,
Comrades of yesterday, now Saints of God;
Gracious and great were your souls in their stay,
Greatest of all in their going away.
Blessing the world that you loved and you left,
Soothing the hearts that your going bereft.
Death did not daunt, and you feared not your fate,—
Sweet sang your souls "We must love, trust and wait."

Chorus—

Born into beauty and born into bloom,
Victors immortal o'er terror and tomb,
Fast fall our footsteps—we follow from far.
Love's light leads heav'nward from gates left ajar.

Faith that makes faithful and Truth that makes true,
Hallow our hearts from the heights gained by you.
Happy White Ribboners, homelike is heav'n.
God girds and guides us through help you have given.
Motherly spirits of sweetness and might,
We hear your symbol in ribbons of white.
"Christ and His Kingdom" our watchwords will stand;
Banners of peace shall enfold ev'ry land.

Chorus—

Mrs. Lathrap, of Michigan, was called to the chair to preside during the memorial services.

MRS. LATHRAP—I want to explain that the words of this solo were written by Miss Willard while on the train, and were suggested by the words of her mother when she said, "I am not going to die, I am going to be born."

We will follow the list as you will find it on your programme with the exception of the second name, Mrs. Mary T. Hill Willard, that name will be placed last.

John Greenleaf Whittier, the real poet of America, the poet who was nearer to the hearts of American women than perhaps any other, will be spoken of by our National President, Miss Frances F. Willard.

MISS WILLARD—

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air,
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

The beautiful spirit that was Whittier's has become a heritage to every one of us, and I presume there is not a white-ribboner in this audience who could not quote from his writings on reform, on philanthrophy, on the deep things of the Spirit.

"Work cheerily, Temperance workers,
For daylight and for land,
The breath of God is in your souls,
Your rudder in His hand."

He wrote the verses that are to be placed on the temperance ship which is to be one of the ornaments in our Temple. He knew about all we were doing; he loved the white ribboners. It was only last April that Lady Henry Somerset and several of us white ribboners lunched in his home. He was very feeble, so much so that we did not feel it was right to have him talk, and so we tried to keep him brightened up by anecdotes and allusions in which he seemed to take great interest. I do not know of anything more sweet that ever happened me than just a word I had with him on leaving. He was then so weak that his lips trembled while he spoke, but he said, "Thee knows that I have had the grippe this winter and it left me very weak. I was full of the thought that I might go and was perfectly ready and calm. I knew that God is love. I had no faith my works to prove. I thought only about a few friends that I was sorry to leave, a few dear old friends of the early days and some of later times," and then he turned his beautiful face towards me and said, "And among them I thought of thee." It was so sweet to me that he should have thought of me, and when I told my mother, the tears filled her eyes and she said, "That is the loveliest thing that was ever said to thee," and so I wanted to speak a word for Whittier, the "Woman's Laureate," as we call him. As pure as a woman, as brave and strong as any man.

The last letter we had from him was only four days before my mother left the world, and I had written him and his cousins about her and her beautiful thoughts of being born into the better life, and his cousin said, "As Greenleaf read what your mother had told you, he looked far off (he knows his end is nigh), and he said, 'I wish we might all feel feel like that and go as she is going.'" There is something homelike and tender to the white ribboners to include the great Poet in our thought on this day when the promoted ones, the translated ones are so tenderly and sacredly in the minds and hearts of all of us.

On that list you will find a name of which I wish to say a word, that of James M. Gordon, the father of our Anna Gordon, nearer to me than any one since my father and brother died. He has been like a father, always out on the steps watching for us when he knew we were to arrive, and saying, "I welcome you home, my eldest daughter." And so it seems to me that white-ribbon man as he was, brave and tender and true, that it would be pleasant to include his name as he was so like one whom we so much loved, and have known and loved so long.

MRS. LATHRAP—The name of Julia Ames, the one whom we knew so well, who was called "Yolande" by those close to her, stands among those of whom we shall speak to-day. It was a year ago that we were in our great National Convention at Boston, and already she was smitten with that disease that finally was the doorway that opened to her better things. So much has been said and the history of her life has been so well written, that I need not spend many moments to remind you of the beautiful life that tarried with us for a little while, that did its work so gently and simply that her own mother said: "I always wondered why they wrote a book about her. I did not know that Julia had gone far enough to be worthy of that, or that there was enough to say about her." But the sweetness in every act of her life and in every letter she wrote, the love she gave to those who were her friends and the gentleness with which she treated everybody, made her life a fragrance and her going out from the world a personal sorrow to all of us. We shall never forget her, I am sure, we shall hold her for long in our hearts, and try to be like her.

Mrs. Caroline Brown was the mother of our Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, and her name and her life will be spoken of by Miss Esther Pugh.

Miss Pugh—It is very hard for me to stand here and speak of Mrs. Caroline Brown this afternoon, sisters. Although I was not with her a great deal, I have been with her daughter so many years and so closely with her that it is almost like speaking of my own mother. If I go back a moment to the circumstances under which I first knew Caroline Buell, you will understand it better. You all know that the most precious, the sweetest boon, nearly that has come to us in all these years of our march has been the comradeship one with another. The old social ties have been so broken by diverging paths, our lives have been so changed by this new life we have come into, that we have clung with the tenderest affection to the new ones. Sixteen years ago at Newark, I first met the woman whose life has run parallel with mine all these years, and I learned to love her as she grew into my very heart of hearts. Then I wanted to know the springs of her life and I got hold one day, just caught the keynote in a little sentence that has been in my heart ever since. "My mother is all the world to me, and she is my only confidante." When I tell you that those words came just after I was stripped of father and mother, almost together, you may know what a revelation it was to me. It was just when I was envying every woman that had her mother left to her and when I would cling to anybody else's mother, because they called her mother. You can understand how that little sentence gave me a little revelation of what Caroline Brown Buell was. Some of you have seen Mrs. Brown and remember how she looked. At three-score and fifteen years she was beautiful still, of lovely presence through all these years of discipline as a Methodist minister's wife. The years of buffeting and the changes and the privileges of a minister's wife had bravely enriched her character, for she was of that very highest of all American lineage—of the Mayflower stock.

I wish I could tell you what a home woman she was. Her sons stood up and called her blessed; were tenderly devoted and loyal to her, while the only daughter and she were mutually dependent. You could see that she was the mother in that family, and had always been a perfect home character. Then there were other characteristics: she was a woman of the rarest business ability. If she had been a man, and her talents had been turned into business, she would have made a wonderful success; but her unusual business ability was turned into the work of the church, to which she was most devotedly attached, into the work of the Sunday-school, as she was a most successful superintendent of Sunday-schools for many years, and to missionary societies. In all broad things that grew out of a broad catholicity of mind, in all things that were good, high and holy, she was interested. She was a woman of the rarest sympathy of character, always attractive, especially to young people; then a great reader, especially of biography and poetry, and she had that rare gift of wonderfully beautiful correspondence. So you see what it was to lose her. This is just the barest outline. And yet again since this great bereavement has the undeniable messenger come to our sister, Mrs. Buell, and he whom she has called father all the years of her womanhood, who has striven to be to her what his son would have been, all the years of her widowhood, is not. To him bereft of wife and son and daughters, she was there to stand beside him in that last hour. That messenger has not come to many of our homes as many times in a few years as it has come to our sister's home, and this afternoon I think our hearts go out to her most tenderly, because for so many times she has had to stand beside her dead.

Prayer was offered by Mrs. Crane.

Mrs. Lathrap—I think we all understand that it is not always easy to say the deepest thing and the sweetest thing that is in our hearts at such a time as this. Human love always stands bewildered between its own sense of loss and the glory into which the loved ones have gone. I remember my own experience for two or three months last year when I went home from the National Convention and stood under the shadow of the loss of my dear friend, Mrs. Downs of New Jersey. I could not get over it. And then so soon after that came the other loss of Julia Ames. But this year we have all been bereft in the translation of the sweet woman that we have felt in a certain sense was the mother of us all and whom we have delighted to call "Madam Willard," whom we have thought of in the setting of Rest Cottage; it was a personal sorrow to us all when she went away, and I hope God will bring us into the deepest touch of sympathy with those upon whom this loss has fallen. Mrs. Clara Hoffman will now speak of Madam Willard.

Mrs. Hoffman—I received a letter from our President, Miss Willard, when she was across the water, saying that she would like me to say a few words about her mother's family life. It was my privilege to be often at Rest Cottage. I remember very distinctly the picture, when I first met Madam Willard. It was one evening when I had returned from Chicago with Mrs. Mary B. Willard, who was for years, you know, the editor of our Union Signal.

At that time Miss Willard and Miss Gordon were making a tour of the States and the Territories, and were gone for many months. After supper was over, Mrs. Mary B. Willard said, "We will go in and see mother." I had never seen Madam Willard; we went into the sitting room and found her there as peaceful as a May morning, books and papers about her, and as I sat down to talk with her, I said, what we so often said, "You must be lonely with Miss Willard gone." "Oh yes," she said, "of course I am lonely, of course I miss her all the time." And then I said, "I don't see how you can spare Miss Willard, let her go from you so long." "Why," she said, "I could not do other than spare her. I must not think of my feelings, I must think of the development of my child, and beyond all, I must think of the good she can do."

Now I think that was the key to Madam Willard's strong, well-poised character. She was willing that Miss Willard should go so that she might be developed to the fullest in the gifts that God had given her; and beyond that, that these gifts might be used for the honor and glory of God, and for the good of humanity. We often talk about honoring and glorifying God, and we forget that there is only one way to honor Him, and only one way to glorify Him, and that is by trying to lift up humanity up towards Him and to worship Him by our service for humanity. I remember that evening, it made a very pleasant and distinct impression on me, for I had quite a long talk with her, and I was greatly interested in her.

There was a great deal of humor, there was a wonderful amount of strength of character in her, and if our dear president were not the woman she is, there would be little excuse for her, for she had a wonderful heredity and a wonderful training in the intimate companionship and silent influence that had been around her, surrounding her like the atmosphere that she breathed for all these years.

I have but little more to say. It is impossible to speak of that life, fully rounded and completed and perfected, impossible to speak of it in a few moments as we are trying to do here, but you know much of what I might say. I want to say this, dear friends, and this is the thought that has struck me most in this memorial service. It is this, the Christianity in which we believe, and which we hope that we possess,—know that we possess it, is teaching us to look upon death very differently from what we used to. The time will come when we shall put no crape on, when we shall not cease our employment, and when we shall be able to smile and be glad and rejoice when our beloved pass over. And why shouldn't we? They have all gone into what we are all hoping to attain, into Heaven. Why should we weep? We are lonely, but, beloved, it is a great deal lonelier to give up our loved ones, and have them over the face of the earth, not knowing where they are, nor how they are, nor what they are doing. It is easier to know that our beloved have passed beyond and are at rest forever with our Saviour.

I am so glad to see that our women are learning this lesson, and that we are coming to this point, that we do not have to go through a certain formal grief; that we can take up the burdens of life and go right on with them without any of this paraphernalia of grief that we have seen so much of, and that is so utterly inconsistent with the religion we possess. Madam Willard's thought was right, that the Christian does not die, the Christian is born into a new life, into Heaven.

Madam Willard's life has been an inspiration to thousands of us. One thought came to me as I was sitting here listening. I have read somewhere that excessive grief is selfishness. We do not see it with our women, but resignation, calm and thankful, hopeful and radiant, is heroism, and we are tending to that heroism.

Mrs. Lathrap—Miss Willard requests me to say to the Convention, that about two weeks before her mother's death she talked into a phonograph a message for this Convention, but she thought it might be too saddening and too trying to have it reproduced here, and merely wanted you to know of her mother's thought about this meeting.

The next speaker is Dr. Delano, the Prohibition minister at Evanston, and very near and very dear to the family at Rest Cottage. We know him through his pen, and through his electric utterances.

Dr. Delano—Beloved friends, I think this is the third anniversary of our great organization at which I have been called to the platform to be introduced to you. I have lived not long in the world, but long enough to know that such things in the main are shams, and so I have tried to keep out of that sort of thing; and tried with all my might to keep off the platform, more and more for the last two years; but as I looked forward to this moment, and the possibility of being present here, I said to a member of my church, one of the beloved scribes at Rest Cottage who called upon me to ask me to say a word about Madam Willard, that I would be glad to do so. While I am not the pastor of the inmates, still I have been a sort of chaplain in Rest Cottage, and I am prouder of it, than though I were blind and chaplain of the United States Senate. It is a great honor to go there at any time, especially an honor to go there when in communion of heart and mind, and get something of education and helpfulness along the road. It was my pleasure to be there occasionally, while yet Madam Willard seemed strong and hopeful in regard to her life. I did not find always the other members of the family, for they belonged to what our Methodist friends call, the "Traveling Connection," and were almost always on the road. I had an opportunity to slip into the Cottage at times and steal something from the woman whom we all honored. And, as I think of her to-day, I call to mind my first journey over these great mountains, over which some of you may pass before you return East. I remember looking out of the window, some years ago, as you did the other morning, and seeing the Rocky Mountain Range, I said, "That is not what I saw in the old geography, and not what people told me they were."

I went on, and finally I was at the base of the mountains, and as I approached them they seemed not high, not great, not grand, but as I came nearer and nearer, and at last was where I could sit down, perhaps at the very base of this great range, oh, how they elevated themselves into the blue heavens, beyond my eye, and all beyond my comprehension. So it was when I was permitted to sit by this gifted woman, this woman of such rare intelligence. I felt her greatness and I did not blame your noble President, if to-day she closed with the words of the great Laureate across the sea,

"Nor blame I Death."

That is sentiment, a cheerful sentiment as it comes to me, as I think of it for a moment; I want to voice it. As I think of the twilight and the sunrise of Rest Cottage, during the past year, I am glad to think this afternoon that there are voices which we might hear if we could command our attention and ears to seven-fold silence and wait and listen, that there are voices which might speak to us of better lives. Rest Cottage has known all the stormy waves and billows. There was that beautiful sunrise of hope, that beautiful woman, Yolande. I shall never forget those faces at Rest Cottage, when I was asked to say a word of prayer and benediction over the casket. It was a misty morning and cold; and as the casket went out, I shall never forget Madam Willard's words, "God be with you till we meet again." It seemed that this was enough, but there came this other. I feel more and more that the woman who went from us that day is the prophecy of what the Christian woman will be to-morrow, because she looked benignly upon all efforts, upon all churches, upon all forms of organization for the betterment of society and the world. She was so rich towards humanity, because she was so rich towards God. Let us put all mourning away; let us take the sunlight that comes through that window, throwing its mellow beams as an omen of good. Some one said to me the other day, "I am afraid that woman in your town (referring to Miss Willard) will break down under this crushing load." I said, "Oh no, she will not break; I know that mother left her His Rod and His Staff, for the valley and shadow of death; I know she will not break."

Then let us take the words of your own poet Laureate:

"No longer forward or behind
To look or hope or fear,
But only take the good I find;
The best is now and here."

Mrs. Lathrap—I think never any one has come to this country that attached herself to women in all circles as did Lady Henry Somerset this last year. I think nobody has ever come to us that we have taken quite to our hearts so quickly and more freely; and it is, therefore, very fitting and proper that the last words should be spoken by Lady Somerset.

Lady Henry Somerset—Sisters, no greater honor has been done me in this country, than that I should be asked to say a few words to-day, at this memoral service. I think that it must be that those who stand at a distance are often more able to gaze upon the glory of a great landscape stretched before them, than those who live in the midst of it; and so I, coming from afar, have been able to look upon this picture with a different view. You have heard so much that is tender and true that anything I can add must seem, in a measure, superfluous, and when I think about this memoral service I am reminded of the time in my own city a year or so back, when the streets were blocked for three or more hours with an immense throng such as has not been met since we laid our Wellington to rest; and the whole of the heart of that great city went out as they went past that multitude, because they were laying to rest the mother of the Salvation Army, Mrs. Booth. To-day I feel that we are holding the memorial service of one who is not the mother only of one whom we all revere and honor, but who is in the truest sense the mother of the White Ribbon Army. When I first came to America, it was, of course, with an intense desire to see the woman of whom we in England had heard so much. There is hardly a home in which temperance teaching is the motto of the fireside, where the name of Frances Willard is not equally loved and honored as it is here. And when I came to Evanston and Rest Cottage, it was almost as a pilgrim seeks a shrine. On the doorstep that memorable afternoon, stood Madam Willard. I suppose sometimes those who have seen the most are able in some measure to have the truest opinions. The power of appreciation is largely, I think, the power for comparison. And when I look back over the ways of life, and the circumstances that have brought me here, the times in my life when I have taken the hands of Queen and Empresses, of Princes and of Peers, with all that throng that I counted, as I held the hand of Madam Willard and as I touched that queenly hand, I knew that no woman had ever been endowed with a greater trace of nobility. I knew there stood one of earth's great and wise women, who was born to rule and reign over the hearts of men and women, because she had within her that refinement, that beauty of character, that comes of illustrious parentage, pure birth and a noble loyal heart.

My visit to Rest Cottage was one that I shall never forget. The impression that it made upon me was recorded on the 28th of October, just one year ago, by a note in my diary. That evening was the first spent in Rest Cottage. You can understand that when this great woman made so deep an impression upon me, that impression was destined to deepen as I knew her better, as I understood more of that great life, as I realized all the refinement of one of America's greatest educators, who took with her the greatest culture into the prairie farm, all that intellect, all that refinement of character, all that great desire to make life beautiful; and she made that life out there in the wild West the centre of cultivation. What wonder, then, that Frances Willard should be all that we know she is. I do not know any life more desirable than that found in Rest Cottage, than to see that woman in her beautiful house. She was a woman who carried out all her household duties. Nothing is more impressed upon my memory than when she lay back in her rocking-chair and read the great work of Wordsworth. The secret of her life lay in the fact that she was at home with God. Religion was not to her a thing that was to be put away and from time to time brought out only to be looked at. Religion meant to her a consecrated life; the life of God meant to her the pulsations of her beating heart; and as the prayers went up on high from that aged heart, it seemed to me to be almost as though her hand was upon the door of eternity. Too much has been said of this great character for me to dwell to-day upon all that this sorrow has meant. But I should just like to add that there was about Madam Willard's character one thing which has always attracted me, because I believe that all true pathos in every character is always accompanied by a very keen sense of the humerous. So gentlyand so tenderly she turned all things into that bright light which casts different gleams and different aspects on conversation. Her life was carried on day by day with the same tender experiences, just the same winning smile. When she came to put aside the little things for those she wished to have them, her daughter asked her for some message to each that might go to every one, and with a sweet smile and that humorous look that always came over her angelic features, she said to her, "Why, I could not write it all or send a message to all; I would simply be turned into literature." Death came to her so gently, it was not painful, it was just a step into the open air. And all the great blessings that were with her, that have come to us, we owe to the President of this great association. She was unselfish, she gave it to the great world, all that was beautiful and bright in her mother's last hours on earth. We are so apt to keep all those best things in our own hearts, so apt to keep all that is most sacred, to take what is best out of the world. It is precious to me to know that in her last minutes she remembered me in connection with her nearest and best friends. Perhaps she mentioned me especially because I stood aside from the great army in this land, and therefore possibly in some measure was able to do some little service for her, because, outside this great work, it was well to have a touch of the world at large, and because she knew that I loved her and her daughter. I should like to say how well I know, there is not a woman that wears this White Ribbon that would not be as loyal and true as I. And now this service has almost closed and we linger a moment to look back upon that which is precious and bright; and as we meet here, speaking of her whom we all love, we know that we are out upon the billows of life, and we may be brought into that harbor sooner than we think; but whether tossed upon the billows of life, whether brought through with sails all broken and masts all bent, whether we weather all the storms that the oceans may bring, we know that the evening brings all home. I pray that when that time may come and Heaven's gates are opened, that it may be with all sails set, with all the masts manned, with all the glory of the full breeze blowing through the white sails of our life's ship, that we may enter that harbor with the triumphant and vanquishing glory with which Madam Willard went home some weeks ago.

MISS WILLARD—The Loyal Temperance Legions of the city are coming in and we will sing their familiar song as a song of welcome. This has been arranged by the local committee of the W. C. T. U. as the day for the children; after they have sung their welcome to us they will march over to the Unity Church, where they will be addressed by Mrs. Helen Rice, Miss Anna Gordon and others, whose specialty it is to talk to children. Mrs. Teetor has sung to us and helped us right through, and she will take this matter in her own hands.

The children then sung the W. C. T. U. welcome, to the tune of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and also "We Turn Our Glasses Upside Down" and "Precious Jewels," and then marched out singing, "Saloons Must Go."

MISS WILLARD—The children have now sung their songs and have gone their winding way and we will turn to our work.

MISS WILLARD—It is moved and seconded that we send a letter of sympathy and remembrance to Miss Mary Allen West, the veteran worker of the UNION SIGNAL and a member of its editorial staff. Motion carried.

MISS FRANCES GRIFFIN—In giving our hearts' best wishes to a woman whom we have long acknowledged as our American Queen, whom we hope some day to make President of the United States, and of whom Bishops have grown nervous, lest, when represented fairly, she might occupy the Bishopric—still there are other honors yet in store for her, that come up as freely and as graciously as any she has yet received. I now present to her a great donation from a woman who has long been shut in from sunlight and health, and who, during long months of care and labor has quilted it. It is impossible to show you the wealth of this silken coverlet. There are squares from every noble character whose hearts beat in unison, from the East and the West, and across the sea; Lady Somerset gave the centerpiece; there is a piece from India; there is a piece of ex-President Hayes' necktie somewhere in the middle. It is not the first gift she has received of this kind, but when at Rest Cottage, I noticed that the other was somewhat worn, and in need of repairing, and it is with pleasure that I hand over this quilt for her delectation.

MISS WILLARD—What is the name of the giver?

MRS. GLEN MORSE—My mother, Mrs. J. P. Howe of Pueblo, Colorado.

MISS FANNIE GRIFFIN—The Crusade Bible book-mark is also in that quilt alongside of President Hayes' necktie.

MISS WILLARD—As Lucy Webb Hayes was a Crusader at the White House, it is quite appropriate it should be in my quilt.

MISS GRIFFIN—Madam president, the end is not yet. I am requested by the same lady whose mother made the quilt, to present you this painting, done, I am told, by the seventh artist in the world, and he lived in the city of Pueblo. The picture represents the great Rocky Mountains and the wonderful Pike's Peak. I present it to you to hang in your study; as it represents the highest peak in the snow-capped hills, so you represent the highest peak among the snow-capped women of the W. C. T. U.

MISS WILLARD—That will not long remain in my study at Rest Cottage. It shall be placed in the Memorial Temple. I wish to explain how it is these things come to me. Because I was left-handed and could not learn to sew, my mother would give me work to do and I would sit down and prick my fingers. Then I would go to her and she would say, "I never will ask you to sew again;" consequently I cannot take a decent stitch, and have never learned to sew.

Miss Schuff, of Madras, India, was introduced to the Convention and said: "I am glad to be here with you to day. I want you to remember that out in India there are many millions of men addicted to intemperance. I want you to send up a silent prayer for those few women of the white ribbon army working out there and pray that more workers of this Union and more workers who have the love of souls in their own hearts and who have the love of women in their hearts, may be sent out to do good work among the men and women, especially among the women of India."

MR. CHAS. N. CRITTENTON, founder of the Florence Missions:—Madam President, I am glad I have been here this afternoon to listen to such words as I have heard. My heart has been wonderfully cheered as I have listened to each one who has spoken of my best friend, the Lord Jesus Christ, who received me ten years ago. Then these memorial services have been very blessed. I feel that it is right that I should be here because I am interested in this wonderful army of the W. C. T. U. I would like to read to you a message from the 22d chapter in Isaiah.

You know the work that I am in, and how much interested I am in restoring to a better life those who are called outcasts. Very often we hear the question asked, "Can they be saved?" meaning this class which is called abandoned. Very often we hear the question, "Is it possible for them to be saved?" and again as frequently, "Do they stand?" Of course they stand. This Word says if any be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature, and old things have passed away, and behold all things have become new.

There is no difference between a fallen man and a fallen woman when Christ comes into that life. The things they have loved they hate, and the things they have hated they love. There is no difference between a fallen woman and a fallen man, except that one has a little farther to fall from.

We find many causes for the condition of these women. I can assure you that there is no theory about this, when they are saved they are saved just the same as the men are. I will refer to a few statistics of the San Francisco Home, which has been now three years in existence. In that home there have been admitted 190. Return to sin out of that 26; lost track of, 13; died, 5; making 44 in all; there are 51 with parents and friends living good lives; married to their seducers, 24; at the mission, 23; making in all 125. Added to those of whom we do not know it makes 190. Out of that 190 are 125 whom you will see are living conscious Christian lives to-day, and we know right where they are. That is the statistics of one Home. Recently in the city of Los Angeles in the southern part of the state, there has been another established, which has been going on two months, and many there have been saved and are now trusting in Christ as a personal Saviour. The causes of the different ones getting into that condition are various, as we have found according to the history of the past. One is dancing, others skating rinks, drugs, and many through mock marriages. A young German girl came to the Home; she had been associated with a person for about a year; finally they were married, she supposing of course that he was conscientious in that marriage, and that he was her husband, but she found out shortly that he was a bigamist, and finally separated from him and came to the Home, where she is now living a Christian life. But suppose there had been no Home for her to go to, she would simply follow after the great number that are already in that path that leads down to hell.

Take the city of New York. There are, according to statistics, one hundred girls each and every month of the year that are filling unknown graves, besides those that are being rescued, one hundred every month going down into darkness. In the city of San Francisco there are about the same number filling unknown graves, so that in those two cities alone twenty-four hundred a year fill unknown graves. Here in this city we would probably find there would be about the same percentage, and you can rest assured of one thing, if there are twenty-four hundred in those two cities, some one's girls have to take their place because those ranks are filled up constantly and continuously. Every day there are those that are going out into sin because there are those that are dying every day, and others step right in and take their places. You mothers that are here stop and listen and think for one moment,—bear in mind there are numberless girls to-day in the arms of mothers in this city who one of these days will fill the ranks of those who are dropping into unknown graves. No one but God knows who they are.

O, how sad it used to be in the city of New York, to know and to realize that there are at least one hundred of such girls dying every month of the year. Now we can show you some of those that have been rescued, some of those who have come and accepted Christ as their Saviour in the city of San Francisco. A girl came from the southern part of the state to the city to hide her shame, and went into the county hospital and a procuress got hold of her and finally persuaded her to go into a house of ill-fame, and she had been there, practically in prison, impossible to get out, when we found her. She gave a note, sent a letter off by a man who was in there. to her mother, and the mother sent this communication to Mr. Ellsworth, the manager of the Home, and he went to this house and found this girl, brought her out, and she gave her heart to God and for several months served the Lord Christ. Several months ago, when Mr. Ellsworth was in the city of Los Angeles, he was out at twelve o'clock at night in the street where those girls were, and he saw two young women going along, stopping from window to window, and finally he got up a little closer, and he heard one of them say "Jesus will help you, Jesus will help you," and so he stepped up a little closer and finally found it was the same girl that had been rescued and brought into the Home, who was out there at twelve and one o'clock at night to tell her erring sisters of the better way that she had found. We find in the 21st chapter and 28th verse of Matthew, the command "Go work to-day in my vineyard." Those are the words of the Lord Jesus Christ, and those words come to every one of us, just as peremptory to-day as they were when they fell from the lips of the Son of God, because He declares in His Word, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever," therefore this is a message to each one of us, to go and work in His vineyard.

I will just mention the case of one who came into the Florence Mission in the City of New York some ten years ago. One of our people went into a place of vice, and as he commenced singing, "There is a fountain filled with blood, drawn from Emanuel's veins," and finally knelt in prayer and spoke to the girls, they were affected. We took them by the hands and talked to them of Christ, and two months after, the doors of the Florence Mission were opened and one of these girls came in. She was one who had stood up in the centre of that room and said, "Pray for me," and she came forward and lifted her heart to God in prayer, and she said, "The mistakes of my life have been many, but I will knock at the open door," and she did knock and the Lord Jesus Christ came into her heart, and for a year and a half she went around from one place to another, telling the simple story of Jesus and his love, being called to different places in the City of New York, where she always went gladly to tell of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in speaking she would say, "The grass withers and the flowers fade, but the Lord, our God, shall stand forever."

We are trying to rescue these ruined and these hundreds that are filling unknown graves, each and every year of our lives, and I believe that the Lord Jesus Christ says to you and me, "Go work to-day in my vineyard, go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city and gather in the maimed and the halt and the blind." I believe if we will go out and pick up these maimed ones, and those who are separated and ostracised and ready to die and fill unknown graves, we can take them and lead them to the Great Shepherd. God says, "Son, daughter, go work to-day in my vineyard," and when I stop to think of respectable society which tolerates immoral men and refuses to tolerate their girl victims and leaves them to die, I feel it is not in accordance with what should be the standing of the blessed church which represents the love and tenderness and sympathy and compassion of the Lord Jesus Christ. No minister has ever dared to condemn fallen men as St. Paul has. To-day these millions of victims are calling out to you and to me, calling to you because the W. C.

T. U. profess to be doing the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. They are calling out, "Go work in my vineyard." God grant that every one of you shall say "I want to be one of those workers. I want to rescue the perishing and lead them to the better life, that bye and bye we may be with Him and like Him for all eternity, and meet with many of those who will rise up and call us blessed, and say, "There is the one that pointed me to Christ, to the dear Saviour."

MRS. DUNHAM—I want to say that we have in our delegation to-day a woman who may never be able to attend another National Convention, but who a great many years ago did what she could to help these sisters, took them into her heart and went over the States and raised money to start the Benedict Home, and when that Home was taken from her, she opened the doors of her own home in the little city of Decorah, Iowa, and to-day there are little children and girls and women there whom she has brought back to a right life. Madam president, I want the women of this Convention to look our Mother Benedict in the face.

MISS WILLARD—We shall be glad to have Mother Benedict come to the platform, and when the introductions are made she will be presented. I do not know of a woman who was earlier in the field to rescue those who are called outcasts, but are only cast out by those who ought to have taken them in.

MRS. GARNER—In all the history of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union I know of nothing more pathetic than for this brother to stand here this afternoon and plead with us to do for these fallen sisters. Are we doing what we ought to do as an organization? I move a vote of thanks to the brother for what he has said to us.

Motion seconded and carried by rising vote.

MISS WILLARD (introducing Mother Benedict)—Here is the good woman who founded a Home and even took these poor children into her own home. And she has written a book called "Woman's Work for Women." This is an account of the beautiful work she is doing. I hope it will be purchased by our women.

MOTHER BENEDICT.—I am in a poor condition just now to speak so as to be heard, but if I could sing, I would sing "Praise God from Whom all blessings flow," because of what we have just heard. Years ago I heard of this man and of the Florence Mission. I then felt like thanking God and taking fresh courage, but this afternoon as he has poured out in eloquence the experience that I have had for years, in rescuing to honorable lives these girls and women, I can go back to forty years ago and answer that question, "Will they stand?" I always want to answer that, sisters, as I answered a minister's wife, "Sister, hast thou a through ticket?" Yes. Stand! Yes, Christ is just as able to make them stand as He is one of us. Saved; washed in the blood of the Lamb. Yes, just as pure as we are, and if I read the record of the book aright, there will be greater rejoicing in Heaven over these as they come up and are washed, greater rejoicing than over those who have never been led by the way of so great temptation. Sisters, let us be up and doing. I feel that we should every one of us lay it to heart, that this man is able to come in and say such things to us as he has said this afternoon. May we gird on the armor afresh. May we feel that the cleansed woman has just as good a right as we have. Read the story of my book, you will be astonished when you read how in one case when the good old hymn was being sung,

"Come ye sinners, poor and needy,
Weak and wounded, sick and sore,
Jesus ready stands to save you,
Full of pity, love and power."

You will be astonished to read that there was a committee of the mothers of that church standing in the aisle to hinder one of those prodigals from coming forward. Mrs. Such-a-one and Mrs. Such-a-one was there, and they said that if that girl came again they would not come. Sisters, let us gird on the armor of the Lord Jesus Christ for the future, He who left the throne of glory in Heaven and came down to this sin-cursed world to save us and make it possible for us to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb with the redeemed in Heaven.

Mrs. Woodbridge then read the testimonial to Miss Willard, presented to her upon her birthday by the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Great Britain.

MRS. FESSENDEN—May we not show our sympathy with this beautiful testimonial by singing a verse of "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

After singing a verse of the hymn the following telegrams to be sent out by the Convention were read.

To GENERAL BIDWELL:
The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union in convention assembled, greeting. Read Josh. 1: v-vi.

To J. B. CRANFILL:
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled at Denver, send greeting. Read Num. 14: viii-ix.

To HON. NEAL DOW:
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled, send greeting. Read 1st Chron. 17: viii-ix.

To MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON:
The National W. C. T. U. in convention at Denver, sends love and greeting. Read 121st Ps. v-vi-vii-viii.

To MRS. H. A. HOBART:
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled, send greeting. Read 2nd Cor. 2: iii-iv.

To MRS. LETITIA YOUMANS:
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled in Denver, sends greeting. Read 3rd John ii.

The LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION CONVENTION, Los Angeles.
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled, send greeting. Read 1st Tim. 4: xii.

To MRS. MARY R. DENMAN:
The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled, send greeting. Read Rev. 2: xix.

MISS WILLARD—Mrs. Carse wishes to make a personal explanation.

MRS. CARSE—Ladies: I wish to make an apology to the members of this Convention. You all know that in our Temple in Chicago, Willard Hall is placed. We have taken Willard Hall, and we propose to hold gospel meetings there every day in the year and every Sunday afternoon. Our beloved National President has been made superintendent of this work. We have also reserved Thursday morning that we may have our Central W. C. T. U. prayer-meeting. Now this is all to take place when Willard Hall is finished. We hope that before Miss Willard leaves us that the hall can be informally dedicated. The formal dedication will take place next June when the World's Fair meets, and when you all come there to attend the National Convention. In the meantime we are anxious to raise money to pay the rental which is $3,500 a year, and the Republican Club of Chicago which has been meeting at the Grand Pacific hotel, came to our agent and said: "We would like to take Willard Hall at the noon hour when the workmen there are eating their lunch and hold our Republican meetings there." They said, "We will give you twenty dollars an hour for each day until election." These men are merchants of Chicago, they are some of them the men who have stood by me like brothers and have taken the stock and are ready to sell it to us whenever we can pay them for it in order that we may get that great building. They are our husbands, our brothers and our fathers many of them, and so we did not see that there was any great harm in this, and we rented the hall to them at twenty dollars an hour. Now we did not think we would do any harm. I would not for anything have done it or permitted it, but our executive committee all stood by me, the only lady objecting at that meeting being a Democrat, so I come to ask you to forgive us. We have tried to break and annul our contract, but we could not do it. I went to the president of the club and begged him to find another place, but he looked and could not find another place in the central part of the city which would seat six hundred as Willard Hall does, and he said, "You must be held to this contract," and this is the state of the case. I ask all of your pardons, but we did not mean to offend, and that is all I can say.

DELEGATE—I do not think you will ever be able to get the tobacco juice stain out.

MRS. CARSE—Ladies, that is a great mistake. In our contract we have provided that any person who smokes will be turned out of the hall, and that will break the contract. There have been rumors that there is smoking there. It is not so. I even heard to-day that the Republicans met there at night and kept up until three o'clock in the morning. That is not so. I have heard they had a meeting in the afternoon. If such a thing occurred it is utterly unknown to me or to our agent, and as the room is full of workmen I don't see how it could be.

A DELEGATE—It seems to me if Mrs. Carse could get one of our good Prohibition brothers to spend the hour at this meeting of Republicans, she would be able to break that contract, for I am almost sure a Republican club cannot sit in session for one hour without smoking.

MRS. CARSE—I assure you, ladies, there is no smoking. Our agent watches that very closely. There are some workmen who are putting up the marble lining of the Temple who smoke, and we prevent it whenever we see them.

MRS. HOFFMAN—I move that it is the sense of this Convention that it was entirely unfitting that the Hall should be rented for the purpose for which it was rented, but inasmuch as the thing has been done, we are willing to forgive our sister, Mrs. Carse, but we do not approve of it.

Motion seconded.

MRS. DUNHAM—Let her that never made a mistake cast the first stone.

MRS. CARSE—Before the motion is put, I want to say, you will see in the UNION SIGNAL of this week a full statement of the matter, wherein I say that the Central W. C. T. U. will try to do everything they can to atone for our great mistake, and will hold nor allow to be held, no more political meetings, though that will take in the Prohibitionists, you know.

MRS. HOFFMAN—Madam President, I object to that.

THE CHAIRMAN—Ladies, please keep to the question.

MRS. HOFFMAN—This is an entirely different thing—from having the Christian men of this country hold even a political meeting in the house. A political party that opens its meetings with prayer and not with curses, a political party that is made up of Christian persons would never advertise and invite an infidel to come and speak.

MRS. DODGE—I do not approve of the wording of this resolution, and I move that these words shall be so arranged that it shall not convey such condemnation as they now convey.

A MEMBER—I think no uncertain sound should go out from this Convention about this matter. The Republican papers are already casting stones against us on account of it.

MRS. LATHRAP—I am anxious that this Convention shall so express itself as to relieve us from the responsibility of what has been done. We are face to face with the fact that we do not control Willard Hall; it is already rented to another party, and they have a right to sub-let it to whom they please. With that matter we cannot interfere, but in the presence of the condemnation that has gone out, not only in secular papers and old party papers, but in our own Prohibition papers, it seems to me that it is well, as softly and gently as possible, but distinctly, that this body of women should relieve itself of responsibility in this matter. The Inter Ocean printed in its headlines, "The First Meeting in Willard Hall, Republican Rally." I do not care how gently the thing is done, but we ought to let the world know that we are not responsible for it and we do not quite approve of it.

On motion of Mrs. Woodbridge, this whole matter was referred to a committee of three to frame a resolution to be brought before the Convention on Monday morning. On motion of Mrs. Fessenden, Mrs. Hoffman was made chairman of that committee, and on motion, the chair added the names of Mrs. Lathrap and Mrs. Buell.

On recommendation of the committee on courtesies several people were here introduced to the Convention. The Rev. Frank S. Bailey, pastor of Plymouth Congregational church, spoke as follows: "I have been thinking all the afternoon of a hymn the colored people down South used to sing, 'I Want to Join the Band,' but although we gentlemen have no chance here, my sympathies are fully with you."

Mrs. Yocum of St. Louis, Mo., was introduced to the Convention and gave some interesting facts and figures with reference to her work in connection with the society which she represents.

The Rev. J. E. Paddock was introduced and spoke briefly and was followed by the Rev. C. H. Green.

Mr. John Hipp, the Prohibition nominee for governor, spoke as follows:

MADAME PRESIDENT AND FRIENDS—Up here in Colorado we sometimes feel like Elijah did, and get a little bit discouraged, but after such meetings as we have had yesterday and to-day, we feel that God is marching on and we are sure to win in His name.

Dr. Whitney, of Washington, D. C., who resigned a good place under government to be a Prohibitionist, said:

I bring you greetings from the "Stump." All is lovely, supper ready and we all have a good appetite.

After the list of places at which W. C. T. U. women could be heard from the pulpits of Denver on Sunday was read by Mrs. Monroe, the Convention adjourned to meet at 9 o'clock Monday morning.

SATURDAY EVENING

was Y evening, which is always the cream of Convention. Mrs. Frances Barnes, the popular general secretary of the young woman's branch, presided, introducing the speakers and announcing the members with happy remarks and explanations.

The evening was as usual one of great variety. The Y's occupied the seats of the choir loft in the rear of the platform, and welcomed Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset to their seats by singing a sweet roundelay, "Frances E., Frances E. Willard," adapted for the occasion from the Wellesley cheer by Miss Anna Gordon. After singing, the Scripture lesson was read by Miss Parrish, organizer of Illinois. An eloquent prayer was voiced by Miss Winnie Morris, of So. California, and earnest words of welcome were spoken by Miss Winifred Spaulding for the Colorado young women, and by Mr. Charles Everett on behalf of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Trinity M. E. Church. Mrs. Frances Leiter, National superintendent of physical culture, gave to the audience, in her own impressive way, many points in regard to the important matter of physical education, following which, a class of fifteen young women, trained by Bertha Morris Smith, took the platform and showed by their excellent drilling what could be accomplished in this line by a single week of practice. An exhibition of Indian club swinging was given by Miss Lilian Pike, directress of physical education in the North Denver public schools. It was a skillful performance and won merited applause. A beautiful new white-ribbon song, written by Miss Mary Lathbury, of New York, and set to the music of the "Kerry Dance," was sweetly and expressively sung by Miss Ruth Warren, of Denver. The song is entitled "Wreathe the White Ribbon." Miss Ida Clothier's thoughts were given in a brief, bright address, conveying to her hearers what a young woman can do and become. Lady Henry Somerset, who is the superintendent of the young woman's branch in Great Britain, gave the address of the evening, bringing the greetings of the British Y's. Lady Henry's address will be published in full in the Oak and Ivy Leaf, organ of our young woman's branch. It was frequently applauded and was one of the most helpful of her Convention speeches. The National Y banner was then brought forward and surrendered in happy style by Miss Stevens, representing Iowa, and received with felicitous remarks by Miss Lyons for Louisiana. A quartette sung the closing consecration hymn and the meeting was over.

MONDAY MORNING SESSION.

The Convention met at 9 o'clock a. m., Miss Willard in the chair.

Mrs. Trego of Ohio took charge of the devotional exercises, and after the singing of the hymn, "Come Thou Fount," read the 103d Ps.

The minutes of the sessions of Saturday were read and adopted, as also the report of the executive committee.

Under the head of miscellaneous business, due notice having been given, Mrs. Fessenden of Massachusetts moved the adoption of an amendment to the constitution whereby each 1000 members of the Loyal Temperance Legion should be represented in future conventions by a W. C. T. U. woman.

Mrs. Rice, Mrs. Hammer, Mrs. Hunt and other ladies spoke in favor of the amendment and Mrs. Rastall of Illinois in opposition to it.

Mrs. Benjamin moved that the secretaries be empowered to change to article of the constitution entitled "membership" so as to conform with the amendments adopted during this session of the convention. Motion seconded and carried.

Miss Pugh gave notice that at the Convention of next year she would move for certain changes in the preamble and articles of the constitution.

The committee appointed to frame a resolution with reference to the renting of Willard Hall in Chicago was granted further time for its report, and such report was made the special order of business to immediately follow the reading of the minutes this afternoon.

A letter of greeting from Mrs. Higgins, president of Colorado, was read by Mrs. Buell, and the President was authorized to return to her a message of love and good cheer.

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT. Topic:—What have the Departments in this Group Done to Advance the Cause of Temperance Among the Masses?

Report of Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball on Sunday-school work.

LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL, Superintendent Sunday-School Department.—These for 1892 being placed by themselves, and not on Review Sunday, or otherwise complicated, have marked a new era in the history of Sunday School Temperance work. The National superintendent prepared the Temperance Lesson Leaflets for Jan. 17. An appeal was also sent out in behalf of the effort to make that day one whose influence should be felt in all coming time. The response to this appeal was most prompt and enthusiastic. The Illustrated Leaflet was issued as the supplement to the S. S. edition of the Young Crusader. Over a half million pages of this lesson leaf were used and some late orders could not be filled. Most grateful were the good words received in regard to this special help and the success of the day.

To those who failed to have their orders filled, or did not get them in time, it is but just to say that it was not from lack of ample provision on the part of the W. T. P. A. The printing of the Lesson Leaflet and filling of orders began early, but the demand was so unprecedented it could not be met at the last.

The issue of the Lesson Supplement of The Young Crusader for Jan. 17, 1892 was 125,000.

The Illustrated Temperance Lesson Leaflet issued by the W. T. P. A. on the next quarterly Sunday, May 22, had even a larger sale than that for Jan. 17.

As these lessons for Jan. 17, and May 22, were developed as others, in the S. S. Lesson Quarterlies, the fact that over one million and a half pages of lesson leaflets were ordered and paid for, surely indicates an interest for which we may well give thanks.

We trust there may be no abatement of effort in this direction. The securing of the quarterly temperance lessons in the regular course of the International Series was not in itself an end, but a means to an end, and that end the thorough Biblical education of our young people, and indeed, the entire Sunday-School in temperance truth.

In the list of questions sent out by the National Superintendent to State and territorial superintendents, and in turn by them to county and local superintendents, was the following: "How has the quarterly temperance lesson in the regular course helped the work in the Sunday-school?" Pennsylvania's answers are typical of the general reply; therefore I give them. "The helpfulness of the quarterly temperance lessons as now arranged, is universally and warmly acknowledged." No one can begin to tell the good done this year by the quarterly temperance lessons." "A tidal wave of pledge signing has swept over the country as a result of the study of God's Word, through the quarterly temperance lessons as now given." Many such expressions were reported.

One result of this new departure, as regards Bible study has been the great awakening and earnest effort along the line of pledge signing. Following the quarterly Sunday of January 17, the National Superintendent sent out a second leaflet of appeal and instructions in regard to the autograph pledge cards for the Columbian Exposition. The response to this was as general and resultful as the earlier one. One hundred and thirty-one thousand seven hundred and five of the autograph pledge cards have been ordered directly from the National Superintendent and secretary. New York and Maine lead in this effort, New York having ordered twenty-eight thousand five hundred and thirty-one and Maine nineteen thousand one hundred and seventy. But the enthusiasm has been general, many have ordered the cards from the W. T. P. A., and some states have issued their own cards. The work will go on for some time to come, and it is hoped that all who have not will unite in this effort. If we must have the national disgrace of alcoholic drinks being sold on the Exposition grounds, let us at least offset it by the silent, yet forceful protest of the two hundred and fifty thousand pledged temperance army in our Sunday schools. Last year over a million pages of temperance literature was reported as used in the Sunday-schools—this year several millions. A statistical report by States will be printed later. The Department Superintendent and secretary have sent out about four hundred thousand pages of temperance literature during the year.

MRS. FRANCES W. LEITER, Ohio Department of Physical Culture—I stand to day with my message as the outgrowth of the past year's work, and would ask this body, "How many of you in the various delegations have been within the past year upon the verge of nervous prostration through over-work, and how many of you have turned to the gospel of exercise?"

If we give to the children of this Nation physical discipline, which they should receive through our public schools, it must come through the medium of this great body of women. And let me tell you why. In the first place, it is the logic of circumstances. Away back in this century in the teens, I think it was in 1817, when this country was re-organizing its militia, there was an effort made in Congress to introduce physical culture in the military schools by law. It failed. Going on through the years until 1860, the war broke out. Then our physical educators, in session assembled at Buffalo, declared that physical education should be incorporated in the public school system by law. Thirty years and more have passed, and what has been everybody's business is nobody's business.

So far as the department is concerned, I will not tell you what has been done during the past year. I will simply say that the department is fairly and squarely upon its feet, ready to walk. I could tell you much of what has been done, but I feel that I want to give you another reason why we should as women undertake this work. If we are consistent we must press forward this question of physical education for our children.

Through enervation and through the manner of living in these days, we are as a people upon the verge of nervous prostration, and so we have conceived the idea and built upon the thought that alcohol is a tonic and a stimulant. All of this means the necessity of tearing from our children, from coming generations that false belief. But friends, when we tear down, we must construct. If we should find that the pillars under those galleries were giving way and unable to support it, would we take away those incompetent pillars first? No, we would put under that gallery something which would support it, and then we would remove that which was not equal to the task. So friends, I say that, side by side with teaching to our children what we have been building upon fallacy we must give them the other truth that the only true tonics upon which this nation can build to secure the highest manhood and womanhood.

Now I read on this banner behind me, "Seek ye first temperance education for the children, and all other temperance blessings shall be added unto you." Amen. But may I reconstruct that from the standpoint of my own department, "Ye have sought, ye are seeking to add temperance education for the children. Now add the next temperance blessing, physical education."

The difficulties that stand in the way of this great work, I think can be confined to two items. In the first place, it is this conflict of systems which has hindered the work, and I would be glad if I could stand before this great audience of women for one hour and discuss that question of systems. It is no bugbear, it will be solved in coming years. Then our physical educators have said, "O, we don't want laws until we have competent teachers." Ladies, would we have succeeded if we had waited to secure temperance education for the children until our teachers were prepared to teach scientific temperance to children? Never. We secure the law and then throw the weight of our influence in securing competent teachers. Now we want such a law.

Dr. Seaver, of Yale, has said: "The State may not be called upon to furnish medical advice for the children of the country, but so long as the State takes upon itself the right to control the bodies of our children for five or six hours of each day, the State is bound to see that no physical harm comes to them.

"Last spring it was my privilege to be present at the National Convention of Physical Educators at Philadelphia, at the great Drexel Institute, and I was wonderfully interested as the various specialists came to the front, saying, 'Mine is the system,' 'Mine is the system,' 'Mine is the system.' Why, friends, the one thought that impressed and overwhelmed me was the great plans for the education of children physically, but the dearth of their application. That body of representatives of physical educators came from our colleges all over the country, private gymnasia, Y. M. C. A. associations, with only a limited representation from the public school system. I felt like standing there and saying, 'This is all good, but what are you doing for the millions of this Nation who are to become citizens under this free Republic?"

We are to-day realizing that the solution of this great temperance question must be based upon physical as well as temperance education.

MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Temperance Literature, reported her department. It will appear in full in the Convention number of the UNION SIGNAL.

MRS. S. L. OBERHOLTZER.—School Savings Banks:

The School Savings Bank is becoming a valued and recognized educational factor in the United States. Whatever the National Woman's Christian Union does to spread its establishment fills a double purpose; while decreasing the tendency to intemperance, pauperism and crime, it wins favor for the organization, thus opening avenues for other lines of work. In this age of broad, economic thought, we see with clearer vision into a more harmonious future. We plan wisely when we forward movements which touch the whole people, which rid out the discordant elements, and without trampling on the corns of prejudice, elevate and clarify moral ideals.

That the educative, individualizing and equalizing force of the School Savings Bank is recognized by our population, is amply proven by its advance and by the number and standing of the inquiries regarding its practical application. It has taken hold of the heart of the Nation, and the W. C. T. U. honors itself in aiding the able and winning philanthropy. I thank you. Some day multitudes will thank you for lending a hand.

Only last year the department was taken up independently by the National. (Though the year previous it had the privilege of the Juvenile Department, and Mrs. Rice mothered it very kindly.)

We have State superintendents of the work in Maine, Missouri, Wisconsin, Nevada, Idaho and North Dakota.

The hundreds of letters replied to on this subject during the past year were from bankers, school authorities, business people and W. C. T. U. women. From Pennsylvania, my own State, where half the School Savings Banks in operation in the United States are, I have had more than double the applications for information sent by any other State, and triple the number of School Savings Banks have been started in Pennsylvania. Where one school in a neighborhood took up the system last year, others in the same district are introducing it this season. President Fetterolf, of Girard College, and Professor Rathburn, of Drexel Institute, have just expressed most active interest in the institution, and are studying all that has been published on School Banks.

The American Academy of Political and Social Science have published and given wide circulation to a paper read for them by your superintendent in Philadelphia May 13th, 1892. This has perhaps increased already aroused thought on the subject, being extensively noticed at home and abroad.

I have answered three hundred letters of inquiry as to how to institute School Savings Banks in the United States during the past year and sent as many gifts of literature, independent of those sent officially to State presidents, secretaries and superintendents. In illustration of the class of interest expressed in the institution I will cite Colorado. From this beautiful Centennial state which now entertains us in convention I have comparatively few letters on the subject.

Ex-Gov. Alva Adams:—I trust the Colorado women will aid in forwarding the progress of the department which has already some hold on their people. I have contributed articles to several newspapers through the year and spoken frequently on the subject. Have always on hand a full line of literature which I invite you all to order and distribute liberally. Blanks used in administering the system supplied at low rates (25 cents per sample package literature and blanks). The privilege to print the copyright school card, sent free on application. Though the world's work is not listed for National report it may be encouraging to mention Australia, Tasmania, and the Maritime Provinces of Canada have regularly taken up the department of School Savings Banks and appointed superintendents. Chili expects to. Mrs. Whitney writes from the Sandwich Islands, "The principal of the Honolulu proposes introducing the system this fall." Our beloved Lady Henry Somerset says she is looking for a woman to take the superintendency for England.

The flowers of encouragement blossom as white lillies, and humanity, through the action of uplifting, practical forces, will bud and develop into fairer, sweeter and more self-responsible man and womanhood.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, National and World's movement to secure temperance education in public schools.

Mrs. Mary Hunt—The program asks: "What has this department done to advance the cause of temperance among the masses?" We are working for the masses of to-morrow, and they are in the school of to-day. This department has secured legislation making the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcoctics in connection with the laws of hygiene and relative physiology a compulsory study for all pupils in all schools in 36 states and in all territories of the United States, including the District of Columbia, our military and naval acadamies and Indian and colored schools.

There are more than 12,000,000 children in the United States under these laws. Mississippi is the last new State won during the past year. Of the eight States without this legislation, we have high hopes of winning New Jersey this year, and three or four other States south of the Potomac. But legislation of this kind is only the first step. Whether these laws will prove a blessing or a curse, depends npon whether the truth concerning alcohol and other narcoctics is taught these millions or the old notions that tend to moderate drinking.

What has this Department done in this respect? Through its National Superintendent and Advisory Board, it has secured the revision of nearly every school physiology of any importance iu use in the United States. It has expunged from these the old traditions about wine and kindred liquors, and has injected into their pages the latest teachings of science concerning all forms of alcoholic drinks, their poisonous character and baleful effects, as well as those of other narcoctics. More than this, it has so adapted this teaching in these manuals to the capacity of all pupils of all classes that the great majority of to-morrow who never go beyond the primary school of to-day may get these warnings lessons told so simply that they can understand them. Thus each succeeding grade receives more and more truth. Thus the subject is kept constantly fresh and interesting until finished in the High School.

But when the law requiring study is enacted and its text-books are ready, only a beginning is made. Years of thought have been given the question of methods of teaching and studying other branches, but how about this new study? What has been done to help at this point? A concensus of opinion on this subject from eminent educators in many states has been gathered. The digest of this is the four essentials to the faithful enforcement of a temperance education law: 1st, Endorsed books containing the truth the law requires taught in the hands of pupils able to read, and oral instruction in other cases. 2nd, A course of study of not less than three lessons a week for fourteen weeks of each school year. 3rd, The same examinations and tests for promotion in this as in other branches. 4th, The interested teacher.

These conditions constitute the "Standard" which is guiding thousands of school boards and teachers. The goody-goody, preachy-preachy, namby-pamby, mushy teaching of the early days of this study is giving place to the impartation of solid truth. A careful system of research is carried on from Hope Cottage, Hyde Park, the National headquarters of this department. Through the Index Medicus and other Indices, the knowledge is brought to us of every recorded utterance through book, speech, pamphlet or otherwise, from every source on every phase of the subject with which this department deals.

In addition to the ever growing library at Hope Cottage which Mr. Cook calls the largest library on this topic he has ever seen on this side of the water, the literary assistant, Miss Benedict, searches the medical libraries of this country for every scrap of testimony. When culled and topically classified this helps to swell the arsenal of truth from which we are constantly drawing in the ever developing phases of the work, in defense of some disputed point with some author whose books we are revising, or a semi bibulous college professor who opposes total abstinence teaching, or for a teacher or student or our own dear women who need the strong names in science with which to fight their battles for total abstinence teaching in the schools.

We have a directory of every school district in the United States and over against it the name of the local superintendent of this department, where there is one, and where there is not, we are searching to find one who will work and watch for the best enforcement of these laws in the schools under her care. Literature showing just how to proceed at every step is prepared and sent out by the National superintendent. Over 25,000 personal letters, postals and packages of literature have gone out to them this year.

A bureau of instruction for the training of teachers is already started. The first volume of Normal studies for these is now passing through the press. Besides that there is a monthly circular of advices, containing topical outlines of study, the scientific authorities in support of total abstinence teaching, etc. The National superintendent and others are presenting the topic and methods of teachings to teachers institutes in all parts of the country.

The great increase in the number of local superintendents shows that our workers are coming to realize that the masses of to-morrow can only be reached through the schools. New Jersey, New York, Illinois, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Dakota all report a considerable increase. Among the states reporting gains in the adoption of text-books, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New York, Missouri and Illinois lead. Massachusetts has kept two paid agents in the field: one for the W. C. T. U. to get new local superintendents, the other sent by the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, to labor with school boards; both with good results. The Society of Friends in Philadelphia employed one expert with school boards, Mrs. Ella B. Green, to canvass that state, and school directors in the interest of changing the imperfect text-books for the revised and for the adoption of a regular course of study in this branch, with splendid esults. We may confidently expect one hundred total abstainers as the result of every dollar expended for the cause of S. T. I. in our public schools.

Bible reading by Lady Henry Somerset; text, Matt. 5:47.

Prayer by Frances J. Barnes.

A collection amounting to $50.06 was taken up for the White Ribboners of New Foundland, who have lately suffered by a great conflagration.

The following telegrams were read as having been received:

To The National W. C. T. U. in Convention:

Heartfelt salutations. God bless you. Gallant American manhood is waiting to crown American womanhood with the ballot as soon as a majority shall be intelligent and brave enough to ask it. Predictingly and faithfully yours, (Gen.) John Bidwell.

Warmest fraternal greeting from Canada's National W. C. T. U. Greatly regret that other engagements prevent my being with you.

The Temperance Hospital sends greeting. The ultimate solution of the liquor question will be found in medical works. Who will endow beds for the poor?

Chas. Gilbert Davis.

Greetings from the Phœnix, Arizona, Union. Read John, 15:7.

Kings County W. C. T. U. In Convention assembled, to National Convention greeting. Read Phil. 3:6.

It was moved that the sermon of Rev. Mr. McIntyre, delivered yesterday, shall be published in the Union Signal as soon as practicable.

Mr. Singleterry, of Denver, delegate from the committee of the Prohibition party of Colorado, was introduced to the Convention, received with the Chautauqua salute, and spoke in words of sympathy and pride of the Prohibition party's work and that of the W. C. T. U. In closing, the gentleman said: "I have always voted the Prohibition ticket, and I am going to vote it until we place a Prohibition President in the chair at Washington. If the Prohibition party had it in their power we should have nominated the lady who presides over your Convention, and who has been called the Queen of the Prohibition party, on the Prohibition ticket of the United States of America."

Miss Willard—Some of us are anointed to wrestle, not to reign, but we like to think of the woman who will be in there about fifty years from now.

After singing "Gently, Lord, O Gently Lead us," the Convention adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

Annual Sermon.

The Annual Convention sermon was preached at Trinity Church on Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock by Mrs. Mary Mc G. Snell, of Mississippi, a National Evangelist who has done some noted work during the past year. There were on the platform the National Officers. Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Frances E. Griffin, of Alabama, Mrs. Hill, President of Florida Union, Mrs. Teat and Mrs. Smith, of Colorado. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap and Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, who presided. "All hail the power of Jesus' name" was sung, and Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge led in prayer, followed by the hymn, "There are lonely hearts to cherish."

The church was densely crowded, but over the house there was a holy hush, which was very impressive and grateful after all the busy bustle of Convention work-a-days—and the white dove over the entrance door typified the descent of the Spirit on expectant souls.

Miss Greenwood read 35th Chapter Isaiah, and introduced Mrs. Snell, who began her sermon without the usual announcement of text, for a time, the subject of the sermon being the Queen of Sheba's visit to King Solomon, a type of Christ recorded in the 10th chapter of 1st Kings. Mrs. Snell's sermon will be given in full in the Convention number of the Union Signal, and will be published in leaflet form by the W. T. P. A.

An especially beautiful solo was sung by Miss Ruth Warren, of Denver, and after an earnest exhortation from Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap a good collection was taken and the congregation adjourned careless of the pouring rain which had descended all night.

Convention Program.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

2:00 Convention called to order.
Prayer by Mrs. H. D. Walker, Rhode Island, National Evangelist.
2:05 Reading of Minutes.
2:20 Election of Superintendents.
2:30 National Temperance Hospital, Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, Mrs. Kline.
2:40 The Temple, Mrs. M. B. Carse, President.
2:50 Presentation of President's Prize Banners.

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

3:00 Home and Foreign Missionary Work among Colored people, Mrs. J. R. Ray.
3:10 ——
3:20 On W. C. T. U. Restaurants, Mrs. E. A. Russel.
3:30 On W. C. T. U. Fountains, Mrs. Chas. H. Case.
3:40 On Missionary Fund, Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler.
3:50 On Sunday Services at the National Conventions, Mrs. Dr. O. B. Gause.
4:00 Railroad Rates, Miss Mary G. Hay.
4:10 ——
4:20 Miscellaneous Business.
4:30 Report of Plan of Work Committee.
5:00 Adjournment.

TUESDAY MORNING.

9:00 Convention called to order.
Prayer by Mrs. E. A. Hill, President Florida W. C. T. U.
9:05 Reading Minutes.
Report of Executive Committee.
9:20 Election of Officers.
11:00 Bible Reading, Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Rhode Island, World's Evangelist.
12:00 Noontide Prayer,
Adjournment.

TUESDAY EVENING.

7:30 Opening Exercises.
Reports from State Presidents. (Four minutes each.)

Demorest Contest.—Monday Night.

STATES REPRESENTED.

California, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, New York, Massachusetts and Georgia,

NAMES OF CONTESTANTS.

Stanley C. Blair, Clifford Thorne, George B. Allan, Mary French Smith, Ethel Henderson, Katherine Booth Ferris, Myrtle Gibson, Laura Newlin, Margaret Fitz-Gibbon Badger, May Chenoweth and Jessie Lantz.

SUBJECTS.

"Young America's War Cry."
"World on Fire."
"Our National Curse."
"A Vision of Prohibition,"
"Rizpah Mourning Her Sons."
"Patriotic Prohibition."
"A Vigorous Warfare Needed."
"Boys of America."
"Woman's Christian Temperance Union."
"License—An Outrage."
"Rum the Worst Enemy."

Through an inadventure, the department of free kindergartens, Miss Mary E. McDowell, Illinois National superintendent, was omitted from the programme. Miss McDowell's reports in pamphlet form, includes suggestions and details for establishing free kindergartens and will be distributed amond the delegates.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

VOL. VII. DENVER, COLORADO, NOVEMBER 1, 1892. NO. 4.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

Price, Five Issues, 25 Cents.

Frances E. Willard, Mary Allen West, ... Editors-in-Chief
Lady Henry Somerset . . . . . Contributing Editor
Margaret A. Sudduth . . . . . Managing Editor
Mrs. Harriet B. Kells . . . . . Office Editor

Mrs. F. H. Rastall . . . . . Business Manager

Louisiana captured the National Y banner.

There was a session of the press superintendents yesterday.

North Dakota has a Y for state president, Miss Adelaide Kinnear.

The Denver Equal Rights Association meets every Monday at No. 16 Tremont Block.

Mrs. McLaughlin, of Winnepeg, Manitoba, brings greetings from the sisters over the line.

Our presiding officer handles the reins of government with all her old-time wit and vigor.

To-night's session with its two-minute reports of state superintendents will be crisp and sparkling.

"The Church will take up the work, catching inspiration from the women."—REV. ROBT. MCINTYRE.

Mrs. Eva Higgins is much improved, and is able to sit on a reclining chair in the lecture room of the church.

Mrs. M G. C. Edhohn, World's press superintendent, has sent matter to over 700 newspapers since the last convention.

The Alliance which sent cablegram of greeting to Lady Henry Somerset and the Convention is England's greatest political organization.

The Y's in conference have invited Mrs. Benjamin, National Superintendent Parliamentary Usage, to conduct their parliamentary drill.

"The most glorious word that can be said of the women of the white ribbon is, 'They have made the way.'"—LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

All delegates who came to Denver via the Chicago and Alton are requested to call at the railway office, 1213 Seventeenth street, for all information in regard to tickets.

The corps of young ladies who serve the Convention so faithfully as pages are deserving of special mention for the noiselessness and ease with which they get about.

The courtesy of the convention was shown National Superintendents Miss Greenwood, Mrs. Kinney and Watts yesterday afternoon in extending the time for the reading of their excellent reports.

Mrs. C. M. Shapleigh, state treasurer, is acting in place of the sick and lamented state president, Mrs. Higgins, and is endearing herself to every white ribboner here for her considerate services.

The Temple headquarters have been established in the rear of the lecture-room. A variety of articles which have been sent to be sold for the benefit of the Temple fund are displayed, as well as the large lithographs of the Temple.

Rev. E. F. Leonard came from Connecticut to Colorado a seasoned W. C. T. U. worker, and is now State Evangelist, for the W. C. T. U., and city missionary. Mrs. Leonard is chairman of the committee on pulpit supplies during this convention.

The publishing firm, by whom the Daily Union Signal is printed, have been so overcrowded with work as to be unable to issue it at close of the afternoon session as planned. It is hoped to deliver the paper to subscribers at an earlier hour to-morrow.

Miss Lilian Pike, the young lady who swung the Indian clubs with such dexterity on Y night, is physical director in the North Denver public schools, and a self-educated young woman who has worked herself through to graduation in her chosen profession.

Mrs. Sturtevant Peet is a most ornamental head of the great California delegation. Her usefulness is proven by her recent election to the State presidency, for the third time, and by her success in securing the passage in the Senate of an equal rights bill during the last legislature.

Mrs. M. A. Cassell, chairman of the executive committee for convention arrangements, is also president of Arapahoe County. Mrs. Cassell was a prominent worker in the Juvenile cause in Illinois, and is also ex-president of the Central Union of Denver, for which she did a service that largely increased its membership, and is known for her good works.

Nothing is lacking in the hospitality of the Denver Unions.

Mississippi is the last new State to add scientific temperance instruction laws.

There are 12 W. C. T. U. Unions in Denver, 4 Y's and 10 Loyal Temperance Legions.

"When a Y graduates into the W. C. T. U. she becomes doubly wise."—Frances J. Barnes.

The Mayor of Denver, Colorado, signed a resolution giving $400 to the W. C. T. U. Convention.

According to Mrs. Mary Hunt's map, only eight States remain to be conquered for scientific temperance instruction.

The Y conferences in Trinity Church at 8 a. m., and 10 p. m. daily, are greatly enjoyed by the young women. All are cordially invited.

"What do ye more than others?" was the text of Lady Henry Somerset's helpful Bible exposition at the noon hour yesterday.

Mrs. S. W. Likens, police matron in Denver, is an indispensable in the local Union and delegate from Colorado to this Convention.

Our efficient stenographers transfer with lightning-like rapidity the proceedings of the convention into excellent type-written copy.

The States under prohibitory law are: South Carolina, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Twelve million children in the United States are receiving information which will help to down "King Alcohol" in the legislature of the future.

On motion of Mrs. Ellis, of Ohio, herself an aged Crusader, all the original Crusaders were asked to stand up and be counted. Thirty-seven arose.

We are given the freedom of the city. Many of our delegates carry the keys of Denver homes. Western hospitality is not only proverbial but actual.

Frances E. Willard was re-elected President by a vote of 333 out of a total vote of 338; scattering: Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, 2; Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, 1; Mrs. Buell, 1; Miss Pugh, 1.

A convenience much appreciated by the superintendents of departments is the bulletin board at the church entrance, which announces in unmistakable type the day, hour and place of meetings.

The missionary work at Ellis Island instituted this year by the department of work among foreigners has been a great success. Col. Weber, head of U. S. Commission of Immigration, has given his cordial endorsement of the work and has expressed his willingness to aid it in every way.

The intrepid and tasteful chairman of the decorative committee, Mrs. Miller, was obliged to send away from Denver for the yellow drupes of the electric lights in the letters we "conjure by" over the great arch of Trinity doorway. But she was determined that the white and the yellow should lure from without and twine within the W. C. T. U., and everybody thanks her.

Mrs. J. B. Belford is State Superintendent of Legislation and Petition for Colorado and President of the Frances E. Willard Union in Denver. Mrs. Belford has served this convention as chairman of hotel and boarding arrangements, as well as in supplying the warm welcome in verse which appeared in first DAILY UNION SIGNAL. Judge Belford, an ex-congressman from this state, is Mrs. Belford's husband.

Mrs. Sarah Lee Teetor has been identified with the temperance movement since 1873, and is now state reporter for the UNION SIGNAL, and fills the office of recording secretary of Denver Central Union and of the Woman's Exchange, which the members of the Convention have found so perfect in its comforts. Mrs. Teetor is a rare musician and was at the head of the committee on music which prepared such a delightful program for this convention.

Mrs. Mary E. Brazee is a woman of many works, and vice-president of Colorado, president of the Denver Central W. C. T. U., chairman of the entertainment committee of this great convention, to whom some hundreds of women owe so much comfort, and is also superintendent of the Women's Exchange of which the Central Union is the board of trustees. The late Judge Brazee came to Denver 17 years ago. and with his brave-spirited wife, has been identified with all the great interests of the greatest city of the West.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, the white ribboner who always rises to a point of order, filled the pulpit of Broadway Baptist Church on Sunday morning, and Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge at 7:30. An extra collection was taken at the earlier service, and the whole offering in the evening was for the W. C. T. U. The Prohibition candidate for Governor of Colorado is pastor of this church, and every voting member of it, except one, votes the prohibition ticket. This is what "clean hands and a pure heart" should mean for every church.

DENVER.

THE CITY'S PHILANTHROPIES.

The benevolent and philanthropic work of the city is finely systematized under the Charity Organization Society, now in the fifth year of its existence. Marked progress has been made during that period, the concurrent and harmonious action of the different charities uniting, having accomplished marvelous results in raising the needy above the necessity for relief; preventing begging and imposition, and diminishing pauperism; by encouraging self-dependence and industry and through friendly counsel and sympathy infusing the discouraged with a renewed zeal to battle with the obstacles of life. An efficient corps of investigators are employed. Headquarters are located at Room 32, Court House, where every Monday afternoon consultations of the different societies are held for mutual aid and protection.

Two of Denver's most valued white-ribboners fill, with rare tact and faithfulness, very arduous posts, Mrs. James Havens being matron at the Arapahoe County Jail, while Mrs. S. M. W. Likens occupies the office of police matron at City Hall.

The Woman's Exchange, 1543–1545 Stout st., under the auspices of the Central W. C. T. U., has for its object helping women to help themselves, by providing a suitable place to display and dispose of the products of their labors. The surplus funds over and above all expenses are divided; one-half is used as a reserve fund for the use of the Exchange; the other half is used toward carrying on the Day Nursery, Kitchen Garden, Missions, etc. The Day Nursery is located at 2013 Champa street. Upon an average thirty children are safely housed and properly cared for per day, while their mothers are enabled to gain a livelihood.

No philanthropic work yet established has excited the universal commendation and enthusiasm that has been received by the Denver Free Kindergarten Association, under whose auspices there are now eight schools situated in the most advantageous parts of the city, as regards the blessed work of unfolding the minds of little children amid influences which tend toward their happiness and betterment. A Normal Training School, conducted after the most approved plans, located in the Unity Church parlors, is also under the patronage of the Denver Free Kindergarten Association. There are besides two free Kindergartens supported by Mr. and Mrs. William Church, and still another which owes its existence to private subscriptions.

Of all the helpful enterprises in Denver, none have warmer friends than the Woman's Christian Association, and none "lend a hand" in more tactful, practical Christian manner than that organization which tends toward lightening the burdens resting upon the homeless, self-dependent women of the city, furnishing them a cheerful, safe home, with many comforts otherwise beyond their means, surrounded by influences which must gradually deepen their characters and strengthen and help them in a purpose to gain a more generous livelihood. The Association by dint of much laborious self-sacrifice, has purchased four lots, on the corner of Glenarm and 13th streets, at a cost of $14,000, and as speedily as possible a beautiful structure will be erected, at a estimated cost of $50.000. Meanwhile a temporary Home is being admirably conducted at 1723–1725 Stout street, with an employment and nurses' bureau in connection, and evening classes for the study of music, etc., give pleasing relaxation, after the day's duties are over.

This resumé would be incomplete should no reference be made to the quiet refuge afforded by the Colorado Cottage Home, incorporated in September, 1886, under the auspices of the State W. C. T. U. It is situated in this city, at 615 Pearl street.

Never shall it be revealed "till the leaves of the Judgment Book unfold," the benefits bestowed upon the young and innocent, in most cases "more sinned against than sinning," who, when betrayed, find no shelter nor redress, neither rest for their feet save in haunts of evil or in a place of punishment.

This Home, established as the natural result of a great need, surely originated with Him who "came to seek and to save that which was lost."

Denver. ELLA C. BENTON.

The States which regulate the liquor traffic by means of local option are: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, New York, Ohio, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia and West Washington.

National W. C. T. U. Convention.

MONDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convention met at 2 o'clock p. m., Mrs. Buell in the chair.

Prayer by Mrs. Rice.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin, letters of greeting and affectionate remembrance were ordered sent to our round-the-world missionaries, Miss Ackerman, Mrs. Andrew, Dr. Bushnell and Miss Palmer.

Mrs. Edholm, of California, moved that this Convention extend a vote of thanks to the California Illustrated Magazine for the presentation of one hundred copies of their publication. Carried.

Mrs. Benjamin gave notice that some time during to-morrow she will move to reconsider the votes by which action was taken concerning the representation of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

On motion of Mrs. Ingalls a vote of thanks was tendered to the pages for their kind attention to members of the Convention.

Dr. Hopkins of Westminster University, Denver, was introduced and spoke as follows:

Your president says to me to go on. I will go on by retiring and letting my better half take the matter up where I leave off. She was one of the original Crusaders, and as her husband, I am proud of her. She stood where the battle was thickest, and was one of those who was honored with an arrest and a prosecution. I stood in the court-room to see three able lawyers supported by a few millionaire distillers, prosecute her, and I think there was Christian forbearance in the fact that I did not lift my fist. I will keep my promise and retire and give her an opportunity.

MRS. HOPKINS—Your President says to say something, but I have not arranged anything to say. I had the honor of being one of the old Ohio Crusaders. I was arrested in Pickway, Ohio, and we had a trial for two days before an august assembly. To my astonishment, at noon one day, all the company was dismissed except myself and one other woman. I said in astonishment, to my lawyer, "Why am I taken? I have not done anything more than the rest."

"No," he says, "you have done anything different from the rest, only the trouble is you have got caught at it." Yes, I owned up that I was there. It is very vividly impressed upon my memory the day that we were first called out. The Rev. Mr. Pence was lecturing in the city on the subject of temperance, and giving some account of the crusades that had been started in Hillsboro. I among many others listened to him. and I thought to myself, we never could do any such thing as that. What, go into one of those vile saloons and get down on our knees. It was folly to talk about it. I had a young babe less than nine months old, at the time, and I thought I could take shelter behind that babe. I thought all the world would excuse me because I had a babe that needed my care at home, so I went home very contentedly and rolled the responsibility off onto whoever it might fall upon. This was Sabbath night. The next morning a message came up that the ladies wanted me to go down to a prayer-meeting. I could not go and didn't, and the message came to me that the ladies had said at that meeting, that if Mrs. Hopkins would come down and lead them out on the street, they would go. But no, I would not go. The same thing occurred the next day. When my husband came home from the prayer-meeting, and said in rather a despairing tone, "Those ladies down there say they won't go out on the street unless you will lead them out, but they will go if you will go and lead them." Well, I thought that was a responsibility that I could not shirk, so I prepared myself and went.

The Convention sang "Give to the Winds thy Fears."

By request of Mrs. Ellis all the Crusaders in the assembly present were asked to rise and be counted. There proved to be thirty-seven in the Convention.

Miss Jennie Smith moved that a circular letter be prepared and sent out to the railroad officers and employes, expressing the thanks of the Convention for safe carriage to Denver. Motion seconded and carried, and Miss Jennie Smith and Miss Hay were made the Committee to prepare such circular letter.

On motion the regular order of business for the day was taken up.

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT IN EVANGELISTIC WORK.

MISS ELIZABETH GREENWOOD.—The ladies who hold in their hands the program will notice that part of the reports in this department come this afternoon and the other part not until Wednesday afternoon, but I trust that you will bear them in mind and associate them together. We heard this morning what was to be done to save children, but our great organization from the beginning has had this great work for the reaching of the masses of the people.

I want to bring before you three or four very important truths, and the first is in regard to the aim of our department which I have outlined in a circular, which has been sent all over this country to ten thousand local unions during the past year. The motto which I have chosen for the evangelistic department is this: "Thy gentleness hath made me great;" because I believe that the lesson which is taught us by nature and in this age is the fact that spiritual power is the great power. I believe that the first aim of the evangelistic department is to keep its hands on the spiritual forces and to try to obtain spirituality in every local union in the country.

Now, ladies, I want to dwell a moment on the second circular sent out from the evangelistic department this year, to every state president and to every county president in our great organization, asking that from eleven to twelve o'clock should be set aside as a devotional hour in every state organization in the convention assembled and in every county convention, and that the example set by the National Union at Atlanta, should be followed.

I think there are some of the dear sisters who have just as much right to their opinions as I have, who think I am perhaps unduly pressing this devotional idea. I want to tell you two things about that. It is not because I am not thoroughly interested in the further development of the work. I have been president of a local union for fourteen years, and lecturer upon every subject connected with temperance work for sixteen years, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in my own State, and national organizer and national superintendent in juvenile work, and that is enough to say that I am interested in every side of this great work. But I have during my life sat for one solid month through the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, through the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church and also the gathering of the Episcopal Church, and I have found that in all these great religious bodies the devotional hour becomes almost a misnomer and a burlesque. Our daily papers criticised a certain conference in New York City and said that during the devotional hour the ministers were in the lobby deciding who should hold the offices, while a little handful were found in the devotional meeting at prayer. Ladies, our organization was born under a great uplift of the Spirit. The inclination of all organizations is to get away from this devotional spirit, and I claim that unless we put it right in an important part of the day, like eleven o'clock in the morning, when with one consent we all turn towards God, it will be nothing but a misnomer and a burlesque, as it has become in all the other great religious bodies. I want it also because of the L. T. L's., because of our Y's., because of the public school children who are being educated. I want these young people to realize that this great Woman's Christian Temperance Union is first of all spiritual, and our devotion is not a mere introduction to the business meeting, but is part of our great work, when we are all together and in an orderly way turn to worship God.

I hope these reasons will impress themselves upon you ladies, and that we shall have this matter definitely settled at this convention.

Another reason that I want to give you is because there is nothing that succeeds like success, and this report, with its twenty pages, represents the spirit of ten thousand local unions, and every letter coming from thirteen states and the territories, as well as letters from forty nations outside of this country says: "Since we introduced the 11 o'clock devotional hour in our convention we have a deepening of spirituality all over our States, our conferences are more harmonious; the friction is removed, our machinery is oiled and our delegates go home feeling that they have received more help than they used to receive from the conventions which they attended." Now for these two reasons I have brought to you a motion. I want to tell you this report contains the reports of our eight national evangelists, and I want to also say that our dear Mrs. Henry sends you in her report from her sick room with love and greeting, and asks that you pray for her in her long continued illness.

Then we have also Dean Wright's report. He has sent to us his resignation. He feels that he cannot longer take the burden, and that he has not been sustained in it.

We have in the audience to-day, two ladies, Mrs. Gray of New York, and Mrs. Law of Michigan, who have been through the whole course of study and have graduated with the highest honor and there is one other, Mrs. McKinney, who is not present, and I want to ask, at Dean Wright's request, that these two ladies will come to the platform and be introduced as those who are rounded evangelists, because they have taken the full course of study as prescribed by our department.

I have the great privilege of handing Dean Wright's certificate to Mrs. Gray, of New York State. Mrs. Law, whom I also introduced to you, ladies, has received hers from Dean Wright, and has taken the same course of study. Dean Wright writes me that these ladies are one hundred in almost every case all through their course of study and took the highest honors of any in the four years' course. Ladies who are not familiar with it will remember that course of study includes Greek.

Ladies, we have some wonderfully bright State Superintendents in this evangelistic work, and I want to tell you what one of them has done. My valiant coadjutor in the State of Kansas, Mrs. Henderson, has originated the idea of crusade bands, each band including a leader who is a speaker, a singer, a player and a helper (four), and these are to be so drilled and educated that perhaps one hundred of these bands, or fifty, as the idea shall mature, shall go out all over the States and hold evangelistic meetings.

These pages also show, ladies, that there has been a most remarkable enthusiasm in the evangelistic work all through this country during the last year. Every one of these thirty-two letters says: "We have held more gospel meetings, and more meetings among the masses, than ever before." Everyone of them says: "We have never distributed as much temperance literature as we have during the last year."

I will not take further time, but I hope you will consider deeply the facts of this report, and I now move that this be made a standing rule, "That our devotional hour, under the auspices of the evangelistic department, shall be conducted daily from eleven to twelve o'clock, except on the first morning of the Convention, when a brief service shall immediately follow the President's annual address; that the Executive Committee be requested to define how this hour may be most helpfully spent."

Motion seconded and carried.

Miss Greenwood also offered a motion thanking Dean Wright for his services and showing an appreciation of the wisdom and self-sacrifice with which he has conducted the W. C. T. U. course of Bible studies.

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF UNFERMENTED WINE.

Mrs. R. A. Esmond's report, Department Unfermented Wine, was read by Mrs. Rice. The work of this department this year has been more in waste places and on untilled ground than in bringing in the sheaves and gathering up the harvest from well cultivated fields. The "Macedonian Cry" has come to your superintendent from towns, counties and districts never heard from before, and in which no systematic work had ever been done. The means used in center fields, the thoughts suggested, the convictions awakened, have, through the moral atmosphere of human hearts, extended their influence to every nook and corner of the land, and many of these out-of-the-way places already promise to yield a harvest that will gladden the hearts of those who now grieve the desecration of their Lord. This department works different from all others, in the directness of its efforts and their results. It does not have to wait the coming of another generation to see its effects, or for the slow and uncertain footsteps of legislative enactments to reach results; it strikes straight at the liquor traffic and there is no uncertain sound in the tones in which it strikes the death knell to alcohol, wherever found. It addresses itself to the enlightened mind and conscience and challenges investigation and research, and without this educational process no intelligent prohibition can ever be established.

Reports show more definite lines being drawn between the advocates and opposers of unfermented wine; the former are more outspoken, the latter more determined and censorious. The better spirit shown in their utterances against unfermented wine at communion, would indicate that the war had been carried into the enemy's camp and fears engendered that their craft was being set at naught and King Alcohol being brought into disrepute. According to reports given this year, about two-thirds of the churches in our country are using unfermented wine at communion service. The thought may come to some minds, that if two-thirds of the churches have put away alcoholic wine from the table of their Lord, they will have a strong influence in convincing the other third; therefore, the work of this department, as far as the churches are concerned must be nearly completed. Those who make their estimate after this formula are "reckoning without their host." This one third are men of iron wills, minds set like flints, prejudices deep and firmly rooted, opinions like the "laws of the Medes and Persians," that changeth not. They are the men who mould and fashion public opinion, who sway the will of the unthinking masses as the reed is swayed by the hurricane's blast. The very men who are giving aid and comfort to our common enemy, the men whose opinions are quoted and lauded by the saloon and its sympathizers, and the strength thus given to the saloons helps them to extend their work of death. It is this one-third that remains who are to necessitate the tug of this warfare, and they have their sympathizers, more or less, in nearly every religious denomination.

Of the leading orthodox denominations, not one as a whole uses unfermented wine at communion service. The Methodist Episcopal church (of which I am a member) has temperance as a fundamental principle in its creed, and exacts abstinence from alcoholic drinks in its discipline, and yet, there is scarcely a Northern State in which there is not to be found M. E. churches using alcoholic wine at Sacrament, and a large majority of the M. E. churches South, still use it. Quite a number of these churches North, who three years ago used the unfermented, are to-day using the alcoholic. The Methodist Episcopal church, with its characteristic zeal and enthusiasm, sometimes under the influence of present surroundings, endorses measures, and then takes time after to consider them.

The Episcopal church, like every large conservative body, requires a great amount of lever power to disemble it, but when once started, it makes no retrograde motions. In nearly every state there are Episcopal churches using the unfermented wine at Holy Communion, and but one Bishop has been reported as opposing it. Others reported as saying that as soon as a pleasant, pure wine could be procured, they would recommend it to their people. In some of the Western States, Episcopal clergymen have spoken in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union conventions, and, in many instances, have thanked the ladies for the stand they have taken upon the sacramental wine question, and have promised their co-operation.

There is no denomination in which there has been more time and effort expended and from which so much evidence and corroborative testimony and statistical proof has been required as that of the Presbyterian. At the same time, no stronger resolutions have been passed favoring the use of unfermented wine than has been passed by this church in its collective bodies. From the fact that under the pressure of members and the influence of enthusiastic, stirring speeches, men are moved to endorse measures that, when they have again come into their individual capacities and responsibilities, have hesitated and failed to put into practice. Your superintendent recommended that this year the efforts heretofore spent in circulating petitions and presenting resolutions to collective church bodies, should be spent upon local churches, and this has proved very effective and satisfactory in its results.

The Baptist denomination, though conservative and tenacious of its opinions, has not proven as persistent in its opposition, and with but very few exceptions, not severe and personal in its criticisms.

The work of the various German churches in many of the States has been vigorously pushed during the present year. The plan adopted of interesting some bright, intelligent, German woman, and she to first present the subject to her church, has proven very successful, and many of these churches have changed this year to non-alcoholic wine.

The receipt sent out to all of the States for making unfermented wine, has received great favor, and many churches are preparing their own wine. The expounders of Sabbath School lessons, who taught that Christ made intoxicating wine to be drank at a marriage feast, have quite dropped out from our religious papers. A new Sabbath School catechism, by Julia Colman, in which unfermented wine at the sacrament occupies a number of pages, is being introduced into many churches. A Sabbath School lesson leaf, containing questions and answers upon the wine of the Passover Supper was entensively used in the Sabbath Schools. Thus, the subject is being brought directly to the teachers, and to the knowledge of the children.

There have many very pleasant and encouraging features of the work developed during the year, but this Bible wine question has become so important a factor in the temperance reform, that at every advanced step new theories and new ideas are to be met and answered.

On motion report was adopted.

A solo, "The Gate of Heaven," was rendered by Mrs. Stanton.

MRS. J. M. KINNEY, Superintendent of Penal Work, said: Immediately after my appointment to this office, after the convention in Boston, I intended to reach every State and Territory in the Union and find how many Superintendents of Penal Work, that is, of prison and jail work, there were, and if there were none appointed in the States and Territories, to have one appointed for each jail. In this I was greatly assisted by Mrs. J. K. Barney and Mrs. Peets, in this department. They both kindly furnished their directories until I have had reports from thirty-three States. In some of these States and Territories a great deal of work is done, especially in these departments, of securing preaching and literature in the prisons and jails. In most of our Northern States a Chaplain is provided, so that it is not so incumbent upon us to provide that department in the North, although some of them are without chaplains, and, where that is the case, we find a great lack of attention given to the jails in this regard, not only in the North, but in the South. They do not have the well-regulated prisons we have in the North. Before I left my home, two weeks ago, some of the Commissioners from Alabama, who were visiting my home and jail and other State prisons, expressed themselves as not well satisfied with the convict and lease system, and that they should try and found a prison so that no more lease system and no more convict work should exist. I do not wish to say this to hurt the feelings of our sisters, because we know that it is through the State Superintendents of the W. C. T. U. that this work will finally come, and we find many abuses in our State prisons in our States and all the Territories where the convicts' camps are situated. We find prisons without women matrons; we see the women who have not the protection of any women, where some of them have no matron, that men have gained access to the rooms of these women that are not protected by a matron, and we hope that any woman who will go to a State prison, and find it without a matron, that they will go before the meeting of the next legislature, and that such an appointment will be made. You will find men, women and children upon the same corridors, and, wherever this is to be found, the jail is not a reformatory and cannot be in any sense of the word, but will be a school for vice; and you can imagine, when criminal men and women are huddled together in one small corner, perhaps twelve by fifteen feet, the cell doors entirely open on one small hall, you can easily tell the result. Now, if you think these things do not exist, you go home and visit the jails and see. I found it in my own county once, years ago, when I first became interested in this work. When I wrote and asked the editors of the newspapers myself in regard to this, the editors entirely refused to publish the article, which I had requested, because it would necessitate the building of a new jail. I am very glad we have some place to go when we have this state of affairs. We can go at once to the State Board of Charities, who will look into the matter and remedy it. I prepared soon after my appointment in June, and sent out wherever there was a state president, this blank, asking a great many questions as to the plan and work. It will show the women just what we thought we needed done—visiting jails, distributing literature, gathering a library in the jails, where none exist, and having Gospel service held at least once a week.

I want to say something in regard to the literature I found. I sent a good many copies of THE UNION SIGNAL to some of the jails, and it is one of the most useful papers I think you could put into the hands of criminal men; men who have not had their trial or who are already condemned to the service in the jail or in the State's prisons. I have also this little card, prepared by a lady in Chicago, whose address I can give you, which will help you very much. Now some, even of our Christian temperance women, have not been converted to the idea it is best for women to visit the jails, and some very sneering things have been said in regard to our carrying flowers. Now, while we wish the putting away of all sentimental feelings,—and none of us wish these criminals to escape the punishment of the human law—it will not prevent our carrying the message of the Divine love and secure their pardon for the breaking of the divine law, and if you, yourselves, have ever had any experience in this work you know how touched men are who are chained in from everything outside of these grey stone walls of the outside of the prison where they work, or inside of the wall. Who would begrudge these men a flower? An appropriate text card is always given with it. I think that is the custom.

On motion the report was adopted.

MRS. MCDOWELL, fraternal delegate from the Home Missionary Society, held in Grand Rapids, Mich.: The ladies of the Woman's Home Missionary Society now assembled in Grand Rapids, your co-laborers, send this message, "In God's work let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

MRS. S. A. MORRISON, Superintendent of the Department of Charitable Work. The department that I represent before you to-day, is still further out on the line of cure than the sister who has just reported. The objects and aims of this department are well known to most of you, but lest some do not understand it I will explain its purpose. It is to establish in every almshouse in the land, good library reading, regular Sabbath services and Christian watchcare, carrying the gospel of hope to the outcast, and hope of the gospel. This department has a direct, divine claim upon every Christian heart, notwithstanding Solomon has said: "The poor is hated of his neighbor." Christ has declared upon the discharge of this claim; happiness or misery of every one of us will depend on that day of final separation, when each one of us must receive "inasmuch as ye did or did not;" no other work, dear sisters, however well done, can take the place of this, for the greatest of these is charity; unselfish love towards the unfortunate and helpless; not in the thoughtless giving out of clothes and food is true charity found, but stimulating effort to courage, hope and effort.

There are many reasons why the W. C. T. U. should give special prominence and individual support to this work. Let no one say God has called you to this work and me in an entirely different direction. There is probably no county where these dependent ones are not found, and each should have its superintendent, however isolated these institutions may be. Let the local worker feel, as she wends her lonely way over the hills to the poor-house, she has the sympathy and prayers of every member of this vast organization. This department stands and pleads for thousands of God's poor, royal children of the King of Kings, lifting to us helpless hands, and to minister to one of the least of these is indeed a most honorable occupation. Of course, it is largely the result of legalized liquor traffic. We have been encouraged by some Christian men, dear sisters, in this noble work we are doing. The year has been one of effort, and we have reason to believe of good results also. Last year only nine Unions reported work; this year we have more than doubled, as the work has appeared to grow very rapidly. I have received from Miss Minard of Maine, an interesting report. Miss Bell reports a growing interest in Vermont; in one almshouse they have monthly meetings; in another, services are held every Sunday. In one case where five towns unite in the care of their poor, a service is provided for by the directors every fortnight. Pennsylvania shows a lively interest; Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love, does not belie its name. South Carolina does not report but one meeting every week, at Charleston. Virginia tells us of much interest and effort in behalf of the poor; visits and religious services. Texas has sent out circulars calling attention to the great need of almshouse work. Michigan shows great growth during the past year. The alms-houses are well cared for, and the doors are open to our workers. Many have regular Sabbath services and visitation by the clergymen and W. C. T. U. women. The largest almshouse in the state belongs to Wayne county, taking in the city of Detroit, it is quite a community in itself, numbering from five to seven hundred. Services are held every Sunday during the year. It is a source of great comfort to many, while many thousand pages of literature are distributed every year. The members of the Poor Commission are chosen from the leading business men of the city, and are taking great interest in making the institution an honor to the state. Georgia, New York and Maryland, reports from these states are all doing well. Many cheering words come from the Southern sisters, with many plans for the coming year; while others report no work and no superintendent.

On motion the report was adopted.

MARGARET ANDERSON WATTS, as Police Station and Police Matron Superintendent: The means used to arrest thought have been, first: Articles have been written and publication granted in some of the leading newspapers and magazines, calling attention to the importance of this work. The Louisville Courier-Journal, the Nashville Banner, Lend A Hand and Union Signal and Woman's Journal, have published articles. At the meeting of the Federation of Woman's Clubs, a letter was addressed to the corresponding secretary of all clubs represented, calling the attention of the women to this department. Early in January, 1892, circulars were prepared, addressed to the presidents of all the states and territories, asking to have the Prison and Jail work separate from the Police Station work, by appointing a state superintendent of Police station and matron work.

On a separate sheet was printed "An outline of application to be presented to municipal authorities, making it mandatory to appoint Police Matrons." And suggestions were given just how to go about it. On a third sheet was pictured an ideal matron, who by her loving, discreet, patient, spiritual-mindedness can draw the hearts of women and children to higher aspirations.

Wishing to reach the largest number, these circulars were placed in the Kellogg W. C. T. U. building at Chautauqua, N. Y., for distribution, and also at other assemblies, where attention was called to them.

A large number of letters have been received during the year, and not one has been unanswered.

That which has been the inspiration of all my work is contained in a paraphrase of the Crusade Psalm:

Let my soul praise God while I am living for what He has done.

My trust is in God, who made the heavens and the earth, and Who keeps Truth inviolate.

He hears and decides the cases of the oppressed, when no man listens.

He gives the bread of heaven to hungry souls.

He looseth the prisoners who are bound in the senses.

He gives sight to those who are blind to spiritual things.

He gives hope and courage to those who are dismayed and filled with fear.

He is a safeguard to the stranger and will lead him aright.

He is a Father to the orphan and husband to the widow. But the ways of the wicked He turns upside down."

On motion report was adopted.

"Nearer My God to Thee" was sung.

Mrs. Margaret T. W. Merrill's report on securing homes for homeless children was read by Mrs. Stevens, of which the following is a resume: Six States have taken hold of the work, eight speak hopefully and hope to take it up very soon, and eight have declined to appoint superintendents.

Report adopted.

Under the head of the educational departments the report on the School of Methods in the absence of Miss Mary Allen West was made by Miss Lodie Reed, of Indiana.

MISS REED: I am first asked to tell what the department has done to advance the cause of temperance among the masses. It would seem as though this department was out of place under that question. It reminds me of a celebrated artist who was asked how he mixed his paints in order to produce the exquisite coloring for which his pictures were noted. He replied, "I mix them with brains."

The School of Methods department is the brains with which the work of the other departments must be mixed in order to produce pictures of immortal beauty.

The Christian religion was inaugurated by a wonderful benediction, when ignorant fishermen spake with tongues of the Lord and marvelous results followed their works. But it came to establishing the new system of religion in the countries round about, carrying it into Macedonia, convincing the debaters on Mars hill regarding righteousness and temperance to come, it took more than the spirituality of John, more than the earnest boldness of Peter. It took the keen culture, the methodical brain of a Saul of Tarsus.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union had its pentecostal in the Woman's Crusade, and we are all familiar with the wonders of those days, how the women spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and what marvelous results followed. But to establish such a system of Christian work, wide as the world, varied as humanity's needs, requires more than the spirituality and the earnestness of the Crusade. It requires the keenest judgment, the most careful planning, that the work may be advanced in the best way. It needs a St. Paul, and the School of Methods is the St. Paul among the departments.

The Master himself gave us the reason for this department in that beautiful object lesson by the sea side, when the multitude pressed upon him so hungry for the bread of life as to be unconscious of their physical hunger, but his human pity and his Divine power met this lesser thing as well as the greater, and yet, notwithstanding their sore need, notwithstanding his great pity for them, he kept them waiting, waiting, until the disciples should seat them in companies of hundreds and fifties. Then he took into his hands the bread and the fishes, gave them his creative blessing, and divided them among the apostles to distribute amongst the multitude, and, as a consequence, there was no lack, no waste; no want was overlooked.

The School of Methods contemplates just that work among the departments, and it is this that our workers have been learning in their camps this summer, in their Schools of Method, county and inter-county, state and inter-state, as they have gathered by the seaside and in mountain resorts and God's groves on these western plains. They have learned how to systematize their work, how to rightly divide the word of truth that is given to them so that they may reach all the people. So I think you will agree with me that this department has a very great deal to do in reaching the masses with the temperance cause; that it is the keystone of the arch of departments; that it is the dominant ingredient in the formula for successful work in all the other departments.

Now as to what has been done. I have not been able to compare the reports sent in very carefully with those of previous years, and yet I am persuaded that the brook is very fast becoming a stream, a mighty stream.

I have reports from twenty-three states. Four of these report that no special work which can be classed under this department has been done. All of them report work in connection with the county conventions, that this idea is engrafted upon their county and district conventions, and some work only in that way, while others add special schools for this form of work.

I want to give you just two or three points from these reports. Rhode Island held, in connection with its State Convention, one day's school of scientific temperance instruction, with Mrs. Hunt present to conduct the school. The state commissioner of public schools was present and gave his unqualified endorsement, and what was better, the schools of the county were all closed and the teachers were there to learn how to teach scientific temperance. It occurs to me that such work as this might be done in connection with County Teachers' Institutes; that if one day of the County Teachers' Institute could be secured for a scientific Temperance Instruction School, when the teachers of the county were all there or could be there, it would be a magnificent way in which to advance the work in that department.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, National Superintendent Parliamentary Usage:—We heard a great deal this morning and were very much interested in hearing about mental education and physical education, Sunday School work, etc., etc., but as you know, friends, we can have no law which is so essential, we could have no law without the department which is now before you, because, as you know, we could not make a motion to nominate legislators, and when these legislators were in their respective seats, we could not have the oral procedure about which we read in the several state legislatures and the United States Congress, without this department, and as great numbers of questions have been sent to me to be answered, and there seems no better time than this, you will pardon me if, instead of a report, I give answers to a few of those questions in the time allotted to me. I have written these questions down on the tablet of my memory, but I may not take time to read each one. I shall omit many of them because of lack of time.

First of all, "How should a series of resolutions be properly adopted?" We shall adopt a series of resolutions properly a little further on in this Convention, so we will not take time to answer that question farther. "How many votes does a simple substitute require, to be settled?" I suppose a simple substitute differs somewhat from a complex substitute in the mind of the questioner. A substitute, ladies, is always an amendment. You can not substitute one thing for another thing until you have the first thing. It always, therefore, requires two votes, first as to whether you will substitute for the original motion, and secondly, the adoption or rejection of the motion.

"Will you be kind enough to explain the previous question?"

"The previous question" is simply a technical term. When you move the previous question, you simply say, in substance, "I move that all discussion now cease, and that the vote be immediately taken." It is a shorter way of saying "I move that this debate now be stopped and the vote now be taken." The trouble is, that your Webster comes up in your mind to confuse you; you have before you a motion and an amendment, and an amendment to the amendment, and some one moves the previous question, and a half a dozen think they must go way back to something way off.

Now another question: "Why not move to table, instead of moving the previous question?" Now, suppose we have a motion and an amendment and the amendment to the amendment before us, and the motion to table prevails. What happens? It goes to the table of course, the whole thing goes to the table absolutely, and if you are under a time limit and you have four hundred delegates you know nothing of the views of the floor except those of the few speakers to whom you have listened. If you move to table, the whole thing goes from before the body. If you move the previous question, you get the vote, a very different thing, as you see.

Suppose I am very much interested in a motion and was just about to claim the floor, but being a little slow in my movements my sister in front gets the floor and moves an amendment. I am not in favor of that amendment. To complicate matters still farther, another moves to amend the amendment, but I am interested in the original motion, and wish to speak to it, and when patience has had its perfect work, I move the previous question on the amendment and force the vote on the amendments; and then the question is divested of the amendments and I obtain the floor and speak to the motion.

"Is it proper to lay a motion on the table for a definite time?" or, as I think the question was: "Is that the best motion?"

If you wish to kill a question, move to table it. Not that you cannot take a question from the table, but do not lay it on the table for any definite time—I mean in a delegated convention like this. Instead, move a definite postponement. Never let go of a certainty for an uncertainty.

There is a matter in which we are much interested, it is brought up this morning, you look about and see that the friends of the measure that you wish carried are not in their seats. Before there is any excitement whatever, we being reasonable women, you obtain the floor, and move that the consideration of the question be deferred until three o'clock this afternoon, and you will get that motion through ninety-nine times out of a hundred; this afternoon when three o'clock comes, you have the right of way, nothing can hinder you. You call up your question, and you make your nice little speech. If you had moved to table, hoping to take it from the table, if you afterwards move to take it from the table, you can make no remarks whatever. that motion is not debatable, and the ladies who brought it up this morning will vote you down. Do not move to lay on the table until 3 o'clock this afternoon, it is not the best motion. Move a definite postponement.

Mrs. H. B. Kells, National Press Superintendent, read her report, which will appear in the Convention number of the Union Signal. She added, "I should like to mention that Mrs. Edholm, the World's Superintendent of press work, has sent out during the year 250 columns of matter, to over 700 newspapers in the United States.

The reports from 29 State Press Superintendents stated there are published 23 papers owned and edited by the W. C. T. U. Beside are reported 82 out and out Prohibition papers which offer every privilege to white ribboners; also 366 papers that yield a column controlled and regularly edited by the W. C. T. U., and 193 others that give space whenever requested for notices."

Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, St Louis.—National Superintendent of Narcotics:

The principal work of this department the past year has been to petition Congress for a law forbidding the manufacture of cigarettes; this effort has met with a hearty response everywhere; more than 25,000 names were sent to Congress, and thousands of letters written.

When these petitions were presented by the various congressmen, there was quite an interesting debate as to which committee they belonged. Some said the committee on finance, others the committee on education and labor, still others thought the committee on epidemic diseases was the proper committee. It was finally decided that the petition should go to the committee on epidemic diseases. I am very glad Congress has classed the cigarette with dangerous diseases. The bill is slumbering with this committee. We will wake it up this winter, and the question will probably be referred to the states. I hope every state will petition its legislature to pass this law forbidding the manufacture of cigarettes. A similar bill was introduced in the last Massachusetts Legislature. The State Superintendent spoke before the committee who had the bill in charge. It failed to pass.

Two efforts have been made to increase the license on tobacco, one in Kentucky, which was passed and repealed, and one in Congress. By many people this seems the only way to suppress the cigarette; to this, however, the W. C. T. U. will not lend a hand. Thirty-five states and the District of Columbia have laws forbidding the sale of tobacoo or cigarettes to minors. Other states will petition their legislatures this winter.

From every State comes cheering messages of increased interest and better work being done. In the blanks sent to state superintendents this year, I asked this question, "Will you give the opium question your earnest attention next year?" From nearly every superintendent comes the answer, "Yes I will." We have seen great increase of interest in this branch of the work. All superintendents are studying the question and many are acting. One county superintendent in New York addressed the druggists' association and urged them to formulate a bill govering the sale of opium and present it to the next legislature. This will probably be done. A man addicted to the opium habit will present a bill to the legislature of his State asking that a law be passed forbidding the practice by physicians of hyperdermically using opium. Women who have become slaves to the opium habit have been placed under medical care, and this disease, which is one of the hardest to treat, is being cured. I am also glad we are to have an address at this convention on the opium curse. I wish more of our lecturers would prepare addresses on this very important subject, and warn women of the dangerous drugs that they are constantly using. The paregoric, the different bromides, the chewing gum and many others.

In this very church, I heard one woman say to another, "I never suffer with headache. I take a bromide." Giving the name of the drug she is using. Do you realize how many girls take laudanum? O, women stop this. Surely our white ribbon women can live without narcotics. We have one delegate to this convention who was a slave to opium for ten years. She is redeemed and working for others who have formed the habit. I wish you could hear her story. I am sure every one who hears it will shun these drugs.

One superintendent reports a town where nearly all the boys and some of the girls smoke. Another reports almost all the boys smoke, and many girls use snuff. The latter is in New Hampshire. Missouri reports a very successful narcotic meeting held at the last state convention. It was the only meeting Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Gleason spoke and made many converts.

Many unions are offering prizes for the best essay on the evil effects of tobacco. In the high school at Westboro, Maine, 100 essays were written. Hundreds of sermons have been preached the past year, and many lectures delivered. Mrs. Bullock and Mrs. Gleason, lecturers for this department, have done excellent work. More literature is being distributed. One superintendent of literature reports that she has sold more narcotic literature than any other kind. The state of New York alone has distributed 321,617 pages reported; how many pages not reported, we can never know.

I am anxious to present this little paper to you. It is the Anti-Tobacco Gem, published in Melvin Village, New Hampshire, by C. H. Shepherd. Subscription price, 20 cents a year; ten copies to one address, $1. This man has had tobacco juice spit in his face, tobacco put in his pockets, his office key-hole plugged up with it and has had many other insults. His subscription list is very small, and he has supported the paper out of his earnings as a blacksmith and the money his good wife saves in housekeeping, but still he goes on and keeps the little Gem alive. Will you not send this paper to some young friend? It may save him from the tobacco habit.

I am amazed at the advance the South has made in this department; four years ago when I asked the president of South Carolina to appoint a superintendent of narcotics, she would not talk to me. It was almost impossible to get an entering wedge, but now she writes, "Results are stronger than reports, and we claim results." They have secured a law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors under 18 years of age. The Southern States that have secured anti-tobacco laws are Maryland, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi and Kentucky, that great tobacco State.

The matron of the jail here in Denver, says in seventeen months she has had 204 women under her care, 194 of them having been cigarette smokers; 74 have been addicted to the use of morphine. Number of boys under her care, 161; of which 140 have been cigarette smokers. Only 21 out 161 who did not smoke cigarettes.

Many religious bodies have been memorialized and have passed strong resolutions condemning the use of tobacco. This is an excellent plan. I am sorry to report the action of the Southern Methodist Conference of my own State. This Conference met October 4th in the aristocratic suburb of St. Louis known as Kirkwood. When the committee on securing homes for the delegates went to the ladies of the town they were asked by some to send ministers who do not use tobacco. The report of the committee on the prevalence of the tobacco habit among ministers and members, and the evil resulting from the use of cigarettes made the following report which was adopted:

"Tobacco as opium and arsenic, doubtless has its uses, and may, under some conditions, be employed beneficially; but its general use cannot but result in injury. This is especially true of the cigarette, to whose use many painful and fatal diseases are attributed. We would recommend all ultra anti-tobacconists to the practice of tolerance and the prayerful consideration of the passages:

"Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind, I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself; but to Him who esteemeth anything to be unclean, to Him it is unclean."

Dr. Carradine, the champion of all that is pure and clean and true said: "As ministers of God we should practice what we preach. Tobacco is an unclean thing; the practice of the tobacco habit in our elder brethren is a stumbling block to young men and should be discontinued. This resolution will hold our church up before the world for ridicule." Presiding Elder T. M. Finney said he had learned to smoke at a Methodist conference and he had smoked by the hour with such sainted fathers as the late Bishop Marvin. Dr. Hammond defended the resolution in these words: "I have smoked a cigar to the glory of God." Our Southern Methodist sisters have a broad field to work upon. I am glad to say, however, that this action was not acceptable to many members of the conference. Some who were absent at the time were very indignant and expressions of disapproval were numerous. A number of district and county W. C. T. U. conventions have passed the following resolution: "We will not aid in the support of a pastor who uses tobacco in any form."

Report adopted.

Mrs. Buell—Miss Willard is the superintendent of the next department—Presenting Our Cause to Influential Bodies. I do not know how much of a report she has prepared, but I will say this, all the National organizations which we have known of, have received either a letter or a delegate. We have tried so far as possible to appoint our own women in the cities in which these fraternal friends have convened in National gatherings; we have very largely utilized our own ladies; largely the state Presidents.

There are several meetings to come this fall, notably the Knights of Labor and the meeting of the Grangers in New Hampshire, and arrangements have been partially if not wholly made to send fraternal delegates to those two National meetings.

The following received telegrams were read :

W. C. T. U., Trinity M. E. Church, Denver, Colorado.

Thanks for greetng received. Read James 5. 7-8.
MRS. MARY B. DENMAN.

Central Executive Committee, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, in session Springfield, Mass. Send greeting to National W. C. T. U. Read 1st Thess. 3:12.

From MRS. HENRY SHEPTON, President Oklahoma W. C. T. U. Read Is. 4:17.

District of Columbia sends greeting. Josh. 1: 5, 6, 7.
MISS FRANCES WILLARD, President W. C. T. U.

The Buffalo Catholic Diocesan Temperance Union now in session, send cordial greeting. Let us hasten the day when all good citizens will unite against alcoholism, the threatening foe of this progressive Nation.
REV. GEORGE ZEIGER.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, Denver, Colo.
Affectionate greeting. Farewell. Read Phil. 1: 3, 8-10.
ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

MISS WILLARD—That sounds ominous. It looks as though Mother Thompson thought she would not come any more. It was painful to me as I read it. I do not know what it means.

The committee reported the following telegram in answer to Ellen F. Williams, president of the Dominion W. C. T. U.

The National Woman's Temperance Union, in Convention assembled, return greeting. Read 1st. Cor. 3: 21, 22 and 23.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE—Madam President and Lady Henry Somerset, I hold in my hand two pears, most daintily tied with the white ribbon which are sent to you from Mrs. Thomas, an invalid from Walla Walla, Washington. She is the mother of a delegate who is here.

MISS WILLARD—Lady Henry has the biggest, and she has got to make the speech.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET—It seems to me that at this Convention all good things drop at our feet or into our hands, and these pears without any visible tree have come with all their beauty and their freshness. I thank you with all my heart.

MISS WILLARD—Lady Henry declines to thank the lady for me, and I assure you I thank you with all my heart, and I will with all my mouth when I proceed to devour that favorite fruit.

The Convention sang the benediction and adjourned.

MONDAY EVENING.

One of the most notable meetings of the session was that held last evening in Trinity church, under the conduct of the suffrage department of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Virginia Hedges, State Supt. of Suffrage for Missouri, presided, opening the meeting with prayer and hymn and the reading of part of the first chapter of Joshua, which she called the suffrage commission.

A note was brought in asking if it was true that the American National Suffrage Association had nominated Mrs. Victoria Woodhull-Martin for President of the United States, as is being circulated in the press. Dr. Anna Shaw, Vice-President of the Association, stated that it had not nominated any one—man or woman—for President, and suffrage women never would go through such a ceremony till they had the power of the ballot to back their nomination.

Mrs. S .F. Grubb of Kansas was the first speaker. She began by saying: "You see before you, a woman who has voted and just as quietly as I have dropped a letter into the post-office. Sometimes it was in the company of my husband, sometimes alone. The stock argument against the ballot is, that women will lose their influence if they vote. Women have no influence to lose. In all the ages they have constituted the greater part of the church; they keep up its sunday-schools, its finances and its spiritual power, and if they could be said to have influence anywhere, it is here. But what has this influence done for her? Every person who has any power to say or to act in the church is a man; he is sunday-school superintendent though the sunday-school would not live a month without the women; he is class leader, though women half fill the pews; he is appointed to lead; he is preacher; editor of the church organs, and notwithstanding Dr. Buckley thinks we would lose our influence, I don't see but that we might just as well lose it as not. Her influence does not amount to anything in the church compared to the great loss the church sustains by woman's spiritual power having no expression in her councils or her life.

Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, the second speaker, was received with a round of applause, and spoke of the educative power of the law to arouse woman to a proper sense of her enslavement. "I come from Missouri," she said. "No doubt you have heard of Missouri people—the James boys and some others. My State has what they call prohibition by a local option law; but it's a humbug—the whole thing is a humbug, because no State has the right to say that one set of its people in a county shall fasten an evil upon the great majority of its citizens, any more than it would be right to license a few to steal or murder." Mrs. Hoffman reviewed the inequality of the law respecting property rights of women and men, and showed that St. Paul, the great champion of woman, was the most maligned man in history. She spoke of the folly of men alone making the divorce laws of a State—unless men are the only parties cited in divorce cases. "You say if women have the ballot, bad women will vote. Did you ever hear of a bad man voting? You take care of the bad men and we'll take care of the bad women;" and so saying, Mrs. Hoffman left the church amid thunders of applause.

Miss Ada Ripley, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in Nebraska, wondered naively how a man could get up in the pulpit Sunday after Sunday for years and waste the pearls of his teaching on an audience made up chiefly of persons classed with minors, idiots, and the insane. Miss Ripley demonstrated why women should have the power to help establish in the State the conditions under which she must live and rear her children. The state needs fatherhood and motherhood.

Mrs. Mary McG. Snell narrated some of the disabilities under which women have their being in Mississippi. "Oysters in the bay," she said, "have a better time there than women in raising their young, because the State protects them by law from the ravages of evil men." In speaking of the power given to women by the new constitution to vote whether fences shall be run in the county, she said, "Women are 'on the fence' in Mississippi now, but they think they need more protection from the saloon than the cotton needs from the cattle, or the corn from the pigs."

Dr. Anna Shaw was the last speaker. She said when you see a woman out on the street you suppose you see her wearing her own clothes; but that's a mistake, for if she's a married woman she is wearing her husband's clothes—the law says so—and doubtless half the women before me to-night are in their husband's clothes. In Massachusetts a widow had no right to be buried in a burial ground bought in her husband's name, even if bought with her money. It took ten years' hard work for us to get the right to bury a widow in her husband's lot, even after she had the good sense to die and quit such a state. For ten years the women lobbied, and gazed upon the great stuffed Cod that hangs in the legislative hall, and down on—the little Cods in the seats—and for all these ten years widows were suspended between heaven and earth, not daring to die till they knew where they could be buried.

Miss Frances Griffin helped the people to laugh while they lost their money in the contribution baskets, saying, "You know the question of the Great West is the silver question."

The evening sparkled with wit, and doubtless will leave many a nugget of truth to enrich this great-hearted people, who seem to have nearly all the world can give within their grasp.

DEMOREST MEDAL CONTEST.

The Demorest diamond medal contest held last evening at Trinity M. E. Church has never been excelled in enthusiasm and interest throughout the eventful history of that grand method of inculcating temperance principles among the young. Every seat in the vast auditorium was filled long before the contest began, and hundreds patiently stood throughout the entire programme, being unwilling to forego the delight of joining in the plaudits when the fortunate victor should be declared.

Never was there an assemblage where every heart throbbed more sympathetically in unison with the hopes and fears which invaded each youthful breast. There seemed a bond like unto that of parent, or relation toward a cherished member of the fireside circle, and a sense of comradeship lifted the younger portion of the listeners to a pitch of enthusiasm which gave vent in repeated and vociferous applause. The eloquent and impassioned style of oratory called forth the best and most intelligent efforts upon the part of the speakers, and all acquitted themselves so very creditably as to merit honorable mention. The judges, Messrs. G. K. Shurtliff, secretary of the Y. M. C. A.; Robert Beggs, principal of the Whittier school, and W. E. Knapp, principal of the Franklin school, decided in favor of Miss Margaret Fitz-Gibbon Badger, of Atlanta, Ga., a slight little miss of only fourteen years of age, possessed with rare native talent, as shown in her finished, graceful effort. All alone she had traveled from her far-away home to compete for the prize, and it was won without a single representative from her native State to cheer her on.

"Number 3" or Miss May Chenoweth, of Ottawa, Kansas, received special honorable mention from the judges, and Clifford J. Thorn, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, received a perfect ovation upon being introduced to the audience.

TUESDAY MORNING.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, at a o'clock, Miss Willard in the chair. In conducting the devotional exercises, Mrs. E. A. Hill, of Florida, read the 2d chapter of Tim., and the hymn, "A Charge to Keep I Have," was sung. The minutes of yesterday, both morning and afternoon, were read and accepted.

MISS WILLARD—Respecting the presenting of our cause to influential bodies, we have done what we could do in a kind of helter skelter way, whenever we saw there was going to be a large gathering, and we thought we could tap the local union in that city and get them to put forward somebody to present our cause there, we would do so. If we could not we would try to send somebody specially. We thought that was a matter that ought to be put into the hands of some one other than our general officers.

On motion of Miss Pugh, the President was asked to appoint a committee to decide upon the awarding of the prize banners, and appointed as that committee, Mrs. Thurston, Mrs. Tenney, and Mrs. Mickle.

Miss Pugh explained to the Convention that when the banner is awarded it should be taken home by the state receiving it and returned the following year, so as to be present and ready to be handed over to the next recipient. She stated that considerable confusion had arisen in this matter, and that it was hard to keep track of the banners, and only in the way suggested could the matter be kept straight.

On motion of Mrs. Hoffman by a rising vote, Lady Henry Somerset was made a member of the Convention.

MISS WILLARD—They will do as handsomely by your leader when she goes over yonder.

MRS. HIBBEN—I rise to a question of privilege. I think I voice the heartfelt sentiments of almost all this delegation when I say that many of us have had it in mind, that the young man from Iowa ought to be remembered by us, ought to have some memento or testimonial from the ladies of our Convention, and I want to ask that the President appoint three ladies as a committee to receive the contributions of this Convention, and I also would suggest that we each of us contribute not more than a dime, so that it may be a universal testimonial, and in addition to that I have been urged by gentlemen who live in this city, to hold the matter over until to-morrow that the ladies who are our hostesses in the city may have a chance to contribute, because it was the universal sentiment last night that the young man from Iowa should have had the diamond medal. I would ask that the President appoint this committee, and I would like to suggest that the testimonial be given to-morrow evening.

MRS. ALLEN, OF TENNESSEE—I was not able to be present at the contest last night, but I understand that you had efficient judges. Doest his action do justice to your judges?

MISS PUGH—Mrs. Allen very well says she was not here.

MRS. BENJAMIN:—Madam President, I was not present, but we must adhere to justice in all our dealings. I was told that every contestant did more than fairly well. Ought we to discriminate in favor of any one in this way.

MRS. KINNEY—I voice the sentiment of Mrs. Benjamin, that whatever our private opinion and whatever our deep regrets might be, that our own private opinion did not find expression in the choice. I think it is an insult to a body of judges for us in the Convention to rise afterwards and place such a flagrant disapproval upon their actions. And then there are others who deserve, and it does seem the young man received a high ovation from the audience last night. He received the honors. Every one spoke, and my heart always goes out in sympathy to the ones who do not get the prize, and there were several of those. I do not feel that we should place this second sorrow on the hearts of the others who did not receive the prize.

MRS. WOODY—I did not understand that the delegate from Washington made that as a motion, and I should be very sorry for such a motion to be entered upon our records. I wish that it might be withdrawn, and that whatever opinion there might be can find another method of expression without the action of this Convention.

MRS. CAMPBELL—I wish to make an amendment to that motion; that this Convention present to all of those who did not receive the medal, a souvenir temperance spoon.

Motion seconded.

MRS. KAY moved to lay the whole matter on the table.

Motion seconded and carried, and the matter laid on the table.

The order of the day was called for.

MRS. HERFORD—If the Convention will consent, as spokesman for the resolution committee, I ask to present a resolution at this moment.

Consent being given, the following resolution was offered:

"Resolved, That the tender sympathy of this convention be extended to Mrs. S. F. Grubb, president of Kansas W. C. T. U., whose son Arthur Grubb lost his life in an attempt to investigate an opium den in the interests of our work." Motion seconded.

MRS. INGALLS—I am very glad indeed to have this resolution come before this body. I very much wanted to speak yesterday of the efforts of Arthur Grubb. It was in my city where this young man lost his life. He went into one of these dark dens to report for the newspapers. The newspapers of our city were very quiet about it. There was very little said at the time about what he had done, and I am so glad even at this late hour to have some expression of sympathy tendered to our sister Grubb. I hope this may be carried unanimously by a rising vote.

Motion put and carried unanimously by rising vote.

The order of the day being called for, the convention proceeded to the next order; the election of officers, and Lady Henry Somerset was by vote called upon to preside during the election.

Before proceeding to the business of electing officers, the committee on telegrams read the following received from various parts of the country:

To MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, W.C. T. U. Convention:
Your greeting cordially received. The Christian Endeavor army condemns intemperance in every form; stands for abstinence, for the suppression of the saloon, for a dethronement of its power in the politics of our land, and join you in the petition which is being sent to the governments of the world, asking them to raise the standard of law; to strip away the sanctions of the state from the drink traffic, and to protect homes by total prohibiton of the heaviest curse that rests upon our civilization. Read Col. 1: ix-x.

JOHN WILLIS BAER, Secretary.

To MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, W. C. T. U. Convention: Telegram received. God bless America's queenly woman. Rev. 19: vi.

J. B. CRANFILL.

To THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION:
Grateful thanks for kind greetings. May the Lord watch over you, guide you and keep you.

NEAL DOW.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, president W. C. T. U., Denver, Colo.:
The National Christian League for the promotion of social purity, at its last meeting, passed resolutions to send cordial greetings to the National W. C. T. U., now in convention at Denver.

E. B. GRANNIS, President.

By consent, replies were ordered sent to the various letters and telegrams.

By request, Lady Henry Somerset took the chair. "Blest be the Tie that Binds" was sung. Mrs. Hanna, of Pennsylvania, led in prayer. It was moved that pages be requested to be seated, and that they carry no notes during this time. Carried.

THE CHAIR—Tellers must now be appointed. What is the pleasure of the convention.

MISS PUGH—I move the chair appoint. Carried. Hymn, "Guide me, O Thou Great Jehovah," was then sung. The chair appointed Mrs. Field, of Indiana, Mrs. Clevenger, of Ohio, and Mrs. Ingalls, of Mo., first tellers; Mrs. Stevens, of Me., Mrs. Buzby, of N. J., and Mrs. Lewis, of Conn., second tellers. By consent the chairman requested all persons who do not belong to their delegation to retire from delegations. On motion the sargeant-at-arms was sent to bring in all the members of the Convention.

MRS. LATHRAP—It is a foregone conclusion that but one woman will be the choice of this Convention for president, and that the woman who has led us so long; I desire therefore to make this unusual motion: That this Convention request the secretary to cast the ballot for Miss Frances E. Willard for President for the ensuing year. Seconded.

MRS. GRAY—I call for the constitution on that point.

MRS. DUNHAM.—May I ask to amend the motion by adding to it that the rules be suspended, and then ask to cast the informal ballot?

MRS. LATHRAP.—We can move to cast the ballot, and it is an election by ballot.

MRS. BENJAMIN.—Will anyone who has the constitution please read Art. III.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE.—"The officers, with the exception of vice-presidents and assistant recording secretary, shall be elected by ballot on the morning of the last day but one of the annual meeting. The recording secretary may nominate her assistant, who shall be elected by acclamation unless otherwise ordered."

MRS. LATHRAP.—I want to ask if I transcended the constitution in my motion?

MRS. BENJAMIN.—I didn't know that the constitution was changed. I am perfectly certain how it was written. It was written that the general officers should be nominated and elected by ballot, and I did not know that it had ever been changed.

MRS. BUELL.—I think Mrs. Benjamin is wrong. I think it is just as it was made at Baltimore.

MRS. CUMMINS.—Sec. IV. following, if you will please read, gives something in regard to it.

MRS. LATHRAP.—I greatly prefer to withdraw my motion to save time. I knew there would be but one choice. I supposed it was constitutional. I greatly prefer to withdraw my motion than to have this discussion. If the ladies prefer to ballot I will withdraw.

MRS. BENJAMIN—There is an article that tells exactly how we shall proceed. It is section IV.

The Convention then proceeded to cast the ballot for President and recording secretary, and the tellers retired to count the votes.

The ballot was then cast for corresponding secretary, and the tellers retired to count the votes.

The first tellers returned to the Convention hall and reported as follows: Whole number of votes cast, 338. For Frances E. Willard, 333; Mary A. Woodbridge, 2; Mrs. Fessenden, 1; Mrs. Buell, 1; Miss Pugh, 1. Two on pieces of paper which could not be counted.

Mrs. Lathrap moved that the secretary be instructed to cast the ballot for Miss Willard as President. Motion seconded and carried unanimously, and the secretary cast such formal ballot for Miss Frances E. Willard as President of the National W. C. T. U., and she was declared duly elected such President. A committee composed of the following named ladies was appointed to conduct the newly elected president to the chair: Mrs. Burt, of New York; Mrs. Cassell, of Colorado; Mrs. Lathrap, of Michigan; Mrs. Riggs, of Oregon; Mrs. Goodale, of Louisiana. Miss Willard was conducted to the platform during the singing of hymn "How Firm a Foundation" and was introduced to the Convention by Mrs. Goodale who said, "It is with a good deal of pleasure and pride that I present to you our new President, our always president, Frances E. Willard.

MISS WILLARD:—Beloved, as I stood before you and saw those waving handkerchiefs, as I have seen them many years, I said to myself, she does not know it. Then my heart said to itself, she knows it more than ever. Beloved, I pray God to make me not unworthy of my mother, and not unworthy of your motherly hearts, and I ask Him to make you frank with me and me with you, that we shall tell each other wherein each one can be truer to God and to humanity. When such speakers as Robert McIntyre and our bright women speak words of praise, we take it not to ourselves, but to our work. Even when the journalists say severe things they do not look upon it as personal, why should we take the blame any more than the praise. We will put it all on our great sacred cause. The words of 2d Tim. come to my mind. "That under the harness no man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. And if man also strive for masteries yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully. Consider what I say. And the Lord give thee understanding in all things." I said as our dear sister from Florida read these verses, I can apply that to my heart as words of electric fire burning into my heart and every heart. Pray that God will keep me and save every W. C. T. U. woman. I thank you and lift my heart in aspiration and prayer for every one of us here.

MRS. HOFFMAN—It has always been our custom for many years immediately after receiving our new President, to have a telegram sent to the mother of our President, and we always received a telegram response, and we always received strong, ringing words as those that might have come from the noble woman whose sons were sent out to conquer. We cannot send a telegram to-day, because we cannot touch the places that lie beyond, as we do those that are here, but we believe that those that have passed beyond the vale are still near, and so I ask that this hymn which was the favorite hymn of Madam Willard, and during the last two years of her life when she was asked what hymn should be sung, again and again and again she asked that this hymn might be sung at the family worship. I ask that we join heartily in singing this hymn, and who knows that she does not hear us; who knows that she is not with us in spirit touching our spirit and our hearts. It is on the 124th page of the White Ribbon Hymnal.

There is a land of pure delight
Where saints immortal reign,
Infinite day excludes the night
And pleasures banish pain.

MISS. WILLARD—Esther says, "Here sit three of us who all have been so long and intimately associated, and we have all lost our mothers since we have been white ribboners." We believe that the mothers of us all are cognizant of what we are doing to make this world more like the Heaven to which they have gone.

On motion of Mrs. Rounds, a rising vote of thanks was given to Lady Somerset for presiding over the Convention during the election of officers.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET—Madam President, will you permit me to thank the Convention for having done me the great honor of allowing me to preside in this Convention. I fear I made but a poor president, having constantly to be prompted and not knowing the order of the business, but it is an honor that will remain in my heart and I appreciate it most deeply.

On motion a telegram was sent to the inmates of Rest Cottage, and a letter to Mrs. Mary B. Willard.

MISS WILLARD—Who so rememberful as a White Ribboner, and what they can't think of, of kindliness and good will, I think would have to be searched for with a lighted candle.

At this point the report of the tellers on the vote for corresponding secretary was announced as follows:

Whole number of ballots cast, 335; for Mrs. Caroline Buell, 288; Miss Mollie Hay, 16; Miss Frances Griffin, 10; Mrs. Woodbridge, 7; scattering, 14.

On motion of Mrs. McKinney, the secretary was instructed to cast the informal ballot of the Convention for Mrs. Caroline B. Buell for corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U., which was done, and Mrs. Buell declared the duly elected corresponding secretary of the Union during the ensuing year.

Mrs. Buell was introduced to the Convention and spoke as follows: "Frankly I confess to you that I did not expect this, and so I have not any little impromptu speech all arranged beforehand, but I promise you that I will try and do my best during the year that is to come, and I hope I may be able to do even better than I have ever done before. I thank you very much.

The following vote on the ballot for recording secretary was announced. Whole number of votes cast, 336: For Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, 308; Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, 19; scattering, 9.

On motion the secretary was directed to cast the informal ballot of the Convention for Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, which was done and that lady was declared the duly elected recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U. for the ensuing year. On being called to the front, Mrs. Woodbridge said: "My dear friends, the pleasant words and the beautiful words have already been spoken. I can only say that I thank you from the bottom of my heart for this renewed evidence of your confidence in me. I trust the spirit of the Lord will rest upon us, and that from the platform and in the convention there may be such unity of spirit as will show that it is not in ourselves but in our Lord. I am happy at this time to present to you, if it be your will to receive her, my honored and faithful and loved co-laborer Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens of Maine, who will, I trust be your choice for assistant recording secretary.

On the nomination of Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. Stevens was duly elected assistant recording secretary. She expressed her thanks to the Convention. The tellers here brought in their reports on the ballot for treasurer, which resulted as follows: Whole number of votes cast, 330; for Miss Esther Pugh, 296; Miss Hay, 11; Mrs. Helen Tenney, 10; scattering, 23.

On motion the formal ballot was cast by the secretary for Miss Pugh as treasurer, and she was declared the duly elected treasurer of the National W. C. T. U. for the ensuing year.

MISS PUGH—I don't think it is necessary to make another speech this morning. I am very glad that you are not tired of seeing the same faces before you year after year. I am very glad you are not tired of receiving from me nudges and suggestions, but the checks you occasionally get counterbalance all that. I will say as the rest do, I will do my very best.

The devotional hour was now entered into, Miss Elizabeth Greenwood presiding and leading in prayer. Mrs. Trego, evangelistic superintendent of Ohio, gave a beautiful lesson from God's word as written in the 15th chapter of John. At its close Mrs. Woodbridge offered prayer for the daughters of a mother who desired that their hearts be led away from worldly tendencies, and for others. A sweet solo, "Voices of the Angels," was sung by Mrs. R. R. Clark of Denver. Mrs. Woodbridge took the chair, and after the reading of notices a motion to adjourn was passed. The Convention sung "Nearer My God to Thee," and the benediction was pronounced by Mrs. Esther Frame.

CONVENTION PROGRAM.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

9:00 Convention called to order.
Prayer by Mrs. M, A. Hitchcock, Pres, Nebraska W. C. T U.
9:05 Reading of Minutes.
Report of Executive Committee.
9:20 Miscellaneous Business.

IV. EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENTS—Continued.

9:30 Miss Jennie Smith, Work among Railroad Employes.
9:40 Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, Work among Soldiers and Sailors.
9:50 Mrs. Mary C. Upham, Work among Lumbermen.
10:00 Mrs. Winnie F. English, Work among Miners.
10:10 Mrs. J. C. Bateham, Sabbath Observance.
10:20 Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, Department of Mercy.
10:30 Miss Frances E. Willard, Purity.
10:40 Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, Purity in Literature and Art.

11:00 Bible Reading, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Greenwood.
12:00 Noontide Prayer. Adjournment.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

2:00 Convention called to order.
Prayer by Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge.
2:05 Reading of Minutes.
2:20 Report of Committee on Resolutions.

V. SOCIAL DEPARTMENTS.

Topic—The effect of the Social Work upon the temperance sentiment of the day.
3:50 Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, Parlor Meetings.
4:00 Miss Jennie Cassedy, Flower Mission.
4:10 Madame Demorest, Commissioner for the Columbian Exposition:
4:20 Mrs. M. C. Campfield, State and County Fairs.

VI. LEGAL DEPARTMENTS.

4:30 Mrs. Ada M, Bittenbender, Legislations and Petitions.
4:40 Dr. Louise C. Purington, Franchise.
4:50 Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Peace and Arbitration.
5:00 Adjournment.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

MIss Willard will preside.
7:30 Opening exercises, conducted by Mrs. B. Sturtevant Peet,
President California (North) W. C. T. U.

REPORTS FROM STATE PRESIDENT.

(Two minutes each.)

Wyoming has full Woman's Suffrage; Kansas, School and Municipal Suffrage. In the following States women have School Suffrage: Arizona, Colorado North Dakota, Idaho, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Vermont and Missouri.

As Mrs. Oberholzer, our World's and National superintendent, came to Denver a few days ago, she met ex-Governor Alva Adams, of Pueblo, on the train. He expressed satisfaction that the W. C. T. U. had taken up this practical line of work and requested literature with the assurance School Savings Banks would be taken up during the early winter in Pueblo public schools.

Rev. Dr. McIntyre, the pastor or Trinity M. E. church, the finest in the world, finest organ in the world, highest paid preacher in the world—$7,000 for ten months' work.

The late-comers at lunch last evening were given a special dessert in the form of musical selections by the orchestra of High School young men which plays the accompaniments in the First Congregational Sunday-school.

Dr. C. N. Whitney, of Washington, D. C., who represents the Prohibition Advocate, Baltimore, Md., is a veteran temperance worker. He resigned a lucrative place under the Government to more fully engage in temperance work.

School Savings Banks seem to have already met good success with Denver business men and educators. Mr. F. Woodbury, president of the Rocky Mountain Savings Banks, in order to further the teaching of economy in this simple method, has expressed willingness to furnish all printed blanks, cards, etc., required to establish and run the system in the Denver schools.

The following original verse, sung by the Loyal Temperance Legion on Saturday, in Trinity Church, was composed by Mrs. A. B. Sinclair, of Denver, and State superintendent of kitchen garden work.

"We welcome Lady Henry and Miss Frances Willard too,
And thank the Lord who brought them safe across the waters blue,
And all the noble workers; we mention but a few
In the W. C. T. U."

Telegrams and letters of greeting have been sent from the Convention to Mother Thompson, Hillsboro, Ohio, the first crusader; to our temperance Deborah, Mrs. Zerelda Wallace, of Indiana; to the grand old Nestor, Hon. Neal Dow, of Maine; to Miss Jennie Casseday, Louisville, Kentucky, our National flower mission Superintendent and "shut-in" sister; to Gen. John Bidwell and Dr. J. B. Cranfill, Prohibition Presidential candidates; to Mrs. Letitia Youmans, Canada's honorary president; to Miss Mary Allen West, W. C. T. U. missionary to Japan; to Mrs. Mary R. Denman, first president of New Jersey, and others.

A large canvas was suspended above the platform during the reading of the reports of the Educational department which read as follows: Four essentials to the enforcement of a temperance education law:

1. Endorsed text-books adapted to grades in the hands of all able to read, with oral lessons for others.
2. A course of study in this branch with three lessons per week for fourteen weeks of each school year of High School.
3. The same organizations or tests for promotion in this as in other studies.
4. The interested teacher.

Seek ye first the temperance education of the children and all other temperance blessings shall be added unto you.

There was an immense overflow meeting on Saturday evening at Unity church at which Miss Jennie Smith, railroad evangelist, narrated her experiences among men and abandoned women, and urged that every hearer should seek a fresh baptism of the Spirit in the interests of these classes. Mr. Crittenton followed with a thrilling speech along the same line. Mrs. M. L. Wells, of Tennessee, gave a brief talk on total abstinence, and thought it was about time the Republican and Democratic parties should give the nation the privilege of wearing crepe for them. Mrs. Kate Lente Stevenson, Massachusetts, gifted corresponding secretary, said: "Saloon-keepers interpreted W. C. T. U.: 'Women continually torment us.' We say it is the union of all sects, all nations, and we covet the universe and, under God, will have it."

A letter has come from Mrs. Helen M. Barker, who is hard at work in connection with the Columbian Exposition. She says: "Committee on assignment of space in the woman's building consists of five women, of whom three are white-ribboners. I have assurance that space will be given the W. C. T. U., but amount cannot be given just yet. The commission voted that no saloon or open bar should be allowed on the grounds, but deferred action on allowing light wines and beer in restaurants. It came out in the discussion that concessions had already been granted to restaurants with privileges, and if now refused the management forfeits six hundred thousand dollars. They had a hot discussion."

A unique gavel was presented to Mrs. Barnes at the first Y conference. It is a very beautiful and artistic implement made of wood from the north, east, south and west. The handle is of carved red wood in oak leaf design, from California; the mallet is of Vermont butternut; the ends of the mallet are of satin wood from Minnesota and the old bridge at Concord, New Hampshire. Upon the handles are cedar acorns made of wood from the steamer "Star of the West," first shot upon from Fort Sumpter. On the ends of the white ribbon (supplied by New Jersey Y's.) are the monogram F. J. B. and the letters Y. W. C. T. U. in raised gold.

CALL AT

HEADQUARTERS

OF THE

WOMAN'S

Temperance Publishing Association

IN THE LECTURE ROOM,

TRINITY CHURCH,

For Books, Leaflets, Souvenir Spoons, Etc.

FULL SUPPLIES ON HAND.

F. H. RASTALL, Manager.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

VOL. VII. DENVER, COLORADO, NOVEMBER 2, 1892. No. 5.

DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

Price, Five Issues, 25 Cents.

Frances E. Willard, } Editors-in-Chief
Mary Allen West, }
Lady Henry Somerset . . . . . Contributing Editor
Margaret A. Sudduth . . . . . Managing Editor
Mrs. Harriet B. Kells . . . . . Office Editor

Mrs. F. H. Rastall . . . . . Business Manager

The Wisconsin delegation has all its delegates here but one.

The tasteful souvenir programmes, issued by the Denver Union, are much prized by the delegates.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton of California, will be welcomed back to the ranks of the National Organizers.

Mrs. General Bidwell, of California, was elected superintendent of the department of work among sailors.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens of California, has again been appointed a National organizer. She was to have given the response for the Pacific Coast, but a serious illness detained her, which is much regretted.

The oil paintings from which were made the beautiful photo-gravures of young Crusaders, presented Mrs. Helen G. Rice this morning, were the work of Mrs. A. W. Bennett, of Big Rapids, Michigan.

The excursion round the Loop will go to-morrow. Arrangements have been made to explore a mine. A hot lunch will be served at the top for 50 cts. to those who desire, and pleasant weather is assured.

At the Y Conference on Tuesday evening a Model Y meeting was held. The program sparkled with humor and bright suggestions. An interesting feature was the presence of several honoraries, who took an active part.

A well-merited recognition of worth is that awarded Mrs. Clara Parrish, organizer of Illinois, who, upon motion of Mrs. Woodbridge was elected in open Convention to the position of National Organizer, to assist Mrs. Barnes.

Mr. Crittenton's generous gift of $5,000 for founding the missions under W. C. T. U. auspices, has brought the Social Purity question to the front, and Mr. Crittenton's services as an Evangelist are overwhelmingly in demand.

Rev. Ada C. Bowles, who introduced the bright little episode of "The Old Oaken Bucket" yesterday, is herself the brightest of women; an ordained minister in the Universalist church, and an active supporter of all reform measures. She is en route to California.

The Convention unanimously passed a rising vote of thanks to the Illustrated California Magazine for their generous gift of 100 copies containing the article on the Florence Crittenton Missions, and exposing "The Traffic in White Girls," written by M. G. C. Edholm.

Mrs. Jane Stapler, president of the Indian Territory W. C. T. U., was presented to the Convention by Miss Willard, who tenderly referred to her great work. She is the daughter of an Indian chief, and has proved well her heredity by being one of the "chief" workers in our land.

Denverites contrasting the work of the W. C. T. U. as compared to that of the Woman's Congress held in this city two years since, are in the majority in favor of the former, giving as a reason the practicability of their work; every department identified with the W. C. T. U. clearly showing that it was created in response of suffering humanity.

The New England delegation, which came from Boston under the chaperonage of Mrs. Ellen N. Everett, had an exceptionally pleasant trip, stopping en route in Toronto, Chicago, and Kansas City. In Chicago the Exposition grounds and Temple were visited, and an enthusiastic prayer and praise service was held in Willard Hall.

The Convention is pleased at the presence of Mrs. Annie G. Darby, representing La Hermandad, a Spanish religious temperance paper, published by Rev. Alex. W. Darby of Pueblo. Beside Mr. Darby's paper work, he has a Mexican missionary field covering seven counties of Colorado. Mr. Darby is a strong prohibitionist, as he lost his first church in Iowa by his action on temperance six months before the Crusade movement.

The Pennsylvania delegation, headed by its new president, Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, numbers 21; it is entitled to 31.

The next World's and National W.C.T.U. may meet directly after the World's Congresses in Chicago next year, probably May 22.

Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, Minnesota's superintendent of franchise, is also president of the State Suffrage Association and is an eloquent lecturer in the field.

National Evangelists: Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. Wheeler, Miss Toby, Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Snell, Mrs. Trego, Mrs. Weaver, Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm.

Idaho receives the custody of the prize Loyal Temperance Legion banner for the coming year, for largest pro rata increase in number of active L. T. L. Companies.

The excursion to Colorado Springs on Friday will leave at 8:30 a. m. and return at 9:30 p. m. Carriages at the Springs will convey the delegates to the Garden of the Gods and to Manitou.

The railroad State superintendent to-day presented in open convention a souvenir spoon to Miss Jennie Smith, their loved superintendent, in token of their love and appreciation of her great work.

Mrs. Woodward is the newly elected superintendent of the railway department, which Jennie Smith, who made the department, resigned in order to devote her life to the railroad evangelistic work.

Scene—Street car in driving storm. Delegate, "Whoever saw such mud?" Old gentleman opposite, "Madam, should not complain; you are getting just what you women are working for, plenty of water."

Yesterday a pleasing innovation occurred when Dean H. Martyn Hart of St. John's Cathedral, cordially bade each guest welcome, and materially aided the Episcopalian ladies in their tireless endeavors for the comfort of everybody.

The Union Signal applauds the action of the National Convention in the determination that Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt shall have a life fund from the white ribboners in recognition of her splendid services in the World's work.

Many compliments have been paid the local committee of arrangements, particularly those interested in the details of the midday and evening lunches, which were so admirably divided between the ladies of each denomination.

Mrs. S. M. Beck, Indiana's new president, carried off the banner for her State as the best organized in the Union. Mrs. Beck is a rarely practical woman and has just been appointed by the National executive committee on its appropriation committee.

The Colorado W. C. T. U. by its corresponding secretary to-day presented to Lady Henry Somerset a beautiful souvenir containing wild flowers and photographs of Colorado as a delicate token of the fragrant memories she leaves in this state.

The Monday Literary Club of Denver was very desirous of having some of the delegates invited to visit the Club while in session, but between numerous committee meetings and busy sessions the ladies seemed unable to break away from the duties of the Convention.

DENVER.

ATMOSPHERE AND ENVIRONMENTS.

While rounding the curve at the power house, Colfax avenue and Broadway, an observant eye will very probably be attracted by a stone tablet inlaid in the brickwork on a line with the second story. It is inscribed "One mile above sea level," and serves as a reminder that Denver's elevation is 5,197 feet, or a mile practically above the sea level. At such an altitude the atmosphere is highly rarified and all animal life is subjected to unaccustomed conditions. Six thousand feet of atmospheric pressure is removed from the body of an ordinary sized man and the pulse gallops on at an increased rate of speed in unison with the heart beats which are so greatly accelerated. Some new comers perceive little, if any, difference, while others find their respiratory apparatus seriously restricted in its functions. Still others experience such a sense of exhilaration that all they seem to lack is a pair of wings to waft them to the summit of the loftiest mountain peak; again, some are for quite a long time subject to fits of unaccustomed drowsiness, and of nights "Nature's sweet restorer" is doubly refreshing. Change of altitude almost immediately becomes beneficial or harmful according to the physical condition of the individual and his care of himself in the first stages of his change of environment, therefore, extreme caution should be observed.

Relative to the unrivalled climatic advantages afforded residents in Colorado, certain it is that many a one now perfectly restored to health would not to-day enjoy "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" but for the fact of their removal to the Rocky Mountain region. As an exceptionally healthful city Denver is annually becoming more famous, and from the fact that the officers of the health department are striving by an intelligent system of sanitary regulations to reduce the present death rate, and have already done so by the most approved methods of sewerage, paving, etc., it is believed that the death rate, at no distant time, will not exceed 12 to 1,000 of the population yearly. Notably, extraordinary climatic advantages are offered in checking pulmonary troubles in the incipient stages, and the same influences render this state a very desirable resort for those afflicted with other ailments; but in every case to come in time is an imperative necessity, for even this glorious climate cannot mend or stay the later ravages of disease.

To tarry awhile in Denver and not include trips to its varied outing points would be to lose the view of some of the grandest scenery the world affords. Even thus late in the season the weather is so fine that these trips can still be undertaken with every prospect of balmy air and sun-lit skies.

Manitou, the Ems or Saratoga of the west, leads in the enumeration of resorts, perhaps. The lovely little gem of a city nestles in a picturesque glen at the base of Pike's Peak. It is the traveler's delight with its wondrous living springs of soda and iron, its far-famed "Garden of the Gods," the awe inspiring canons canopied with heavens own blue, its fertile parks, cataracts, mountain lakes, besides other innumerable marvelous natural beauties which are centered there.

It is the supreme ambition of visitors to Manitou to ascend Pike's Peak, this is accomplished by that feat of engineering skill, the Cog-wheel railroad, of recent construction just 8¾ miles in length,—by carriage, mule or horseback. Some who are sufficiently sturdy climb on foot and are richly rewarded by the exquisite views spread out by the beneficent hand of the Creator.

Many who reverence the memory of "H. H." Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson, would on no account forego a pilgrimage to the summit of Cheyenne mountain, for so many years her weird last resting place. Multitudes have visited this spot of indescribable beauty and grandeur, and in some faint degree obtained rest and comfort like unto that which inspired the loyal loving utterances of the sweet gifted singer, realizing as never before, through what grievous losses and loneliness she attained the height and, conquering self, succeeded in "making sorrow only one of the lower notes in the oratorio of blessedness."

The wonderful trip around the Loop may easily be accomplished in a day's time, or by a longer stay Green Lake, Gray's Peak or Argentine Pass may be seen; the later is one of the grandest pieces of scenery in the mountains.

Beyond Cañon City is that wondrous chasm known as the Royal Gorge, or the Grand Cañon of the Arkansas. Imagine, if possible, passing over a bridge fenced in on either hand by solid, towering walls of rock, lacking but eighty-four feet of being one-half a mile in height. The stupendous proportions cannot be grasped unless time serves to leave the flying train and at leisure and in solitude to study the awful grandeur and sublimity.

Other favorite points in the state are Idaho Springs, Glenwood Springs, Hot Sulphur Springs and Poucha Springs, where are found bubbling hot springs rich in medicinal properties which are for the healing of all nations.

Piercing the clouds is the Mount of the Holy Cross, best seen from the crest of Fremont Pass and also from Tennessee Pass. This pure emblem of the Christian faith is formed by two transverse canons of great depth, riven down and across the summit of the mountain. In these depths lie eternal snow, thus perpetuating a perfect symbol of the honored heights of ancient story.

ELLA C. BENTON.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

TUESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at two o'clock P. M., Mrs. Monroe of Ohio in the chair.

After the singing of the hymn "Onward Christian Soldiers" Mrs. McFarland of St. Johns, N. B., offered prayer.

The minutes of the morning session were read and accepted.

By special request Mrs. Evans of Kansas, sang a solo "There is a Shadow."

Mrs. J. B. Hobbs of Illinois reported on the National Temperance Hospital.

MRS. J. B. HOBBS.—The National Temperance Hospital, formerly located at 3412 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, has been removed to 1619 Diversey Ave. The present building was erected for hospital purposes, and consequently has much better facilities for taking care of patients than the one formerly occupied. It is pleasantly located on a lot of one hundred by two hundred feet, and only three blocks from Lincoln Park. On the east side of the building, and overlooking a large, shady lawn, are three long verandas, where patients can enjoy the morning sun, or the cool of the summer afternoon. There is also a long vine covered arbor, not seen in the cut of the hospital, for the use of the patients. The building and its surroundings are very attractive, and would make a delightful permanent home for the Temperance hospital.

None the less pleasing is the home-like interior—of the forty-three rooms, several have been furnished by individuals—others by unions and States, and there still remains a number to be furnished. Also, a ward of five beds. Will not some State, union or individuals volunteer to furnish these? There are but two paid-up endowed beds at present—the Y's not having raised quite the entire amount to complete their endowment.

There is great need of more such beds so that more free patients can be accommodated. The cost is only $350 annually to endow a bed, and the one doing this can designate who shall occupy it.

"The poor ye shall always have with you," and nowhere is this more fully verified than in a hospital. The staff of generous, kind-hearted physicians cheerfully give their services to such.

For a month previous to moving, and another after, we were obliged to refuse all applicants; then came the heat of summer which is not favorable for surgical cases; these with other hindrances are the reasons that we cannot report a much larger number of patients. There have been, however, 121 in the hospital during the year —women, 103—men, 18. Some have remained a week or two, others months.

The house physician reports one hundred and fifty-seven diseases and one hundred and thirty one surgical cases, a number of the patients had more than one disease, and others one or more surgical operations—eleven States, twelve nationalities and twenty-nine occupations were represented. The non-alcoholic treatment of disease is meeting with great success, as only two and one-half per cent. of the patients have died the past year—a record not made by any other hospital. The principles of this treatment are being more generally understood and approved, and its influence extended. March 29th, nine nurses, graduates from the Training School connected with the hospital. At present there is a class of eleven pupils, two of whom are Japanese girls from Tokio, Japan, who have come here to receive temperance training, and when their studies are completed they will return to practice their profession. They were sent by the W. C. T. U. of Tokio. The nurses are thoroughly taught the injurious effects of alcohol upon the human system, and are also taught the use of remedies in emergencies. There were forty-five applicants for admission to the training school the past year, and still others on file from the previous year, which shows the desire to learn temperance methods. So far as we know the nurses have given good satisfaction. The street costume is to be of navy blue.

Religious services are held at the hospital Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. This hospital belongs to you, dear White Ribbon sisters, and each one should have an interest in its success, It has no endowment to defray its expenses. The Board of Directors are contributing of their time and money to this end. The hospital depends largely upon the fees from patients, and the income is not sufficient to meet all its expenses. It should be the aim of the management to make it a home for sick White-Ribboners and others, at moderate charges, and to do this it must depend upon its friends for contributions. Many have responded generously with money, fruits and furnishings. Will not many more do likewise?

A dispensary is needed at once. The medical staff consider it a necessity. And this will require several hundred dollars, which must be forthcoming. One way to lend a helping hand is to become a member of the Hospital Association by the payment of the five dollar membership fee, and one dollar anually thereafter. There is also a building fund to which one may contribute to help buy the present hospital site, which is for sale. All moneys should be sent to the treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, 539 West Adams Street, and all other donations to the Hospital.

This Hospital ought to have one-half free beds. Today we have one of our grand district presidents of our own Illinois in the Illinois bed. The last occupant of my own endowed bed was our dear Mrs. Henry, one of our evangelists who has been ill so long. Just now there is a little girl, twelve years old occupying the bed, and after she was adjusted to her room she was asked if it seemed like home to her. "Oh, no," she says, "It seems like Heaven, everybody is so lovely to me here." Dear sisters, will you not take hold of this work? This is demonstrating the principle for which we everyone of us have been working for the last nineteen or twenty years, to demonstrate the principle of non-alcoholic medication. This principle cannot be demonstrated except we have this work going right on before us. We have been teaching it for years, and now we want the practical demonstration of it. Let us take the people into the hospital. Those who can afford to pay need treatment as much as others but there are so many that cannot afford to pay, and should we not contribute to give success to this principle of temperance treatment. I leave it with you; take it away on your hearts and let us see if we cannot raise there a temple to the honor and glory of God where this human system can be treated without being poisoned with alcohol.

A DELEGATE FROM NEW JERSEY—Will Mrs. Hobbs please state again the cost of furnishing a room.

MRS. HOBBS—The smaller ones are sixty dollars, the larger ones are anywhere from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars, just as nice as you please to furnish them.

NEW JERSEY DELEGATE—New Jersey will furnish a small room.

MRS. HOBBS—Thank you, you have no idea how much pleasure there is in knowing you have endowed a bed where you may put a sick sister or brother that they may be treated without alchoholic medicines.

MRS. MONROE—The Rev. Mr. Tatum will be introduced by Mrs. Woodbridge.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE—Sisters of this Convention, it is with great pleasure that I introduce to you David Tatum, a Friend and minister in the State of Ohio: a man who has worked for temperance a long time, long years before yon and I were thought of as crusaders. He was round to and fro proclaiming total abstinence and I have a little secret which I don't think he knows and I want to tell you something about it. Before I took any interest in these matters he came one day to my home. I had a little boy nearly three years old. Mr. Tatum took that little boy on his knee and he took out an illuminated pledge and talked to him about it. I was in the kitchen busy at my work and my little boy came out to me and said, "Mother, may I sign the pledge?" I said, "What pledge?" It never occurred to me what pledge it was. "He replied, "David says if I take this pledge I will never be drunk like the mill boys." I said "Yes, you may sign it; but you can't write, my boy." "No," he said, "but grandpa will hold my hand;" and so he went back and grandpa held the hand and the little one signed the pledge, which hangs to this day beside his bed and has hung there ever since, for it was soon framed. After he was through his college life and came to his home with one of his comrades I heard that young man say to him, "Well, George, we know why you have been so blue all the way through your college life." This is the friend who thus led my boy into the way as I believe of life and light—David Tatum.

MR. TATUM—Sister Woodbridge remarked that I had been laboring in the cause of temperance. This has also embraced prohibition and woman's suffrage these twenty-two years. I do not remember that I ever gave an address on temperance without its embracing the principles of prohibition as a matter of necessity. I presume that I am presented to this Convention to-day more particularly to represent my good wife who was an active crusader in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, and took active part in the organization of this body in your first convention. She has been actively engaged in W. C. T. U. work ever since, but owing to her declining health from a serious bronchial difficulty, am here with her in Denver, but she is unable to leave her room. She sends you hearty greetings and her warm and unabated interest in your work. May God bless you.

On motion of Mrs. Snell the report of Mrs. Hobbs on the Temperance Hospital was received. The Convention at the same time pledging its help to the hospital.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, president of the Temperance Temple Board—Mrs. Carse was received with hearty applause, and read her report as follows:

First the vision, or dream; next the plan; then the foundation laid, followed by the superstructure; now the occupied and completed building. That has been the history of the Temple as reported to you by me year after year, as I have come up to the great autumn gatherings of the National W. C. T. U., since that memorable one held at Nashville, Tenn., in 1887, when you first so kindly listened to my plan and sent me onward rejoicing with your blessing and pledges of financial aid. Never was the outlook for the Temple so promising as it is to-day.

The prayer which ascended for days at the outset of the work for the architect, Mr. Root, that he would design a building for beauty and fitness such as the world never before has seen, has been fully realized. It is the delight of artists and architects alike. There is something in its exquisite proportion and noble dignity of expression that command the admiration of all who look upon it. Not only do Americans say it is the finest building of the kind on this continent, but those who dwell beyond the seas tell us they know of no building of like order that will compare with it in any land for beauty of design. As far, therefore, as architecture goes, it is an undoubted success. In regard to situation, from a business point of view, it is admitted by real estate experts to be the finest business corner in Chicago for an office building. The manner in which it has rented shows this; it commands the highest rents with the exception of the Rookery building, (which is on a par with the Temple in this respect,) of any in the city. It has only been occupied six months and the rent roll is already over $150,000. This, too, in the face of the fact that no office in it is rented for a term of less than three years, and many are rented for five and ten years. Our agent thinks by May next every office in the building will be taken, as some large corporations have now the refusal of a large amount of space which will be decided upon soon. When the building is all rented the gross income from it will be over $200,000 yearly. Even the amount of space now rented will pay a fair dividend on the capital stock, as the expense of running the building, machinery, ground rent and interest on bonds amount to $117,000; and the rental the first year is $150,000. From a financial point of view therefore it must be admitted the Temple is a marvelous success. The vital point to us white-ribboners, however, is what is the prospect of our trustees getting control of the stock and holding it for the W. T. C. U. until such times as through gifts and rentals the building will be entirely paid for. In regard to this I would say, the outlook is most promising, the contract entered into the first of last February with Marshall Field, who is the largest stockholder, to purchase his entire block of stock, amounting to $251,000.00, the terms being $50,000.00 down February first, and $10,000.00 every three months thereafter. This as you will see, gives us about two years to pay it in. Eight months of the time has not yet elapsed, and we have paid Mr. Field up to present date in round figures $163,000. We expect to pay him the balance soon, probably by February 1st., if not sooner. We will then have the controlling interest of the stock; $301,000 would give us this, but we will have by that time about $350,000.

The question will be asked, where did we get the money to pay Mr. Field? A small part of it comes from gifts, but the larger proportion of it came from the sale of Temple trust bonds, of which we have but $50,000.00 of our issue of $300,000.00, left unsold. The next question which will logically follow is if these bonds mature in ten years and must be paid, how are you going to meet them? From gifts and rentals, even if we depend entirely on the income from the building we would have enough from this source alone in ten years to pay off the bonds with interest beside sufficient to pay for the balance of the capital stock. We do not expect nor intend to be driven to such an alternative, as it would keep the National and State Unions from receiving any benefit from the income from the building during all these years. We would be glad by the time another year revolves, if they might enter into their rich heritage, so that a more effectual work for temperance might be done throughout the land, in which money would prove a large factor. If all unions and individuals would do as some has so nobly done, the work of paying for the Temple would be accomplished in a year. We hear a great deal said by some about taxing so heavily the unions to raise $100.00 for the Temple. How many do you think of the eight thousand in this country who have raised that amount? Only as follows:

Illinois	24	Connecticut	2
Massachusetts	13	Colorado	2
Ohio	10	S. Dakota	2
New York	10	Delaware	2
Michigan	9	Iowa	2
Pennsylvania	6	Vermont	1
Maine	4	Montana	1
Minnesota	4	Nebraska	1
Wisconsin	4	New Jersey	1
Missouri	10	Rhode Island	1
N. California	3	Kentucky	1
N. Dakota	3	Indiana	1

In justice, however, I must say there are scores of unions bravely at work raising their quota of $100.00, and the panels of the different States in Willard Hall bearing the names of individual donors will have more names upon them than those that have been set aside for the gifts of unions to be inserted upon them as 189 persons have given $100.00 each. The amount so far received in gifts as taken from Miss Pugh's books amount to $75,618.00. Besides this there has been received $1,000. from Mr. Schumaker of Akron, Ohio, and $1,000.00 from Mr. Austin of Chicago, Illinois, in stock which does not appear on Miss Pugh's books, making a grand total of $77,618.00. While this seems a large sum it is nothing in comparison to what such a constituency for such a cause should have given. If there had been concerted action in each State in this matter there would have been no need of issuing our Temple trust bonds, but there was no other course open, as sufficient money had to be secured in some way to get control of the stock. The marvel however is that under existing circumstances where there is so much misunderstanding, misstatement and ignorance in regard to the plan of the Temple so large a sum could have been received.

My heart is often deeply pained at the wicked rumors that are set afloat in regard to it. For instance, only last week a letter was received from a lady residing in one of our largest states who often sends money for The Temple. She wrote me in regard to a W. C. T. U. county convention she attended where the following charges were made: That the Temple would pass into outside hands on January 1st; that two-thirds of the stock was owned by men having no interest in temperance; that the W. C. T. U. had no control whatever and could have no say in regard to it; that donations given for memorial tablets might never be used for the purpose given; that people had been solicited to contribute to Willard Hall and we had no assurance that such a hall could or would exist; that, in view of all these facts, word had been sent throughout states and counties and through them to local unions to stop further contributions; that the L. T. L. has been notified not to send their mite box contents, and unions who had not already sent not to send. The lady writes: "I know not when I have been so excited and heart sick." I answered and said, "This is a fearful and cruel arraignment to make unless proof of a most positive character can be given in substantiation." She received for reply, "The UNION SIGNAL had not dealt openly and fully with the outsiders. That January 1st was the crisis, and unless the stock was secured before then it was all gone from us." High authority was quoted and the statement was also made that states in general were taking the same action as ours was in this matter and stopping further gifts to this object. I must say that such charges as these made publicly reflect very seriously not only upon myself but upon the honorable body of women I called to my aid last January to act in concert with me as Temple trustees. Their names are as follows: Miss F. E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, Mrs. W. H. Munnell, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Mrs. W. Jennings Demorest, Mrs. H. B. Kells, Miss Helen L. Hood.

It behooves these trustees to look into these charges and if found untrue insist that each State President shall make a true statement to their constituents on their return from this Convention. It is worse than useless to strike the foundation from under ones own house. I thank with my whole heart the generous friends that have stood by me in this undertaking all these years through good and evil report. To those who have opposed it and made the burden at times almost too heavy to be borne, I ask from them once more an honest and fair hearing, and beg of them to throw aside their prejudices and enter heartily into the enterprise which means greater things for our cause than any National thing which we have yet undertaken. Let us be united as one in this object, seeing eye to eye and heart to heart. Believe me, my sisters, if we could be thus united and each white ribboner pledged to fill a mite box or get others to help her do so with the larger gifts which are being constantly received, in a year we would have the Temple about paid for. I plead with you for loving sisterly aid in this matter, as it will help every union in the land and be of incalculble benefit to the great cause which I know you all desire to see triumph above every other.

Now is the day of your opportunity to help pay for the Temple. Let not the privilege pass you by, for depend upon it, I will come no more to these National Conventions to plead with you for aid for this great enterprise. With the consent of the trustees I shall turn to the larger constituency of the Church of Christ outside of what is known as the temperance ranks, but who fully sympathize with the work. We cannot now wait for the money to come in the slow pace it has done during the last five years. If the leaders of the W. C. T. U. cannot see their opportunity and aid us, we must turn for help to other quarters, for we must secure money and that soon to buy up all the capital stock so that the entire rental of the building shall be ours, and that we may the sooner reap an income to push forward our temperance work in face of all the obstacles that the opposers of the plan could devise for its obstruction. The receipts for this year have greatly exceeded any other and pledges have largely increased.

Receipts for	1888-1889	$17,263 00
" "	1890	16,740 00
" "	1891	18,080 00
" "	1892	25,535 00
	Grand Total	$77,618 00

Report adopted.

MRS. ROUNDS—I want to make a statement. One week ago Saturday afternoon in company with Mrs. Bullock, I attended a Republican rally meeting at half past four, in Willard Hall.

MRS. CARSE—I want to say if Mrs. Rounds and Mrs. Bullock attended a Republican rally last Saturday afternoon in Willard Hall it is utterly unknown to me, or the agent, for that is a W. C. T. U. hall and we have all authority over it. I want to say the hall is in an unfurnished condition, the doors are only fastened by an outer barricade for the use of the workmen who are at work there all day, except at noon time when we did as we said, and for which I feel very sorry. We thought it was not Willard Hall yet. At half past four, the men quit work. It may have been possible that some persons got in there. I would like to ask how many got in there and how many stayed.

MRS. ROUNDS—I was in my office about four o'clock. Mrs. Bullock, who was visiting the Temple came to my room and said she desired me to go with her to see Willard Hall. I told her I was afraid it would be closed. However, we went down. As I approached the entrance I saw a number of men going in. I said to the gentlemen, "Is there a meeting here this afternoon?" He said, "There is." I said, "What is the nature of the meeting?" He said, "The meeting is under the auspices of the Commercial Club," or I don't know that he named the Club. I said, "Are people at liberty to attend?" He said, "Yes." We walked in and sat down, Mrs. Bullock and myself. There were three or four hundred men there and a very few ladies. The meeting began at once. Some one recited a piece and after a statement was made we left the hall, Mrs. Bullock and I. If Mrs. Bullock is in the house this afternoon, and she told me she would be, I would like her to state in regard to this.

MRS. BULLOCK—Mrs. Rounds and myself went to the political meeting at that time at Willard Hall. I am ashamed to acknowledge that we did attend that Republican meeting. I have not attended a Republican meeting for many years, and you may never fear I will attend another.

MRS. CARSE—I want to say ladies, of course these ladies are above reproach. Of course that meeting took place, but I assure you it was without my consent or knowledge. I feel pretty certain it was without the consent of the agent, and I will have it looked up and you may depend upon it, no such thing will ever occur again.

MRS. HOFFMAN—I desire to offer the resolution that I was appointed as chairman of the meeting, to prepare. Before I present it I desire to say that I want it to be known that I shall stand firmly for the Temple. I always believed until I came to the Convention, and I believe now the women can own it, and ought to own it, and I shall stand by it. Now I wish to present the resolution.

Your committee recognizing that the National W. C. T. U. has as yet no legal control over the Temple in Chicago, which is under a separate corporation, and therefore no jurisdiction in the renting of the same, still believes it incumbent upon this Convention to make the following declaration.

Whereas, The constituency of the National W. C. T. U. has stood back of the building of the Temple at Chicago with its money, influence and prayers until it is held as a shrine sacred to the great reform represented by this organization, and

Whereas, The world outside believes the Temple,—and especially Willard Hall, to be under our control—and holds us morally responsible for the use made of the assembly room which bears the name of our National President; therefore,

Resolved, That we hereby express our amazement and sorrow and record our united protest, that the first meetings held within its walls should be the campaign rallies of a political party whose principles and policy regarding the liquor traffic are utterly opposed to the spirit and purpose of this organization, but we rejoice that the explanation which was offered in this Convention and was accepted, gives assurance that the same will not be repeated.

THE CHAIR—You have heard the report of the Committee, what is the pleasure of the Convention?

A motion was made and seconded for its adoption.

MRS. ELLIS—If you have no control why do you receive the rentals?

MRS. CARSE—I would say in answer to Mrs. Ellis, Madam President, the Hall is rented by the Central W. C. T. U., of Chicago, and we have to pay the rent of it, and as it is not finished, nor fit for any lady to sit there because it is full of workmen and dirt, we thought it would do no harm to rent it while the men were at work at noon. As I have already stated, we are exceedingly sorry and more grieved than I can possibly tell. It will be finished in a week or so, so that never again shall prayers cease at noonday, and ladies visiting Chicago will always find it open for prayers. Let us not be too narrow about this thing. I am glad to attend a Republican meeting, or a Democratic meeting, or a People's Party meeting. I was so anxious when I went to Minnesota, I went to hear Newt Reynolds and Ignatius Donnelly. I never let an opportunity pass without going. It is my right. I never thought I was contaminated either.

MRS. REED—I just want while people are declaring so strongly in regard to Republican meetings that are held in Willard Hall, to tell of the meeting that occurred there last Wednesday. A party visited that Hall. We stood there amid the filth and dirt of workmen and saw this unfinished hall, and New England's delegation felt it was time for a praise service and there was a most delightful service held there in Willard Hall last Wednesday. I want to say further if the same spirit is always found that we found there we will not regret that we put money and work into that Temple. We felt that the Lord of Hosts was with us.

MRS. HADLEY—I move to strike out the word apology, and insert the word explanation instead.

Motion seconded and carried.

MISS FRANCES GRIFFIN.—It seems to me as if we are too particular about this hall, which is not consecrated, not finished. I have been in it; it is far from being finished yet. It has got the workmen's tools, and the workmen's pipes and benches and lime and plaster and all sorts of things. I saw it was going to be Willard Hall when we got it, and when I saw it I thought if we were going to be so particular about this matter we may as well go back to the quarries when the stones were being digged out and say to the workmen, "You shall not smoke over these stones that are going to be in Willard Hall; you shall not tell your ugly tales that you tell to one another over these stones. We are going to carry them over and put them in Willard Hall after awhile." And so if we go back we will have to travel the same way all the way up. When they get into the finishing yards where they fix them up, and they begin those same old tales over again, we will have to begin to straighten them out again there. I think it is the best place to begin to straighten after those beautiful days when we give it its name, when we make our prayers, when Lady Henry Somerset makes her speech, and Miss Willard sings her song, and we all take hold of hands, then is the time to purify it; don't let's try to straighten out those workmen yet, let's wait a little longer. If a nightingale were to sing one or two false notes, would we pluck all her feathers out and give her to the poodle? As for this rally, poor Republican party, how do you know but next Tuesday we may be called upon to mourn its untimely death! (Applause.)

MISS WILLARD—The chair presumes that our Southern delegate would not bemoan having its funeral right there.

MRS. HUNT—One week ago yesterday it was my fortune to be in Chicago, and with a friend I said, "Let us look in at Willard Hall." I went around and saw a notice "Meeting here every noon." I supposed of course it was a prayer meeting and so I went in. I saw a crowd there of nice looking gentlemen. I looked around and I thought, really, we are having a very nice class of people come into this Hall every noon." I went along in the rear where I could get a view of the Hall, and there was a fine looking gentleman came from down front and invited me to come to the platform. I did not know but he was going to ask me to lead the meeting, I had hardly got my eyes open to the whole situation at that time. I looked up and saw the statement that it was the headquarters of the Republican club, and they were very nice looking men, just such looking men as I see in our homes—our husbands, fathers and brothers. They were there to represent their views.

A DELEGATE—I thank the Lord I don't have any such in my home.

ANOTHER DELEGATE—I rise to the privilege of asking Mrs. Hunt a question. Would they have looked as handsome if they had been Democratic husband and fathers?

MRS. HUNT—If they had been good men they would. When I look in the faces of the Southern legislators and find clean looking men, men of good habits, I don't feel very hard towards them because their politics are not just like mine. It seems to me sisters, in this day and generation we can afford to be broad enough to be tolerant enough, not to sit in everlasting condemnation upon those people who do not see their political duty in the same way we do. Let us be patient, broad-minded, like the big, large-hearted-women we are.

MRS. INGALLS—I would like to ask if it is really true that the National W. C. T. U. has no control over that Temple, as this resolution states. If we have no control over it, I think it is time we knew it.

MISS WILLARD—We have the same control that we have over our other interests that are separate corporate bodies. The Central W. C. T. U. has leased Willard Hall for three years, and we can therefore only exercise a moral control over that Temple.

MRS. LATHRAP—I have been asked to get up and give a word of explanation. The stock representing the ownership of the Temple amounts to $600,000. We have at the present time about $163,000 of it. We hope that by a year from the first of next February we shall have about $350,000, and just as soon as we get a majority of that stock, we shall control it. To-day, we own only a minority of the stock. Therefore we cannot control it, and until we do own a majority of it, of course the corporation that owns the stock controls it. Now the corporation which owns the stock, which is, THE WOMAN'S TEMPLE BUILDING ASSOCIATION OF CHICAGO, has an agent, that agent has rented that Willard Hall to the Central W. C. T. U. for $3,500 a year for three years. Before that time is over, we shall have more than a majority of the stock, and then we shall be practically owners of it. Your committee thought the question would arise: "If we have no control over this building, why do we in the National Union say anything about it?" Simply because it is the constituency of this National Union with its spirit and purpose that is building that building, and is behind it and will finally own it, if you keep your heads straight. And it won't be many months from now before that agent will be acting under the control and direction of this body; then we will say who goes out and who goes in.

MRS. CARSE—I ask permission to correct one thing. Mrs. Lathrap stated that we hold $163,000 of the stock. We hold about $200,000 worth now.

Previous question called for and the report as amended adopted.

MISS WILLARD—The chair wishes to call attention to a very pleasant incident. When we went to the hotel to get lunch we found these beautiful roses tied with white ribbon, sent from the Victoria Lodge, Daughters of St. George, from the English women who sent it to their country-women. I also wish to acknowledge on her behalf a beautiful bouquet from a Denver delegate and another from the Lady Somerset Y's. Lady Somerset seems to be the flower girl of the Convention.

REV. DR. DELANO—After receiving permission from the Convention to speak, said: I wish to express the hope that some action, if it is possible under your constitution, may be taken during this Convention looking toward the enlargement of the effort being made to secure the stock in the Temple building. I want to say that the building everywhere is acknowledged to be a great success. There is no building in Chicago so much admired as that building. There is no building upon which the men of Chicago look with so much pride, and I have been asked a hundred times, "Do they own it? They ought to own it." Now I wish again to express the hope that some action may be taken by you looking toward a committee that shall invite a little more co-operation.

There was a suggestion in the report of Mrs. Carse with regard to the possible appeal to the Christian church. I believe as veritably as I believe I am here in this aisle, that there is a temperance sentiment and a sentiment of loyalty towards you in the Christian church of America that will not see this enterprise fail for lack of money, and I believe I know of a number of persons who have considerable influence with moneyed men, Christian men, who might be reached. Perhaps the effort has been made, I know not, but I believe they might be reached and more than their sympathy secured, if the proper action were taken. If it means more executive force, more committee force, I hope you will provide that for Mrs. Carse. And let me say, lastly, while I am in favor of your expressing your minds with regard to this "outrage" upon that hall, nevertheless, I believe that what has been done and said here might better have been left undone and unsaid, and that your condemnation never should have been placed upon that broad-shouldered, that magnificent worker in your midst, who has borne those great stones until she has lifted them where you see them to-day. (Long continued applause.) I hope you will take such action as shall be necessary for her encouragement and assistance for the ensuing year, and I shall be glad that you shall count as much as you may, as much as you dare to, upon myself, with reference to whom a brother clergyman said one time, he had my funeral text selected, and it was this: "And it came to pass that the beggar died."

MISS WILLARD—The Rev. Dr. Henry A. Delano is one of the leading Baptist preachers in the United States, and I think he deserves a vote of thanks for offering to have such a beggar as he is take the field for us.

MRS. JONES, of Virginia—I would like to suggest that the balance of the verse be added to his funeral text, "He was Carried by Angels to Heaven."

MRS. CARSE—May I thank my brother Dr. Delano for his kind and helpful words, and it will please me very much if by the voice of this Convention they would move that he be made chairman of an advisory committee with the trustees which have already been appointed to consider how we shall most quickly pay for the Temple. I put this as a motion. Motion seconded and carried.

MISS WILLARD—May the chair offer this remark: The very first voice lifted in that Temple was the voice of Amanda Smith, the Poet Evangelist, who all by herself sang "Coronation."

Report of Standing Committee on Home and Foreign Missionary work among the colored people, was presented in pamphlet form by the superintendent, Mrs. Dr. Ray, and read by Mrs. Woody.

Report on W. C. T. U. restaurants, Mrs. E. A. Russell, Minnesota, was as follows:

Since I last stood before you to speak of the coffee houses of the United States, there have been many changes.

The latch-string of thought has been lifted, the door flung wide open letting in the light of the sun, the great high priest of day; public opinion is being formed upon this great subject. The question, "What will the coming man eat?" has been discussed by no less magazine than The Forum. We are asking—what was the Egyptian cookery upon which Julius Cæsar grew fat?

Schools of cookery are springing up here and there throughout our land and with no mushroom growth, for they have entrenched themselves within the walls of our public schools. The W. C. T. U. has no little part to play in this; it is through their influence that this has been accomplished in many places.

We believe this is the day when the thought of the people is turning to the question—"What shall we eat and what shall we drink?" As Matthew Henry put it: "Here is bread, which strengthens men's hearts, and therefore it is called the staff of life."

We should eat that which will conduce to the greatest health. The brain and the brawn of this land do not crave the condiments, the sweetmeats; they must have that which goes to make up the muscle, that feeds and keeps in active usefulness the nerves of the system. We are learning lessons from our neighbors that are around us. The animals lay up in their winter storehouse only what is needed, and they never eat what they should not. They have no acquired appetites. We have.

We, as a people, have too long neglected this subject. We have a three-fold nature—physical, intellectual and moral. To have a full and rounded character, we must not neglect one and train the other, neglect the hand and train the head. A tree at full growth, is rounded and symmetrical. Health is the all in all. What conduces to health? The following question was asked a class in cookery at a public school in Minneapolis a few days ago: "What would you choose to fit you for life?" Some answered "Money." others, "Education." The most most sensible answer, we believe, would be "health," for with that, all others may be attained. Think for a moment and you will find that a great many of our ailments come from the injudicious use of food. The cholera in Russia would not be as severe to-day were the people not just recovering from the long famine, and, too, they tell us that their food is abominable.

Put the women at this work in place of men. Establish W. C. T. U. Coffee Houses everywhere, and in a few years there will be a revolution along this line. In my experience during the past year, I have come to believe more and more in the youth of our land. If we look well to the training of the three-fold nature, the future generation will be a strong and hardy race. If their physical nature is looked after in youth, and rounded out in proportion to their moral and intellectual, we will have a symmetrical whole, and we may look for a race of people that will have no acquired appetites, and the homes for the inebriates will go to the wall. Rest Island will turn to be a haven for our white-ribbon workers.

Ruskin says: "To be a good cook means the knowledge of all fruits, herbs, balms and spices, and all that is healing and sweet in fields and groves, savory in meats. It means carefulness and readiness of appliances. It means the economy of our great grandmothers, and the science of modern chemists. It means English thoroughness, French art and Arabian hospitality. It means, in fine, that you are to be perfectly and always, ladies, loaf-givers—and you are to see that everybody has something nice to eat." Samuel Smiles says that "Bad cooking is waste. Waste of money and loss of comfort. Whom God has joined in matrimony, ill-cooked joints and ill-boiled potatoes has very often put asunder."

Miss Mary Thomson, our cooking school teacher, considers the question of food and feeding to be one of the greatest importance and that the subject should receive the most careful and deepest study by every person whose duty or privilege it is to provide our homes and institutions with food.

It is a singular and lamentable fact that the preparation of food, although involving both chemical and physical principles, has been less advanced by the result of modern discoveries in chemistry and physics than any other department of human industry. Even the homely art of brick-making has received more attention, and has been more perfected by modern scientific investigators than the art of cooking, although the latter is so intimately connected with the health, happiness and well-being of our land. Man provides the proper kinds and amount of food for his animals. Why should less thought be used in caring for the needs and proper development of his family. To prepare a dish, even of our simplest and most common foods that shall be perfect in appearance, flavor, digestibility and nutriment, requires a most scientific knowledge of the food itself, of the effect of the cooking and the proper combination of the material at hand.

This is the day of arduous vocations for women, and when we relegate to them the work for which they are best fitted, then Wordsworth's words will seem inappropriate:

"Homeless, near a thousand homes I stood,
And near a thousand tables pined and wanted food."

In recent years chemistry has largely increased our knowledge of the materials of which our bodies and our food are composed. How the different ingredients of food serve the purpose of nutrition and how best to adjust the diet to the requirements of human economy. It is difficult to understand sometimes, why the children of the poorer classes, all things being equal, are often healthy and robust, while those of the richer classes are weak and puny. In the article in the "Forum," the author contends that the cheapest food contains the most nutriment for the least money, and the most economical food is that which is the cheapest, and at the same time best adapted to their use. He also holds that relatively too much of the fuel ingredients of food are used and too little of the flesh forming substances which enter into muscle and sinew and are the basis of blood, bone and brain.

Of the inauguration of new work, allow me to speak of two new coffee houses, one at Sparta, Wisconsin, where the brave women bought out a saloon and now serve over the counter a food to build men up, instead of a beverage to send them reeling through the streets. At Newark, New Jersey, the coffee house is growing. In ten months they have given to the needy over 500 meals and are reaching out in works of helpfulness along many lines. New York still leads, but many others are coming into line.

In towns where it is impossible to establish Coffee Houses, the thought may find expression in the Fireman's Coffee Cart, which has now become a moving reality.

REPORT ON COOKERY—By Mrs. Ole Bull, of New York: In Miss Willard's note of November 27, 1891, in which she expressed her desire that a department of this nature should be included in the W. C. T. U., she said: "Beyond a few articles—two or three in the UNION SIGNAL—you need do nothing more this year."

These articles are now ready for publication. The information gathered and given in these articles is that held in common by scientific people regarding nutrition and cookery as related to a mixed diet—meats, grains, fruits and vegetables.

My associate, Miss Shapleigh, is now a fellow at the college settlements in Philadelphia and Chicago, in residence for the year. This is an opportunity for study of this subject that will teach us much as to what is practicable and possible in walks of life other than our own homes.

In the plan of the coming year's work, it may be mentioned that it is proposed to have six or more twenty-minute talks from specialists. These, to be given at Miss Willard's request, in Chicago next June. Among those who speak will be Mrs. Ellen H. Richards of the Institute of Technology, Boston, and Mrs. Mary Hinman Abel, of Ann Arbor, Michigan. Besides these women especially distinguished in this line of work we hope to secure Miss Adams of Hull Home, Miss Talbot of Boston and the University of Chicago, and to have the Aladdin oven exhibited and explained.

Leaflets giving information in compact, scientific form will be prepared. For instance, wheat, its food elements, preparation in flowers, places for purchase that can be recommended, and receipes for the cookery of breads. For the rest, the needs felt and interest awakened must guide largely the direction the work shall take.

On motion all reports not already adopted were adopted.

MISS WILLARD.—May the chair make a personal remark in regard to the resolution which you adopted this morning with reference to the loss of Arthur Grubb? A short time ago the UNION SIGNAL had an article written in tribute to that young man, setting forth his character, his merits and the chivalric purposes which animated him in his action at the time the tragedy occurred. This morning in the hurry I failed to express what I should have liked to, when the resolution was before you. There is a trio of women, Mrs. Hazard, Mrs. Mary F. Shields, now in heaven, and Mrs. Sophia S. Grubb. Those three sisters have been noble in their earnest devotion, and in the advance which they have given to the women movements in the field, and especially that of suffrage. It affords me pleasure to speak of those women and of this young man, and to say that for him to have behaved himself nobly was to have been expected from his origin, and we condole with his mother as we have been condoled with in the sadness that has come to our own homes.

On motion of Mrs. Bigelow, Mrs. Smith was invited to come forward to the platform and exhibit her reform dress costume for the street, which she did.

The following telegrams were read:

Little Delaware sends love and loyal greetings. Read Col. 2 : 5th verse.

To the Temperance Convention now in session.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Association in convention assembled, returns greetings: Read Sam. 17 : 11, Revised Version.

To REV. GEORGE LIEKEN, BUFFALO.

The National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled, return fraternal greetings, and unite hand and heart in striving to bring about complete banishment of the liquor traffic.

MRS. BENJAMIN—Yesterday I gave notice that I would move to reconsider a certain matter; am I in order?

MISS WILLARD—Mrs. Benjamin would be incapable of being out of order.

MRS. BENJAMIN—I move to reconsider the vote by which action was taken concerning the amendment of article three of the constitution adopted yesterday, pertaining to Loyal Legion work.

Moved and seconded that the subject be reconsidered. Carried.

Mrs. Woodbridge read the following amendment offered by Mrs. Benjamin. That article III. of the Constitution be amended by adding to the first sentence the following: "And one adult W. C. T. U. delegate for every one thousand members of each State Loyal Temperance Legion paying $50 into the National Treasury, this delegate to be an active Loyal Temperance Legion worker."

Mrs. Woodbridge explained that the amendment could not be properly placed as voted.

Mrs. Benjamin offered the following amendment, to be known as Sec. 1, Art. III: "Juve-Juvenile organizations known as Loyal Temperance Legion, in any auxiliary State or Territory or District of Columbia, shall be entitled to one voting delegate for every 1,000 members having paid fifty dollars into the National Treasury; said delegate to be a member of the W. C. T. U. and an active worker in the L. T. L."

A lengthy and interesting discussion was held.

MISS ANNA GORDON—We hope that you will adopt the movement as an encouragement to our little temperance workers, and in that way you will bring mothers and children nearer together and not separate them. The Loyal Legion Temperance worker is the child of the W. C. T. U. So much has been said on this subject I wish to say that I have attended many state conventions, and when the children come to those conventions the home comes with them, they do not go alone, and County conventions are made up of a good many of ten and twelve and fourteen years of age. I have not seen any younger than ten or eleven. They go in small bands. Some go in barges as they would to a Sunday school picnic, and a superintendent always accompanies them. They march through the town or city wherever it is held, singing "The Saloon, the Saloon must go." We are simply teaching them how to get a more perfect knowledge, how to carry on the work, and I do hope this amendment will be adopted, for it is only intended as an education and encouragement to the Loyal Temperance Legion.

Mrs. Rice spoke strongly against the reconsideration, and was supported by Mrs. Hadley, Mrs. Elliot and several others. Miss Willard, also calling Mrs. Buell to the chair, strongly advocated the representation of the young people in the Convention, with a view to the future filling up of the ranks of the W. C. T. U. with devoted and earnest and well trained members.

The question on the first amendment was called for and carried.

MRS. WALL—My husband wrote me last night that he did not want me to come home until I had made a speech in the Convention. This is my maiden speech. I am the mother of six children, three grown daughters and three sons, and I want to say that I believe there is nothing that will encourage the children so much as to be allowed to come into this Convention. I have been at the work for many years, and I believe that the step that you have taken to-day will do wonders in encouraging the young people who are coming up to take our places.

The amendment was carried.

Mrs. Brown, of Michigan, offered the following resolution: "As words of praise have been spoken of all the contestants, and testimonials moved, Therefore, Resolved, that we vote to each, from the receipts of last evening, a sum equal to one-half of the expenses to Denver, where the expenses have been paid by themselves." It was moved and carried that the resolution be laid on the table.

The regular order of business of the day was then taken up, and the list of Superintendents, as nominated by the executive committee, read by the Secretary.

The Convention accepted the nominations and the Superintendents were declared elected, as follows:

NATIONAL SUPERINTENDENTS.

[Those marked * are newly appointed.]

Loyal Temperance Legions, Mrs. Helen G. Rice; School Savings Banks, Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer; Department of Mercy, Mrs. Mary F. Lovell; Work Among Foreigners, Mrs. Sophia F. Grubb; Heredity, Dr. Annette J. Shaw; Health, Miss Julia Colman; Sanitary and Economic Cookery, Mrs. Sara C. Bull; Scientific Instruction, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt; Physical Culture, Mrs. Frances W. Leiter; S. S. Work, Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball; Temperance Literature, Mrs. E. H. Rastall; Presenting our cause to Influential Bodies, General Officers Nat. W. C. T. U.. *Relation of Temperance to Labor and Capital, Mrs. S. E. V. Emery; *The Press, Miss Lodie Reed; Narcotics, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls; W. C. T. U. School of Methods, Miss Mary Allen West; Parliamentary Usage, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin; Temperance Kindergartens, Miss Mary E. McDowell; Evangelistic, Mrs. E. W. Greenwood; Work in Penal Institutions, Mrs. Jane M. Kinney; Work in Almshouses, Mrs. S. A. Morrison; Police Station Work, Mrs. Margaret A. Watts, Securing Homes for Homeless Children, Mrs. Margaret T. W. Merrill; Flower Mission, Miss Jennie Casseday; Work among Railroad Employés, Miss Jennie E. Smith; Work among Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. S. A. McClees; Work among Lumbermen, Mrs. Mary C. Upham; Work among Miners, Mrs. Winnie F. English; Purity, Dr. Mary Wood Allen; Purity in Literature and Art, Mrs. Emil D. Martin; Sabbath Observance, Mrs. Josephine C. Bateham; Unfermented Wine, Mrs. E. G. Hibben; Parlor Meetings, Mrs. Anna M. Hammer; State and County Fairs, Mrs. M. C. Campfield; W. C. T. U. Commissioner for the Columbian Exposition, Madam Demorest; Legislation and Petitions, Mrs. Ada M. Bittenbender; Franchise, Dr. Louise C. Purington; Peace and International Arbitration, Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Systematic Giving, Mrs. Esther T. Pritchard.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Railroad Rates, Miss Mary S. Hay, Chairman; On Appropriations; Miss Esther Pugh, Chairman; On W. C. T. U. Restaurants, Mrs. E. A. Russell: On W. C. T. U. Fountains, Mrs. Chas. H. Case; On Missionary Funds, Mrs. Mary Sparks Wheeler.

BOARD OF SUPERINTENDENTS.

President, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt; Secretary, Mrs. Helen Rice.

Mrs. Buell read extracts from a letter from Mrs. Frances E. Russell, chairman of the committee on dress in the National Council of Women, urging the interest of the W. C. T. U. Women in promoting freedom and common sense in dress and asking that the following paper be signed by as many as are willing to give their influence in that direction:

"We whose names are signed below, consent to give our influence in favor of an improvement in woman's dress which will allow her the free and healthful use of the organs of her body when working or taking exercise. In signing this paper no one of us becomes responsible for the suggestions of any one else, nor do we promise to wear or to endorse any particular style of dress. We simply give our influence to help start a strong and healthy movement in favor of freedom and common sense in dress, leaving ourselves free to work for it as seems best for each one. Signed by, Mrs. May W. Sewell, Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Frances E. Willard, Clara Barton, Harriet Stowe, Grace Greenwood, Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher, Elizabeth S. Phelps, and others. The petition was handed to Mrs. Edholm and others who volunteered to secure signatures."

The following letter from Mrs. Barry Lake was read by Mrs. Buell:

MADAM PRESIDENT, OFFICERS AND DELEGATES OF the W. C. T. U.

Dear Sisters—The Catholic Woman's Temperance Union of St. Louis send greeting, and desire to pay their tribute of love, sympathy, helpfulness and appreciation to your Convention by assuring you of their hearty co-operation in every effort to wipe out the curse of intemperance. Though we are somewhat tardy in coming to your assistance, we fully appreciate the difficulties you have overcome, thereby making our labor in the future easier than was your's in the past. While your Convention is deliberating upon the all important issue, seventy-two earnest, loyal-hearted women are praying Heaven, that wisdom, love and harmony may abide with you and guide you to successful results. We pray thus, forgetting all differences, remembering only that we are sisters working in a cause of common interest in the name of a crucified Saviour, and on behalf of an universal Brotherhood.

Yours in Piety, Purity and Sobriety, for Heaven, Home and Country,

The Catholic Woman's Temperance Union,
LENORA M. BARRY LAKE, President.

At the suggestion of Rev. Ada Bowles of Massachusetts, "The Old Oaken Bucket" was sung, and Miss Bowles presented to Miss Willard and Lady Somerset a bottle of water from the Old Oaken Bucket Well. Miss Willard and Lady Henry, at the request of Miss Bowles drank the health of the W. C. T. U.

On motion of Mrs. Reese, it was ordered that a proper response be sent to the letter of Mrs. Barry Lake.

It was moved and carried that the presentation of Banners be made the regular order of business at half past ten o'clock to-morrow morning and the Convention adjourned.

TUESDAY EVENING SESSION.

Meeting conducted by Dr. Anna Shaw.

DR. SHAW—In opening the meeting I wish to explain to the audience the cause of changing the program to-night. There is very important business of the executive committee which should be acted upon immediately and it was found to be impossible for the presidents to be here and somewhere else at the same time. So it was decided that while the W. C. T. U. could not get along without the executive meeting, you could get along without the state presidents. We have invited some of our friends to speak to you to-night, and you will probably hear just as good things as though we had not changed the programme. I was asked to preside at this meeting. I don't know how to preside. I am not a president of anything and never was, so if I make any number of mistakes I will now ask to be excused on that ground. I know only how to run one thing, and that is a church, and I will run it after that fashion.

The Trinity orchestra rendered "Silver Bells Overture." Mrs. Clevenger, corresponding secretary of the state of Ohio, read the scripture, and Mrs. Blair of Nebraska led in prayer. The audience joined in singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

NARCISSA WHITE KINNEY, of Oregon; was then introduced and spoke as follows: I heard a good old Western woman say that all her life long she had been called on to simply fill vacancies; I have no doubt there was a vacancy out West that was waiting for me and so I proceeded to fill it. But while I was lecturing, passing up and down and to and fro, I think in every State in this great Nation, Canada and British Columbia as well, I was constantly called on to fill vacancies. I find we are supposed to confess information on all conceivable subjects. I have frequently been in agricultural societies and been asked to discuss the best method of raising turnips, and like Mark Twain, I generally suggested it was from the tops. I think the greatest difficulty I ever met with, was one time I visited the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Baltimore. I was to deliver a lecture on Pathology. I asked one of the students if there would be any objection to my entering the class and listening to their questions; he said assuredly, no, and escorted me to the door, when to my amazement the Professor of Pathology and Practice who had occupied that position for forty years, and all the students rose to their feet. They escorted me to a seat on the platform and then the professor proceeded to give his lecture on typhoid fever. By the way, in the course of the examination, the students were asked what they would do if they were unable to reduce the temperature of the patient. Mark my astonishment, when one of them said he would give a little acohol. And we all know our grandfathers gave alcohol on a cold day to increase temperature. The Professor said "Yes, there is just one other remedy that will more quickly reduce the temperature." As the discussion went on, every little while he would turn to me and say, "Madam, is not that your experience?" Well I had the typhoid fever once when I was a little girl, and as far as I remembered about it, that was about my experience, and so I bravely nodded my head. They went on and talked about various medicines, and he would refer to me and I would bow my head in encouragement of his belief, but you can understand my surprise when it was all over to discover that all this time I had been sailing under the plumes of that foremost medical woman, the Dean of the Woman's Medical College of Philadelphia. You can get unlimited credit for wisdom if you will just look wise and keep your mouth shut.

Now the National Woman's Temperance Union that has been in session these days before you, has two great Creeds. One is total abstinence for citizens, and, dear ladies, that does not mean merely that you are not to go to a saloon or not to treat your brother man, or not to take the social glass. That means that you are not going to taste intoxicating drinks as a beverage yourself; that you are not going to place it upon your table; that you are not going to offer it to your guests; that you are not going to use it in your kitchens—many of you are hit there, and you are not going to put it on your medicine shelf, excepting when it is brought or prescribed in your home by a skillful physician. I tell you it takes away half your strength and influence with your husbands and brothers when you have a bottle and your husband and your son and your daughter knows that every little case of indisposition you apply to the bottle on your medicine shelf, and so as W. C. T. U. women, this is part of our creed: we have no wine on our medicine shelves. This does not mean that we are going to blot it forever from the medicine shelf. We are trying to educate the physicians on this subject so that they will never prescribe it, but if a skillful physician should in certain critical cases decide that that must be used, I suppose he might use it as he would use strychnine or arsenic, never self-administered.

I want to give you another suggestion I got from this Professor in Baltimore. He asked, "After the fever has left the patient, and he is in a low state, what would you give him in case of sinking?" And some of the students said, "We would give him a little liquor," and he said, "Well, liquor is used as a cordial, that is a stimulant for a weak action of the heart. It may be occasionally used for that, to hurry the action of the heart; but for for forty years I have occupied this chair, and I must say that I advise you to use liquor very sparingly; to lay it on your consciences that in giving that liquor you may be producing a greater disease than the disease from which you are saving your patient. For the forty years I have been in this college, I have constantly had cases of drunkenness before me, and I say with sadness that in all my experience I have never known a single case where a man had been an habitual drunkard, that he ever became thoroughly and radically cured."

Well, we gasped for breath. He said, "I do not say what the Lord may do for any man. I am not dealing with spiritual work. I am dealing with the scientific side of the case, and you know from the case you saw here a few days ago, how that man's blood became changed, how his brain became changed, they never again as long as he lived, returned to their natural condition."

And so we are total abstainers from intoxicating liquors in every form.

Another part of our creed is, we believe in absolute total prohibition. I want to give you a few facts along that line. In 1863 this Nation went into a little business, and the Nation has a proportion, I believe, of about four parts to one in the business. The amount of liquor consumed at that time was two and a half gallons per capita.

Although through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. and the different reform societies, not one-half as many people to day use liquor as there did in 1863 in proportion to the whole population, yet that other part of the population which does use it, has so greatly increased the amount of liquor they use, that to-day they drink what is equal to fifteen and one-half gallons of liquor to every man and woman in the United States. The drunkard is trying to drink up all the breweries and distilleries of this United States. There is another fact that comes to us from our experiments. We have tried low license and no license, and then in the last few years we have had this great high license scheme, until I think that every state north of Mason and Dixon's line at least, has within the last three years a high license law varying from $300 to $1,000, as it is to-day in the city of Minneapolis. The advocates of high license claimed that it would reduce the number of the saloons in the United States. Here are the facts. At the close of 1889, three years ago, there were in the United States, 171,369 retailed liquor houses, but at the close of 1891 this number had increased to 240,794. My friends, at that rate of decrease by high license, just how many million years will it be before we usher in the millennium? And so to-day we stand unqualifiedly upon that platform, no high or low license, nothing but absolute prohibition for the liquor traffic.

But the great question that we meet with sometimes is, "Will you ever succeed?" My friends, the only way that we shall succeed is by every man and woman in this Nation feeling their own personal responsibility on this question. We will never pray out the liquor traffic, though some people think we will. My dear friends, if you want prohibition in this Nation you must get down on your knees and in the depth of your soul cry out to the Lord, "Oh, Lord, with this terrible iniquity in the world, send this man or woman after prohibition," and then get up, roll up your sleeves and go after prohibition, and in an incredibly short time you will have prohibition.

MRS. MARY MCGEE SNELL—Jesus says, in the 18th chapter of St Luke, "Men ought always to pray and not to faint." If it was simply to pray this traffic away, it would have been gone a long time ago, but the trouble is with most of men, that they have been saying, "Thy kingdom come," and then voting in the kingdom of the devil. Down further in the chapter, Jesus goes on to say how activity ought to be united with prayer, and he says: "In a certain city there lived a judge," (we could imagine this was the nineteenth century,) "In a certain city there lived a judge who feared not God, neither regarded man." That represents the political powers that be. They fear not God and do not regard any man, except those who have the power to give them offices. Down in Mississippi we had a judge of this sort. He was afraid of the women who wore the white ribbon.

Jesus in the next verse said that in that same city there lived a widow who went to that judge, saying, "Avenge me of mine adversary," that is what the W. C. T. U. is saying to men. They say "Hold up your prayers a little while and vote for us. I had rather have the vote of a man than his prayer, because I can do my own praying." This Mississippi judge was that sort of a man. He held his court one Monday morning after a two weeks' spree, and when he looked over his docket there happened to be a case in which the Western Union Telegraph Co. was interested, and when this old judge, in his half-drunken state, saw "W. U. T. C." he said, "Oh if I had known I had that case I would have had nothing to do with the W. C. T. U." This woman was evidently a woman of prayer. It takes a good deal of prayer for us to have strength to interview the powers that be. We Southern women have no apology to make for coming out of our homes and interviewing the powers that be. We down in the Southland have a case like this woman that Jesus speaks of, "Avenge us of our adversaries," and to us the adversary means licensed liquor traffic.

A few days ago a lady come to see me who belonged to one of the first families of the South. She had a great deal of pride. Her husband was one of the men who had drifted away far beyond her power to save him. All will power gone, the family brought to destitution, the woman's heart crushed and broken, she said: "Not long ago I sat up all night waiting for him, and when the hours were getting very small in the morning a knock came to the door, and I went to it, and a man said, "I hate to bring to you such tidings as this, but your husband is lying drunk down in the street and his dog is keeping guard, and he won't let us go near his body. Wake your little boy to call the dog up." And she said, "You can imagine my agony when I had to go and call my little boy to go and call the dog off from my drunken husband." That woman had a case.

Even the crushed worm will turn. Those who have grievances everywhere are organizing. The car drivers are organized. Add five minutes to their time without extra pay and you will have a great strike, but the women of this Nation, that had every minute of their time stabbed with the poison of death, they have had their bread and clothing taken from them, the light of their homes put out, and their darlings taken away, and before the organization of the W. C. T. U. they never had a strike against the liquor traffic.

This lady went on to say, "My husband woke up in the morning, and he said, 'I don't know how it happened, wife, I had a letter from a friend of yours, with $15.00 in it, asking you to buy a dress for her, and, before God, Sallie, I don't know what became of that $15.00.'" And she said, "I will have to write a letter to my friend, and make excuses, and tell falsehoods about it, and sit up late nights sewing, to make up that $15.00." Dear friends, we have got a case. Go and look into the penitentiaries of our land. Every man wearing those stripes represents a shadow in somebody's home. Let us stand for our cause, we have God behind us.

The first Convention I ever attended was in the city of Minneapolis, and when I saw one of our Southern women and Miss Lucas of England coming together hand in hand to the front on the platform I said, "What God has put together let no political party put asunder."

At that Convention the resolution was taken by the W. C. T. U., "We will pledge our influence only to that party that puts a prohibition plank into its platform. One of our Southern women stood in front of the platform and she said, "You Northern women have swept out of the Republican party, but the Southern will never come out of the Democratic party. It will remain the old solid Democracy of the South, and you have simply given an opportunity for Democracy to come into power."

I had never made a speech before, but I could not stand that, and that night I said, "It is not true we are sweeping out of the lines; we are leaving the old whisky Democracy of the South, and we will come forward and put our hands into the hands of the women of the North. And to-day it is true that the W. C. T. U. has done for this Nation what Republicanism and what Democracy could never have done. Over a common bridge of sorrows we have come, never again to be separated, never again to have our sons and our brothers stand up and shoot each other, for peace has come to the Nation that has its women united as the women who wear the white ribbon. God be praised for the W. C. T. U., the miracle of the nineteenth century. And so this woman came, and she kept saying, "Avenge me of mine adversary." I expect the woman who lived next door, who gave progressive euchre parties and drank her wine looked out of the window and said, "That woman must be going crazy, she is getting out of her sphere, I would not do it for the world" and then she dressed her baby up in ruffles and tucks and perfumed him with violet extract and took him to the baby show. But let me tell you something, the women who truly attend to the babies of this land are the women who wear the white ribbon. The woman who attends to the home is the woman who knows she has got a case and has got business with the judge. There is nothing like knowing that you have got a case, there is nothing like knowing that you have God behind you, that you have God on your side.

I am not afraid to go into legislative halls or police courts, pressed on by the necessity of our case. We want no high or low licenses. If there are saloons at all let it be without license. We stand here demanding protection for our children. The judge said: "Though I regard not man nor fear God, I am going to give this woman something. She will literally beat me black and blue, she will wear me out." Dear friends, let us wear them out; let us give them Prohibition for supper, and for breakfast and for dinner, and let us have no other cry upon our lips, except "Avenge me of mine adversary."

We have made things very warm in the Southland. We have knocked at the door of the whisky democracy and said, "Avenge me mine adversary," and they have said, "We can't do it, we have too many 'niggers,' it won't do." We say if it comes to the whisky jug or the "nigger," we will take the nigger every time. But be ye sure of this and send it as far as you like from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the women who wear the white ribbon in the Southland are not Democrats. They say, "God sink the old party." They have tried to keep us out, have bargained for a little bit of local option and threw it at us and we have gobbled it. Then they have thrown out some five-mile laws. We stood there and said, "Avenge us of our adversaries." Then they knocked down the screens of every saloon. Down in Mississippi if a man takes a drink he has got to do it with women looking at him. Then they said, "No minors shall drink here." But we want absolute Prohibition, and the bosses of the Democratic party are whisky men and control the party. While the saloon men are holding caucuses, while ministers and school teachers and deacons, are sitting in their dressing gowns and slippers, when election day comes they put their shoulders with the whisky bosses and they vote the whisky ticket. But we have kept right at, "Avenge me of mine adversary."

I am glad of anything that breaks the solid Democracy of the South, it means breaking up the whisky power. I say "Down with the Democracy every time;" but I am not one of your Republicans up here either, I would rather be a Democrat any time.

Down in Birmingham, Alabama, I saw ten thousand farmers, hitherto solid Democrats, but who are now breaking loose from the solid whisky Democracy of the South, and it was a good sign. General Weaver talked to them, and I didn't like his politics. He said to those men, "Where is your money going?" and he answered, "Into the National Banks." I felt like saying, "Not true, it is going into the saloons," and I wish I could have said, "Dear me, why don't you come and do the clean thing all at once, and vote for Bidwell and Cranfill."

Dear friends, if you are persistent, we can bring the political power on our side. If a great iron bar was hung from that ceiling down to us, we would not be able to move it with our arms, but the law of physical science says: "Pelt that bar, with pith balls made of paper, continuously and rapidly, until the motion is imparted to every particle of the bar, and by and by it will begin to swing."

This great bar of liquor traffic, the women of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast are bolting it with pith balls of prayer, and it is moving, moving, moving. I know that my hopes that burn like the stars, sublime, may go down with brave hearts, but we will never stop, we will work, pushing on to the promised land of success.

DR. ANNA SHAW—There was no admission fee asked for this evening, because we wanted everybody to come, but we are going to give you an opportunity of contributing, and we want you to make your contributions double what they usually have been. I was told I should make a collection speech! I don't know but one collection speech. I must tell it to you now. A boy swallowed a quarter of a dollar, and his mother sent for a surgeon to extract it from his throat, and when the surgeon arrived to extract it, he said, "The case is a serious one, I can not extract it! You had better send for a minister immediately," and she said, "O, doctor, the Methodist minister lives right around the corner, shall I send for him?" The doctor said, "Yes, by all means, if there is a Methodist minister around the corner, send for him. I know of no one on earth that can draw that half dollar out of that boy's throat but a Methodist preacher; and I want a half dollar from each one of you for this collection, I must keep up my reputation. Esther Pugh says, "I am the best woman in the Convention, because I bring her more money than anybody else." Esther Pugh estimates our goodness by the amount of money we bring her.

The next number was a recitation by Miss Eva Shuntz, of Centerville, Iowa, entitled "Old Soapy." It was so charmingly rendered that an encore was called for and Miss Shuntz recited James Whitcomb Riley's story, "The Goblins will Git Ye."

Katherine Lente Stevenson of Massachusetts, spoke as follows: And what shall she say who cometh after the queen. I misunderstood entirely the purpose of this meeting tonight; when this afternoon our President asked me to speak, I supposed it was to represent our States. There is nothing I am more fond of, than of talking about Massachusetts. I always discovered upon speaking on the platform, there is one subject more I love to talk about, and that is, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. I want to talk very briefly in the few minutes which are mine upon some few things I think the W. C. T. U. has done for women. I think I was born a woman lover; I never can remember a time in my life when the things of my sisterhood did not interest me more forcibly than anything in this universe. I want to speak first of the opportunity it has given women for the working of all the latent powers; what it has made possible for her to do. I might speak of the Union which it has brought about, how it has made us one in the great cause; I am going to speak only just upon one thing, which above everything else arouses my heart, and that is, that the W. C. T. T. has more than anything else in this world, made us in the truest sense of the term, women. We must make the most of our time and ask God to light and guide us.

Solo, "The White Ribbon," by Ruth Warren.

Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama, addressed the meeting as follows: Friends, of all the kindness that they have administered to you during these sessions, of all the sympathy that has been extended to you during these days, of all the friendliness that has been shown you, I believe your fireside is the best place for you to be. Instead of asking you to sing, "We won't go home till morning" I now ask you to rise and receive the benediction. (Applause).

DR. SHAW—There are two or three announcements to be given, but I think Miss Griffin ought to have given you a little more than that.

A DELEGATE—Several ladies have expressed themselves as exceedingly disappointed and greatly wish Miss Griffin would speak longer.

MISS GRIFFIN—Now it is your own fault if you don't go home till morning, I did not know exactly what to say, and my friend behind me told me, "Tell what you told in Louisiana." We were most pleasantly entertained in one of the Mississippi Valley States, at the State Convention, but there were there, as there are in all large towns, though we have not found it in Denver—though still he may be crouching somewhere, waiting for us to find him to-morrow—there was a man who did not believe in a W. C. T. U., and I by accident, was invited by his admirable wife to dinner. I think the man did not know it. He had no suspicion of what was going to take his appetite away from him, when he returned at noon. But he came in at noon, and the instant he discovered the white ribbon, he did as a peculiar Southerner does down at the lower coast of Florida. If you go down there you, you will see a fisherman go out with a little fishing net; and there will be many things caught into the net, though not all fish. When you go out on the sand, the fisherman's lad will say, "Do you see that little thing that looks like a sponge? And you look and watch and soon it becomes larger and larger, and now you watch what I do with him; I stroke him a few strokes on the back, and the little thing begins to swell, and swell and swell into a great big frog." I said, "What do you think made him do that?" And the little boy looked up and said, "Why, to keep his enemies from swallowing him." That is what that man down in Louisiana had done at dinner-time. You know he thought that women must only influence; that they must not be heard nor seen often, unless they are good-looking, and that they must be only given to influencing.

Now I will give you a little specimen of the sort of influencing I do at home, if you will pardon me for the personality. In my home their are four educated women; we are interested in all the things that concern our village. My sisters are widows, and I am an old maid. My father has long been dead; my brother has died, and there is not a man on the face of the earth to represent us, and yet we are concerned in all the law and order and morality that ought to take place in our village. We are not entirely without the power of influencing, because in my home there is a flat-headed negro boy, about twenty-two years old; when he came to us, he said he had been in school ten years, and he was in the first pages of the second reader, but when he remembered seeing the White House with the comfortable chair in it, and if there is a job of work that a negro likes upon the face of the earth it is a job with a great deal of sitting down in it; and when he saw it was possible for him, he went out on to the back lawn, under the trees, on a summer afternoon, and turned over another page in the second reader; but on election days he goes over and does the voting for the family. Now you ask where my influence ought to come in; I would say to my Moses, "How are you going to vote to-day?" and he answers, "I don't know, ma'am; I ain't seen Uncle Peter yet." Uncle Peter is the colored minister of the village. Uncle Peter's influencing beats mine all to pieces. I still stand not represented, except when Moses does the voting for the family. I am not alone, hundreds of women in my section are reduced to that extremity, keeping darkies for that purpose only. Now, friends, you look very tired; a while ago I thought you surely would be half way home by this time.

These circumstances amuse you, it is because you have not had the reality. The politics of the day in my section hinges almost entirely upon the darkey. It is pitiful, but it is true, and "pity 'tis, 'tis true." When I am up here with my best face upon it, with my Sunday looks and doing all I can to please and interest my Northern sisters, I speak with some pathos and sentiment about the soft Southern breezes falling in gently from the Mexican gulf, laden with health and fruitfullness and perfuming the air with orange blossoms—the whole thing one beautiful round of fruit and flowers, and then I expect the sister to ask me something about my section of men or women, something that is touching our interest there, in which I am accustomed to speak, and she looks with looks of tenderness and a gentle voice, and a little turn of the head, and says: "Is it true that the darkey can take care of himself?" And I answer, "He cannot only take care of himself, but he runs the government."

DR. SHAW—When Miss Griffin was telling us of her Southern experiences, I thought it was something like Denver. When we came here we heard they only had one stormy day in the year. We are certainly grateful to you friends for coming out this stormy Denver day, especially because you are not accustomed to storm, and hope that you will not suffer for it. We will now rise and be dismissed with the benediction by Dr. Whitney, of Washington.

The meeting adjourned.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The Convention met at 9 o'clock, Nov. 2, Mrs. Buell in the chair.

Mrs. Hitchcock took charge of the devotional exercises and after the singing of the hymn, "Let us anew our Journey Pursue," read the ninety-first psalm and lead the meeting in prayer.

The minutes of yesterday afternoon were read and adopted, also the report of the Executive Committee of two meetings of yesterday.

A motion was made that the action regarding the Convention being held in Chicago next May, be reconsidered. The motion was carried and on further motion the matter was left to the general officers, with three other ladies with whom they can consult, the three other ladies to be appointed by the National President.

Mrs. Fessenden moved that after this year we hold no more Plan of Work committees. Motion seconded.

It was explained, that the object of this action is to simplify the work of the Convention and to bring the Plan of Work immediately before the Convention without complicating the labors of its members.

The question was put to the house and carried by a two-thirds vote, which is necessary in order to change a by-law.

MISS WILLARD—But the Plan of Work is not done away with, it is in full force. We have only done away with an unnecessary complication.

Mrs. Forbes offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That is the desire and request of this National Convention, that just as soon as practicable a daily noon prayer meeting be established at National headquarters in Chicago, which shall be for the inspiration and help of those connected with our work at headquarters."

The same was adopted.

MRS. MONROE—Report under the head of miscellaneous business.

MRS. HOFFMAN—Then read a report of Sunday services, and offered a resolution regarding collections.

On motion, Mrs. Monroe's report was adopted.

MRS. HAMMER—I cannot be here this evening, and I wish to give my report in the place of Mrs. Lovell.

MISS WILLARD—By consent, Mrs. Hammer will read her report in the time devoted to Mrs. Lovell's report, and Mrs. Lovell's report will be heard another time.

JENNIE SMITH—Report on railroad work:

Now ladies, I come to you for the last time. For twelve years I have been going up and down this land, and if ever a mortal has wished they could have a hundred bodies to use, I have. And now I wish there could be more organizations from one portion of the land to the other, for they are calling for it. It is an utter impossibility for any woman to do this work, both the machinery part and the evangelistic part. While I am not after the prestige in any instance as an evangelist, I am willing to do anything, anywhere, so more work may be accomplished. When one said to me, "You lose your prestige here," I thought, It don't matter to me what kind of prestige we have. I want the power of the Holy Ghost to reach souls, and in the request for the circular letter to be printed, I had an eye single to the glory of God and salvation of souls, and we need your prayers. And now dear sisters, one thing I want to impress here. We railroad workers learn to know the value of the minute; there is no woman but what would occupy the time you have given you. I now want to read the circular letter. Every railroad man in the United States may have one of these if it meets your approval.

Now may God bless every one of you women; not a single one but what may help. And friends, as I step out of the old place, may God bless my successor and give to her and each one of us evangelistic workers more power. I want your prayers and your cooperation. I have tried to advance the cause of Christ, and God helping me I hope the remainder of my life may be more devoted than ever.

MRS. BENJAMIN—I move that this letter be accepted and endorsed by this Convention by a rising vote.

THE CHAIR—It is carried unanimously.

MISS SMITH—And then, ladies, I wish I could say that it should be gratuitous, but you will have to help to get the letter out. I have eleven dollars towards it. I am satisfied that twenty-five thousand will not meet the demand. We ought to have at least fifty thousand.

MRS. HOFFMAN—I think if we publish that letter at all, we should have a hundred thousand, and I would ask that they be placed where they may be obtained. I could circulate this letter. I travel all the time. I would gladly put in the hands of railroad employes, and I would gladly help pay for it.

MRS. REID—Why couldn't that letter be made a tract of the department? I would like to carry it with me and give it to the employes, at whose hands I receive kindness all the time.

MISS GUERNSEY—As editor of that department of the W. T. P. A., I would like to get out an open letter in a pretty leaflet form, as a part of our department. On motion a collection was taken.

MISS SMITH—This great work will reach so many; for instance, those that are away from the great masses. We find wonderful work can be accomplished by remembering those flagmen, those that are away on our mountain sides, and by remembering the Christmas boxes. A good many have spoken to me about that. I have got into many of their hearts by remembering the children. And another thing that comes right in here, in sending out your literature, be sure to advise the people not to send their old school books. I had one box of literature come to me, and there was but two pieces I could use. School books I could not make use of.

MISS WILLARD.—Especially arithmetics.

MISS PUGH.—There is one other class I want to remember in distributing this letter, and that is women telegraphers, especially those employed on block systems. I want to tell you what they do, and more lives depend on the fidelity of those women that sit up there in little birdcages all alone, than you can imagine. Those women work twelve hours a day and seven days in a week, and the whole responsibility rests upon them, though they get only fifty dollars a month, for seven days in the week. There are women who stay there night after night, and women on the day force, and you cannot imagine the lonely life they live, I want they should be remembered.

DR. SHAW.—Do we understand that this is to be a letter sent out, prepared in the form of a letter, or in the form of a tract? I am opposed to tracts. When a tract is spoken of my back immediately comes up.

MISS WILLARD—The National does not issue tracts. They are all leaflets or open tracts.

On motion a vote of thanks was given Miss Jennie Smith for her fourteen years of faithful work as superintendent of the railroad department.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE—Among the things which I am thankful for in the leading of my Heavenly Father, is the knowledge that I was the first one to lay hands on Jennie Smith.

MISS SMITH—She was the one that taught me before I could walk.

After singing the doxology a prayer was offered by Miss Smith.

MRS. ELLIS—As we were coming along on the special train from the east, as we passed these block stations, the signal stations, the men came out, knowing that Miss Smith was on board, and gave the salute to her. I want to remind you sisters of the little homes up on the mountain sides, that a few toys and books are always welcome in these homes.

MRS. FOOTE—I wish while we are remembering these brothers, that the street car men might be remembered also, and that we might enter a protest against the long hours that these men work.

MISS WILLARD—The street car conductors and drivers are included in Jennie Smith's report.

MRS. WOODBRIDGE—Miss Smith requests me to say that her books are for sale below. They will give you all of her history, and I know it will do you good to read them, and their sale will be a help to her.

MRS. WOODWORTH—Madam President and Sister Jennie. The R. R. department in this Convention, only a few representing the great number at their homes, desire to express their great appreciation and regard for Miss Jennie Smith, by a small token, a beautiful Crusade souvenir spoon. In doing this we want it understood that each and every one of us regard Miss Jennie Smith as the one who, from the very beginning of this department, has been always its sole inspiration. From her we have learned to walk, and have gained the spirit that is necessary for appreciation of these men. We know it is not within the bounds of possibility that the prestige of Jennie Smith can be lost among railroad men. We know that her name will shine as the stars, more and more, not only among railroad men, but among Christian workers everywhere. The policy of this department from this time hence, will not be what it has been. Sister Jennie shall not cross the continent in her long journeys hereafter, with a mere invitation and the promise of a Convention. The Lord won't send the ravens to feed Sister Jennie, while He has all you women to depend on, and we are going to see that she is remunerated in good solid cash by the women of our Nation, just as you remunerate other workers whom you call.

MISS SMITH.—The Lord bless you, dear ones, who have given the souvenir. It will be a precious token of this hour.

By consent, a fraternal delegate spoke of her labors amongst the locomotive engineers and other labor organizations in collecting funds for this work, and said that she found them very liberal; no organization gave less than $10.00, and all consented that her collection box should be hung upon the wall.

On motion of Mrs. Forbes, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes was nominated and elected general secretary of the young women's branch.

The chair announced that she would appoint as the additional three ladies to act with the general officers with reference to the meeting in Chicago next May, Mrs. Rounds of Illinois, Mrs. Hoffman of Michigan, and Mrs. Burt of New York. She also announced that the convention would probably begin on Monday, the 22d of May, and last a week.

On motion of Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. Clara Parish, of Illinois, was appointed National organizer to work with Mrs. Barnes in her department.

The order of the day being called for, the presentation of banners was then proceeded with.

Miss Pugh read the report of the committee on presentation, with the recommendation of the committee that hereafter the banners be awarded to the six states having the greatest percentage of increase, without regard to geographical location; and further, that no State or Territory be allowed to compete which does not have at least five hundred members. Report adopted.

MISS PUGH—In the New England group, Maine has the largest percentage of increase. Sister Stevens got the banner last year and takes it again; in the Middle States, New York receives the banner; in the Southern States, North Carolina; in the South-west States, Texas; in the Middle-west, Indiana; in the Western States, New Mexico.

The delegates representing states taking the banners came forward to the stage by invitation and also the delegation from Indian Territory.

Mrs. Stevens received the banner, and stated that she expects to carry it back next year and to be able to insure the Convention then as now, that the prohibition flag in Maine is all right.

Mrs. Woody received the banner on behalf of the W. C. T. U. women of North Carolina and anticipated the pleasure of those women who, she states, are as true as steel, every one of them carved out of the solid granite of conservatism, and to be depended upon. Miss Pugh stated that the percentage of gain in North Carolina was eighty-three, very nearly double.

In receiving the banner for New York, Mrs. Burt attributed the large gain made in that state to several causes, all of which the W. C. T. U. was behind. Among these was the work done in legislative lines, in sending out petitions against the employment of women and girls as bar maids; also, petitions sent out asking for the closing of the Columbian Exposition on the Sabbath, securing legislation in that direction, also from protests sent out against the infamous bill offered by the liquor dealers' association, and against the bill drawn up and offered to license the social evil.

The banner received by New Mexico was handed to Mrs. Borden, who received it in the name of the W. C. T. U. of her Territory. In receiving it she stated that she could not promise for the women to be very conservative, as they are not hewn out of conservative granite in New Mexico, and that they proposed to wage an uncompromising war against the liquor traffic, here, now and all the time.

The newly elected President of Indiana, Mrs. Beck, took the banner for that State. She expressed great surprise at receiving it, though very hard work has been done in her State this year. That it was received, she attributes to the good system of organization in vogue in that State.

The banner awarded to Texas was received by Mrs. Stoddard, who called attention to the magnificent distances necessary to be traversed in her State in order to accomplish the work.

The chair announced that Jennie Smith's collection amounted to forty-eight dollars, and that the chair being in favor of round numbers, had proposed to make it fifty dollars, but Lady Henry said, "No you won't, I will make it fifty myself."

Mrs. Hunt presented two beautiful banners offered on behalf of the Educational Department, the first to the State that would get the largest number of local Superintendents of scientific instruction, and the banner belonging to this class was received by Mrs. Burt in the absence of Mrs. Lottie Davis. It was stated that New York had made a gain of fifty-three local Superintendents of scientific instruction during the past year, that New Jersey, that small State, has a gain of thirty-three Superintendents, and reaily deserves the banner.

The second banner offered by the Educational Department, is given to the State where there has been the greatest gain in putting out the old books that teach moderate drinking and putting in books that teach God's law of total abstinence.

Mrs. Hunt stated that the gain along this line has been very great. New York has done this work in one hundred towns; Pennsylvania, in over one hundred towns; and that Missouri rather takes the lead.

Miss Lillian Wood, who, as Mrs. Hoffman stated, has done the most to win this banner, received it and gave an outline of the work which has been done in that department.

MRS. RICE—We have utterly refused to ask the time of this Convention to present our two banners, but I will now present them, on behalf of the Loyal Temperance Legion. I present them to Idaho and Indiana. The banners were received, and on behalf of Indiana, by Miss Lodi Reed.

A number of views of Colorado scenery, with pressed flowers gathered from the Rocky Mountains, were presented to Lady Henry Somerset, by Mrs. Spaulding, who responded with pleasant words of thanks.

Mrs. Stapler was introduced to the Convention, and it was stated that she was the daughter of a Cherokee chief who was driven out of Georgia years and years ago, but is now one of the strongest leaders in temperance work.

Mrs. Fuller presented a report on the aborigines of America, which will be submitted to the executive committee for further action.

A resolution on this subject was referred to the committee on resolutions for their action.

The chair announced that Mrs. Washington's book of poems, by request of that lady, is to be presented to each one of the contestants for the Demorest prize.

Hymn. "O Could I Speak the Matchless Worth."

The Bible reading was conducted by Miss Greenwood, who led in prayer, followed by Mrs. Carse and Lady Henry Somerset. A number gave brief personal testimonies.

"Praise the Lord, Oh, My Soul," was then sung. A message of greeting was read from Mrs. Denman, of New Jersey.

Prayer was offered by Mrs. Hammer, and after singing the doxology, the benediction was pronounced by Miss Greenwood.

The Convention adjourned until 2 p. m. Wednesday.

The remaining proceedings of this Convention, including Wednesday afternoon and evening, and also many other interesting features of the various sessions, among which is the annual sermon of Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, will all appear in the regular Convention number of the UNION SIGNAL.

Mrs. Bertha Morris Smith appeared before the Convention, attired in an artistic and sensible street gown, designed by herself. Who knows but that the women will all appear in such garb at the next National? A cut of this dress, with several others, will appear in Mrs. Smith's new leaflet.

An Inter-State W. C. T. U. Press Association was organized on Tuesday, with Miss Lodie Reed of (Indiana) Organizer, as President; Miss Clara Stephens of Iowa Signal, Secretary; Mrs. Parrish of Michigan Union, Treasurer. The object is to advance the interests and influence of State W. C. T. U. journalism.

There was an ovation last night in the evening session for two of the Southern delegation, Mrs. M. M. Snell, national evangelist, making a brilliant address, and Miss Frances E. Griffin, who recommended the benediction instead of a speech, but her hearers would have her genial flashes of wit in a brief address.

The Sunday services in the various churches, conducted by the W. C. T. U. delegates, are said to have made a most favorable impression in the community. Great good is expected from the powerful appeals for Prohibition and for present interest in the various departments of work, as they were listened to with greatest attention.

Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president of Texas, carried off the banner for largest per cent of increase in membership the past year—72 per cent. Mrs. Stoddard has traveled 14,050 miles in the past year in organizing, made 186 addresses and has just received a telegram from San Antonio saying, "230 women are waiting here to be organized into a W. C. T. U."

There have been in attendance at the conference of Juvenile department, the National Supt. Mrs. Helen G. Rice; Associate Supt. Miss Anna Gordon; the National organizers and chalk-talkers, Mrs. Ellen A. Blair of Nebraska, and Mrs. Maude L. Greene of Colorado; also the State superintendents of Colorado, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Idaho, Illinois, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Texas, Washington (West), Wisconsin.

Said a Denver man, after listening to the bright, pithy impromptu address of Miss Frances E. Griffin, of Alabama, delivered during one of the earliest overflow meetings, "That is the only genuine female humorist I ever heard." Every one present at last night's meeting will re-echo this remark. Throughout the session, Miss Griffin has proven herself the personification of good nature and wittiness, supplying just the amount of spice required to season the intellectual feast, "to the Queen's taste."

The following National organizers were elected at the meeting of the Executive Committee Tuesday night: Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, superintendent; Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. L. H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.; Miss Frances E. Griffin, Montgomery, Ala.; Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y.; Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Seattle, Wash.; Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, San Francisco, Cal.; Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Colo.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Mrs. Della H. Cox, Newberg, Oregon; Mrs. E. A. Blair, Creighton, Neb.; Mrs. Maud L. Green, Manitou Springs, Colorado; Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Le Roy, Mich.; Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper, Philadelphia; Mrs. Skelton.

Clifford J. Thorne, the young contestant for the Diamond Medal on last Monday evening. is from Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. His father is a prominent Methodist minister of that state. The Iowa delegates are exceedingly proud of their boy and voiced the sentiments of a large proportion of the audience, in their continual applause, as to his right to the prize. The boy attracts eyeryone by his gentle winning manners and sweet face. He takes his defeat with good grace. It seems quite a coincidence that he and the fair young girl from Georgia, who won the medal, should both be guests of Mrs. Judge Belford. The unselfish expression of all the contestants toward the winner, constitutes, perhaps, the most pleasant feature of the occasion to those who heard them.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR

Weekly Union Signal

FOR YOUR FRIENDS

AT

Headquarters

IN THE

LECTURE ROOM,

Trinity M. E. Church.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, November 3, 1892. Number 44

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The King and Queen of Greece celebrated their silver wedding the past week.

The National Commission does not forbid liquor at the Fair, but provides that it be sold only at restaurant tables and with meals.

The Norwegians of Chicago celebrated Lief Erickson's Day October 27. They claim he discovered America four hundred years before Columbus.

The earthly remains of Mrs. Harrison were laid to rest October 28, in Crown Hill Cemetery, Indianapolis. The President returned to Washington the following day.

High winds have been prevalent during the past week, and many disasters at sea and on the Great Lakes are reported, steamers having been wrecked, lives lost, and vessels seriously damaged.

The twentieth annual state convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Illinois was held in Bloomington October 26–30, and the outlook for the coming year is full of encouragement.

The daily press states that applications have been filed for the privilege of having a series of bull-fights at Jackson Park during the World's Fair, somewhat less inhuman, it is claimed, than those in Spain and Mexico, but, nevertheless, real enough to be a source of untold moral degradation. If the statements are true, the National Commission has another opportunity of showing its colors by an unqualified refusal to the applications.

On October 28, in Milwaukee at 5:45 p. m., while the wind was blowing a gale that swept over the country at the rate of fifty miles an hour, fire broke out in the Union Oil Company's warehouse, and wind and fire worked together, until in a few short hours millions of dollars' worth of property was destroyed, and thousands of people rendered homeless and penniless. The number of lives lost is small compared with the extent of the fire and the terrible risks. The sad event calls to mind Chicago's experience two decades ago, and it is already being demonstrated that human hearts are as quick to respond to the cry of need to-day as then—and this need is overwhelmingly great.

AMONG the prominent delegates to the National Convention at Denver perhaps none received a more reverential acknowledgment than "Mother Stewart," who possesses a vigor that outranks that of youth—the vigor of old age, the strength that remains notwithstanding the long campaign on life's battlefield. God bless the grand army of the Crusaders!

MISS EMMA C. SICKLES, manager of the Indian department in the World's Fair Auxiliary, speaks gravely of the consequences that may follow the non-recognition of this race in the dedicatory exercises or at the inaugural ceremonies just passed. She is devoting all her earnest energies that the Indian may receive deserved recognition at this world celebration.

MONDAY, October 31, was the 375th anniversary of the day when Martin Luther made public his ninety-five theses—the initial movement of the great reformation. An impressive ceremony commemorated the event, being held in the famous church on whose door the theses were posted, and which has been restored as a lasting reminder to the world of the great reformer and his work.

AT the last day's session of the board of lady managers of the World's Columbian Exposition, in connection with motions that were before the house in reference to making the Woman's Building permanent, Mrs. Potter Palmer stated that a woman's memorial building will be erected and presented to the city of Chicago by the various women's clubs of the country, the land to be a gift from one of Chicago's citizens.

THE International Council of Women, in coöperation with the World's Congress Auxiliary and the Woman's Branch of the same, is preparing for a World's Congress of women in May. Its sessions will extend over a week, one of which will be a vast gathering in a huge auditorium, and five smaller ones in the Art Palace in Chicago. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is an active part of this council and it is desired that our speakers should continually make mention that this World's Congress will be held during the Exposition. It is designed to be the most representative body of women the world has yet known.

THE key-note of the Crusade and of its organized form, the White Ribbon movement, is prayer. "But what do you expect to do through prayer to move the arm of the Omnipotent?" is the world's incessant question. We might illustrate our reply by saying that cholera comes in accordance with a law of nature, inexorable and exact, but we interfere with it by the higher law that we learn by studying its origin, its course and its remedy. We come down with that higher law that we have found upon the lower law of contagion and it is displaced. So the evils of the world are here and they seem inexorable, but there is, as all the ages have proved by a consensus of unnumbered witnesses, a higher law which comes down upon the circumstances of life and changes them as to their effect on human lives—this higher law is prayer, which, if it does not change the relation of the outward, changes our inward relation to that which is around us, so that instead of being victims we become masters. There is no law more exact than this:—"Prayer will cause a man to cease from sinning, even as sin will cause a man to cease from prayer."

IN a recent number of the Independent, L. G. Powers, commissioner of labor statistics for Minnesota, has an article, "The Home vs. The Saloon," in which he gives statistical consideration to their relative increase in a given time. "The Home and not the Saloon," says the writer, "is the warcry of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and indirectly, of all others in the modern world who are fighting for temperance. . . . At every lull of the conflict men ask the question, Which way turns the battle?" Mr. Powers has gathered up facts to answer this question that tend to a brighter view of the situation than is often taken. He begins by laying a broad foundation for his argument in the following statement: "The saloon and the home are alike profiting at present by the wonderful development of human resources. . . . The human power of earning and spending money has been increased to an unprecedented extent. . . . The saloon makes large gains over its former estate, but so does the home. In estimating their comparative gains we must ever bear this fact in mind." The article then goes into minutiæ that are, to say the least, of great interest. We give a few of the bare facts as stated: National wealth per capita in 1851, $308; national wealth per capita in 1890, $1,000; consumption of alcoholics per capita in 1850, 5.5 gallons; consumption of alcoholics per capita in 1890, 15.53 gallons, showing percentage of gain for drink to be 180, ability to purchase drink, 225. By close computation Mr. Powers shows that in a given number of years an average family on a farm has increased its supply of food to an amount that would cost $15, while the corresponding increase of drink would cost at brewery or distillery only $13.75. The consumption of beer (national) in twenty-five years has advanced 186 per cent, which is only one-sixteenth of the gain in the national consumption of bananas alone. "Important fruits and nuts have grown in popular favor twice as rapidly as any of the pets of the grog-shop." Relative increase of expenditures for articles of clothing, books, musical instruments, jewelry, are all shown to be greater than that of the waste for drink. Concerning travel and carriage of freight these figures are given: Increase in consumption of all intoxicants in a fixed period, 22 per cent; that of beer alone, 36; passenger traffic, 32; freight, 46. "The general business of the land, as measured by the movement of freight, grew 25 per cent more than the beer traffic." Such facts as above quoted furnish food for profitable thought.

THE thoughts of the W. C. T. U. world are centered on Denver, where the great army of workers is assembled in the nineteenth annual Convention. Trinity M. E. church was chosen for the rallying place, and there Miss Willard was tendered her "welcome home" from thousands of loyal hearts. She delivered her annual address on Friday, October 28, this being the principal feature of the program for the first day. In the evening Governor Routt, in behalf of the state, Mayor Rogers and Judge Elbert, in behalf of the city, Mrs. Eva Higgins in behalf of the state W. C. T. U. and Mrs. M. A. Cassell, in behalf of the Denver union, royally welcomed the Convention. That eloquent and fitting words of response were spoken is assured when we know that the speakers were: Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Mary H. Jones, Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds. On Saturday morning was held the tender in memoriam service. Madam Willard, Miss Julia A. Ames, Mrs. Caroline Brown, the revered mother of Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, James A. Gordon, whose rarely beautiful character helped to make "Home, Sweet Home" for Anna and Bessie Gordon, and John G. Whittier, well called the Woman's Poet Laureate, were those remembered. Sunday was, for the greater part, "woman's day" throughout the city, as some thirty-five pastors offered their pulpits to white-ribbon delegates. Mrs. Mary McGee Snell, of Mississippi, delivered the annual sermon in Trinity church, choosing for her theme, the Queen of Sheba's visit to King Solomon (I Kings 10) drawing strong and beautiful comparisons between the visit of the woman who went to prove King Solomon "with hard questions" and the communion of the saints with Christ.

OUR American homes were enriched by the life and character of Caroline Scott Harrison, wife of the President. She was a mother-hearted woman, winsome and kind, skilled in all the refined household arts, a devoted wife and sympathetic friend. Born into the home of a Presbyterian minister, she early became a Christian and sincerely strove to build her life upon the principles of Christ's golden rule. Her husband's record as general, senator and president kept her always in the glare of public life, and it is no small indication of the hidings of her power, that she was at last as at first, a pure, unassuming, helpful-handed woman. She had remarkable artistic talents, as all her friends know, and only the practical duties of such a home life as hers prevented the acquisition of artistic fame. Mrs. Harrison's daughter, Mrs. McKee, is the best and loveliest result of her mother's character and training—a lovely woman, universally admired and beloved; her father's delight and solace in the heavy cares of state. It is to be greatly wondered at that the press reports have had so little uplift in them for the thoughtful reader. If there were no immortality, if pagans had penned the final lines they could not have been more materialistic. A bright and beautiful spirit that loved and trusted God has winged its holy flight to heaven, and not by word or intimation are we helped to follow the vanished soul in its transcendent journey. Of the earth, earthy, are all the commentaries we have seen in the current daily press. Some day it will not be so. Some day the parting soul in its high coronation will be more thought about than the chrysalis that it has dropped; the clothes from which it has stepped free; the dust it has escaped. Journalism has a great winged hope with which to fill the people's heart; a heaven to help bring near. Less prize fight reporting, fewer details of murder, more "sweetness and light" are what a Christian civilization has the right to hope for, in some better day that we must help to hasten.

COLUMBIA, 1492—1892.
October 21st.

BY LUCY H. WASHINGTON.

Four rounded centuries have rolled
  Upon Time's ceaseless flood,
Since hero brave and seaman bold,
  Led by a thought from God,
Sailed out upon the boundless main
  Across a trackless sea,
And first beheld our favored land,
  The Home of Liberty.

To-day a nation wondrous fair
  Is basking 'neath the sun;
In scarlet, gold and purple rare,
  Her robes she hath put on
To celebrate in rich estate,
  With heart and form aglow,
The landing of that hero great
  Four hundred years ago.

When 'merging from the billows high,
  The welcome shore appeared,
With shouts that echoed from the sky,
  Those toilworn seamen cheered;
Could anthems backward roll to-day,
  The corridors of Time
Would ring with praises, all the way
  In tribute mute, sublime.

But ah! the dead may never hear
  The praises that we sing;
The pulseless heart receives no cheer
  From offerings we bring;
Though bronze, or marble mountain high
  We rear above the breast,
It wakens neither smile nor sigh
  From those laid low in rest.

Our cities grand they may not see—
  Our garden land abloom;—
Awakes our finest pageantry
  No echo from the tomb.
Then lower banners at half-mast,
  Once on the march to-day,
In honor of the heroes past
  In silence laid away.

Then, while the gathered hosts rejoice,
  Rallied from sea to sea—
When martial band and thrilling voice
  Swell triumphs of the free,
With hearts subdued, in gratitude
  Let us adore the Giver,
Who led Columbus o'er the flood
  And watches o'er us ever.

Then hail! to fair Columbia—
  Her heroes passed away;
And hail! to our Columbia
  With heroes of to-day.
By truest, noblest living, may
  Her sons and daughters show
Best honor to her natal day
  Four hundreds years ago.

Port Jervis, N. J.

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH.*

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

CHAPTER XII.

"Your bones are never going to be like peppermint stick, the way Dorcas'es and Daniel's were, you know," said Dr. Martha from her post in the apple tree, as Johnny swarmed up another near it in pursuit of a particularly desirable Redstreak, and dropping from a low limb was at her side in a twinkling. "Isn't it nice to bend all up double and every way and know you won't break or crack anywhere?"

"You bet!" returned Johnny, his teeth meeting in the reddest side of his apple and holding out one even redder to his companion, on whom his eyes had settled with calm content. "Miss Prissy says it's the oil, and I say it's everything all at once."

"Oh, but," returned Dr. Martha, in haste to add her verdict based on a source no man could question, "father says that if people used oil just as the Greeks did, you know—and they knew more than we do somehow—that joints wouldn't get stiff, and everybody would be limber. Old Potter might turn somersets just as well as not if he was only a mind to. It isn't all oil, you know. There has to be some mind."

Johnny nodded meditatively, too much occupied for comment, and Dr. Martha went on: "I know that, because father has said it ever so many times, but I know it quite fresh because—"

"Well."

"I mustn't tell," returned Dr. Martha, who had turned very red and put both hands over her mouth. "I almost did it," she said, "and I don't know what father would have thought. I can always tell all our talks about things we think if I want to, but things he says about other people's troubles—why, how awful it would be if he had to think I might speak it right out, and he not dare to talk again for a long while."

"I don't tell," said Johnny, resentfully; "you're always hiding away things from me, and if you cared as much about me as I do about you, you wouldn't. Aunt Maria always told everything she heard all the time."

"Would you like me to tell all the things you tell me?"

"No," Johnny admitted, after another silence for consideration; "but if you ever got married to me you'd have to, you know."

"Then I shouldn't get married to you, or else you would have to learn better than that," replied Dr. Martha, severely. "What people tell you for a real secret must never, never be told to anybody on earth, unless they say you can."

"God knows it; you can't keep it from Him," said Johnny, defiant.

"But He doesn't tell," Dr. Martha made answer, and, as Johnny paused for further reflection as to the best answer, dropped from her place and ran toward the house from which came the sound of her father's call. The door into his office stood open, and she went in to find him in his big chair, and facing him a little lady who had been crying, and who still showed traces not only of this, but many cryings, tears seeming to have made for themselves channels in the cheeks faded and worn, the whole face bearing evidence of long-continued worry.

"If it was medicine, Doctor, I could see what you mean. A tonic or something," she said, as Dr. Martha stole to her father's side. "But when it is just pure yielding to a sin—a thing I never dreamed of in him—why, I begin to feel as if I must take the children and go."

She checked herself, as if but that moment conscious of Dr. Martha's presence, and looked at her a little angrily. "She is too young even to hear about such things," she added. "It surprises me that you allow her to go about men who must be depraved from the beginning. If I had known the real nature of this place I would never have allowed William to come. It is a great surprise and a shock. You ought to have told me, Doctor; I never thought you could cheat anybody."

"As to that," said Dr. Scarborough, "each must have his own opinion. I have to go for half an hour to a patient, and as your husband is asleep after his ride, thought I would leave you with my little girl who is my chief assistant in a good many ways. Perhaps you would prefer to lie down yourself."

"I never lie down in the daytime unless compelled by sickness," said the little lady with a compression of her thin lips. "It seems an unnecessary indulgence of the flesh, at least I was taught to consider it so."

"I do not doubt it," said the Doctor gravely. "Your husband would have had more difficulty in forming the habit that brought him to me, if you had known the meaning of rest for him or for yourself. What I need now is an annex for the education of my patients' wives," and with a little laugh Dr. Scarborough hurried away.

Dr. Martha would gladly have followed. That her father should be spoken to in that tone she resented instantly, but as she looked the feeling changed and softened, for tears were again running down the newcomer's face, and she could not check them.

"Don't cry," Dr. Martha said. "There isn't anything really to cry about."

"What does a child like you know whether there is anything to cry about or not?" said her hearer with indignation.

"But I do," said Dr. Martha undauntedly, "because my father says that you spill a quart of good energy that you might save and use, you know, in every tear that you let get away. They weren't made for that. They were made to keep our eyes nice and comfortable and to come once in a while when you are very happy and somehow they are there and will come, or once in a great while when you are so sorrowful that they won't stay in. But happy tears are best."

"That isn't the kind that we are put in this world to shed," returned her hearer severely. "It's a world of trial, and sin and wickedness, and if you couldn't cry once in a while it would be a strange piece of business."

"My world isn't sin and wickedness," Dr. Martha made answer, after a pause in which she looked inquiringly at the speaker, who had repeated a verse of a psalm in which she caught only the words, "utterly destroy the wicked." "My father always says that if God is everywhere in everything, and He is, you know, then everything must be good."

A subdued shriek came from her hearer, but Dr. Martha went on: "Because, you see, everything is all full of God if only you know it, and the bad things that you call bad won't stay bad as soon as you find this out, because finding out they are not right makes you go to work to get them right yourself, or show the people that are doing them, how they can. Sometimes they don't see, and then of course you have to wait awhile, but almost everybody sees sometime. If they don't, why then they feel bad and suffer and can't be helped much. That's why they have to take things out of bottles, and perhaps stay in bed a great many years. But you never have to do that, you know, unless you are so foolish you will not listen and find out. I always mean to find out if I can, and I always can, you know, because there is father to tell me."

"It's an awful way to bring up a child. I wouldn't have believed Dr. Scarborough was an out-and out infidel," said her hearer with a gasp.

"I don't know what that is," said Dr. Martha, "but you say it as if it were something bad. My father is better than anybody ever knows. He is so good, I could never tell anybody how good."

"You are right, little Martha," said a voice from the doorway and Mr. Prescott entered. "Anna!" he added in amazement, as the figure in the shadow came forward with something that looked almost like shrinking, but putting out a trembling hand, which her husband took, drawing her nearer and putting his arm about her.

"I did not want you to come," he said, "but now that you are here I am glad. There is much that you will understand better here than you could at home."

"You are in a godless place," his wife said firmly. "I could not have believed it of you. I did think something was wrong; opium, perhaps," her voice dropped to a whisper and she looked around, but Dr. Martha had slipped from the room and closed the door, "but, oh, William! to think it is—drink!"

Her voice rose to a cry, and she flung herself down on the sofa. "You can never preach again. You are a lost soul if it goes on; perhaps you are a lost soul anyway for having preached when you were doing it. You were insane."

"Then surely God will judge me mercifully," her husband said gently. "I see that the doctor has told you the whole, Anna. Are you going to make it possible for me to come home again and live my life with your help, or must I stay here where I am safe?"

"You could be safe at home if you would trust in the Lord."

"The Lord Himself would not guarantee me against relapse if I am forced to live a life where every natural means of cure is counted folly," said Mr. Prescott solemnly. "It is impossible that I should take all these matters in hand if I am to do any other work. For years you have refused for me and the children to do what even I, with my imperfect knowledge, knew should be done. Now that I find how much more vital a matter it is than I have even dreamed, I long that you should be willing at least to ask the reasons of things, and to put yourself in a place where the right answer can be given. We are sworn to help each other to the end. Come here, as I have begged you to do even when I most dreaded it, and see what the methods are, not only with patients, but with these beautiful children. My hope when I came here was well nigh dead. It is alive and growing more so with every day under this roof. I have work to do larger than I knew, and my own shame and misery are the guarantee of help to every struggling soul that comes near me. I need you, Anna. Will you try to learn the meaning of what I say?"

His eyes were on her with a pitiful eagerness, but as he looked, he knew that her ears were sealed till the time of hearing should come, whether in this world or the next, who should say, and with a stifled groan he turned away. The thin lips had shut tight as she listened; the face was hard and inflexible. She loved him, he knew, but prejudice and limitation so shut her in that life must narrow to the vanishing point, unless a voice more potent than his had power to rouse her. For a moment courage fled, and he bowed his head with the longing for death and the final solution of the earth problem. Then a wave of courage seemed to flow in.

"My grace is sufficient for thee," he murmured low. "My will that was dead is alive again, and one with the eternal will for me. I know what part natural law has in holding me, and the natural law and the spiritual law are one. I must walk alone, and yet never alone, for the Father is surely with me. I shall not fall if I am lifting others, and that is my life."

He had lifted his head, and the thin and arid nature beside him saw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

"I don't understand," she said. "I don't understand."

"No, poor little Anna, I know you do not," he said.

*Copyrighted.

"We must do what we can without it," and taking her hand he led her gently toward his own room.

A day or two later, when she had gone, Dr. Scarborough driving her to the station, Dr. Martha in front on a small stool used on such occasions, he put his arm closely about the child as he sprang in again.

"Thank God, there is something here besides arrogance and presumption and obstinacy!" he said. "A good woman, but full to the brim of her own conceit, and not, I am afraid, to be made over in this world. Poor Prescott!"

"What can we do about it, father?" Dr. Martha's soft little voice said, after a silence in which she pondered the words with a wistful heartache.

"Nothing, little one. It is past our mending. Nothing but hinder the results of her folly as far as we can. Grow up into a helper, little Martha; grow up into a helper, and see that no woman child in your hands, or man child, either, is trained into such an obstructionist as that poor creature has always been and always will be, I am afraid. God help her, and all the throng of women like her! Which is the worst type, I cannot tell, the passive idiot who lets her family go to pieces because she hasn't sense enough to stop them, or the active idiot with theories and obstinacy to back them. Heaven help the world where either rule, and Heaven aid me in keeping you off their ground!" with which final adjuration Dr. Scarborough whipped his horse with such excess of energy that the astonished animal reared and broke into a run, Dr. Martha laughing with delight at such luxury of speed, but falling again into meditation as it slackened and they rode quietly on into the sunset, which wrapped them at last in a glow of deepest crimson, fading softly as the young moon showed itself, a pale crescent against the tender light.

Lanesborough, Mass.

(To be continued.)

A MONEY CAMPAIGN.

BY REV. C. H. ZIMMERMAN.

The American people are beginning to reap the bitterest fruit of saloon domination in politics. That fruit is the corruption of the ballot, producing hundreds of thousands of venal voters who determined the result of the last two presidential elections, and will decide which candidate shall be elected in 1892.

Prohibitionists were much persecuted for helping to defeat Mr. Blaine and elect Mr. Cleveland in 1884. But the following from Mr. Gustave Thoman, agent of the United States Brewing Association, printed in Henry George's paper, The Standard, of November 19, 1888, shows that it was the liquor power that defeated Mr. Blaine. Mr. Thoman, who was appointed by the association to look up Mr. Blaine's record, says: "The Republicans were beaten in 1884 because they nominated a man for President from the great prohibition state of Maine, whose record on the prohibition question did not suit the Germans. I know what I am talking about, for I myself made the investigation of his record. I find Mr. Blaine an ardent advocate of the Maine law in his own state. That lost him the German vote, and cost the Republican party the election."

The following resolution adopted by the Brewers' Association of New York, September 3, 1884, shows that Mr. Cleveland's record was at that time satisfactory to liquor men:

> Resolved, That the sentiments expressed by Grover Cleveland, that laws unnecessarily interfering with the habits and customs of any of our people, which are not offensive to the moral sentiments of the civilized world and which are consistent with good citizenship and the public welfare, are unwise and vexatious, have our unqualified indorsement, and should receive the approval of all liberal-minded citizens. (P. 68 of Journal.)

These two quotations are sufficient to explain the result of the campaign of 1884. But Mr. Cleveland's record during his administration did not prove satisfactory to the liquor lords. In 1887 he said: "The sanctity of the Sabbath and the open saloon are as opposite as heaven and hell; let us preserve the sanctity of the Sabbath and prohibit the saloon." Referring to this utterance, the St. Louis Tribune, a German paper, said: "President Cleveland has, within a year, gone over completely into the camp of the Prohibitionists. He has sworn off drinking, and the Prohibitionists are parading him all over the country as one of their shining examples." This and the following from Mr. Thoman show why Mr. Cleveland was defeated and Mr. Harrison elected in 1888:

"The Republican managers found out their mistake, and in 1888 they nominated a man who had no objectionable prohibition record; gave the Prohibitionists the cold shoulder and adopted a resolution copied after the utterance of the National Liquor Dealers' Association. The consequence was that the Germans came back to the party, and Harrison is elected."

There is nothing in the subsequent records of these two candidates, or in the utterances of their platforms on the liquor question, to show which the liquor men will support in the next election. The temperance plank in the Republican platform is the same in import as that of 1888, which was "copied after the utterances of the National Liquor Dealers' Association." The Democrats have the same old anti-sumptuary plank they have had for years. As to the other questions, tariff for protection, tariff for revenue, silver, banks, etc., there is really no issue between the parties. As THE UNION SIGNAL recently said, "The difference would never be recognized by the people in actual practice."

What, then, in the absence of any great moral or financial issue between the two parties and with the candidates equally acceptable to liquor men, will determine the result of the present campaign? Judging from past elections and from the strenuous efforts being made by the committees, national and local, to raise campaign funds, there can be but one answer: The candidate will be elected whose party can get and use the largest amount of money through the agency of the saloon and of liquor dealers to buy votes. This is above all others a money campaign. For want of any real issue between them, the two parties are unable to arouse any enthusiasm for their principles. The party press laments the want of popular interest in the campaign. But the raising of funds and arrangements to "put them where they will do the most good" are carried on with greater zeal and activity than ever before. The Republicans are said to do this quietly by a graded assessment of their army of office-holders; and with a chuckle call attention to the necessarily more public exertions of the Democrats to raise campaign funds.

Soon after the election of 1888, the statement that $5,000,000 had been used in the campaign for legitimate and illegitimate purposes was widely published in the secular and religious press of the country. The fact that this year the candidates are equally acceptable to liquor dealers will make the competition for their support by the use of money greater than ever before. For when not under instructions from their associations to vote and work against a candidate for the protection of their traffic—as they were against Mr. Blaine in 1884, and Mr. Cleveland in 1888—saloon keepers are utterly venal, and sell their votes, their influence, and the influence of their business to the highest bidder. This they are permitted to do by the following action of the New York Association in March, 1885:

> Resolved, That when candidates of both parties and all parties, answer in the affirmative (that is, opposed to prohibition), each member of this association shall be at liberty to vote as he deems best.

This answer has been given, and 200,000 saloons with their proprietors and attachés are this year in the market to be bought by the party that puts up the most money. That means an amount of corruption and bribery in the purchase of votes at the coming election greater than ever before in the history of this country.

How much there was of it and what methods were used in recent presidential elections, the reader may learn from the articles on venal voting by Professor McCook in the Forum for September and October, and by Professor Jenks in the October Century. They give an astonishing array of instances of bribery of voters, singly and in squads or "gangs"; the bribes ranging from an immediate supply of drink to forty dollars per vote. To bring drunkards into line their credit at the saloons is stopped and they are told to clear out. "Devoured by a thirst which probably surpasses that of a fever patient or a wounded soldier in a July sun," the miserable wrecks soon consent to vote the ticket. Usually venal voters are "fixed" by the use of both money and drink; but in the towns and city wards of a close state, experienced "floaters," after repeated offers from agents of the two parties, sell themselves for considerable sums to the highest bidder. More than three-fourths of the payments for votes are made through the saloon or by dealers who in a vast majority of instances are the agents employed by the committees to buy votes.

That the venal vote of the country is large enough to decide the pending election is evident from Professor McCook's statement, that of the 166,000 voters in Connecticut "from 17,000 to 25,000 voters are liable to be bought and sold at every election." At the same rate for all the close states and cities the venal votes that will be bought in the pending election will aggregate several hundred thousand. There is little doubt that Indiana and New York have been carried by the corrupt use of money in past elections, or that the party that secures the largest campaign fund will win by the same means this year. Nor can it be questioned that respectable men and church-members who contribute to campaign expenses know that part of their contributions have been used to buy votes in previous elections, and will be so used this year. Professor McCook gives an instance of a rich candidate who was called out of prayer-meeting by his "workers" and told that the votes of a certain gang could be bought for $500. After some hesitation he gave his check for the amount.

Lack of space forbids comment on the situation. The facts show with sufficient plainness the awful peril of the country, and that no patriotic, self respecting citizen, acquainted with the facts, can consistently vote with any party that uses money, applied through the agency of the saloon, or any other agency, to corrupt the fountains of national life.

Evanston, Ill.

DEDICATION DOINGS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

AFTER.

Continents count their anniversaries by the century, and the late Columbian celebration in this city is the greatest birthday party of the ages. There is tradition of a kind of provincial picnic held a hundred years ago in honor of Columbus and his discoveries, where 20,000 people gathered about the cradle of the young world, but an occasion like the one just past could not have occurred earlier. Without the fleet and tireless service of electricity and steam, it would be impossible either to bring so many guests together or to entertain them when assembled. It is not amiss to say that "the world came," for the diplomatic body represented twenty nations. Of course all Europe was here, Spaniards predominating; South America was clad in cloth of gold; Turkey wore the fez and mild colored uniform; Japan was striking in black and yellow; China came in pigtail and purple, and the great dark continent across the world was here in its Americanized son—Frederick Douglass.

But the greatest—our own, of course—wore not a bit of trimming. As some one remarked, those plain swallow tails covered men, "big in their generation, without the help of tossing plumes and interlacing ropes of gold."

There were governors galore, forty-one in all, who in plain citizens' costume, looked meek and protected, surrounded by their staff officers in glittering uniform. That is right. It is a high tribute to assume that a man needs only to reveal himself to be honored. The pretentious may have to cover themselves with the insignia of rank if they would be recognized, but the truly great bear the stamp in themselves. Chicago had other guests just as worthy if less distinguished. Bronzed-faced, broad-shouldered young men were here for the first time, and the prosperous old couple, whose children are all married. The little mother with big boys was here too, God bless her! She and the oldest son took the two younger ones between them and they all kept tight hold of hands. Most of the time they had to go tandem, but they didn't get separated. The little mother looks younger and fresher and freer than she used to, and it's a good sign, for the number and glory of Columbia's future birthdays depend upon her and her boys.

Thursday, the day of the great parade, Chicago folks wished they had little feet, for standing room was scarce on down town sidewalks. A few people were out with babies and small children, who fared hard, but in the main it was a creditable crowd, good-natured and unselfish. People in more senses than the literal were brought closer together. God has many ways of teaching His big family that they are all brethren. These great gatherings are one. There were very few accidents. The police should not be blamed in bulk. For every one who used his "billy," a hundred coaxed and were patient. I saw one help a belated woman through the great crush opposite the reviewing stand. "She's little, boys, jes' give her two inches and she'll get through," and through she went. I am suspicious of any healthy, full grown person who has hysteric dread of a crowd. It omens selfishness.

Now parades are pretty much alike, but during the three hours in which this was passing, two features excited my interest. In one division a dozen Catholic temperance societies marched, and my courage rose. All other churches together cannot do so much for temperance as the Roman, when she wakes to her great opportunity. Let her command total abstinence and four-fifths of the intemperance would cease. Let her forbid her communicants to sell intoxicants, and the trade would languish. Let Rome use the power she has to slay the double-headed dragon, liquor habit and liquor traffic, and she might again rule kings.

My heart and hope were again fixed when six companies of "little Injuns" went marching by. These boys have been trained in the government industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., and they brought samples of their work with them. One company carried window sash and blinds aloft upon long poles. Another bore a variety of brushes and sieves; others carried glistening tin ware on the points of poles—coffee-pots, pails and pans. A soldierly man, who looked as if he might have seen service on the plains exclaimed: "B'gosh! I believe that's better'n killin' 'em." I think so, too. Then there was the eclipse of the sun, just to remind us of the service rendered Columbus by an eclipse when the suspicious natives cut off his food supplies.

The blessed old flag was made alive at one point where school children, costumed in red, white and blue were seated upon a wooden terrace so as to personify the star-spangled banner. Long may it wave, and long may the free schools of America flourish in its folds, for the children are the life of it.

Friday, October 21, saw the greatest audience ever assembled under one roof, said roof covering forty-four acres of ground. Socrates delivering his orations to the incoming waves was not less understood than the speakers who addressed the mighty throng in the Manufactures building. The simple breath of an hundred thousand people closely seated is like the murmur of the sea, and until the wizard of Menlo conjures some means of magnifying human tones, no speaker need hope to be heard by any considerable portion of what will hereafter be known as a "large audience." But Dr. Depew happily said: "The fact of so many people assembling under one roof to take part in a ceremonial intended to dedicate that and other buildings to the arts of peace, was in itself a finer oration than any that could be delivered."

The music was heard most delightfully. It was the hour of triumph for Professor Tomlins, who has so patiently and skillfully drilled the 5,500 singers of the mammoth choir, until their effort was as by one voice. The pure tones of fifteen hundred children fitly interpreted the spirit of "The Heavens Are Telling," and the grand "Hallelujah Chorus" was equal to forty-four acres of praise.

Beyond the inner circle of distinguished guests the oratory was simple pantomime; not a word or even an intonation could be heard, but the speeches were printed entire in the evening journals, with Cardinal Gibbons' closing prayer, which was hawked upon the street by newsboys an hour before it was "said" at the Fair grounds.

Several things happened which had never happened before. A woman spoke upon the same platform with the President of the United States—or his proxy. A woman was laureate of a great international event, which has been fitly characterized the federation of the world. A woman, scarcely out of her teens, stood among the architects to receive one of the gold medals awarded to those who had conceived the Aladdin-like palaces of this fairy city.

It could not have happened many years ago, either, that among those whom Columbia would delight to honor, should be a negro, with the scars of slavery's lash upon his back. In one of the city missions Sunday night an old "Uncle" rose and said: "Fred Douglass preached in our church this morning, and showed us how religion is all love." Ah, love can burst bonds and heal wounds!

And still another marvel was the great collation in the Electricity building, where coffee, sandwiches, doughnuts and milk sufficient for 200,000 persons were free as the sterilized water with which the grounds are supplied. It was Chicago's free lunch for the world, and no one was asked to buy a glass of beer!

But of all the unexpected, nothing was more touching than the message of peace and good will from the Metis Indians to their pale-face brothers. The bearer was the finest, freest type of aborigine; the greetings he brought were presented by President Palmer of the National Commission. It represented the Indians as neither subjects nor suppliants, but "Are we not all brothers? And may we not learn from each other the things that each lacks?" The last sentence of the remarkable document is: "The coming days are bright before us. Let us enjoy them in peace together; you as the givers of new powers to men, we as the aboriginal people to whom all climes are home and who, as a common bond, link your peoples together, both as lovers of justice and of our fellow men."

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

XVI.

Much that is called faith is mere complacence, in happy conditions, grown to a habit of expecting only the thing desired. The right name for that is "trusting to luck."

I have heard only recently of a man who has "lost his faith" because his little girl died after he had prayed and "believed" for the contrary. It may be doubted whether a man whose faith eliminates from prayer "Thy will be done," has faith at all—at any rate it is most fortunate that that kind of faith does not "save the sick." Sometimes, doubtless death, as we call it, is God's gentlest angel sent to save the sick. I know a man whose wife got well in direct answer to prayer and lived to be loathsome to him and an utter pain to her loved ones, with never a gleam of joy to her own self for compensation.

Such things are inscrutable, it is hard to see what God has to do with them; but one thing I am sure of, I'd rather let God judge in death bed trial than to do it myself, for when I think of losing wife or child I "lose my head" and am quite as apt to ask for the wrong thing as the right. But God doesn't lose His head and it is the heart of faith to trust at once His love and His knowledge. Heaven must be a great place for little girls, and if I had a dozen there I'd not complain nor want them back.

What a comfort it is to contemplate the faith of the old prophet who had had some disappointments himself. "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls, yet I will rejoice in the Lord."

Rossiter W. Raymond, wasn't it, who wrote those wonderful lines:

"Beside the dead I knelt for prayer,
And felt a presence as I prayed.
Lo, it was Jesus standing there;
He smiled: 'Be not afraid.'

"'Lord, thou hast conquered death, we know,
Restore again to life,' I said,
'This one who died an hour ago.'
He smiled: 'She is not dead.'

"'Asleep then, as thyself didst say;
Yet thou canst lift the lids that keep
Her prisoned eyes from ours away.'
He smiled: 'She doth not sleep.'

"'Nay then, tho' haply she do wake,
And look upon some fairer dawn,
Restore her to our hearts that ache.'
He smiled: 'She is not gone.'

"'Alas! too well we know our loss,
Nor hope again our joy to touch
Until the stream of death we cross.'
He smiled: 'There is no such.'

"'Yet our belovèd seem so far,
The while we yearn to feel them near,
Albeit with Thee we trust they are.'
He smiled: 'And I am here.'

"'Dear Lord, how shall we know that they
Still walk unseen with us and thee,
Nor sleep, nor wander far away?'
He smiled: 'Abide in me!'"

A NOTABLE COLUMBIAN SERVICE.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Grannis, editor of the Church Union, sends the following comment on one of the very interesting and most unexpected services of the recent great celebration in New York City. The devout reverence of the American people and veneration for their most Christian origin should find frequent expression during the Columbian year in like holy service:

A very impressive feature of the Columbian celebration in New York City was the religious thanksgiving service held at the Twenty-second Street Presbyterian church.

Rev. Dr. Arthur Pierson, who has accepted a call to Spurgeon's Tabernacle in London, officiated, in the place of the late Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby.

At the Lord's Supper, which was celebrated at four o'clock in the afternoon, all Christians of every evangelical denomination had been specially invited at the morning service. Dr. Pierson gave a somewhat extended and very profitable exposition of the reasons why this ordinance was instituted by our Lord. He stated, as his individual opinion and personal conviction in regard to the quality of the cup and bread which were used by our Lord and Saviour at this last Supper with His disciples, to the effect that there was no fermentation connected with the emblems used, and gave his reasons, which were both historical and philological. He called attention to the fact that there was no place in the Scripture where the word wine was used in regard to this sacrament. He gave as an illustration the butler in serving the king, who held the bunch of grapes in his hand and pressed the juice from the fresh fruit into the king's cup, in full view of all present, in order to prevent the possibility of poisoning the king's cup. In like manner was the fruit of the vine used, with the unleavened bread, which was a symbol of the Passover to show forth the love of Christ in His death and resurrection unto life everlasting to each individual member of His church. Fermented juice of the grape is used at this church.

Dr. Pierson commented on the few church members who receive the comfort and blessing intended by Christ in this ordinance of the church, to which every true disciple is entitled. There is surely no rational reason to be given why frequent celebration of the Lord's Supper by faithful, earnest Christians should make it a common or unhallowed occasion. A similar argument might be used against making frequent petitions in prayer as against the frequent observance of the Lord's Supper. The more we receive, the more we desire of spiritual communion with and blessing from the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. During seasons of meeting with the family of Christ at His personal invitation, and at His command, we are to show forth His death and everlasting love toward those who accept Him as Master and Redeemer.

No one would allow himself to consider lightly or indifferently an invitation to a feast or banquet given in the honor of John Howard, the philanthropist, by his nearest of kin, in honor of his love and sacrifice to his fellowmen. Can any one imagine the contrast between the thousands of indifferent Christians who stay away or attend the Lord's Supper from a sense of duty, as treating a similar invitation, or staying away altogether from one extended to him by a prince in military, wealth or literary entertainment? Christians should accept the Lord's Supper as an invitation of the blessed Master's appointment for the purpose of remembering Him before the world until He comes again.

FUNERAL OF ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Before nine this morning I was standing with a crowd of people outside the still unopened door of Westminster Abbey. As the moments wore on, the crowd increased, amongst the number being many visitors from the American Republic, anxious to join with their English confrères in paying homage to the great Poet Laureate, Alfred Tennyson.

As the hour for morning prayers struck from the tall tower, which sentinels our Parliament House, the door of the north transept was flung open, and the eager multitude poured in, and crossing the chancel aisle, gathered round the barriers guarding the sacred south transept, known as Poet's Corner, where the precious dust of our sweet singer was about to be laid.

It was a gray morning and a somber sadness seemed to linger amongst the clustered pillars and ancient monuments, and hovered over the open grave, so soon to close over him who, like King Arthur, has "passed away wearing the white flower of a blameless life."

Adjoining Poet's Corner in the tiny chapel of St. Faith, all that remained of our bard was now lying. He had been borne over night, in the still twilight, from his home at Haslemere amongst the Surrey Hills, and placed within the Abbey walls, his coffin draped with the Union Jack and wreathed with laurels and forty-two crimson dog-roses, symbols of the years of his married life and the term of his laureateship.

The door of St. Faith's chapel was now closed, but in the east aisle of Poet's Corner a little group of women lingered giving last touches to the tomb. All was beautifully simple, chaste and unostentatious. No hideous draperies or lugubrious black palls were visible. The stone pavement was carpeted with violet cloth, the grave itself lined with the same color, its outline traced with white.

In the dim light the delicate tracery of the canopy over Chaucer's tomb looked hazily soft as a piece of fine old lace, and formed a weird, fantastic background to the violet colored grave below. As Tennyson is laid, his head must just touch Chaucer's heart, a fitting position indeed, so near to the father of English song. What a host of great men are ready there to greet him! Tennyson, for the first time, finds himself among his compeers. Side by side, scarcely three feet apart, is Browning's resting place, and loving hands were to be seen outlining with a wreath of white the sacred spot now hidden from view by the violet cloth covering the pavement. Close by is the bust of Longfellow placed there by "English admirers of the American poet"; it stands at such an angle that the profile may be seen from both Tennyson and Browning's graves. Milton, Goldsmith, Garrick, Ben Jonson, Sheridan, Dickens, Macaulay, Addison and Handel are all there to welcome their latest born. From Stratford-on-Avon, the resting place of Shakespeare, a weath of laurel had been sent from our greatest poet's own garden.

After morning prayers were ended, on emerging from the Abbey, I found all gates barred and thousands of people lining the precincts eager for admission. Never during this century has popular enthusiasm been so much roused; tens of thousands have applied for tickets of admission to the funeral ceremony—more than twice the number, so say the authorities, seeking admission to the Jubilee Celebration.

High up above the Gothic arches, looking down from the giddy heights of the Triporium, were many men who had climbed the almost inaccessible stairways, hidden in the interstices of the massive walls, to look their last upon him who had taught them

"That men may rise on stepping stones
Of their dead selves to better things."

Every little side gallery and carved niche was used as a point of vantage and mothers with young children by the hand kept pressing through the crowd eager for their little ones to carry away remembrance of the day when the true poet and most eloquent preacher of Christ in a materialistic age was laid to rest, firm in the belief in the Unseen.

Trappings of woe there were none, and when a sob broke the stillness it was wrung from some true heart filled with emotion in thinking of him who has comforted so many mourners when longing

"For the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still."

Half an hour after noon-day came the first toll of the passing bell, and as if to quench all sadness, the sunshine that moment burst forth in full glory through the clerestory window and the tones of the organ began to steal gently through the vast building. One hundred little lads from the Gordon Home, in tartan suits, formed the only guard of honor. In two long rows they lined the nave, down which the long procession emerging from the cloisters made its way, headed by the white robed choristers and the officiating clergy chanting Croft and Purcell's sweetest choral.

Next followed the coffin, covered still with the "Union Jack" and the cross and crown of laurels.

Mr. Robert Lincoln, who was to have been one of the distinguished pall bearers, was unfortunately in mid-Atlantic, but the United States was represented by Mr. Henry White, the charge d' affaires. Immediately behind the body of the Poet Laureate came his children and grandchildren, and like an angel amongst the throng of mourners was a toddling two-year-old child dressed in white, its little head "sunning over with curls."

Women formed a noticeably large portion of the procession, and the two nurses in their hospital garb came immediately in the rear of the chief mourners. Behind them again could be counted scores of the most distinguished poets, authors, artists, actors, clergymen and statesmen of the day—Mr. Gladstone was absent; but Lord Salisbury arriving late took up his position in the choir. On reaching the choir, a halt was made, and while the poet's body rested for a few moments in the center of the Abbey under the lantern, the ninetieth Psalm was chanted in solemn Gregorian tones. After the reading of the lesson came the most impressive moment of all, when the choir boys gently sang the poem, loved so dearly by its dead author, "Crossing the Bar." The organ scarcely whispered an accompaniment, and with bated breath we hung upon each note as the words were wafted down the long aisle.

"And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea."

The boys' voices rose and fell upon the silent air and seemed almost to have ceased, when suddenly as with a clarion peal the final lines of the hymn rang out so full of joy, so complete in triumph.

"I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar."

But the farewell with our beloved dead was still to be said. He had left some parting words behind him entitled, "Silent Voices," which Lady Tennyson having set to music we then listened to for the first time. They are these:

"When the dumb Hour clothed in black
Brings the Dreams about my bed,
Call me not so often back,
Silent voices of the dead.
Forward, the lowland way behind me,
And the sunlight that is gone!
Call me rather, silent Voices,
Forward to the starry track
Glimmering up the heights beyond me
On, and always on!"

Then the organ pealed forth once more, this time in tones inspiring each one with a glad hope in the beyond, and the procession again moved on, halting only at the violet enshrouded grave where the final prayer was said. Before the benediction was pronounced the choir boys started Heber's familiar hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty," and the crowds in the nave soon joined in chorus, until every transept, aisle and side-chapel echoed with music. After the still moments of the benediction, the muffled, drum like notes of the Dead March in Saul broke upon the stillness, and the procession returned down the long nave leaving behind, bathed in a flood of glorious sunlight, all that remains of him whom a whole people has loved and lost," and who has taught that people more than any other teacher of the century of "One God, one law, one element,

And one far off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves."

FLORENCE BALGARNIE.

Headquarters British W. C. T. U.

A THRILLING APPEAL FROM WYOMING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Some are surprised that prohibition does not prevail in Wyoming where women have the right of suffrage. As well might we be surprised that Christianity did not immediately prevail in Africa where Livingstone found woman could wield a scepter as freely as man.

It is true that moral and spiritual sentiments appeal to women more strongly than to men. Our churches are largely made up of women, but they do not know Christ without hearing of Him. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believed." In this age of evolution, how can the scattered, toiling women of a struggling state be expected to spring into the world of politics and reform, Minerva like, in full strength, armed cap-a pie, ready to achieve their best.

For years in Wyoming a woman was as rare as a singing bird, and the homeless, houseless life of the cow-boy gave rise to pitiful excesses. The teachings of generations led him to believe that liquor was a safeguard against the dangers of exposure. One said to me with sad indifference, "A man can't last on the range beyond thirty-five or forty. By that time he is too old and stiff for the saddle, and as his money was most likely spent as it came, there is nothing left for him but to crawl away into the poorhouse." He did not know that the bottle and cigarette blighted his strength faster than rides by day and night, through storms and cold; that the midnight carousal was worse than the midnight watch.

When towns sprang up among the hills, and farms were opened in the valleys, mothers, wives and sisters came to share the hardships of the frontier. They saw and felt the curse of the drink habit, but they knew no remedy beyond moral suasion. When suffrage came to them, they were for the most part too busy to do anything with it, not seeing anything it could do for them; and when, two years later, it was about to be repealed, they were too busy to care. A few saw the impending loss. Two large-minded, far seeing men sat up all night with the governor and secured his veto to the repeal, so woman's suffrage was saved to Wyoming and a step taken for the advancement of the world, but not through the efforts or even the wishes of the mass of women of Wyoming. They coveted franchise no more than a child covets cake before it has ever tasted the sweet; but now you would find it as hard to take it away as to take the reins of government from the party in power.

Gradually woman has found that her vote counts in local matters, counts for justice and progress, and she uses it intelligently, zealously. As schools were needed through the country, our women found that votes were the strongest influence for securing advantages for their children, and in matters of local taxation, and in general, they were quick to perceive the lines of right, and prompt to cast their ballots. They find the polling place as pleasant as a social gathering, and so far, I have carefully observed for four years, rather more men stay at home election day than women.

I believe it is well that the interest in woman's suffrage has had this slow growth among us. It is now as deep rooted and abiding as love for home and family. So far our women are not widely interested in the mere struggle for office between the Democrats and Republicans, but if the great questions of moral and financial reform were before the state and nation, they would care for the issue as they care for their school elections. But literature is scarce, post-offices remote and time short. They are not up with the times on these important questions. For the most part, they think prohibition is an untried and impossible theory. Women are preëminently practical; they want ideals that may be worked out. Here they do not know that prohibition has had forty years of glorious success in Maine; they do not know that prohibition emptied the jails in Iowa; they do not know that prohibition almost cleared the Atlanta streets of shivering, hungry poor; more than all, they do not know that alcohol and nicotine are poisons—and only poisons.

You that know these vital truths, come and teach them here. Come! In spite of mountains, infiinte distances, and weary stages. Come! In spite of low, bare rooms, small audiences and smaller collections. Come! In spite of hardships and privations. Come! Our "people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Tell the story once and again, and again, then you shall see how our women vote. Come with the spoken word and with the written word. If some large heart with large means would put a few hundred copies of THE UNION SIGNAL in my hands, I would place them where their faithful teaching from week to week would mould the future of our state; if some good persons would take up Miss Willard's high suggestion to send several of our best thinkers and speakers among us for the next few months what might not be accomplished by the next election for reform? May our need be borne in upon some souls as the need of the hour.

Manville, Wyoming. EMMA E. PAGE.

PENNSYLVANIA L. T. L.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—On August 17 and 18 the first state meeting of the Pennsylvania Loyal Temperance Legion was held for the purpose of organizing a state L. T. L. of the graduates from the different local Legions. Miss Braham, our state superintendent, a number of county superintendents with between fifty and sixty delegates from the girls and boys were present. Millville, Columbia county, was the meeting place, and most appropriately, having had the first graduates in the state.

Almost every home was thrown open for entertainment, and dedicated to kindness. The meetings were held in a large union church, beautifully trimmed with flowers, the county L. T. L. banners and many mottoes on the walls. Wednesday evening's meeting was given to a crowded house; essays on "Narcotics," "Cider" and "The Good of Diploma Study," with singing, recitations and music by the girls and boys made an enjoyable program throughout.

Thursday morning at half past nine the first business meeting was held, Mrs. Bain, of Altoona, leading the devotional exercises. Then came reports from the counties aggregating in the state 20,000 girls and boys, enrolled members, 12,000 of them pledged members of the L. T. L. There are now about three hundred graduates in Pennsylvania and great interest is shown in the work.

After the reports a state L. T. L. was organized, constitution and by laws adopted. The noon-tide prayer finished the morning meeting. Miss Young, of Millville, led the devotional exercises. In the afternoon came the election of officers for the coming year: president, Miss Edna Eves, of Millville; two vice-presidents, Ralph Kisner, Millville, and Frank Lutz, of Bloomsburg; corresponding secretary, Grace Elliot, of New Castle; recording secretary, Nellie Cross of Phillipsburg; treasurer, Carl Tipton, of Gettysburg.

In the evening the church was crowded to listen to our National L. T. L. superintendent, Mrs. Helen G. Rice, give her remarkable lecture on "Our Coming Men and Women."

In the faces of those wide awake girls and boys was read the promise of a bright future for our country, when temperance and purity shall reign, brought about by our men and women to come. Two invitations were given for the meeting next year, Phillipsburg and Altoona; the executive committee will decide. This committee is composed of the state officers, with the state and county superintendents. The gavel used was sent by Mrs. Bradbury, of Wisconsin and made by two little girls of the Slöyd Industrial School; a telegram of thanks was returned her; a telegram also of sympathy and love sent Miss Willard and Miss Gordon. Fourteen counties were represented, and twenty-two towns. We can certainly take these words of Whittier's for our own:

"Wait cheerily, temperance workers,
For daylight, and for land,
The breath of God is in your sail,
Your rudder in His hand.

"Work on! sail on! the morning comes,
The port you yet shall win;
And all the bells of God shall ring
The ship of temperance in."

FRANCES H. WALTER,
Gettysburg, Pa. Adams Co. Supt. L. T. L.

REFORMS AT THE FRENCH CAPITAL.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Two reforms in which I take it your readers are especially interested are at present receiving attention in Paris. The first is the question of street morals. Most foreigners believe that there is no such thing here as street morality. There is reason for their opinion. The Parisian promenade which is not annoyed by some gross sight is rare indeed. If you stop before a window of beautiful photographs you are almost certain to be surprised and disgusted by views that no American dealer would think of displaying. If you loiter over the book stalls you are often driven away precipitously by some obscene title. The bills which are thrust into the hands of the pedestrian are frequently outrageous. Worst of all are the newspapers. When the inexperienced foreigner begins to buy he continually brings home papers which make him feel like shaking the dust of France forever from his feet. Not that there are no good journals. Figaro, Le Temps, Journal des Debats and several others, are models of condensation, good sense, good taste and literary finish, but there are multitudes which are hopelessly indecent.

The foreigner who complains of his outraged sensibilities receives little sympathy from Frenchmen. They laugh and ask, "Do you find it shockeeng?" Indeed, "shockeeng" is at present their chief by-word, so amused are they at hearing the English and Americans use it in exclamation.

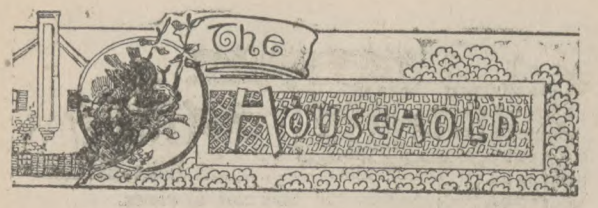
Not all Paris is so obtuse, however, as not to understand why we cry "shocking." There is a large number who are determined to put an end to the abuses which prevail. For this purpose the "Society for Protestation against the License of the Street" has been formed. At a meeting held in January, the scheme of the society was set forth. I was surprised to find how at present the League is obliged to give most of its time and strength to defending the reasons of its existence. It is in the same pioneer state as the temperance societies of Paris. It must constantly explain why it is and what it means. One cry raised against the new society is, that in attempting to regulate the morals of the streets it is interfering with popular liberty. Many contend that the customs to which the society object are natural expressions of youth and pleasure and so should not be disturbed. Others argue that the offensive pictures, journals, etc., are a legitimate branch of business, since they meet a demand. Some even declare that these things are in harmony with the French genius and that to disturb them is to injure the national character itself. None of these objections are hard to answer and they find able and eloquent contestants in the League.

The earnestness of the League and of those who, like it, are interested in purifying the streets has resulted this winter in arousing the police to enforcing a law which has for a long time been practically a dead letter. It is the statute against immoral journals. Those who were interested in seeing the law enforced have complained that when the police did take action against a paper it was only after the edition was nearly exhausted. The police have sometimes waged relentless war against all immoral journals. The director of Paris Gaité last winter was fined $600 and sentenced to one month's imprisonment; the secretary was fined $200 and given fifteen days, and the manager, in default, to $600 fine and three months' imprisonment. The last seizure was the entire edition of the Beautés de Paris.

The second reform is that for the observance of the Sabbath. The question is receiving much more attention from the French than is generally supposed. Since the law forbidding work on the Sabbath was repealed in France a few years ago the day has been almost as busy as gay, in Paris. Shops open, building going on, cargoes unloading, activity added to festivity have made the day the liveliest of the week; but gradually public opinion has been changing in regard to work, if not fun, and there is less business done each year. An active campaign in favor of the Sabbath as a day of rest is carried on by the League formed in 1889, during the International Congress for the observance of the Sabbath, held at the Exposition. This League has discussed the benefits of the observance of Sunday from the moral, physical and social standpoints. It has brought together reports on the manner in which the day is passed in various parts of France. It has reported on the regulations in vogue in the different departments of the public administration, as the army, marine, railways, etc., in the leading industries and in agriculture. It also discussed the part which women, the press and congresses may take in carrying on the agitation.

IDA M. TARBELL.

Paris, France.



REJOICING TOGETHER.

BY CHARLOTTE MELLEN PACKARD.

Two stood within a bounteous harvest field,
The sower, worn yet glad,
And the young reaper noting such increase
As reaper seldom had.

"The riches and the honor are not mine,"
He cried with troubled face;
"I have but wrought one hour, you the fierce day;
Shall I usurp your place?"

The sower answered through his grateful tears,
"I envy not these spoils.
Rather, I wonder at the grace that came
To nerve me for my toils.

"My faith was like a grain of mustard seed,
In the long vanished spring;
Yours rose full flowered! My brother, let us then
Our sheaves together bring."

Brunswick, Me.

DAVID DOUGLAS AND HIS WIFE.*

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

CHAPTER X.

The conversation in the parsonage kitchen was not the last between the minister and his wife and their guests during that never to be-forgotten Thanksgiving week.

They easily dropped into a discussion of the questions of the day, varied by Archie's lively talk of what the "fellows" thought and said, and by questions from the children, who had been born with a capacity for learning from their elders equal to that of the ancient Grecian youth. Even the Thanksgiving feast was made more memorable by a lively discussion as to whether prohibition laws could be enforced when they related to Turkey!

But these bright days ended all too soon. Mr. Steele returned to his merchandise, Esther to her "Bureau," and Archie to his books.

Then followed a time of new and trying experiences to our friends. Mr. Douglas had naturally expected a certain degree of excitement and even opposition during the campaign, but as its peculiar interests waned and he turned to his interrupted pastoral work with added zeal, he noticed a subtle change which he could not understand. The business men, at the head of manufactories, had a kindly habit in Chesport of "making friends" with all the pastors, without regard to their own denominational preferences. This courtesy had been extended to Mr. Douglas as a matter of course, and he had valued it highly as an indication of that Christian fraternity which should prevail everywhere. But little by little he missed the sidewalk chat and hearty greeting. There were cool "good-mornings" and silent bows, which indicated that he had lost "caste" with these leading citizens. As one takes a superfluous kitten by the nape of the neck and drops it into watery depths, so he was quietly "dropped," and left to sink or swim, as he chose.

The Mercury, also, showed a similar change of attitude, inserting no more items concerning the "popular pastor of Memorial Church." It is presumed that he might have taken a trip to the desert of Sahara, or fallen heir to a fortune, without eliciting an editorial paragraph.

This was somewhat trying and humiliating, of course; for, while he had heard of such cases, and had been prepared, as he thought, for whatever might come, the actual experience was somewhat unexpected. He did not allow himself to be greatly disturbed, however. His work was in his church, and believing as he did, in making it as effective as possible, he prepared to apply himself in this direction.

His young people had been organized early in the year in accord with his own convictions, and also with the great spiritual uplift, which has everywhere been felt in this department. Here he looked for progress and achievement. But the November literary meeting, which was to be devoted to thanksgivings, historical, poetical and musical, lacked the presence of the three young Sloans.

"But they were to furnish special music," said the minister to the chairman of the committee. A peculiar glance passed between those who heard him speak.

"Yes, but they are not here," was the reply.

"I don't think they expect to come any more," added another.

At the next business meeting, the treasurer, a young man employed as Mr. Sloan's typewriter, resigned.

"Very well," said Mr. Douglas to his wife, "after the Sloan element is eliminated we shall be better off, for young people who are at theatres and card parties half their evenings are not really in sympathy with Christian work. But I had hoped to win them wholly."

"Do you think it is possible that other members will be affected?" she inquired.

"Oh, no," he replied, "our people have felt a sort of obligation for the organ; but they know how Sloan got his money, and when it comes to a personal following, I think they have too much principle to be influenced by him or his family."

Yes, and so they had! This the older church members declared when, with considerable buzzing of tongues the defection was reported. When it was mentioned in the Board, which was somewhat given to a sort of legalized gossip, this virtuous declaration was reaffirmed.

"We don't uphold Mr. Sloan's former business"—they did not recognize the rental of saloons and other buildings on Water street as "business," not exactly— "but his children are not to blame for their father's sins, and we are sorry to lose them."

"Yes," said Mr. Pettigrew, "and we might as well have his money for the Lord's work as to have it all go somewhere else. We want to pay off our church debt this winter and he is a very liberal man."

"He may be liberal," replied the minister, "but he reminds me of a rumseller in Pennsylvania who had a box for an Orphans' Home placed in his saloon near the door. Many a man put in a contribution while he was wiping his lips on the way out. Every year Ben Dillon's name appeared in the list of donors for about two hundred dollars; and the ladies who managed that benevolence took it, saying it was no more than fair that after making so many orphans he should help support them."

Mr. Pettigrew turned with a look of decided annoyance, saying, "Then you'd not have us take any money that comes from evil-doing or evil-doers. Is that your stand?"

"By no means," was the reply. "We cannot know usually how money is earned, nor can we read the hearts of those who give; but when we do know that a fortune has been made from a business which antagonizes all Christian effort, we have no right to accept what will place us under obligation, or seal our lips against that business."

"That's just what Brother Ludlow said," remarked an official member who seldom spoke.

"Oh, yes, that's understood! We don't favor anything that will compromise the church," said Rev. Mr. Snow.

"We 'ave a prudence which h'insists on a clean collection box," added Mr. Matthews drily.

And this seemed to be the unanimous conclusion of these well meaning brethren. And yet! and yet! There was an undefinable something which was spreading among the people. We can make no diagnosis of spiritual complaints but we know very well that some are chronic and some are epidemic; and there was evidently a contagious principle in this "something." There is always a class in every church who are more or less liable to infection. Their spiritual system is out of order, quick to yield to poison germs which pass from eye to eye and from lip to lip. One unpleasant fact in connection with any form of this disease is that it never confines its victims to their beds! Among the young people the symptoms were a general listlessness, and an aversion to combined effort. Marion and Hugh felt the changed conditions keenly.

"It's just because they think papa drove away the Sloans," cried Marion. "Some of the girls act as though nothing could be done without them."

"Don't you care," said Hugh, drumming idly on the window-sill, and watching the first snow storm of the season. "Papa hasn't done anything; they're only half alive here anyway." But the boy's heart was suffering a strange pang at that very moment, for he had seen his next door friend with Rodney Sloan, both with their skates, evidently bound for the pond, and he was left out.

Mrs. Pettigrew explained at a later day that she had encouraged the children to unusual friendliness with the Sloans, that there might be no permanent alienation.

Meanwhile she had discontinued her neighborly calls at the parsonage, not with unladylike show of temper, but with conventional excuses of work and company and promises to "run in soon." Grieved and silent, Mrs. Douglas stayed on her side of the invisible barrier and wondered whereunto this thing would grow. Breathings of dissatisfaction, just enough to disturb the atmosphere, continued; and Mr. Douglas, acting the part of an involuntary "Board of Health," grew thin as the weeks sped on.

"Do you know your hair is turning real gray, David?" asked his wife one night. "I never knew your work to wear upon you so before."

"I am like a man walking through cobwebs," replied her husband, with a tired laugh.

"Cobwebs!" echoed Mrs. Douglas. "There's but one cause of this trouble, I am sure, and that is Mr. Sloan working through others. He has an iron hand in a glove of velvet, and from the day you advised our people to use their ballots for prohibition I believe he has been working against you."

"Oh, I think that's hardly a fair judgment," he said. "Sloan knows very well that nothing but his money gives him standing in the community. He wouldn't dare attack any decent man, and as for political differences, why, bless your heart! when they see how I'll work to build up the church, and when we have a genuine revival, as I hope we will this winter, do you think they will question my right to vote as I preach and pray?"

While they were still talking soberly, Mrs. Badley, one of the "committee on visiting the sick," came to report several cases, not of the prevailing malady, but of an ordinary nature. She was a mournful sister, who always sat perched upon the edge of a parlor chair, a little black satin bag on one arm, from which she drew her handkerchief as a natural accompaniment to a tearful rehearsal of her visits among the sick. She had had this special duty for years, and a strange "misfit" she was. After the report was given, she continued, with no abatement of whining, "Mrs. Pettigrew is going to resign the Ladies' Aid Society, so I heard tell to day."

"Ah! Weary in well-doing, is she?" said the minister.

"No, I guess not. She don't want to be president any longer. She wouldn't give any reason, but I guess the society'll go down now," and Mrs. Badley wiped her eyes.

"Oh, that will never do! There are others who can fill the place."

Mrs. Badley only continued, "Did you know Moses Heminway was going to the Baptist church? He's give up his pew. He thinks our rents are too high—that's what he says. His wife's sister's folks think they'll go when they've set out what they've paid. And besides, the Heminway girl is being paid attention to by one of the Sill boys, and that's another family."

"Aren't you borrowing a little trouble?" asked the minister, with a smile. "George Sill is one of my loyal young men."

"But you never can tell," sniffed Mrs. Badley. "Folks is just like bricks, one falls, and the rest is sure to tumble."

After much more of this comforting conversation, Mrs. Badley finally departed and Mr. Douglas went to his waiting supper singing,

"Since I must fight if I would reign, Increase my courage, Lord!"

Meanwhile rumors of trouble in the church were heard outside Chesport. How it happened no one could understand; but the Rev. Mr. Snow, that "doubtful blessing," might possibly have explained. It was his habit to attend all the conventions and religious meetings within his reach and when he was asked how they were prospering in Chesport he so managed his facial muscles and the tones of his voice as to convey the impression that trouble was impending. But he only said that "for some reason the Lord's blessing was being withheld."

Yea, verily! As the winter progressed it became evident that there was to be no revival, for which Mr. Douglas and other faithful ones had so prayed and labored. The waters indeed were troubled, but not by an angel!

But some one may inquire at this point, Where were the pastor's friends and the peace-loving, law-abiding members of the church?

If it were not that similar events are constantly transpiring I would hardly dare to say that they were all there. A few understood the trend of affairs and were justly indignant. Others, among whom was Mr. Pettigrew, maintained silence and a professed neutrality; but the majority of quiet members seemed unaware of any cause for anxiety. The problem of evil is constantly intensified by the activity of its agents and the corresponding slowness of good people. It was while the husbandmen slept that tares were sown; and Satan has not yet forgotten how to take advantage of napping Christians.

When the last business meeting of the year was held this was found to be true in Chesport. Mr. Douglas found himself for the first time in his ministry facing a divided vote on the question of his return. "We're very much like a political party," said Mr. Matthews in a disheartened tone. "We 'ave no intention to do any 'arm, but we follow our leaders with our h'eyes shut."

Norwich, Conn.

(To be continued.)

*Copyrighted.

W. C. T. U. REMISSNESS.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

I suppose I ought really to omit the letters C. T. U., for the fault I am thinking of is not confined to the white ribbon sisterhood. I refer to the discourtesy of not answering when spoken to, and it prevails everywhere among those not educated in business ways. And the strange part of is that the ones in fault do not recognize it as a discourtesy, especially if the answer which they would give, if they spoke truthfully, would be a negative one. "Why," they say in apology, "I did not answer because I could only say no."

Is it not many times as important to say "no" as to say "yes"? Supposing you were to go to a store and say to the clerk, "I want to look at some black silk," and the clerk were to walk away without a word, and when accused of impoliteness were to apologize by saying, "Well, why should I answer? We had no black silk." Or, suppose you were to meet your friend on the street and should say: "Come over this afternoon; there are some matters pertaining to our club that I would like to discuss with you"; and your friend, after a moment's silent thought, should walk away without a reply, and excuse herself afterwards, if taxed with discourtesy, by saying, "I did not see any use in replying, I could not go." Or if you should knock at your friend's door and ask for her, and the servant should look blankly at you, and close the door in your face without a word, excusing herself by saying: "Well, Mrs. Brown was not at home, and it was none of my business what the caller wanted, that was her affair."

Would these excuses be valid? The question arises in my mind, Is it less impolite to leave a written question unanswered than a verbal one? Every superintendent of a department of the W. C. T. U. will appreciate that question. Listen to the reports at conventions: county, district, state, or national. The superintendent says: "I cannot give a full report, for although I sent out twenty, fifty, an hundred letters, I received only four, a dozen, twenty replies." If the unions are taxed with fault in the matter, the reply usually is: "Well, we did not write because we had no report to make. We have done no work in that line." That is to say, you did not answer a question, one of importance to you, and to the general work, because your answer must be a negative one. "How many unions have you organized?" "None," therefore we give no reply. We have no black silk. "How much work have you done in jails, or at fairs?" "I did not see any use in replying, I could not go." "How many lectures have you had along certain lines?" "We have had letters from several lecturers saying we could have their services, but we did not answer them. It was none of our business whether they secured lectures or not. Of course, it was important to them to know our wishes, but as we did not want them, we did not think it worth while to help in arranging dates by telling them so."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is in most things very good at playing the game of "Follow your leader." I venture to say that no one of you has ever addressed a query to Miss Willard, no matter how trivial, that it did not receive a prompt reply, if she received it, for she knows the importance of answering letters. And who among you is so overburdened with communications as she? Many of them, no doubt, contain queries of no real importance, but they seemed of importance to the writer, therefore it was courtesy to answer them, just as if they had been verbally made.

The queries sent out by superintendents of departments are of great importance to the work. We cannot know what we are doing, nor what needs to be done, if the negative, as well as the affirmative answers are not given. What a delightful surprise it would be to the National superintendents if every letter sent out for reports were to be promptly and accurately answered, so that at the National Convention we might know just exactly what is being done along every line. And this cannot be unless every local union sends its report to its proper officer. The W. C. T. U. has done a wonderful work in educating women along business lines; if it should succeed in training all of its members to promptness in replying to letters, it would be the crowning miracle. It is not the busiest woman who is at fault. Busy women, as a rule, have time to answer letters. I have never been more impressed with that fact than in my dealings with Miss Grace Dodge, who, as you all know, is overwhelmed with work, reformatory, educational, philanthropic and social. All letters are answered promptly, and not only that, but she finds time to write personal, graceful notes of recognition for services rendered, even if they have already received the substantial recognition of a pecuniary recompense. Let me, as a closing suggestion, mention the fact that the W. C. T. U. women of Central City, Nebraska, have agreed among themselves to answer all letters at once, even if they must send a negative reply.

STARTLING STATISTICS FROM A SCHOOL.

BY LUCY A. WIGGIN.

"I hurt my finger this morning," said Carrie, a child of seven years, in a primary school to-day, holding up her little hands for the teacher's sympathy.

"How did it happen?" asked the teacher.

"I went to the saloon for beer, and the screen door swung back and pinched my fingers. I cried hard, it hurt so," said the child.

"Why did you go there for beer?"

"My mamma sent me."

"Oh," said the teacher, "little girls should not go to the saloon. They see men drink and play cards and hear them curse. It isn't a nice place for children. Tell your mother the teacher said please do not send you there again. We must be little ladies here, and ladies do not go to such places."

"I go there too," said another child.

Then the question was carefully asked: How many children in this room sometimes go to the saloon for beer? Forty-eight of the fifty present raised their hands.

It seemed incredible that so many children should become acquainted at an early age with the interior of a saloon. The average age of these children is about eight years or less. They do not belong to the lowest stratum of society by any means, but are children of well-to-do work people, living in one or two rooms, wearing quite good clothes; some of the mothers go out to work.

Many pitiful incidents occur to show the general demoralizing influences of the saloon on any neighborhood. One dear little girl, Bessie, had been absent from school some days. The children said she could not come for she had no shoes. Teachers more often supply these, and other much needed articles, than is generally known, so Bessie's shoes were furnished.

One day the teacher went in search of her in the dirty back street where the family kept a cheap boarding house. The little maid was seen coming down the street with an old shawl over her head and shoulders, and with something on her arm, but her bare, little feet red and cold on the frosty sidewalk.

"Where are you going?" questioned the teacher.

"To the butcher's shop," said Bessie readily.

As she tucked the ragged old shawl around the child she discovered a tin pail instead of a basket on her arm.

"You are going for beer, aren't you, dear?" asked the teacher.

"My father sent me," said the child trembling with fear.

Later the teacher made an earnest effort to induce the parents to allow her to place Bessie where she would be well cared for and taught; but no, they needed her to run errands. A startling murder occurred in this miserable family the following Sunday, and Bessie was released from the cruel father forever. In a drunken fight with the mother the father struck her with a chair; a boarder tried to defend her but was in danger of losing his own life, when he seized a heavy iron poker and struck the striker dead.

The convenient saloon is almost wholly responsible for this and other terrible tragedies. Familiarity with such scenes is demoralizing to the children of a whole neighborhood. Tender hearts are hardened and the way paved to a downward career.

God speed any wise measure to free the land from this terrible blight upon childhood, and curse upon manhood.

St. Louis, Mo.

HOMES FOR HOMELESS CHILDREN.

There are many lonely homes where the matrons frankly avow they do not want the care and responsibility of a child. They shrink from the added trouble involved. Trouble, they call it. Why cannot they realize that if life be spared, age will come, and that if they have secured the child's love by love freely given, the foster child may prove a boon and blessing when little else remains to comfort. No missionary work seems so meritorious as that of rearing to worthy citizenship a homeless waif of our own race that has been rescued from the drift of the world.

What a crown of compensation awaits such a missionary! Never do I see a childless woman lavishing upon a lap-dog that which would make comfortable and happy some sad-eyed orphan, that I do not marvel at the willful perversion of the maternal instinct, and am tempted to repeat what I once declared to certain readers, viz., the Deity never made a four-legged creature for woman's lap!

*

COUNT each affliction, whether light or grave,
God's messenger sent down to thee; do thou
With courtesy receive him; rise and bow;
And, ere his shadow pass thy threshold, crave
Permission first His heavenly feet to lave;
Then lay before him all thou hast; allow
No cloud of passion to usurp thy brow,
Or mar thy hospitality; no wave
Of mortal tumult to obliterate
The soul's marmoreal calmness; grief should be Strong to consume small troubles; to commend
Great thoughts, grave thoughts, thoughts lasting to the end.

—From "Aubrey de Vere."

THOSE who are tired from the strain of long and constant work—even they could tell of the tonic effect of regular and much demanding labor; it may be monotonous, and it may become wearying after many years, but it leaves no time for illness, none for melancholy or for dawdling on lounges, and none for mind weariness, which saps the life and cuts the wrinkles sooner than labor. It is moth and rust that corrupt.—Anna C. Brackett.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The power of faith—"Daniel was taken up out of the den of lions and no manner of hurt was found upon him because he believed in his God."—Dan. 6:23.

Mrs. V. H. Danforth, Jamestown, N. Y., a year or two ago started to raise $1,000 to place a fountain in the corridors leading to Willard Hall to commemorate the founding of the first local W. C. T. U. at Chautauqua, N. Y. This was the first one organized in the United States. Mrs. Danforth, a quiet, retiring woman, not much used to public affairs, undertook the work with much trepidation but with a great desire to see it accomplished and with strong faith that God would help her in the undertaking. Her faith and works have been rewarded. She has just sent $63.66 making in all so far sent to the fountain, $331.49. Beside this, the Chautauqua Association has voted to give $300 dollars towards it which is to be paid by December 1st. Mrs. Danforth writes: "One morning while on my couch somewhat indisposed, a letter came from President Lewis Miller, requesting me to drop in to a meeting of the directors. I arose and went. . . . A very little talk from your representative and the announcement came—a vote for $300 for the Chautauqua Memorial Fountain. Was not that generous? I think so and so expressed it for myself and for all the white ribboners of the county. Was it not an answer to prayer? God will give success if we but ask in faith."

***

"I could scarcely realize how grand our Temple is," writes Mrs. H. C. Pharr, Morgan City, La., "until I stood inside one of its elevators on September 7 and was swiftly carried up and brought down. I visited Willard Hall, and there resolved that our little union should have a place there. We will very soon send our first payment on $100." If the president of every "little union" in the country would determine as Mrs. Pharr did that its name should be upon the panels of Willard Hall, it would be there, for one determined woman in a union can accomplish it. My sisters, when will you learn that to will in a noble cause is to do? When God is on our side we can accomplish anything if we give it our time and strength. Twenty-five dollars came from Joliet, Ill., W. C. T. U., first payment on pledge of $100; $10 from Holtz, Mich., W. C. T. U., proceeds of a Demorest contest; $27.75 from Cortland, N. Y., W. C. T. U., on $100 pledge. The North Capitol W. C. T. U., of Washington, D. C., has sent $13 on their pledge. The Bellefontaine, Ohio, union has sent another $20 on its pledge. Mrs. Rathmell writes that $5 of this amount completes the Baby Band. She says Miss Lizzie Slicer, who is almost blind, secured sixty names for the Baby Band, and one brave little boy, Dwight Smith, only six years old, got $2 in his mite box, telling people the story of the Temple. Seven dollars and thirty cents came from the W. C. T. U. of Coeyman's Hollow, N. Y., the contents of the mite-boxes of Mrs. A. D. Tompkins and Mrs. H. E. Smith. With this beginning the union hopes to raise $100. The following unions have sent the amounts noted below on $100 pledges: Omato W. C. T. U., Hazelwood, Minn., $20; Livingston, Mont., $25; Willard W. C. T. U., Cottage Hill, Kan., $16; Akron, N. Y., $10, for Erie county pledge; Armory Hill, Springfield, Mass., $28.95; Hydesville, Cal., $29; Santa Barbara, Cal., $5: Denison, Kan., $20; Sioux Falls, S. Dak., $30; Hannibal, Mo., $5; Scotch Grove, Iowa, $9; Hutchison, Minn., $17; Wabasha, Minn., $25; Atkin, Minn., $35; Oberlin, Ohio, $12.75; Medina county, Ohio, $40.38; Marietta, Ohio, $6.20; Granville, Ohio, $10; Canton, Ohio, $36.70; Van Orin, Ill., $20; Jordan, Ill., $35.10: Mendon, Ill., $10; Jerseyville, Ill., $25; Mt. Pleasant W. C. T. U., Providence, R. I., $20; Portsmouth, R. I., $21.57: Providence, R. I., $20; Washington, R. I., $5; Uniontown, Pa., $11.10.

***

Mrs. A. L. Simmons, Kenosha, Wis., writes as follows: "Enclosed please find $25 making $50 paid by Kenosha union. As we have received no help from other unions, we have concluded to have Kenosha union instead of Kenosha county on our tablet. There is another good reason for the change. Some of the other unions can raise $100 as easily as we can, and will undoubtedly set about it when they find we are working for our union only." This is as it should be. Unions should see that their own names have a place on their state tablets before they go to work for the county or district.

***

Mrs. Omar Gillette, Kingman, Kan., sends $1.53, the gift of five little girls. These girls have been meeting at her house; they call themselves the Temple Band. They are making a quilt which they are going to sell for the benefit of the Temple; they are also forming a Baby Band. Mrs. Gillette hopes to raise $100 for the county, but says money is very scarce, and that their best women live in sod houses and make great sacrifices to keep up the temperance work. Mrs. M. Anna Smith, of Chicago, lets not her three score years and ten keep her from working for the good of the little waifs of Chicago; she is constantly teaching them temperance. The Burr Mission Industrial School through her sends 75 cents for the Temple, and the L. T. L., of the Home of the Friendless, $1. This means a great deal of self-denial.

***

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite box, descriptive card and bulletin; remember, all who fill a mite-box ($3.65) before next April will receive a photographic group consisting of Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple. All drafts should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh. All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

The Union Signal AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Thou, O Lord, remainest forever; Thy throne from generation to generation.—Lam. 5: 19.

GOSPEL AND GOVERNMENT.

Canon Farrar preaches against the liquor traffic in no uncertain terms. For the benefit of our excellent clerical brethren, we print an extract from a recent sermon delivered by this great man in Chichester Cathedral. Taking as his text, Jeremiah 5: 9: "Shall I not visit for these things, saith the Lord; shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" he said:

"In the days of Pagan Rome, the multitude to the number of eighty thousand thronged the vast Coliseum through the whole day, while the gladiators hacked each other to pieces, or the wild beasts leaped on Christian martyrs in the white hair of their age, or the original beauty of their youth. Men and women had learned to gloat upon such scenes, and in their selfishness of heart never gave one thought of pity to the victims. The conscience of the land was sophisticated by custom. Reckless custom had brazed their hearts. Many of them were kindly hearted men, who felt no shame in acquiescing in a state of things which every one accepted because their hearts were drugged with sophistry and habit, and to a nation cruel by sport and bloodmire, there was nothing left at last but to exclaim, 'Arise, ye Goths, and glut your ire.' And yet the willing martyrdom of one Christian, a poor eastern monk, put an end to those games forever. In the reign of the Christian Emperor Honorius, St. Elemicus, in one hour, redeeming his name from oblivion, and rendering inestimable service at the cost of life itself, leaped into the arena to separate the combatants. In vain they turned their swords against him. He persisted until the vast multitude rose up in fury and overwhelmed him with stones. A reaction arose, and in the revulsion of feeling, the games were abolished forever.

"But repentance came too late to save the empire of Rome. Six years later the accumulated vengeance fell, and Alaric and his Goths burst through the burning gates, and devoted the guilty city to pillage, massacre, and flame.

"Let people not imagine that their morality is so exalted that such things cannot now happen. God sees through shams. What was the essence of the deadly sin of the ancients in these games but the sin of immoral acquiescence in deadly wrong? But were they not immorally acquiescing in a wrong, different, indeed, and, on the whole, far less shocking, but in its consequence far more deadly, less apparently cruel, but involving a more fatal reign, a more wide spread iniquity? There is no redeeming nobleness in the curse, which, for more than two centuries, has been destroying England, a curse daily at work in the poorest regions of great cities, a pestilence walking in darkness, an arrow destroying at the noonday, incomparably more deadly in its effect, and incomparably more desirable in its surroundings than were the games of the gladiators. It destroys more bodies and souls every year than were ever butchered to make a Roman holiday, and its surroundings are all of squalor and depravity, all of moral and spiritual decay and dissolution.

"Those only can deny these assertions who never trouble their fastidious selfishness to face the clear evidence of them. Such people look down from the height of their imagined superiority. It is sufficient for them to speak of 'political faddists,' or 'temperance fanatics,' and to think that they have thus relieved their conscience from every duty in alleviating this innumerable multitude of wrongs. Do they really suppose that by a wave of the hand they can set aside all these miseries? Would they think so themselves if the consequences of drunkenness, as they really are, could be suddenly made visible to them? If the bodies of all those whom drink has slain, morally, physically and spiritually, in the last two hundred years alone, could be brought together, they would scarcely be able to make their way through the streets for the multitude of corpses and the blood would incarnadine the multitudinous seas.

"Taking but one single element last year in England alone, 1,136 persons were recorded in the public register as having died by the most shameful and agonizing of diseases—delirium tremens. This is but one comparatively uncommon form of the curse which has thousands of ramifications, and which blighted every region of the world. To think of the sights so common in this Christian land is enough, if they have any consciences at all to make them weep, as it must make angels weep, and might also make devils blush for their handiwork in defacing the image of God. Who is it debases splendid human materials into mere funnels for drink? Who makes the corpses of manhood, these twice dead with something worse than death, these who singed and scorched in every faculty tumble further into the flames of temptation which they suffer to be kindled on every side? Who injures the weak? Who fosters the appetite? Who multiplies the temptations to which, with the hereditary taint in their veins, they are all too certain to succomb? Who increases the multiplicity of flames about which poor human moths flutter for long hours, and scorch themselves to death? If it be true that 'the sight of means to do ill deeds makes ill deeds done,' then, can those who have never taken any part whatever in mitigating the terrible and awful curse of England repudiate all responsibility for this state of things? Day by day the innocents are growing up to fill the miserable ranks of the army of drunkards, as by hundreds and thousands death mows them down. If the pagan form of evil was the hurricane, this is the pestilence, and better far the hurricane, with its thunders and lightnings, and its tempests, its partial and temporary devastations, awful though they are, than the noisome pestilence whose path is never crossed, whose silence is never disturbed, whose progress is never arrested, which walks silently through the breadth and length of the land, breathing poison in every heart, and carrying havoc into every home, and from day to day, and year to year, with intolerant and interminable malignity, sends its thousands and tens of thousands of helpless victims into the ever-yawning and never satisfied grave. They are pouring away the very blood of their lives and flinging away the eternal jewels of their souls into the till of the publican. And everywhere the minimum of resistance is confronted with the maximum of temptation. The most wretched are left to sting themselves to death in the circle of gin shops, with which, as with a ring of fire, they encircle the very lowest of their slums.

"They cannot lay any flattering unction to their souls by saying these are exaggerations. They are not; they are under-statements of a curse no human understanding can grasp and no human tongue sufficiently describe. They have been informed by the great statesman who said, as a shudder passed through the House of Commons in the full Senate, that the evils caused by intemperance are more deadly because more continuous than the evils of war, famine and pestilence combined. They are confirmed by the reiterated statements of every judge upon the bench, by the multitude of magistrates and prison officials, by all the doctors of the great hospitals, by every honest policeman who walks their streets, by every clergyman who has to deal with the poorest and lowest class in every parish. Might not Pagans point to all the accumulated evidence of nameless horrors which week by week the police courts, and month by month the sessions chronicle in the midst of professed Christianity, and say: One Christian martyr died, and the games sanctioned by immemorial custom fell for centuries. Warning has been given against these evils, and you still suffer them to go on. Many a long year the air has been tremulous with sighs, filled as with a rain of tears of blood, and still they continue, suffering the children to be destroyed at home and bringing eternal shame on the glory of England abroad by the way in which they suffered the sale of their ardent spirits to degrade and destroy race after race of the weakest nations of the world.

"It is not only men who are sufferers from drink. Women maddened into fiends by gin may be seen in our streets, fighting and tearing each other among a circle of dirty and drink degraded spectators, mid language foul enough to make fire burst from the polluted air. Read of the cruelty and loathsome tragedies which the police courts reveal, and of which the wives and daughters and mothers of drunkards are the victims. Hear the shrieks of the drunkard's wife through the by lane when the gin shops are closed—and then go home and repeat at your table the stale and decrepit joke that temperance reformers use such intemperate language. Think of the daughters whom drink has made unmaidenly, of the mothers made shameless, and then think if we should be satisfied with our position when we have repeated some paltry and threadbare epigram for the continuance in a Christian land of the system which brought in its train such things as these.

"If you symbolize the demon of drink in Christian England it will be more besmeared with children's sacrifice and parents' tears than Moloch. In the worst days of terror not one hundred children in a year were ever buried in any kingdom of Ammon or of Moab, but I have read how, in a single English city in the year, one hundred and fifty children were overlain by drunken mothers. I know of children poisoned by gin, killed by the taint of gin, children burning with a horrid craving for gin, children starved, knocked about, neglected, beaten, left at home to burn themselves, flying from the horror of drunken parents to sleep in cellars among the rats, or to hide themselves, as one did, in the chimney of a neighbor's house. They die like flies from the taint, or grow up dirty, repellant, depraved, thievish, beyond the reach of beneficent activity, to occupy the cell of the felon, to lie in the suicide's grave, or to become the scourge of the society of which they are the helpless victims. Some one must be responsible and some one must be guilty for this massacre of the innocents, and when any one of them, who, even by immoral acquiescence in such a state of things, is in any degree guilty of it, shall stand before the throne of God, do they suppose the angels of the little ones who see the face of their Father in heaven will not plead, trumpet-tongued, against the deep damnation of their taking off? England must summon up her courage and burst these strangling bonds or she will perish by them. Rid of the present system of drink, she may fearlessly face the perils of the future. Yet sometimes I wonder whether a scourge has not been placed in the hands of our foes. A scourge that will smite and not spare. God grant that the consciences of this great nation may yet be aroused, and this terrible and continuous curse put to an end."

His sermon lasted more than an hour and a half, and was listened to with rapt attention by a great audience, including a large number of the clergy and the bishop of the diocese. We hope they laid these brave, strong words from the lips of one of the noblest Christians to heart, and will act accordingly upon election day.

THE NEXT THING.

A recent number of THE UNION SIGNAL gave answers of many state presidents to the inquiry of the National President, "What Next?" for the W. C. T. U.

These answers were nearly uniform for pursuing with intense zeal the methods already working out such grand results; but such variety of suggestion was made as to the relative importance of measures that it may be the reader is as puzzled as before, and must still depend upon our experienced and far-seeing leaders for discrimination as to the next step.

Perhaps the statement of a few plain principles of action may be useful and welcome as within the grasp of every wise hearted white-ribboner, alike needful for the brave, true woman working in her obscure, lonely nook, and for those bolder spirits who lead the masses.

The warrant of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been the direct revelation to clear the earth of the open saloon, that "The King of Glory may come in." The work of the W. C. T. U. has been, First. To arouse woman to a realization of her divine commission. Second. The spiritual interpretation of law as related to universal brotherhood, the homes of the nation, and the government itself. Third. To accomplish the miracle of miracles of making men see these things as they are; "to open men's eyes to see the fountains in the wilderness was as divine a work as to smite the waters from the rock."

None know so well as a W. C. T. U. woman how swiftly hearts grow old when the revelation comes of human need, of human ignorance, of human indifference, and of woman's helplessness; heads become silver-crowned and faces wrinkled, and some tender souls slip away into the Beyond, stricken by the vision of sin and the sore struggle to establish a sentiment for universal justice in the careless, scheming, suffering world and in the theology-ridden church. None could have borne it except that

"Just as we leave our mortal moorings
On this upward path,
Just so do we receive outpourings
Of immortal faith."

Of necessity, in a great organization, there are many points of view and conflicting personal interests, but there is only one universal right, which is, that the will of one must yield to the weal of all. The universal rule for this problem is, let each woman—

1. Distrust her own infallibility.
2. "Step out of self, step into Christ, step into heaven," for "Unmeasured love is all there is of heaven."

Many standpoints of view originate oppositions, which sometimes involve mere differences of opinion; at other times an enlightened spiritual nature sets up its antagonisms, to disregard which is fatal to all the powers that make for eternal life. But it is the highest wisdom to recognize the point at which opposition becomes useless and to yield to necessity. "Only when we have reconciled ourselves to necessity," says Carlyle, "are we free, and in reality have triumphed over it." These sad, stern words should ever be illustrated by a picture that hangs in a noted gallery. A noble warrior, who has never bent to mortal foe, is confronted on the edge of a precipice by a pale, bold specter. The man of war measures the enemy with his eye and knows that he has met his master, who points to a yawning grave at his feet. The armed knight steps grandly down into the dark pit, and as he descends, turns with a look of such matchless majesty that Death flees in terror into distant blackness and glory breaks forth from the sky on the head of the vanishing conqueror. The spirit that has learned how to yield to necessity sings wordless measures of grand anthems not "caught" from the earth world.

The W. C. T. U. began its life on the spiritual plane; only here does God meet His children face to face. Our great mission to the world has been to proclaim "Jesus passeth by." We have no other. To fail to see Him would be to proclaim our own blindness and would end in doing our own fruitless works. Because the need is great and the workers few, many of our best women in their zeal seem driven by the furies, possessed of the demon of work. The danger is that such will miss the heavenly vision. We must bar out hurry and worry, ambition and love of power if we would have spiritual lumination.

The supreme "next thing" for each and all is to keep the God consciousness, as Henry Wood calls it, and absolutely to deny the power of all below the spiritual plane. Then every work will fall into orderly sequence, and result in triumph, because the spiritual consciousness outranks sense and judgment, and is unerring in its dictates.

COLUMBIAN DAY NOTES.

Concerning the prayer of Bishop Fowler on Columbus Day a famous visitor remarked: "During its delivery the pope's nuncio looked about him as if all this were no concern of his. The gray haired Cardinal in his red robes gently inclined his head—there were centuries of progress in this tribute to a Protestant's prayer. 'Our Chauncey' put the last touches to the notes of his speech. One hundred thousand persons paid good attention—considering that nobody could hear except a few about the stand. It was a long prayer and a good one—best of all, thanks were offered for 'the emancipation of man and the exaltation of woman.'"

***

It was significant that women were right at the fore in the dedicatory exercises of the great Columbian celebration. At the request of Mrs. Potter Palmer, Lady Henry Somerset represented the British Women's Commission, of which Princess Christian is president, and rode with Mrs. Palmer in the great procession at the head of the board of lady managers. Both ladies were cheered all along the line. At the exercises in the Manufactures building, Mrs. Potter Palmer's address was received with enthusiastic applause. Miss Monroe, author of the dedication ode, and Miss Le Moyne, who read it admirably, were presented with laurel wreaths, and Miss Hayden, architect of the Woman's building, was presented with a medal. Women everywhere were put where they belonged by the liberality of the progressive management. Not only to Mrs. Palmer and Lady Somerset, but to Mrs. General Logan and our own "Chieftain," as they drove by in the line of thirty carriages set apart for women, cheers were given as generously as to men. The human heart loves the good-will of humanity, and women bore larger part in such recognitions than ever before on Columbus Day at the mightiest of expositions.

***

A great meeting was held in the Auditorium after the wonderful day's ceremonies at Jackson Park. Judge C. C. Bonny, originator of the congresses, presided. Rev. Dr. Barrows offered prayer, and Archbishop Ireland made the address. It goes without saying that the address of Bishop Ireland was eloquent as the gifts of the man and the splendor of the occasion could make it, and broad as the prairies in spirit. The archbishop said that congresses were the apex of this pyramidal exposition by as much as mind is greater than matter. He said the congresses would consider, if not dispose of, "every question that vexes man's soul," and that "to make dust stand erect in man" was the highest known achievement of the Creator. He came squarely out for woman and her new sphere, for the temperance and labor questions and everything good, new and true. We rejoiced that Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Charles Henrotin were on the program—the latter being Judge Bonny's co-chairman of the congresses. We grieved that so noble a man as Rutherford B. Hayes sat on the platform without a word of recognition. Only in a republic (are republics ungrateful?) could an ex president thus have sat in the presence of a great audience of his fellow citizens. We do not care for "the dignity that doth hedge a king," but we believe that certain recognitions are due the ex chief magistrate, especially when he is a man so rare and excellent as General Hayes.

"I GO ACROSS."

In every organization there is a final factor, and we call it the motive power. See the great Cunard liner lying at its wharf! It is the outcome of centuries of ingenuity and skill and toil; it has the length of many streets; it is a town compacted within walls of oak and steel. It has tall masts with pennon fair, and a thousand beating hearts on board; it swings slowly from its moorings and turns with purpose toward the sea, and white salutes fly out from ship and shore with human love gleaming upon them all with the light that is from heaven—a wonderful picture of the world, nay, a world in miniature is the great beautiful ship, and in all the beauty and pageantry of its departure, with the heart's romance symbolized in waving hands, in music and in flowers, who thinks about the unseen, steady, swift moving power without which it would be all as farcial as the soot flakes that fly from its great chimneys?

Away below the water-line, hidden in the bowels of the great ship, is its propelling power, the little screw, faithful, forceful, unhasting, unresting, that sets itself against the mighty surge of the Atlantic, and says in every pulse, "I go across." After a while the passengers settle themselves and have some small sense of that resistless motion that "goes across" and does not yield one atom to the hindering waves or adverse winds or awful power of gravitation and great hindering power of inertia. Night and day the screw measures itself against the sea; all of man's aspirations, all of man's restless fate is symbolized in its motion. It conquers the most enormous forces of the earth, that little, steady, tireless thing, and ere the week rolls round, the ship that dared comes looming bravely up out of the fogs, new signals wave, tender hearts beat with joy, and the great "grayhound" comes to its rest beside the wharf. Even as it is with the ship, so it is with the life of man—harmonious, beautiful, strong in body and spirit, the world's epitome, the long result of time; man, beautiful in body and mind, freighted with all art yields and nature can decree, but without the coiled up tension of a purpose that can draw all his forces after it, he is but a bauble at the first, and a spectacle at last. The will is the engine of the mind; the purpose is God in man. King, in ancient days was a great word and meant "I can," the man who can. Every hero has moved as a ship moves across impeding waves, as its engine made regnant by the unseen heart of fire, so must man meet his fate, so must he concentrate every power and every gift in the highest gift and power sent down from God, the will, the purpose, the determination. For lack of it men float at the mercy of the waves; for love of it great men drive straight onward toward their port.

"The star of an undaunted will
It rises in my heart,
Serene and resolute and still
And calm and self possessed."

AN UNRECOGNIZED FACTOR.

A wide-awake young New England minister, Rev. Mr. Galbraith by name, in a recent sermon, made the following keen observations:

In the last few years all the New England states have taken backward steps on the liquor question. We see local Solons sitting to preserve the lives of infant lobsters and ridiculing measures to preserve boys. Politicians may safely snub the church, but they will crawl before the wielder of the beer mallet. It is an age of commercial unrest, and this is confined to no class. Ministry and laity, rich and poor, bards and bankers are all in the race for money. It is an age of syndicates; the interests of life are ruled by stock gamblers; wages are getting lower; rents are going higher; the cost of living is increased; the distance grows greater between the poor and the house of God. Put your ear to the ground and you will hear a ground swell that will not down. The race for wealth is desecrating the Sabbath. The Sunday paper meets us on the way to church. Sunday labor is becoming alarmingly prevalent, and nothing but a miracle can save America from becoming a Sunday bar keeper at the World's Fair. There is a wave of miasmatic literature sweeping all over the land. The quail of realism—God save the mark—teaches that all men are impure, all women fallen. When the leading member of an evangelical church will give a card party in a down-town hotel on the night when his church is holding revival services, when the élite of Boston—yes, its evangelical church members—will go to hear an actress whose portrayals the press dare not print as she gives them, then it is time for the church to be aggressive and outspoken. We have the means; we have the men. Oh, for a baptism of the Spirit.

The only vitally important omission of this progressive pastor is that he did not say, "We have the women"—as well as the men. The grotesque stupidity of the church in these times is that she does not utilize in every one of her departments the power of Christian womanhood and that the Christian voter does not place her side by side with himself at the ballot box, that together they may vote out the reign of rum and ruin. When we have descended through a few more circles of perdition the church will perhaps discover this method as the one that can right up the ship of state, well-nigh submerged under the yeasty foaming, tawny waves of alcoholic liquor, tobacco and impurity.

"Man is a son of God on whom the devil has laid his hand, not a child of the devil whom God is trying to steal."—Phillips Brooks.

***

One of the best proofs that this life is only a preparation for another, is its incompleteness. Those who reach the highest development that earth can give, feel as if they were but just prepared to begin to live.

***

"Men cannot be made good by law." (Gov. Boies, of Iowa, upon the prohibitory laws.)

"We have long known that. But they can be made harmless."—N. Y. Independent.

***

Here is a golden sentence from that sturdy reformer, Gilbert De La Matyr, two of whose ancestors were imprisoned in the Bastile because of their love for the people: "Remember we take ourselves and the result of our life-work among others with us to constitute our eternal destiny."

***

One of our ablest thinkers sends this bright suggestion: "Let us have a microscope instead of a telescope for a little in our work. For my part I can only be too thankful that from the first both the telescope and microscope have been the instruments most handled by the steady-eyed white ribboners.

***

That was a beautiful saying of Emerson, "Let the poppies grow with the corn" by which he meant, take your rest and your leisure in connection with your work, but do not make a business of your recreations; let them come in as the embellishment of every day. But while I perceive the charm of this utterance it is my painful duty to admit I do not know a white-ribboner on the earth's surface who acts according to its teachings; perhaps this is the saddest fact in our annals and the one that speaks most dubiously for our future success; perhaps on the other hand it is but another example of the great law supremely illustrated in the supremest act of history and enunciated in these pathetic words, "He saved others, himself he could not save."

***

Among the many delightful reminiscences of America's Sir Phillip Sydney, otherwise called George William Curtis, who has recently entered into rest, the following is one of the best. It seems that when Mr. Curtis was editor of Putnam's Magazine, surrounded by financial and other difficulties which might well have excused his attention to details and the lesser personalities that gathered round him, he had as office boy a poor, lonely child of nine years, named James. But Mr. Curtis never came into the office without saying to this boy, "Good morning, James, it's a pleasant day," and on going out would always make some friendly observation. The boy James is now a leading merchant in New York City, and with the first money at his command he bought a picture of his kindly employer which he regards as one of the choicest possessions in his now beautiful home.

***

There is not to-day a more fearless or convincing preacher in the United States than that good Presbyterian white ribboner, Rev. Dr. J. H. Ecob, of Albany, New York. He says: "The whole tribe of politicians and worldly-wise statesmen call out in chorus—'Keep to the church, your own proper sphere, preach to us about the other world, hands off from this one,' but believe me, my brethren, just so long as politicians, statesmen and economists are so running things that we have thirty bushels of corn in our national granaries for every man, woman and child in the country, besides untold millions of other bread-stuffs, while in our great cities men, women and children are starving to death; while things are so run that we have hundreds of tons of silver and gold piled up in our national treasury and are at our wits' end lest we should have a surplus, while at the same time millions of our fellow citizens men, women and children are toiling day and night for wages that will barely keep the breath of life in them; while things are so run that every one of our Christian cities is composed of an up-town of palaces and a down-town of cellar and garrets, dens and brothels—while things are so run that this Christian government fails to protect the people against the twin curses of strong drink and tobacco which are consuming every year fifteen hundred millions of the people's money—just so long will you and I, if we are prophets of God, have a most strenuous, restless and fiery mission."

ON DUTY.

NORTH DAKOTA.

INGATHERING.

The state convention was held in Lisbon, Ransom county, September 23–26. At two o'clock Friday afternoon the convention was called to order by the president, Miss Adelaide M. Kinnear.

The devotional exercises, consisted of singing, responsive reading of the Crusade Psalm and prayer. The afternoon was devoted to the usual routine work of appointing committees, and reports of officers and the executive board were heard.

The opera house was beautifully decorated with flowers, plants, flags and the various banners of the state, county and local unions. Miss Kinnear, as president and state organizer, reported sixty-three lectures given, twenty one women's meetings and six children's meetings held.

Friday evening the opera house was well filled. The city extended welcome to the convention, through Hon. T. A. Curtis, mayor. He spoke of the prohibitory law, and said it was as well enforced in nearly every town as any other law on the statute books.

In behalf of the churches, Rev. Davis, of the Baptists, greeted the convention. He said: "As a union, you are uniting the whole church of God." Mrs. C. D. Austin, in a very happily worded address, bade the convention welcome, in behalf of the Lisbon W. C. T. U. Mrs. A. C. Carr, of Northwood, responded to the addresses of welcome in a most gracious manner, closing with the hope that the old adage of "Every one for himself and the devil take the hindermost" might soon be truly rendered "Each for the other, that there may be no hindermost." Hon. Alfred Dickey spoke in explanation and behalf of woman's work in the World's Fair.

The event of the evening was the president's address, a comprehensive and able document, which was indorsed by a rising vote of thanks. The lady octette enlivened the exercises by appropriate music.

On Saturday important business was transacted, committees reported. The papers on franchise by Mrs. M. B. Goodrich, on work among foreigners by Mary B. Bennett were specially interesting. Mrs. E. A. Mears and Mrs. Benedict reported encouragingly concerning the "home."

A beautiful banner given by the president to the union that had the largest percentage of increase was awarded the Lisbon union. The presentation was made by Mrs. Gammons, retiring state treasurer. The prize Y banner was captured by the Sanborn Y's.

A large audience gathered in the evening to hear Mrs. Lathrap of the National, but she was too ill with a cold to speak. An interesting program was extemporized. Mrs. Pierson, chief of the Y's, spoke. Misses Parmentier and Mabel Wheeler, Y's, read excellent papers, and a bright L. T. L. recited, "Illustrated by Snakes," which was cheered to the echo.

Sunday morning a masterly address was delivered by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap. It was strong and convincing; the Christian voter's position was clearly arraigned. Miss Emma F. Bates, state lecturer on purity, was to give an address in the afternoon but was unable to be present on account of the opening of the state normal school. A temperance love feast was held instead and pronounced the most blessed hour of the convention.

The great event of the convention and of the day was the address in the evening by Mrs. Lathrap. The audience was delighted with her witty illustrations and home thrusts. Monday was the closing and business day. The elections of officers resulted as follows: President, Miss Adelaide M. Kinnear, of Fargo; vice-president, Mrs. Emma F. Vail, of Foreman; corresponding secretary, Mrs. D. W. Shinn, of Casselton; recording secretary, Mrs. Carrie Allen, Lisbon; treasurer, Mrs. Effie G. Beecher, Grand Forks.

Strong resolutions were adopted; a memorial service was held and a symposium on "What Next?" "God be With You till we Meet Again" was sung; the W. C. T. U. benediction was repeated and the third annual was over.

The next annual is to be held in Fargo.

The corresponding secretary reported 1,150 paid up members.

A most cheering report comes from the corresponding secretary of the Cooperstown W's, Mrs. Lucy M. Brown. The union was organized early in September with about twenty active and ten honorary members. The young ladies will soon either organize or unite their efforts with the W's. Enough funds have been subscribed to defray the expenses of a free reading room and there is nothing lacking but the room. They trust some place will be opened for so blessed a purpose. The county paper will give a column's space which the W. C. T. U. will use to help form public opinion. It is to be hoped that this union will be the lever under the law makers, urging them to enforce the law against the "blind pigs"—so called drug stores.

May all grace abound to the Cooperstown union.

EMMA F. BATES,
State Reporter, Valley City.

PENNSYLVANIA.

CONVENTION POINTS.

Of the state convention held at New Castle, October 7–11, too much cannot be said in praise. The good people of New Castle received us most cordially. All business matters and reports were attended to promptly. There were some changes made in the officers. Regretfully we parted with our beloved president, Mrs. Mary H. Jones, who felt that she could no longer assume the duties of the office. Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. H. Forrest, also tendered her resignation which was reluctantly accepted, for a more faithful or efficient secretary could not be found anywhere. The officers elected for the coming year are as follows: President, Mrs. Anna M. Harmer; vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Mary H. Jones; recording secretary, Mrs. Olive Pond Armies; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Rebecca K. Chambers; treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Woods. As Mrs. Woods has been for so many years the treasurer, some of her constituents felt that she needed "watching," so on Tuesday she was presented with a beautiful gold watch and chain as a token of the esteem in which she is held.

Mrs. A. P. Hamilton, of Sharon, was elected state superintendent of literature, instead of Mrs. Gray, who resigned her position. Misses Elizabeth Greenwood and Anna Shaw delighted every one with their addresses. Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National superintendent juvenile work, was present through the convention, and on Y night gave a fine address on "The Ideal Young Woman."

The vast church looked beautiful with its drapery of autograph cards which were festooned gracefully all around Over 4,000 yards were used. Our state superintendent of juvenile work was made delegate at large to the National Convention. Excellent reports were furnished the city papers by the local reporters.

Mercer county has just held one of the most successful county conventions in its history. The first afternoon a mass-meeting of the public school children was held, in charge of the county superintendent of juvenile work, at which excellent addresses were made by Mrs. Helen Rice and Rev. Miller. Quilts made by the L. T. L's for the temperance hospital were on exhibition. Mrs. Rice delighted all by her able lecture on "God's Hand in History" the first evening of the convention.

Miss Elizabeth U. Yates in her lecture on "Woman's Sphere" was so well liked that a number of appointments were made for her in the county. Miss Yates organized two new unions, one at Jamestown and one at Clarksville. A fine report of contest work was given by Miss Burch, county superintendent. One hundred silver and sixteen gold medal contests have been held during the year, which places Mercer as the "banner" county in the state, as it was last year. Preparations are being made for a grand gold contest. The officers for the ensuing year are, president, Mrs. G. D. Devitt; vice-president, Mrs. Breckenridge; recording secretary, Miss Crawford; corresponding secretary, Miss Burch; treasurer, Miss Stewart. The delegate to the National Convention was Mrs. Devitt, alternate, Mrs. Maud J. Elliott.

Crawford county held a good convention. Miss Henrietta Moore gave a very fine lecture. Mrs. M. B. Ross, their worthy president, tendered her resignation, which was very reluctantly accepted. She is succeeded by Mrs. J. D. Wyman. Erie county has a new president, Mrs. Alice Trow.

Fayette county presents some excellent resolutions, adopted at the last county convention, some of which would be worthy of imitation by other counties.

In closing, the new reporter asks the white-ribboners of Pennsylvania to send us items of interest from their various localities, so that we may not have to play the part of a modern Egyptian and be obliged to make "bricks without straw."

ADDA BURCH,
State Reporter, Greenville.

OHIO.

STATE CONVENTION.

The charming little city of Piqua, Miami county, entertained right royally our state W. C. T. U. convention, October 5–7 inclusive. The doors of her fine Presbyterian church swung wide and free for its day and evening sessions, to whose proceedings the daily press gave generous space and commendatory editorial notes. To our 311 delegates lovely homes and warm hearts said "come in." In short, every possible courtesy was shown us. Our memories of the place and people will always be bright and sweet.

Our time honored state president, Mrs. H. L. Monroe, of Xenia, called the convention to order and presided throughout with her wonted grace and ability. Her re-election was greeted with applause. Mrs. E. J. Purdum, Chillicothe, was chosen treasurer; Mrs. A. H. Clevenger, Wilmington, corresponding secretary; Miss Anna Pollock, Newark, recording secretary, with Miss Effie M. Hecker, Miamisburg, as her assistant. The trustees elected were Miss Emma L. Goodwill, of Canton, and Mrs. H. E. Hammond, of Cleveland. Rev. Anna H. Shaw was made a member of the state organization.

The reports of state officers and of superintendents from our twenty-five departments evidenced good work done by the nearly twelve hundred white-ribboners in our six hundred and fifteen local, fifty-nine county and twenty-five district unions. Only three of Ohio's eighty-eight counties are without W. C. T. U. organizations.

Admirable addresses of welcome were given by the mayor, E. M. Wilbee, in behalf of the city, Rev. P. M. Weddell, for the ministerial association of Piqua, who assured us that the ministers of the city were in perfect sympathy with the work of the W. C. T. U. Dr. T. L. Hughes, Mrs. Dr. W. I. Fee, for the local W. C. T. U. and Mrs. W. S. Mertz, for the Y's. Fitting responses were given by Mrs. Dr. Bashford, of Delaware, and Miss Frances H. Ensign, of Madison. Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge addressed a large audience, her subject being "Our Legacy to the Next Generation." Her fine thought and unanswerable logic gave strong, bright wings to truth. Rev. Anna Shaw's address Friday evening was inimitable.

The Crusaders' "love feast," conducted by Miss Esther Pugh, was a precious season, all too short for the time allotted. The presence of Mothers Thompson and Stewart, Scripture reading from the last chapter of Deuteronomy, earnest prayers, soulful talks and the singing of the dear old Crusade hymns were inspiring. One hundred and five Crusaders stood up and were counted.

The motion to amend the constitution by doing away with district organizations, after thorough discussion was lost. The superintendent of jail and prison work assured us in her report that a bill will be introduced in the state senate next winter, which, if passed, will place a police matron in every town in Ohio.

Resolutions were passed, based upon God the creator of all, Jesus Christ the ruler of all nations, and the Bible His word of light and life to all mankind, praising God for His gracious dealings with our organization during the past year; heartily indorsing the work of the National Reform Association, the plans of the Woman's Suffrage Association; protesting against Sabbath desecration; the dissemination of unclean literature; the exportation of alcoholic liquor into heathen lands; that we strongly protest against the governmentcarrying on a saloon in the Soldiers' Home at Dayton; that we petition the Commissioners of the Columbian Exposition to prohibit the sale of liquors on the grounds, and to keep closed gates on the Sabbath during the Exposition; that we implore our legislature to pass a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes in this state, also a law prohibiting saloons within four miles of a college. These are but part of those adopted. The report of plan of work committee, will be given in my next letter.

The seats of the twentieth district were draped in mourning Thursday, in consequence of a telegram announcing the death of their president, Miss Sarah R. Shank, of Enon. Among her last words she asked to be remembered at this convention. Another telegram brought the sad word that Mrs. Phelps, of Dayton, also a prominent W. C. T. U. worker, had passed away.

Greetings from Indiana W. C. T. U., state convention in session at Marion, also from others, with greetings from the Grand Chief Templar of the Independent Order of Good Templars, were received. All of which were answered by Mrs. Lillian C. Bethel, committee on telegrams.

I regret that only mention can be made of the delightful program presented the last evening by the Young Woman's Branch, a full report of which will be sent to the Oak and Ivy Leaf. Choice music, rare addresses, presentation of the Y banner to the Bedford Y's by Miss Smith, of Cleveland, the beautiful bouquets from Piqua Y's to Misses Ensign and Robbins were among the enjoyable features of the occasion. God bless the Ohio Young Woman's Branch of the W. C. T. U.

CONVENTION NOTES.

Nine ministers were introduced and spoke words of cheer.

At the thank-offering service, Mrs. Trego in charge, the amount of money received was $45.86.

Mrs. Juliet B. Riley, of Troy, mother of our state president, was an honored guest.

Miss Frances H. Ensign stated that Ohio had furnished the best workers in the Y Branch of the W. C. T. U.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

Trumbull county sends another good report. The last annual meeting at Bloomfield, September 28, told steady advance. Miss C. S. Burnett, for three and a half years the live president of the county, has entered the educational work as principal of a school in North Carolina. She was presented with a purse of twenty-nine dollars and two W. T. P. A. souvenir spoons as an expression of love and sympathy from the women of the county. Her loss to the work will be keenly felt. Mrs. Anna Woodard, of Lordstown, was elected to the vacant place. We bespeak for her the coöperation of the county W. C. T. U. Miss Jeannette L. Olmstead was ordained by the Congregational church at Gustavus, October 17, Rev. Anna Shaw preaching the ordination sermon.

The Friends' church at Ashley was kindly opened for the annual meeting of Delaware county, Mrs. Trego, county president, in the chair. Increased interest and steady advancement were reported. Officers for the ensuing year were elected, also superintendents of ten departments. The convention made a Temple offering of $5. Mrs. Trego gave an earnest evening address. A gold medal contest had been arranged for the following evening, but one contestant failing to appear necessitated a change. Handsome books were given each speaker, the audience deciding by vote which was best. A tie vote resulted. The exercises were highly appreciated by the enthusiastic audience.

Morrow county held an interesting convention the 24th. Mrs. Lillian C. Bethel rendered helpful service throughout, and delivered an excellent lecture on W. C. T. U. work. Loyal, faithful work is done in this county.

Licking county held an enthusiastic, successful annual at Newark, September 20. The county work has gone on grandly during the year. Granville and Newark are each raising $100 for the Temple. Thirteen departments are carried on. The department of jail and prison work, Miss Grace Trowbridge, superintendent, reports one hundred and sixty eight gospel temperance meetings, thirty-two cottage visits, one hundred and eighty five visits to the inmates of prisons, and held prayer-meetings three times a week; Miss Trowbridge has willing assistants. Licking county has a leader consecrated to the work, Mrs. Mary A. Eggleston, also a valued addition to her working force in the person of Mrs. J. M. Graham, late of Alaska, now president of Newark union. Mrs. Graham is a good speaker and will visit any union for moderate compensation—one half the admission fee going to the union securing her services. The successful work of the thirteenth district is largely due the grand leadership of its president, Mrs. Trego, who will represent it at the National Convention. Utica union has established new headquarters, friends generously paying their rent. The dedicatory services included an enjoyable reception to friends.

Delaware was recently favored with an address from John G. Woolley in the interest of his Rest Island Home. A large audience greeted him and a good collection was taken at the close of his brilliant appeal in favor of this "Refuge Home." West Berlin and Ashley unions are engaged in contest work.

The County Union is a bright little paper published by Franklin county W. C. T. U. whose fifth annual convention was recently held at Worthington. Mrs. Lillian C. Bethel, twenty-first district president, an efficient parliamentarian, conducted two drills. A question drawer conducted by Mrs. A. E. H. Peters, Columbus, was very instructive. Good resolutions and plans of work were adopted. We are looking forward with hopes of better work in the future.

Grandmother Potter, the oldest member of the W. C. T. U. in Franklin county, resides at Flint, and is in her 99th year; she takes a lively interest in all benevolent and reform work.

HANNA A. FOSTER,
State Reporter, Berea.

MAINE.

A GRAND CONVENTION.

Never was a gathering of our clans favored with lovelier weather than that of September 27, 28, 29, the days during which our eighteenth annual convention was in session at Lewiston, "the spindle city." A good brother had been heard to say he didn't see why a church as large as the Pine street Congregational should be wanted just for a woman's meeting, but before the session closed, he must have acquired some new ideas regarding the size of woman's meetings, for the delegates reached well toward the rear of the great church, and chairs had to be brought in, so eager was the community to hear our speakers. Indeed the convention quite overflowed its borders, many Auburn homes opening to the delegates. The president of the local union, who also acted as secretary of the entertainment committee deserved great credit for the manner in which she filled her trying position.

The platform was adorned with flowers and banners, among which that twice captured New England prize banner of which Maine is so proud, was conspicuous. Aroostook and Franklin each brought a brand new county banner. The fine crayon of Miss Willard, presented our beloved president at last state convention, did its best to console us for the absence of the original. At the base of the portrait was a card knotted with white ribbon and bearing Whittier's beautiful lines:

"She knew the power of banded ill,
But felt that love was stronger still,
And organized for doing good,
The world's united womanhood."

As at the two previous conventions we were favored with the services of the Maine Ministerial Quartette, composed of Revs. Lewis, Bath; Jones, South Portland; Clifford, Farmington; and Wentworth, Dexter, presiding elder of the Bangor district. We find it a great advantage to have four "brothers-in-law" so well versed in all the latest temperance and prohibition songs and so ready with selections appropriate to the moment.

On the first evening, cordial greetings were extended by Rev. G. M. Howe, pastor of the church, and by Mrs. Wyman in behalf of the local union; Miss Hattie Mayo responding in a very happy manner. Mrs. Stevens followed with her annual address, which was in many respects the best she has ever given. In closing she paid a beautiful tribute to Madam Willard whom she has personally known and loved. Mrs. Emeline Burlingame Cheney gave an address of telling force.

The report of the corresponding secretary was of great interest, proving that the local unions exist for practical work. The treasurer's report showed a gain of over 600 members, and if, as Miss Willard claims, each new worker is worth a thousand dollars to the cause, we are certainly getting rich. The financial receipts were unusually large.

One of the pleasant features of the convention was, as usual, the introduction of visitors. More clergymen were present than ever before, not only from the neighboring churches, but from other towns and cities. Whatever their theological beliefs, all seemed to agree in one particular—cordiality toward the W. C. T. U. Rev. Mr. Hinkley, founder of Good-Will farm, a home for boys, received a hearty welcome. He stated that five boys had already been sent there, directly through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. The Episcopalian pastor announced that he had been led to favor unfermented wine at the sacrament by literature which the department superintendent had given him. The French Baptist missionary, stationed in Lewiston, made an earnest plea for work among his countrymen. We were invited by School Superintendent Stuart to visit the city schools, though he laughingly cautioned us not to come in a body. An invitation to inspect the Bates mill was also received. Mrs. Caroline Rich, wife of the professor of Hebrew in Cobb Divinity school, presented each delegate a copy of an original poem written for the occasion. In connection with the Sunday-school report the National superintendent, Miss Lucia Kimball, assured us that the quarterlies would continue to give us good temperance lessons. Miss Kimball made a touching appeal for the adoption of needy children into Christian homes.

Letters were read from Mrs. M. T. W. Merrill, of Portland, National superintendent of work for homeless children, and Mrs. Ole Bull, of Cambridge, Mass., of the temperance cooking department, both of whom were prevented by illness from being present, much to the regret of all.

Hon. Nelson Dingley, president of the Congressional Temperance Society, was introduced as a man "who always turns his wine-glass right side up, i. e. upside down."

Daily Bible readings were conducted by our evangelistic superintendent, Mrs. Snow, Mrs. S. H. Barney, and Miss Troworgey, a gifted woman from Hancock county, who has been made state evangelist. At the memorial service after appropriate singing by the quartette and Scripture reading by Mrs. Barney, the names of our dear departed comrades were read. The list was very long including the name of a former state president, Mrs. Maria Gower Sargent, and many others who have been prominent in their own localities.

As the second day of the convention was Miss Willard's birthday, a cablegram expressing our love and sympathy was sent her.

For the fifteenth time our beloved state president was placed at the helm, receiving every vote cast. All the other officers were reëlected.

The second and last evenings were occupied by Mrs. Barney and Mrs. Livermore respectively. The theme of the former was "The World's Bondage." Mrs. Livermore gave her new lecture, "The New Aristocracy." After referring to the aristocracies of various countries, of blood, of intellect, of wealth, of military and ecclesiastical position, she proceeded to consider the new aristocracy of philanthropy and reform—the aristocracy of service.

The convention closed with Mary Lathbury's benediction hymn, interspersed with Scripture reading by Mrs. Stevens.

DEPARTMENT NOTES.

The larger part of the day sessions was occupied with department reports, the vertebræ of our organization. Each one contained facts well worthy of mention, but as the present writer was obliged to report some sessions for the local daily, she failed to catch much that would be of special interest to THE UNION SIGNAL readers.

Mrs. H. J. Bailey reported more than 2,000 copies of the Sunday law freely sent out, many sermons and addresses on Sabbath observance, 600 signers and indorsement of six churches and the Salvation Army to World's Fair Sunday closing petition.

Through Mrs. Wyman's department thirty five children have been placed in permanent and seventeen in temporary homes; twenty-nine are now waiting for adoption.

Mrs. Susan French reported a large amount of temperance literature distributed at fairs. At St. Albans the white ribbon drove a gambler and a cider seller off the grounds.

A fine paper on kindergarten work was read by Miss Scales, of Portland, where the union maintains a free kindergarten.

The state officers were authorized to endeavor to have the Massachusetts reformatory for women made an institution for New England, also, if possible, to secure a matron for the women in our state prison.

Eighteen thousand World's Fair pledge cards have been ordered for the children in the Sunday-schools.

Mrs. Harvey reported large supplies of literature sent to the lumber camps, and recommended that a man be employed to do evangelistic work during the logging season.

One new department was adopted—work among foreigners, Mrs. G. M. Howe, wife of the pastor of the church in which we met, being made superintendent.

Through the press department over three hundred and fifty original articles and about one thousand columns of selected matter have appeared; thirty-five papers run weekly W. C. T. U. columns, while eighty five publish occasional articles furnished by the local superintendents.

The board of superintendents organized for the ensuing year with Mrs. Geo. S. Hunt, chairman, and Mrs. Clara Mumford, secretary.

MARY L. FRENCH,
State Reporter, Auburn.

INDIANA.

NINETEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The nineteenth annual convention of the Indiana W. C. T. U. was held in the beautiful new city of Marion from October 6th to 11th inclusive. Marion, situated in north central Indiana, with her numerous gas wells, her seventy factories, her beautiful homes, churches, schools and streets, nothing to mar except the saloon, bids fair to become a great city. In fact, all Northern Indiana is fast becoming one continuous village, so numerous have become the factories in the gas belt. Our hostess, the Marion Central union, entertained us with genial hospitality.

The business sessions were held in the First M. E. church, and noonday lunch was served in the church parlors. A part of the evening services were held in the Christian Temple just across the street. Fully twenty sermons were preached by white ribbon speakers on the Sabbath.

The mass-meeting held on Sabbath afternoon at the Opera House was a great gathering, Mrs. Nichols presided. Mrs. Fields conducted the opening exercises. Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Barnes made the addresses. On Friday evening Mrs. Woodbridge spoke in the Christian Temple, a masterful address indeed.

Y evening services were held in the First M. E. church. Mrs. Barnes made the address of the evening. The young ladies presented Miss Dickson with a beautiful Bible in token of their appreciation of her services. The Terre Haute Y won the prize banner this year.

Mrs. Balch held a grand gold medal contest on Monday night at the Christian Temple. Mrs. Daisy Welborn won the medal. Rev. Long, pastor of the Christian Temple church, Mrs. Elizabeth Johnson, teacher of elocution, and Mr. B. A. Bedgood, principal of the high school, served as judges. The contest netted $57 at ten cents admission.

Mrs. Nichols' address was a strong one—a careful review of the past and a keen outlook into the future. After congratulations for successes, warning of dangers which may come and are at hand. In Mrs. Nichols we had a leader who went before us. She is beloved in the homes of rich and poor alike. I have heard her sing lullabys to miners' children and talk household affairs with miners' wives and then go to the public assembly and teach men and boys how to live. The address had its warning note faithfully sounded in words as gently firm as her response to the "What next?" in THE UNION SIGNAL. Mrs. Nichols declined reëlection as our president. The choice was as follows: President, Mrs. L. M. Beck, Bloomington; vice-president, Mrs. A. N. Fields, Petersburg; corresponding secretary, Miss L. E. Reed, Indianapolis; recording secretary, Mrs. A. V. Hastings, Richmond; treasurer, Miss M. G. Hay, Indianapolis.

The Organizer Publishing Company held its annual stockholders' meeting in the Christian Temple, Saturday morning, electing a new board of directors and transacting other business. The subscription price of the paper was raised from seventy-five cents to one dollar per year.

The board of superintendents selected Mrs. M. R. Dennis president, and Mrs. S. C. Hanel, secretary. There were 320 voting members in attendance at the convention and quite a number of visitors.

The Hadley Home trustees reported the contract for the building let and that the laying of the corner-stone was planned for in the near future.

The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and vines. A large portrait of Miss Willard and a picture of the Temple were among the decorations. The Marion Central union presented Miss Whistler, the miners' evangelist, with a nice indexed Oxford Bible, a kindly deed which was much appreciated.

We missed the face of Mrs. K. T. A. Straw, our efficient superintendent of juvenile work. Mrs. A. A. Truitt, of Muncie, is once more active in our ranks. We were glad to welcome her back. Rev. T. C. Neal, of Marion, wrote a hymn for the Sunday service, also one for the close of the convention.

Mrs. L. M. Thompson, our state evangelist, gave a Bible reading each day full of great strength and power, as were the consecration services. Mrs. Agnes Perry, state superintendent of soldiers' and sailors' work, assisted by other speakers, held several meetings at the Soldiers' Home. Eighty veterans signed the pledge. Mrs. Trish organized a colored union in the A. M. E. church during convention. The prohibition brethren were in attendance at all the sessions.

At 7 o'clock p. m., Tuesday evening, Mrs. Nichols' gavel fell, and she declared the nineteenth annual meeting adjourned.

The press of Marion gave large space to the convention and was courteous in the extreme. We enjoyed our stay, and would be glad to go again.

On the way home your correspondent called at state Prohibition headquarters; Mr. Clark, the genial editor of The Phalanx, says we were never in so good a condition before. The Democrats concede our vote to be 20,000, after a careful poll of the state. Governor Worth has made a magnificent canvass, and is a vote winner. He speaks twice per day and preaches on Sunday and is in splendid condition physically and spiritually.

What the future has in store for us we do not know, but may God keep us true to the work.

SADIE B. WHISTLER,
State Reporter, Terre Haute.

TENNESSEE.

THE STATE CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual state convention has just closed its last session. It was entertained by the East Nashville W. C. T. U. The sessions were held in the Baptist church on Fatherland street, which was beautifully decorated with appropriate mottoes and plants and flowers, banners and pictures. A life-like picture of Judge East, who holds aloft the prohibition banner, as that party's nominee for governor, occupied a prominent place on the platform. Miss Willard's picture was there, of course, as bright and fair as usual, and the Temple in all its magnificence.

I think it was the general verdict that it was the best convention we had ever had. The reports of work done marked an improvement over the work of the year before, showing that while we are moving slowly, still we are advancing. The strongest unions in the state now are the Central Nashville, the East Nashville, and the Harriman. A report of all the good work done by those unions the past year would overflow the pages of THE UNION SIGNAL, and then the half would not have been told. There are many other good unions in different parts of our state doing splendid work. The report of the department superintendents showed much faithful work.

The absence and serious illness of one of our best beloved workers, Mrs. Belle Sasser, of Middleton, state superintendent of juvenile work, was much regretted. Many fervent prayers were given that her life might be spared to us for many years.

Mrs. Mary McGee Snell, of Mississippi, was with us during the convention, giving a Bible reading each morning at eleven o'clock, and an address on Wednesday evening. She certainly deserves the many good things that have been said of her. Mrs. Meriwether's annual address, and her lecture Thursday evening, "The Silent Seven," was good as her addresses always are, and was listened to attentively by appreciative audiences.

Our convention had first been arranged for October 6, 7 and 8. And under the impression that it was in session at that time, telegrams of greeting had been sent from Newburg, N. Y., Danville, Ill., and Newport, Ky. Our meeting was held October 11, 12 and 13, and as the conventions sending telegrams had closed before we met, I was instructed to send to those state unions through THE UNION SIGNAL, greetings and a hearty hand-shake from their sisters in this state.

Mrs. Wells, of Chattanooga, presented the Southern assembly work and W. C. T. U. school of methods. This institution is located at Waynesville, N. C., is thirty-five miles southwest of Asheville, and is intended not only for W. C. T. U. work, but to help the cause of education and philanthropy in general. The assembly building will have, when completed, fourteen rooms besides an auditorium seating two thousand people. Twenty acres of land and three thousand dollars in money had been raised in the beginning. Twelve thousand dollars more are required to finish the work. When finished it will be the pride of the South and every Southern woman should take an interest in it and do what she could to help along the enterprise. The old officers were reëlected: Mrs. Lide Meriwether, president; Mrs. Ida T. East, corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. A. Gibson, recording secretary; Mrs. Mary B. Abernethy, treasurer; Mrs. Mary Bang, general vice-president. We hope to have an organizer in the field soon, the selection and appointment of which was left to the executive committee.

The plan of work committee received a rising vote of thanks for the most practical plan of work for the coming year ever presented in our state. On the last day of convention a reception was tendered the W. C. T. U. by the Central Nashville union at the residence of Mrs. Ida T. East. This was the social feature of the convention, and a perfect success.

During convention an excellent lunch was served every day at noon, by the local W. C. T. U's. The music for the convention was arranged for by the Nashville unions, and furnished chiefly by the Nashville schools and church choirs. No part of the program was received with more hearty commendation.

The convention from beginning to end, and in all its details was an unqualified success. And the members leaving for home, scattered out over the state, inspired, revivified, strong in the purpose to do more and better work the coming year than ever before.

SILENA MOORE HOLMAN,
State Reporter, Fayetteville.

THERE has been a surprising advance in Northern Dakota which three years ago began with almost nothing. New York has just had a splendid convention, the best of all the years. The work moves on in Michigan. District W. C. T. U's are holding conventions that rival the state, with Miss Frances E. Griffin and Rev. Henrietta Moore as speakers.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

RESOLUTIONS in memoriam were passed by the Harvel, Ill., W. C. T. U., at the death of a beloved member, Miss Lizzie Dorsey, who passed away October 7.

MRS. MARGARET SOMERVILLE, of Philadelphia, a friend of the temperance cause and an interested reader of THE UNION SIGNAL, entered into rest on the 11th of last August.

MOTHERS Thompson and Stewart, of Ohio, and Mrs. Zerelda G. Wallace, of Indiana, have been elected delegates at large from their respective states to the National Convention.

MRS. DELLE C. H. COX, National organizer, has just concluded the best series of lectures ever given in Centralia, Wash. Fifty new members have joined the ranks as a result, and a Y. W. C. T. U. was organized.

A NOBLE worker and one whose loss is deeply lamented was Mrs. L. K. Merrick, who died August 29, at her home in Dillsboro, N. C. Her co workers in the W. C. T. U. ranks desire to place a suitable monument over her grave, although her most enduring memorial is written in their hearts.

THE Bristol News, a Lay county, South Dakota, paper, calls loudly for the enforcement of prohibition. The editor says "that there shall be no more blind pigs" in the town if he has to enforce the law himself, alone, and emphatically adds that law and order must prevail in Bristol. And so the good work goes on.

MRS. J. C. BATEHAM, National superintendent of Sabbath observance, while en route to the Denver convention, was unexpectedly detained by business and unable to be present. She writes that she has changed her residence from Asheville, N. C., to Williamsburg, Kentucky, and requests all her correspondents and all unions to make a note of the new address.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Walworth county W. C. T. U. will hold its annual convention November 9 and 10, at Delavan. A Demorest medal contest will be held on the Y evening, and on the evening of November 10 Mrs. Helen G. Rice will address the convention.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

Dr. C. G. Davis, president of the hospital's staff of physicians, has returned from Europe where he spent the summer in rest and travel.

The annual meeting of the Hospital Association was held at the hospital, September 26, and was attended by many of the members of the association, and by a few friends; but we wish the friends of the institution had filled the parlors full to overflowing. Had this been the case we feel sure they would have become interested in the reports of the officers of the board and been strongly tempted to join the "inner circle" that guides this department of the temperance work. At present there are about forty members of the association, but this should be doubled many times for when alcohol as an active medicinal agent is omitted from the pages of the materia medica, one of the strong links of intemperance has been broken. This is an age of inquiry and the six years' record of the National Temperance Hospital is giving proof that the welfare of this and coming generations demands that alcohol be not used. England has her Temperance Hospital started by men, but America has her Temperance Hospital started and controlled by women. The work could be helped along if more women were members of the association.

The house physician reported that the number of patients entered during the past year was 121; the number of diseases treated was 157; number of patients cured, 139; number improved, 12; number unimproved, 6; number of surgical operations, 131. Of these 103 were females, and 18 were males. The number of outside patients treated by the house physician was 329. Mortality for the year was 2¼ per cent. Number of letters received by house physician, 1,436. Hospital leaflets sent out numbered 8,000. In the patients treated 13 different nationalities were represented. Occupations represented in patients treated were 25. Patients were received from twelve states. During the year 76 applications have been received from young ladies desiring to enter the training school for nurses.

After the reports were given the association elected the board for the coming year. When the association adjourned the board called a meeting and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. M. E. Kline, 62 E. Forty third St.; vice president, Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 343 La Salle Ave.; recording secretary, Miss Ella Snyder, 4403 Lake Ave.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ralph Greenlee, corner Polk and Ashland Boulevard; treasurer, Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams St.

During the month of February the following donations were received by Mrs. Hornby, the matron at the hospital. Canton, Ill., W. C. T. U., ten cans fruit, twenty two glasses jelly. Unknown, two glasses jelly, old cotton and linen. Per Mrs. Hobbs, two quilts. Camden, O., W. C. T. U., one quilt, three glasses jelly, nine cans fruit, one Bible, old cotton. Duquoin, Ill., W. C. T. U., one quilt. Racine, Wis., W. C. T. U., one quilt. Unknown, two cans apple butter, one jar pears. Hannibal, Mo., W. C. T. U., sixteen glasses jelly. Camp Point, Ill., W. C. T. U., nine cans fruit, six glasses jelly, old linen and cotton, twelve towels, one bottle grape juice.

ELLEN SNYDER, Sec.

DONATIONS FROM MAY 20, 1892, TO SEPTEMBER 24, 1892.

Arkansas—Little Rock: Y's, $5.
California—Pomona: $2; San Jose: $1; Pasadena: $5; Sacramento: Y's, $1; Hanford: Y's, $1.
Connecticut—Stratford: $1; Plainville: Y's, $3; Waterbury: Y's, for blankets, $5; Guilford: Y's, $1.
North Dakota—Eldridge: $1.35, Drayton: $10.
South Dakota—Woonsocket: Y's, $2; Canton: $1; Aberdeen: $1.
Delaware—Newark: Y's, $1; Milton: Y's, $1; Camden: Y's, $3.
Illinois—Bloomington: State bed, A. E. S., $87.50; Marengo: $1; Ashton: $14.20; Bloomington: State bed, by A. E. S., $87.50; Chicago: Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, $100; Bloomington: Y's, $1; Harrisburg: $2; McLeansboro: $2; Leaf River: $1; Chicago: Mrs. J. L. Packard, $4.50; Plainfield: $1; Normal: Y's, $1; Evanston: Miss Frances E. Willard, $5; Prophetstown: Y's, $5; Chicago: A friend, $3; Bloomington: State bed, by A. E. S., $87.50; Atkinson: $2; Lewiston: $5; Augusta: $3; Wenona: $1; Peotone: $1; Shabbona: $1; Marseilles: $2; Greenfield: Y's, $1; Prophetstown: $1; Fairmount: Y's, $1; De Land: Y's, $4; Paris: Y's, $1; Henry: $3.14; Pullman: $2; McLean: $1; Polo: Y's, $2; Peotone: $1; Ridgefield: For blankets, $5: Dundee: $1; New Windsen: $3.20; Chicago: Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, $100; Joliet: $4; Terre Haute: Y's, $1; Cain Parish: Y's, $1; Stronghurst: Y's, $1; East St. Louis: Y's, $1; Hazel Dell: $1; Chicago: King's Daughters, $10; Emington: $5; Chatsworth: $1; Hampton: $1; Catlin: Y's, $1; Ivanhoe: $1; Oak Park: $1; Monmouth: $10; Port Byron: $1; Del Rey: $1; Bloomington: State bed, A. E. S., $80.
Indiana—South Bend: Collected by Mrs. Andrews, $10; Fort Wayne: Y's, $1.25; Carthage: Henry Henley, $5; Fairmount: Y's, $1; Green Castle: Y's, $1; Greenburg: Y's, $1; Plymouth: $2; La Porte: 65 cents.
Iowa—Boone: $5; 'Scotch Grove: $5; Danville: $5: Strawberry Point: $2; Ft. Madison: Miss E. Pinchett, $5; Rose Hill: Mrs. F. A. Jervis, $5; Sand Spring: $2; Bethel: $5.09.
Kansas—Elkridge: $1.
Louisiana—New Orleans: $5.
Massachusetts—Fall River: Y's, $10; Fall River: L. T. L., $3.26; Adams: $5; Y's by Ida Clothier, $1.50; Cohassett: $1; Winchendon: $1; Reading: 3; West Medford: $1.
Maine—Westbrook: Y's, $5: Houlton: $2.
Maryland—Chestertown: Y's, $5.
Michigan—Ishpeming: Y's, $1; Coat's Grove: $1; Sparta: $2.
Mississippi—Miss Russell, $1; Greenville: Mrs. Robert Somerville, $1.
Minnesota—Dover: Y's, $5; Le Sueur: $11.50; Richland: $1; South Branch: $1; Rushford: $5.
Missouri—Clarksville: Mrs. M. M. Roberts, $1; St. Louis: Y's, $10; Bonne Terre: $2.50.
North Carolina—Y's, $1.
New York—Browne: $1; Le Roy: $5; Fleming: $3.30; South Easton: $1; South Edmunston: $2; Southhold: 60 cents; Livingston Manor: 25 cents; Batavia: Y's, $3.
New Jersey—Trenton: Collected by A. T. Bailey, $8.50; Salem: $5; Vineland: $1; Port Monmouth: $1; Moorestown: $1; Matawas: $3.65.
Ohio—Plymouth Y's, $1; Millersburg Y's, $1.50; Oberlin: Miss E. P. Little, $1; Miamisburg: $1; New Moorefield: $1; Y's, by C. S. Barnett, $2; Cleveland: West side, $1; Oxford Y's, $2; Greenville Y's, $1; Steubenville Y's, $1.
Oregon—Milton: $2.
Ontario—Wilmington: $1.
Pennsylvania—Kittanning: $5; Langhorne: $5; Forty Fort: 10c.; Penndale Y's, $2: Bennett Y's, $1; Forestville; $1.
Rhode Island—Phenix Y's, $2; Phenix: $10; Providence Congregational church, $6.
Tennessee—Nashville Y, $1.
Virginia—Richmond Y's, $10; Winchester: $1; Norfolk College; $2.50; Riverton Y's, $1.
Vermont—Mooresville: $1; J. T. J., 25c; Danville Y's, $1.
Washington—Richardson: $1.
Wisconsin—Pleasant Valley: $2; Green Bay: $5.
By Mrs. Hornby, through friends, $18.28.

C. E. BIGELOW, Treas.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

California—Santa Cruz: Mary Thompson, $3.65; Long Beach: Mrs. F. W. Perry, $3.65; Kingsburg: Mrs. Jennie Henimick, $5,
Carolina, North—Scotland Neck; Mrs. A. E. Montague, $1; per state treasurer, $31.75.
Colorado—State W. C. T. U., $10; Longmont: W. C. T. U., $11.
Connecticut—South Norwalk: Y. W. C. T. U., $1; F. A. S., $2.
Dakota, South—Wilmot: Mrs. B. T. Metcalf, $3.65; Blunt: Mrs. H. A. Fentress, $2.50; Minto: W. C. T. U. $25; Sisseton: Y. W. C. T. U., $5.
Florida—Melbourne: Ethel Stout, $9.98; Pomona: Mrs. L. A. Squier, $3.65.
Illinois—Rockford: Mrs. J. Beatson, $10; Miss Whipple, $3.65; Chicago: Miss West, $10; George Brinkhoff, Sr., $50; L. T. L. Home for the Friendless, $1; Burr Mission Industrial School, 72 cts.; Peoria: Mrs. Reynolds, $50; Lee Center: Society Christian Endeavor, $3.36; Pearl: Baby Band, $1.30; Victoria: W. C. T. U., $8.26; Paxton: W. C. T. U., $68.80; Carthage: W. C. T. U., $12; Windsor: W. C. T. U., $40; Evanston: W. C. T. U., $3; Abbie: W. C. T. U., $1; Galesburg: W. C. T. U., $1; Nashua and Taylor: Band of Hope, $16; Ottawa: for Henry Rhoel, $3; Lincoln: Ellis H. Hudson, $1; Oak Park: H. W. Austin, $30; Clayton: Walter and Elsie Craig, $3.65; Troy Grove: W. C. T. U., $6.85; Decatur: Frances Willard Darwin, $1; Galesburg: Mrs. M. S. Carr, $3.65; Arlington: Mrs. W. H. Booth, $1; Cooksville: W. C. T. U., $2.73; Sidney: Y. W. C. T. U., $1; Onarga: Samuel Weeden: $2; Bartlett: W. C. T. U., $5; Rock Falls: Mrs. O. Sly, Mrs. M. Vennum, Mrs. E. Knox, Mrs. J. Parnham, $1 each; El Dorado: Baby Band, $5.
Iowa—Strawberry Point: Mrs. L. A. Sill, $5; El Dorado: Mrs. Helen Kent, $2.20; Rose Hill: Mrs. F. M. Jarvis, $3.65; Rock Valley: W. C. T. U., $40; Cherokee county: W. C. T. U., $35; Ossian: per Mrs. Calvorsen, $2.10; Miss Maria Ness, 50 cts; Dows: W. C. T. U., $5; Hopkinton: W. C. T. U., 20 cts.
Kansas—Healey: Viola Ellithorpe, $3.65; Scott City: Jessie Schick, $3.65; Solomon City: W. C. T. U., $3; Wellsville: Mrs. Eaton, $2.
Kentucky—Louisville: Y. W. C. T. U., $25; Newport: L. T. L., $10.
Maine—Fort Fairfield; Mrs. A. C. Plummer, $1; Sprague's Mills: A. W. Estes, $4; Union: W. C. T. U., $15.
Maryland—Buckeystown: L. T. L., $36.
Massachusetts—Wilbraham: L. M. Hodgkins, $3; Provincetown: W. C. T. U., $5; Central Village: Annie Wilber, 25 cts; Laurence: Baby Band, 60 cts; Boston: Alice Loud, $10; Westminster: W. C. T. U., $5; Springfield: W. C. T. U., Armory Hill, $28.95; Cohasset: W. C. T. U., $8.
Michigan—Manistee: W. C. T. U., $25; Hillsdale: W. C. T. U. $25; Climax and Niles: W. C. T. U., $4.50: Fourth District: W. C. T. U., $32; Romeo: W. C. T. U., $10.95; Adrian: C. C. Spooner, $3; Centreville: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Monroe county: W. C. T. U., $40; Owosso: Ernestine Dimmick, $2.50.
Minnesota—Argyle: Mrs. G. T. Valentine, $10; Howard Lake: W. C. T. U., $1: Hawley: W. C. T. U., $3; Minneapolis: employés Central Coffee House, $5; Frazer: W. C. T. U., $1; Oneota and Hazelwood: W. C. T. U., $20.10.
Missouri—Moberly: W. C. T. U., $1; Mulberry: W. C. T. U., $19; Arrow Rock: Mrs. S. M. Thompson, $1; St. Louis: Y. W. C. T. U., $25; Lamar: W. C. T. U., $10; Monroe: Mrs. N. S. Topping, $50.
Nebraska—Stockville: Lyman Fitch, $2.90; per Mrs. Northup, $25; Beatrice: L. T. L., $4.60; Nora: W. C. T. U., $1; Central City: W. C. T. U., $26; Hebron: W. C. T. U., $1.
New Hampshire—E. Andover: Mrs. M. M. Stearns, $1; Dover: Mrs. V. W. Knowles, $3.65.
New Jersey—Victoria: Mrs. Gray and Mrs. Spalding, $3.65 each; State W. C. T. U., $65; Florence: L. T. L., $20; Morristown: W. C. T. U., $9.64; Colored W. C. T. U., $1.81; Matawan: Jennie Clark, $7.30; for bust, $10; Flemington: Mrs. J. P. Bodine, $10; Bakersville: Rose Steelman, $4.65.
New York—Chautauqua county W. C. T. U., $62.83; Sodus: Mrs. Cole, $3.65; Poughkeepsie: L. T. L., $1.36; Copake: W. C. T. U., $3.65; East Randolph: A. M. Davenport, $1.75; Brooklyn: Anna Ridgeway, $7.30; Randolph; W. C. T. U., $5; Onaquaga: Mrs. Brownell, $2; Syracuse: Mrs. H. E. Bates, $1; Catherine: Anna Lattin and Emma Beardsley, 20 cents; Mellenville: E. S. Tenney, $3.65; Fredonia: Edith and Shirley Elgar, $3.75; Rushford: Mrs. Stella Blanchard, 25 cents; Rochester: Mrs. Weaver, $5; Phœnix: Mrs. M. Forbes, $1.07; Allen's Hill: Mrs. H. Gilbert, $3; Ovid: Lena Cox, 30 cents; Lena Arden, 28 cents; —— 42 cents; Penn Yan: Mrs. Launing, $1; Purdy's: Mrs. Teed, $5.
Ohio—Hartford: Miss C. S. Burnett, $1; Delaware: Mrs. Goldrick, $1; Bedford: W. C. T. U., $22; Millersburg: L. T. L., $10.33; Bissell's: Jennie Cowles, $3.65; Lockland: Hannah Mitchell, $3.75; Wooster: Mrs. W. Criley, $1; Wheelersburg: Nellie Brown, $3.65; Portsmouth: W. C. T. U., $2.70; Logan: W. C. T. U., $12; Kinsman: W. C. T. U., $2.66; Granville: W. C. T. U., $15; Medina: Misses Hannah, Lillian and Mary J. Hewes, $1 each; Belmont county: W. C. T. U., $53; Springfield: Mrs. T. B. Graham, $2; South New Lyme: Mrs. T. D. Taylor, $5.
Oregon—Portland: Mrs. E. S. Davies, $5; The Dalles: Mrs. W. H. Fisher, $6.58.
Pennsylvania—New Galilee: W. C. T. U., $10; Mt. Pleasant: Robert Templeton and Mary Warden, $3.65; Chambersburg: W. C. T. U., $25; Penfield: Rev. J. J. Rankin and family, $15; Tidioute: W. C. T. U., $50; Montoursville: W. C. T. U., $10; West Newton: Mrs. Osborne, $5.40; Pittsburgh: Mrs. W. A. Hawley, $2; East Troy: W. C. T. U., $1; Kellam: L. B. Barney, $3.65; Doylestown: Mrs. R. F. Slotter, $5; Philadelphia: E. W. Holflich, $4; Rockwood: Mrs. Annie Growell and Mrs. Rittlemyer, $7.30; Hawley: Miss S. F. Atkinson, 50 cents; New Alexandria: W. C. T. U., $14; Fallsington: Mrs. I. T. Malmsbury, $3.65.
Rhode Island—Providence: W. C. T. U., $20; Mt. Pleasant W. C. T. U. (Providence), $20.
Tennessee—Tullahoma: Mrs. Maynard, $5; Mrs. Arrasmith, $3.65; Harriman: Willie Ollinger, $1; Mc Minnville: W. C. T. U., 20 cents.
Vermont—Barton: L. T. L., $2.50.
Virginia—Norfolk College, Y. W. C. T. U., $5.
West Virginia—Falls Mills, Ettie Haymond, $3.
Wisconsin—Eau Claire: Per Mrs. Stevens, Baby Band and Cherub Band, $5; Johnson's Creek: $3.67; Winneconne: Mrs. S. F. Smith, $2.61; Hammond: L. T. L., $1.30; Cataract: Baby Band, $1.10; Sharon: W. C. T. U., $20; Beaver Dam: W. C. T. U., $15; La Crosse: Colman W. C. T. U., $1; Shawano: Rev. J. V. Hughes, $1; Unknown, 20 cts.; Sales Models, $50.65; Pictures, etc., $4.04.

Ten dollars credited to W. C. T. U., Wabash, Ind., should have been to L. T. L.

Samuel Smith, Lahaska, Pa., was credited with $1; it should be Samuel Betts.

Ten dollars credited to Pueblo W. C. T. U., Colorado, should be East Pueblo W. C. T. U.

W. C. T. U., Vermontville, Mich., was credited with $13, it should be $10.

Total receipts to July 31, 1892, $71,643.25.

ESTHER PUGH,
Treasurer Gift Fund.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

Scott's Emulsion

of cod-liver oil presents a perfect food—palatable, easy of assimilation, and an appetizer; these are everything to those who are losing flesh and strength. The combination of pure cod-liver oil, the greatest of all fat producing foods, with Hypophosphites, provides a remarkable agent for Quick Flesh Building in all ailments that are associated with loss of flesh.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, Chemists, New York. Sold by all druggists.

Publisher's Notes.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL IS NOW READY.

This book so long promised, is nearly ready, and will be used at the National Convention at Denver. Lady Henry Somerset has sent an order from England for five hundred copies to be forwarded to her as soon as issued. It will be a very popular book as it contains the favorite hymns of so many members of the W. C. T. U., besides new ones of great merit. The fact that it has been compiled by Miss Anna Gordon will in itself be evidence of its merit and destined popularity. It will doubtless be found in every union and the homes of most of the members of the W. C. T. U. To add to its value, a few pages have been devoted to appropriate selections of Scripture for W. C. T. U. meetings. Price per copy, 35c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

MISS WILLARD'S ANNUAL ADDRESS

will appear in the first number of THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL, which will be mailed to subscribers on October 28, the day the address is delivered. The message of the illustrious leader of the white-ribbon army will be eagerly sought this year, for it has been a year of unusual experiences. In addition to this address, the DAILY will contain full stenographic reports of each day's proceedings. All white-ribbon workers and all their friends will want each number, beginning with this important first number. So send subscriptions without delay. Price for five days, 25c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FOR EVERY HOME.

The book recently issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, entitled THE JUNIOR PARTNERS, should be in every home. It is very entertaining and exceedingly instructive. The purpose of the book is to illustrate the dangers that beset business men, and to show the relation between the drink habit and insanity. All who have read the book testify to its merits. It is written with remarkable power.

Dr. Thompson writes: "I am fascinated and uplifted."

A prominent physician writes: "I regard it as a beacon light on the stormy sea of ignorance, intemperance and vice. It bristles with jewels of invaluable truth respecting social relations. Its scientific thought couched in the most fascinating story comes as a glad evangel to suffering humanity."

Buy it for your homes.
Place it in your library.
It will do good everywhere.
Price: Cloth, $2; morocco, $3.
Agents wanted everywhere.

We issue no quarterly temperance lesson for December this year for two reasons: 1. The date fixed is December 25, and we are sure that most schools will prefer the Christmas lesson at that time. 2. The Scripture chosen is the same as for September 17, 1893, and we deem it unwise to duplicate the lesson.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Dep't.

OUR DAY,

A Record and Review of Current Reform.

JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

Price: Single numbers, - - $ .25
Yearly subscription, - - 2.50

Published by
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A WONDERFUL LIBRARY.

For many years the most eminent experts in every branch of human knowledge were employed in putting in concise form the substance of their particular department of education. These wise men labored patiently and they labored well. In history, geography, mathematics, in every sub-branch of these subjects, they studied to portray the facts in the most clear manner. They used not a word too much and not a word too little. Each scholar treated his subject in such a way, that when read, it mentally photographed itself on the mind of the reader. These wonderful essays on every subject were then gathered together and published in volumes, which, notwithstanding the enormous outlay of time, brains and money, now form the cheapest and most complete educational library in the world. This shrine for self education is called the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, and its very latest edition revised and brought up to date for American readers, can now be had for ten cents a day for the short period of 90 days.

Educate yourself at home!

Bear in mind that we send you the entire set of 20 volumes, all charges prepaid, on receipt of only one dollar, and allow you to pay the balance at the rate of ten cents a day for 90 days, payable monthly. We also send you a beautiful dime savings bank wherein you can deposit the dime each day.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

While We Are at the Convention

we hope you will read this.

Because

You will be so busy later, reading the Convention UNION SIGNAL that you will forget to send for things that are probably just what you want.

FREE RUM ON THE CONGO. The temperance committees of C. E. societies, Epworth Leagues, etc., can find in this abundant material for temperance meetings. Every Christian should be familiar with its contents. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

UNANSWERED PRAYER. A book for Christian parents, by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. It exposes with a firm but kindly hand the secrets of many a failure in home life. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

BUGLE NOTES FOR THE HOME. Our children should send these temperance bugle notes ringing through the land. Let us have more temperance recitations in schools, Sunday-schools and homes. Price, paper, 10 cents.

CRUSADER PROGRAMS I AND II. Programs for evening entertainments, dialogues for "special" days and everyday times. Mostly temperance. Price, paper, 25 cents, each.

HELPS FOR HEALTH MEETINGS. What its name indicates. Full of suggestions by specialists in the department of health. Menus for hygienic "suppers" combined with W. C. T. U. socials, outlines for study, etc. Price, 10 cents.

OUR TOILING CHILDREN. What can we do—what ought we to do toward the solution of the problem of child labor? It faces us daily—it is a vital factor in the question of life or death of this republic. We can, at least, inform ourselves, so as to be able to act intelligently. Read what a specialist in this line says in the book named above. Price 10 cents.

AGENTS WANTED

For
The Junior Partners,
A Young Woman Journalist,
Childhood, Its Care and Culture,
Glimpses of Fifty Years,
and other books.
For particulars address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Do You Ever Wash Your Hair Brush?

This is the best way: Put one teaspoonful of Pearline into a basin of warm water; wash the brush thoroughly in it; rinse in clean water, and set it aside, bristles down, to dry. This is only one—a small one—of the numberless uses to which you can put Pearline. Once you have it in the house, you will find something new for it to do, every day. It does your washing and cleaning better than soap. Try it on anything for which you've been using soap, and see.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 337 JAMES PYLE, New York.

WATCH THE UNION SIGNAL

NOW for its CHRISTMAS ADVERTISING
It will tell YOU of FINE BOOKS
BOOKLETS
ART NOVELTIES, &c

Just what YOU need for Christmas to give to your friends. For descriptive list send to WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIAT'N
THE TEMPLE
CHICAGO

FREE TICKET TO CALIFORNIA.

For conditions and full information address California Bureau of Information, Box 289, Chicago, Ill.

Nothing makes home so bright, comfortable and healthful as a "Garland" Stove or Range.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

THE GENUINE JACKSON FAVORITE WAIST.

This famous waist is made with unusually flexible, but unbreakable patent, corded stays, with corset steels front and back, and clasp front. No bones are used. It affords good support without the severity of the corset, and is very popular for breakfast wear, neglige or work. The waist is easy as a glove, but the modistes like it because of its snug-fitting and graceful tendencies in dress. It is manufactured by the Coronet Corset Co., Jackson, Mich., one of the oldest and most reliable concerns in the United States.

A VERY POPULAR TRAIN

on the CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY leaves Chicago, daily, at 10 P. M. It is called

"THE BIG FIVE"

is only one day out, and passengers arrive at Denver, Pueblo or Colorado Springs early the second morning.

The "ROCK ISLAND" has become a popular Colorado Line, and the train above referred to is Vestibuled, and carries the "ROCK ISLAND'S" excellent Dining Car Service.

JNO. SEBASTIAN, G. T. & P. A.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

CATARRH

C A T A R H

is a chronic cold with a tendency to blood deterioration and the breaking down of lung tissue—consumption. Aerated Oxygen is the one remedy which cures the disease by removing the cause and purifies the blood. It is the Ideal Remedy for

CATARRH

Treatment sufficient for the Winter, $3. Inhaler, 50c. extra.

For those who are skeptical, we put up a trial size, which we shall be pleased to send for $1.

Send for Pamphlet.

Aerated Oxygen Compound Co., Nashua, N. H.

Chicago Office: 3 & 4 CENTRAL MUSIC HALL.
New York Office: 19 BEEKMAN STREET.

AGENTS WANTED New Topical History of United States

Memorial Story of America

—From 1492 to 1892—

By HAMILTON W. MABIE, Editor of Christian Union. With chapters by Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, Senator DAWES, Congressman BRECKENRIDGE, Col. A. K. MCCLURE, Bishop VINCENT, D. D., FRANCES E. WILLARD, and others equally prominent. Full of new illustrations, and intensely interesting. Every word written this year.

Outsells all other books. Write to-day.

JOHN C. WINSTON & CO., 6th & Arch Sts., Philada

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

California.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad.

Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 723 Monadnock Building, Chicago, Ill., if you desire any urther information as to the country and he accommodations for reaching it.

HOME-SEEKERS' ATTENTION!

The United States government has decided to open, Nov. 22, 1892, for settlement under the homestead law, the unearned lands of the Marquette & Little Bay De Noquet Railroad, heretofore reserved from entry, in Northern Michigan. At the same time the right of the Ontonagon & Brule River Railroad has been denied to a large tract of land in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. This gives an unprecedented chance to locate valuable timber and mineral lands, which are among the best in the Upper Peninsula, and are reached only over the North Star Route (Milwaukee & Northern Railroad) between Chicago and Lake Superior.

For further particulars address C. E. ROLLINS, Land and Immigration Agent, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago.

FOR A LITTLE BIRD TELLS.

It's strange how little boys' mothers
Can find it all out, as they do,
If a fellow does anything naughty,
Or says anything that's not true!
They'll look at you just a moment,
Till your heart in your bosom swells,
And then they know all about it—
For a little bird tells!

Now, where the little bird comes from,
Or where the little bird goes;
If he's covered with beautiful plumage,
Or black as the king of crows;
If his voice is as hoarse as a raven,
Or clear as the ringing bells—
I know not, but this I am sure of—
A little bird tells!

The moment you think a thing wicked,
The moment you do a thing bad;
Are angry, or sullen, or hateful,
Get spunky, or stupid, or mad;
Or tease a dear brother or sister—
That instant your sentence he knells,
And the whole to mamma in a minute
That little bird tells!

You may be in the depth of the closet,
Where nobody sees but a mouse;
You may be all alone in the cellar,
You may be on the top of the house;
You may be in the dark and the silence,
Or out in the woods and the dells—
No matter! Wherever it happens,
The little bird tells!

And the only contrivance to stop him
Is just to be sure what to say—
Sure of your facts and your fancies,
Sure of your work and your play;
Be honest, be brave, and be kindly;
Be gentle and loving as well,
And then you can laugh at the stories
The little bird tells!

—Selected.

LITTLE MARY'S GOOD-MORNING TO GOD.

"Oh! I am so happy!" the little girl said,
And she sprang like a lark from the low trundle-bed;
"It is morning, bright morning! Good-morning, papa!
Oh! give me one kiss for good-morning, mamma!

"Only just look at my pretty canary;
Chirping his sweet 'good-morning to Mary.'
The sunshine is peeping straight into my eyes!

"Good morning to you, Mr. Sun—for you rise
Early, to wake up my birdie and me,
And make us as happy as happy can be."

"Happy you may be, my dear little girl,"
And the mother stroked softly a clustering curl;
"Happy as can be—but think of the One
Who awakened this morning both you and the sun."

The little one turned her bright eyes with a nod:
"Mamma, may I say good-morning to God?"
"Yes, little-darling one, sure you may;
Kneel, as you kneel every morning to pray!"

Mary knelt solemnly down, with her eyes
Looking up earnestly into the skies,
And two little hands that were folded together,
Softly she laid on the lap of her mother—

"Good-morning, dear Father in Heaven," she said.
"I thank thee for watching my snug little bed;
For taking good care of me all the dark night,
And waking me up with the beautiful light;
Oh! keep me from naughtiness all the long day,
Blest Jesus, who taught little children to pray."

—Christian Worker.

UNCLE JOHN'S TALKS.

III.

THE CABINET.

I say, chickens, if there's one thing that "satisfies me to death," as a friend of mine used to say, it's that same cabinet. I think more of it than I do of the President's cabinet, for none of them are out and out Prohibitionists, while this one is. The cigars are gone from the boxes, (for cigar boxes are just the right size) even the smell of tobacco is not perceptible, and any return of such stuff is strictly prohibited—just as ungraceful language is from this shop.

Keep in it? Everything, nearly. I knew a man once who kept twenty or more tools, such as cold-chisels, screw-drivers, gimlets and bits, in a box so small that they had to stand partly on end. When he wanted a small one he emptied the lot on a board and pawed them over until he found it. Then he gathered them all up, put them back with a clatter that made me tremble for the sharp ones, and replaced the box. Took him longer than it has taken me to tell it. We want to avoid all such work as that and this cabinet is for small tools, nails, tacks, screws and all the numerous little things that accumulate in any shop and make it look so untidy. No danger of having too many boxes. Jimmy has the number I mentioned, thirty, six rows, five in a row. If he grows up to be a mechanic and gets a large shop, I think he will have a hundred of them.

Now for contents and arrangement. Number them like the words in these lines. Then all the 5's and multiples will be at the right. First, arrange everything in alphabetical order and then from time to time put those you use most into the places that are easiest reached,—the 5's column, or generally the southeast corner. Don't forget the points of compass in the shop, and don't forget that when you have a surface before you, like this cabinet or a piece of board, we shall use directions as in geography. You will find this a great convenience as we go on. Now you have a general arrangement and the exceptions. I do not think of anything for A, but B stands for bits. They must be kept apart, like quarrelsome children or men, for the cutting edges must not touch anything metallic. Stick pins in the bottom of the box or put in notched partitions, or any way so it is done. The brace can lie on the shelf over the box of bits, if it is not too high. C means chisels. You can keep only cold-chisels here, as the others are too long and too often used in wood working. C stands for current, but that box is number 30, nearest to your hand. It is empty save when you lay in a screw-driver, awl, screw, and button and go to fix the cellar door. When you come back each tool is to be returned to its place.

There is not time to talk about each box, so I give a few of my labels:—Bits, C-Chisels, Current, Elac., Files, H. H. (household hdw), Lawn-mower, Leather, Miscella, Misc metal, Misc-wood, 10, 8, 6, 4, 3, being the whole fifth line (not column) for Nails, each box being divided for common and wire or finishing kinds, and on the last line are Screws, Tacks and Brads. Then I have a few boxes in which I keep any little thing I happen to be working at. You will soon have them all in use. Put a plain label on each one. In the boxes for tacks and screws you want a number of small paper boxes without covers, or perhaps the original papers with the tops cut off, so you can keep each size and kind by itself. Any hardware dealer can give you a lot of boxes that screws come in, each one making two. Never mix things. You will save time in the end by keeping your shop as orderly as a drug store.

My stars! look at that watch! quarter past one! Aunt Mary said 'come to dinner at one', and you can depend she has been waiting just fifteen minutes.

FIVE KINDS OF PENNIES.

A boy who had a pocket full of coppers dropped one into a missionary box, laughing as he did so. He had no thought in his heart about Jesus or the heathen. Was his penny not as light as tin?

Another boy put in a penny, and looked around to see if anybody was praising him. His was the brass penny; not the gift of a lowly heart, but of a proud spirit.

A third boy gave a penny, saying to himself: "I suppose I must because others do." That was an iron penny. It was the gift of a cold, selfish boy.

A fourth boy dropped his penny into the box. His heart said: "Poor heathen! I am sorry they are so poor, so ignorant, and so miserable." That was a silver penny, the gift of a heart full of pity.

But there was one scholar who gave his, saying: "For thy sake, Lord Jesus. Oh, let the heathen hear of thee, the Saviour of mankind!" That was a golden penny, because it was the gift of faith and love.—Exchange.

MOTTOES.

He is idle who might be better employed.—Socrates.
The more we do, the more we can do.—Hazlitt.
Trifles make perfection.—Michael Angelo.
Food thoughts are blessed guests.—Spurgeon.
You will reap more than you sow.—Boardman.
Live up to the best that is in you.—Longfellow.
Laziness grows on people.—Sir Matthew Hale.
Every man has need to be forgiven.—Herbert.
Regrets are useless.—Dr. Poor.
Hear cautiously, decide impartially.—Socrates.
Act well your part; there all the honor lies.—Pope.
To succeed, be ready when opportunity comes.—Disraeli.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I read an account a few weeks ago of a little boy who was looking at the procession in New York City which was carrying the big new Columbus statue to its place at one of the entrances to Central Park.

"Mamma," he asked, "why is the Columbus statue draped in red, white and green?"

His mother, instead of replying, said, "In what country was Columbus born, my son?"

"Oh, he was an Italian, mamma," replied the little boy.

"And what is the flag of that country?"

"The flag of Italy is red, white and green. And our flag is alongside. Oh, I understand it all now, mamma."

I wondered on reading this how many of our Cozy Corner circle would have known why the Columbus statue was decorated with an Italian flag. And I have wondered also, if many of them knew why Spain, too, has celebrated the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Columbus. The facts of history are much more interesting than any "make-believe" stories because we know they are true. Let us store our minds during the coming winter evenings with stories of real events which will be of great benefit to us because of their influence over the lives of men. Yours to learn and to know,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

I am nine years old. I like to read the children's page of THE UNION SIGNAL and The Youth's Companion, and so do my sister and brother. We are temperance children. We love birds and flowers and the flower mission.

Pingree, N. Dakota. LAURA G. LOVETT.

I hope you will always continue to love good and beautiful things, and welcome you to the Cozy Corner circle.

Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read the stories. I am eight years old. I have just come home from Chicago. I went all through the Temperance Temple and think it is very nice. RALPH BRIGHAM.

No. Adams, Mass.

I am glad you saw and liked our beautiful Temple, Ralph.

I like Aunt Jane's Corner the best, but am interested in all the paper, and though only a little girl I look forward to the time when whisky will be no more.

IDA MAY ATCHISON.

Newfane Sta., Niagara Co., N. Y.

And so do we all!

We have a large family Bible with a temperance pledge in it. We have all signed it except the youngest who is a little girl one year old named for Miss Frances Willard.

BERTHA T. SPENCER.

I wish every family in our land possessed such a Bible. You are a fortunate girl, Bertha.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

116.

ACROSTICAL DECAPITATIONS.

1, Behead in that place and leave in this place. 2, Behead to fasten and leave to long. 3, Behead near and leave an attempt. 4, Behead at no time and leave at all times. 5, Behead a rascal and leave a part of a church. 6, Behead to sprinkle and leave to entreat. 7, Behead pardon and leave a particular breed. 8, Behead imaginary and leave a quantity. 9, Behead uncertain and leave an illness. 10, Behead Mohammedanism and leave to bring. 11, Behead an Indian fig and leave a gem. 12, Behead that which is planted in the ground and leave that which will help it grow.

The letters removed in the order given form a notabl event celebrated this month.

117.

WORD SQUARE.

1. A strong drink.
2. Is thought.
3. Close by
4. A title of nobility.

CHARLIE FULTON

118.

DOUBLE WORD ENIGMA.

In "woman's cause";
In "at the brink";
In "temperance laws";
In "never drink";

My first is a liquid,
Which please never take,
For two is a better,
Than men ever make.

SOLON.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED OCTOBER 13.

107. Willard.

108. "We temperance children of to-day will be the men and women of to morrow and we shall fight King Alcohol."

109. "Touch not the cup."

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c. per dozen, post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

And as pretty as if it cost $10, although it was only her old gray serge dyed a stylish navy blue, and worn with a cardinal silk vest made out of a last year's blouse dyed over. Not only that, but the beautiful bunch of tips in her hat were old, faded gray feathers dyed over into new ones.

She began it all just to see if Diamond Dyes really would do all that people said. She had no faith in home dyeing, and sending it to a dyer's was so expensive—but once begun, she did not stop till she had an entire new outfit, and now even the children's old cotton school dresses and faded stockings are dyed as fast as they become shabby.

She finds the colors strong, beautiful and absolutely fast, and knows that home dyeing is a success if done with the Diamond Dyes—you may know it, too, if you will send stamp for free instruction book of home dyeing and 40 samples of colored cloth.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

SEELY'S PERFUMES

THE AMERICAN PERFUMER

If not to be obtained of your druggist Send 50c for Sample box of four odors.

SEELY MF'G CO.
DETROIT, MICH.

'DELSARTE'

Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.

Agents Wanted Also — DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND

Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.

CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.

References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont.

Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order. American Desk & Seating Co. 270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

BEATTY Pinno, Organ, $23 up. Want agents. Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Wase'ton, N.J.

Publisher's Notes.

CAMPAIGN LITERATURE.

Stirring,
Entertaining,
Convincing.
See

TIMELY TALKS.

1. Shall We License the Dram Shops? Prof. Geo. E. Foster.
2. How the Dram Shops Pay the Taxes. Prof. Geo. E. Foster.
3. How the Dram Shops Help Business. Prof. Geo. E. Foster.
4. The Delusions of High License. Herrick Johnson, D. D.
5. License, High or Low, Wrong in Principle. Herrick Johnson, D. D.
7. Our Drink Bill and the People Who Pay It. Rev. J. C. Fernald.
8. The High License Craze. Rev. H. H. French.
12. Fallacies of High License. Frances E. Willard.
12. High License a Backward Step. Pres. John Bascom.
14. Symposium on High License. Mary Allen West.
17. On Which Side Are You? Frances E. Willard and Mary T. Lathrap.
24. Prohibition not an Invasion of Personal Liberty. Herrick Johnson, D. D,
29. High License—Is it a Step Toward Prohibition? Clara Hoffman.
32. Why William Dustin Became a Prohibitionist. Mrs. A. E. Sigsbee.
33. The Greatest Party. Frances E. Wil-
36. Down with the Traffic. John P. St. John.
37. Echoes from History. Charles Sumner on the Third Party.
41, 42. License vs. Moral Law. Rev. F. L. Goodspeed.

SONG LEAFLETS.

1. Saloons Must Go.
2. Samantha and Josiah, and The Battle Cry.
3. Clear the Way and The Cause.
4. Rallying, and "Keep Pegging Away."
5. Prohibition is the Watchword and The
6. Down with Rum.

VOTERS' LEAFLETS.

1. Thy Bottle. John G. Woolley.
2. Christian Patriotism.
John G. Woolley.

SIGNAL LIGHTS.

1. Individuality of Conscience in the Voter. Frances E. Willard.
3. Why the Old Parties Have not Met the Saloon Issue. Prof. W. G. Frost.
5. The Crime of Nations—What Can We Do? Geo. C. Hall.
8—13. Words for Wage Workers. Augusta C. Bristol.
18. Temperance and the Labor Question. Frances E. Willard.
21. Declaration of Independence (new version). Rev. F. O. Blair.
27. Facts for Organized Labor. Augusta C. Bristol.
28. Needed—Only Pieces of Paper. Geo. C. Hall.

Price: Timely Talks, 30 cts. per 100. Song Leaflets, 50 cts. per 100; Voters' Leaflets, 90 cts. per 100; Signal Lights, 15 cts. per 100.

We will send this sample package to any address on receipt of 10c.

For these supplies send to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

VOTERS' LEAFLETS.

A new Series!

V-aluable,
O-pportune,
T-elling,
E-arnest,
R-inging,
S-ound.

Two Numbers Now Ready.

1. THY BOTTLE. By John G. Woolley!

An appeal to Christian voters to consult conscience before party.

2. CHRISTIAN PATRIOTISM. By John G. Woolley.

The full text of the address of Mr. Woolley at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, July 4, 1892. Printed from advance sheets revised by the author.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

SEND orders at once for THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. Price 25c.

Does the Bible contain Scientific Errors?

In the November number of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE this question is asked by Prof. Chas. W. Shields of Princeton, and answered by him with an emphatic NO

The article is one of rare interest. It answers a great number of the questions that are now foremost in the world's thought, and it will help to sustain and strengthen Christian faith everywhere. It is the beginning of a great series in THE CENTURY on SCIENCE AND RELIGION. "The Effect of Scientific Study upon Religious Beliefs" will appear in the December CENTURY. "The Present State of Old Testament Criticism," "The Bible and the Assyrian Monuments," etc., etc., are to follow.

The November CENTURY contains also the most practical suggestion yet offered in the matter of opening the World's Fair on Sunday—from the pen of BISHOP POTTER of New York. The number is one of the most interesting issues of a magazine ever made. In fiction it is especially strong, containing the first chapters of MRS. BURTON HARRISON'S NEW NOVEL OF NEW YORK SOCIETY, "Sweet Bells Out of Tune," as well as three noteworthy complete stories.

Be sure to see the November CENTURY, ready Nov. 1st,—35 cents, on all newsstands. New subscribers should begin with this issue, the first of a volume. The GREAT CHRISTMAS NUMBER ready December 1st. Remit to the publishers, or subscribe through dealers. $4.00 a year. The Century Co., 33 East 17th Street, New York.

Metal Tipped. EVER READY DRESS STAY Will Not Cut Through.

See Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay.

Acknowledged the BEST DRESS STAY On the Market

Made with Gutta Percha on both sides of steel and warranted water-proof. All other stays are made differently and will rust. Beware of Imitations. Take none but the "Ever Ready."

Manufactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.

SPECIAL DEPOTS. { MODEL DRESS STEEL CO., 74 Grand St., New York. BROWN & METZNER, 535 Market Street, San Francisco.

DO YOU CROCHET ?

The GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn., will distribute in Premiums $2,000.00 Gold Coin, for the best specimens of fancy work, to be made only from the Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread. Open to all residents of the U. S.

Send 10c. for Sample Spool Twilled Lace Thread. 500 Yards.

$2000.00 GOLD COIN in Premiums.

Ask your dealer for circulars giving full information. If not to be had of him, write us. DO NOT DELAY. Thoroughly satisfactory proofs of our reliability furnished. GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., GLASGO, CONN.

Illus. Crochet Books, Nos. 1, 2, or 3, 10c. each. 24 Bed Spread & Tidy Patterns, 5 cts. each.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

A SATISFIED CUSTOMER—you know the rest. Our increasing sales prove the truth of the saying. The Hartman Flexible Steel Wire Mat has no peer.

HARTMAN MANUFACTURING CO., Beaver Falls, Pa.

Branches: 102 Chambers St., New York; 508 State St., Chicago; 51 and 53 S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga. Catalogue and testimonials mailed free.

Our Mats have brass tag attached stamped "Hartman."

Recommended for Comfort, Support and Fine Form. Combines best features of Corset and Waist. Much worn by women and misses unable to bear a rigorous garment. Snug fitting, beautifully made. Warranted. Equal to any $1.25 Waist. White, Drab, Gold, Black. Genuine marked CCC. 7,000 dealers sell it. Sent post paid for $1. Jackson Favorite Waist.

CORONET CORSET CO. JACKSON, Michigan.

A COMPLETE LINE OF

DRESS REFORM GOODS,

including the famous EQUIPOISE and DELSARTE Waists, Jenness-Miller Specialties, &c., &c. Send stamp for free illustrated pamphlet on healthful dress. Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 75 Madison St., Chicago.

DICK'S FOOT WARMER SHOES

Worn everywhere; woven by hand; wool-lined; seamless. Where dealers have none we mail postpaid (any month in year.) Ladies' size, $1.25. Men's, $1.50. WM. H. DICK, Manf'r, Dansville, N. Y.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.

St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

RUBBER GOODS Of Every Description BY MAIL. Send for Cat. A. U. BETTS & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Pleas state what periodical you saw our advertisement in.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.

CATARRH

Sold by Druggists or sent by mail, 50c. E. T. Hazeltine, Warren, Pa.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of

DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.

Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.

DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.

McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

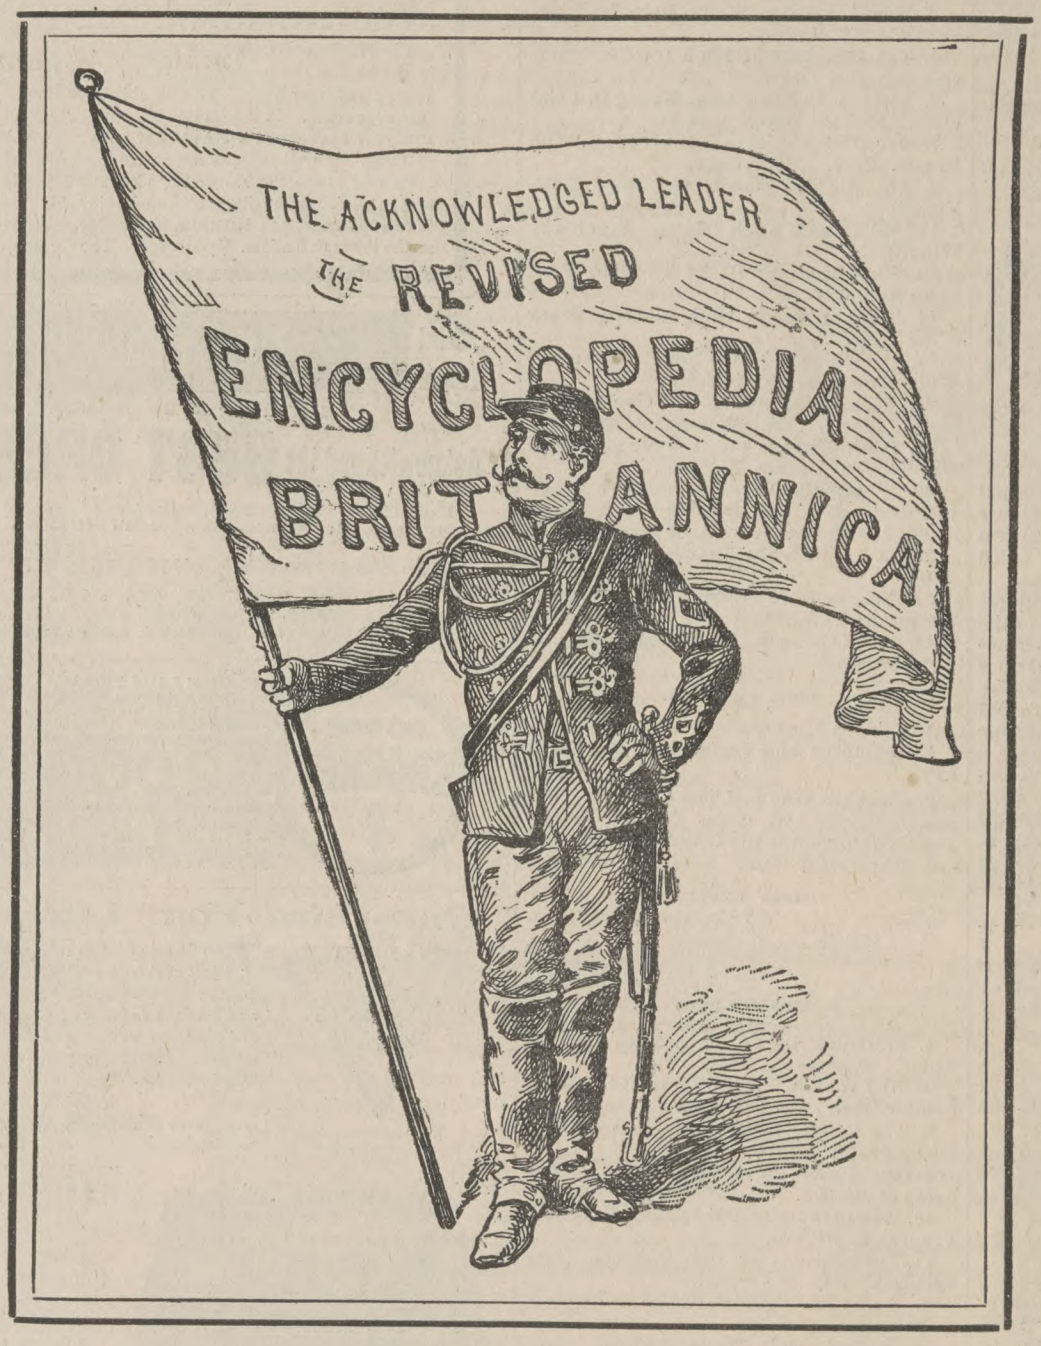
RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Il

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

THE STANDARD AUTHORITY ON ALL SUBJECTS.



Under this Banner our readers can now march to knowledge, honor and success.

All intelligent people agree upon one fact—that there is no middle course to pursue in life. It must be progress or retrogression. We must go forward or backward.

To succeed in life is the desire and aim of all. Chief among the elements of success is education; and chief among the sources from which that education may be acquired is the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA.

It treats of every subject on earth in a clear, practical and sensible way. It unveils to you all the secrets of nature so far as they have been unlocked by the wise men of the earth. Far from wearying you, you will find it entrancingly interesting.

We will not tell you that you ought to have the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. You know that already, don't you? But we will tell you that you ought to

GET IT NOW

WHY? Because a good thing never can be done too soon. Because if the books are of value to you, every minute you are without them is a loss of that value for that time, is it not? Because the best terms can be made now.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO THE UNION SIGNAL.

PUBLISHERS UNION SIGNAL:

Please deliver to me the entire set of 20 volumes of Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, as above described, together with your Dime Savings Bank, for which I enclose One Dollar, and further agree to remit 10 cents a day (remitting the same monthly) until the remaining $9.00 is fully paid.

Name _____

Postoffice _____

County _____

State _____

An Opportunity of a Lifetime

On receipt of only ONE DOLLAR we will forward to you, charges prepaid, the entire set of 20 volumes, the remaining $9.00 to be paid at the rate of 10 cents a day (to be remitted monthly). A beautiful dime savings bank will be sent with the books, in which the dime may be deposited each day. This edition is printed from new, large type on a fine quality of paper, and is strongly bound in heavy manilla paper covers, which with proper care will last a lifetime. Bear in mind that the entire 20 volumes are delivered to your address, with all charges paid to any part of the United States, Mexico and Canada.

This is a special offer made to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, and will remain open for a limited time only.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, November 10, 1892. Number 45

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Cholera has broken out in St Petersburg.

The French conquest of Dahomey is now complete.

Great November gales have prevailed on Lake Michigan the past week.

Ten thousand South Chicagoans turned out to honor Governor Fifer November 4.

Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, the famous Arctic explorer, died suddenly at Portland, Ore., November 2.

The Luther Memorial Church at Wittenberg, Germany, was reconsecrated last week with elaborate ceremonies in which the Emperor took a part.

Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk, on November 6, presented a handsome table to Coldwater, Mich., M. E. church, in memory of her late husband, the Prohibition candidate for President in 1888. General Fisk became a member of this congregation in 1855.

THIRTY-SIX churches, by the courtesy of the pastors, filled their pulpits with white ribbon speakers on Sunday. Notwithstanding a pouring rain all day the congregations were large, and a fine impression was made.

AN important action was that giving the L. T. L's a representation in Convention, by a white-ribbon woman, for every one thousand children having paid fifty dollars, or five cents each, yearly, into the National treasury.

THE Colorado W. C. T. U. presented to Lady Henry, at the hands of Miss Winifred Spaulding, a handsome souvenir album containing wild flowers and photographic views of Colorado, a delicate token of appreciation of her presence in the Silver State.

THE trustees of Trinity church evidently found gold mines and real estate in the brains and great-hearted purposes of the Convention, for nothing was left undone for the convenience of the delegations, even to removing the altar railing for the reporters' tables.

THE Convention was held in Trinity church, whose pastor is Rev. Robert McIntyre, formerly of Grace M. E. church, Chicago. He has one of the largest churches, largest organs, largest salaries in the world, and a heart as expansive as the grand sierras of the great West.

EVANGELIST Charles N. Crittenton, distinguished as the originator of the Florence Missions, presented Miss Willard at the Convention with $5,000 for social purity work. Mr. Crittenton is known as the millionaire evangelist and spends $25,000 a year for the rescue of tempted girls.

DELEGATES are unanimous in delight over the charming women and grand men and homes of Denver. The ladies of the local churches served sumptuous dinners and suppers near by the Convention, each denomination having charge for a day. It was a new and happy experience for the W. C. T. U. to be waited on at table by lovely girls and elegant women.

THE Convention adjourned with the question of the next meeting left to the decision of a committee consisting of the general officers and three other members, to be appointed by the National President. It is under consideration that this meeting shall take place in Chicago next May in connection with the auxiliary congresses of the Columbian Exposition.

THE committee on credentials reported a representation from forty-two states, five territories and the District of Columbia—total 48—as follows: General officers, 5; general secretary of Young Women's union, 1; superintendents, 23; organizers, 9; editors, 2; publisher of W. T. P. A., 1; president's private secretary, 1; chairman of standing committee, 1; vice-presidents, 37; state officers, 53; delegates, 254—total 387.

THE children in their welcome to the Convention sang the following verse, original with Mrs. A. B. Sinclair, of Denver:

"We welcome Lady Henry and Miss Frances Willard, too,
And thank the Lord who brought them safe across the waters blue;
And all the noble workers—we mention but a few—
In the W. C. T. U."

THE National secretary reported an increase of membership and strengthening all along the line. The number of auxiliary unions is 7,864; total membership, 154,213; total number of Young Woman's Branch Auxiliaries, 756; total Y membership, 12,363; Loyal Temperance Legions, 2,887; total membership of same, 159,229; there are 250,000 children enrolled in these societies. The above membership figures are based on payment of dues.

THE National treasurer, Miss Esther Pugh, reported: "There is an increase almost everywhere and very little decrease anywhere." The audited report reads:

Dues	$15,507 16
Temple donations	23,509 52
Hospital donations	213 61
Other purposes	2,222 76
Total expenditure	20,731 20

MAINE, New York, North Carolina, Texas, Indiana and New Mexico received the six banners awarded to states for the largest per cent of increase, the largest increment being in North Carolina and Texas—eighty-three and seventy-two per cent. The Convention ordered that hereafter the award of banners shall be to the six states having the greatest increase without respect to geographical location, and that no state or territory having less than five hundred members shall compete.

THE World's Fair is now protected against the sale of liquors by a local option law and by the conditions of its charter, which forbids the violation of state laws. The laws of Illinois prohibit liquor selling at fairs. But the action of the Columbian Commission put no limitations on liquor sales, "only with meals" or "at restaurant tables." All kinds of intoxicants may be sold, except at "saloons" and "open bars," restrictions which do not exclude the beer garden and are valueless. The late W. C. T. U. Convention decreed to make this matter the main line of work for the next six months.

FRANCES E. WILLARD was elected president for the fourteenth time, by a vote of 333 out of 338; scattering, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, 2; Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, 1; Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, 1; Miss Esther Pugh, 1. Mrs. Caroline B. Buell was reëlected corresponding secretary by a vote of 288 out of 335; scattering, 47. Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge was made recording secretary for the fifteenth time by a vote of 308 in 336; scattering, 28. Mrs. Woodbridge nominated Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens as her assistant, who was reëlected by acclamation. The whole number of votes cast for treasurer was 330; Miss Esther Pugh received 296; scattering, 34.

IN the decorations of Trinity church the committee indicated the nature of the gathering by most artistic groupings of W. C. T. U. ensigns, the American colors and the blending of the white and yellow. English and American flags were in conspicuous juxtaposition, and over the delegates' entrance hung the special decorations of the National W. C. T. U., its starry banner with "The Child of the Crusade," and a snow white dove carrying a white ribbon in its beak suspended over all. Stripes of white and yellow twined in the chancel rails, the red, white and blue in the balcony railing circling the auditorium on three sides. White and gold festooned the motto "No Sex in Citizenship," near Wyoming's lone star banner, while over the great arch of the main entrance W. C. T. U. luringly glowed at night, in brilliant electric drupes of white and yellow, which were imported for the special purpose.

THE semi daily overflow meetings of the Convention were scarcely less enthusiastic than the almost unending session at Trinity church. All our great speakers, except Miss Willard, took their turns in them, Lady Henry Somerset and Dr. Anna Shaw having charge of the first one, on Friday morning at the opening session.

AN incident which aroused much interest in the Convention was the appearance of Mrs. Bertha Morris Smith, of New York, on the platform in a common-sense business suit. This gown was of black serge made with a skirt reaching half way between the knee and the ankle, with rather close-fitting black leggings, full knickerbockers, which were invisible, and a jacket waist with suitable pockets and sleeves. There was a murmur of decided approbation over the house, till the inquiry arose from the seats: "What can the 'heavy weights' do with a suit like that?" Mrs. Lathrap, of Michigan, responded: "I am dressed almost exactly in that style, except the length of my skirt." Miss Griffin, of Alabama, settled the matter by saying: "I have seen seventy five women, at least, on the streets to-day (it rained heavily) holding their dresses higher and without the beautiful evenness displayed in the length of this skirt." It was a sensible, womanly, tasteful suit, and one hundred women appearing simultaneously thus robed in any city, would forever break the tyranny of long skirts out of the house. Women wear their noses without mortification, and the exposure of their feet would receive no more consideration were it not that false standards of propriety have been set up for women, which a free, Christian civilization should label "For the fool's paradise," and "send up Salt river," with the rest of ab surdities.

THE Denver W. C. T. U., with fine judgment, for the usual Convention reception substituted a railway excursion to Silver Plume, sixty miles distant and located at an altitude nearly a mile above Denver. "Around the Loop" is the popular term for this trip on which four train-loads of delegates and visitors set out at 8:30 o'clock the morning after the adjournment of Convention. For thirty miles the trains approached the mountains that stand guard over Denver, then boldly the great engines assailed the steep grades; swinging round sharp spurs the track often doubled on itself, but always on a higher slope, past lonely shafts sunk deep through the mountain's heart into precious silver veins, now beside, now across Clear Creek which, roaring, threads the deep canyon, and from whose sands gold and silver are washed in its many placer mines, until at more than 7,500 feet above sea level the train stopped on level ground at that settlement of the clouds, Idaho City. Here some hundreds of bright eyed, rosy-cheeked children of the mountain L. T. L. greeted the excursionists with song and speech and gave water from their wonderful soda hot spring, in which the afflicted can soak the rheumatism out of their bones in a week's time. Up, up, ever round and up the engines puffed and pulled until a thousand feet higher Georgetown was reached, a city of 4,000 inhabitants, well built on silver-bearing soil, shut in on three sides by snowy slopes of towering granite and apparently at the end of progress. But slowly, painfully the trains forced the way out and up the gorge, doubling backward and forward like the letter S, until on four different heights, four trains, all in sight at once, stood near each other, and overhung beautiful Georgetown in the pass below. This is the most complicated railway loop in the world, part of it a wonderful bridgeway, and so magnificent in effect that everybody was sorry to leave it for Silver Plume, a good dinner, donkey rides and a further ascent into Mendota Mine, via Victoria Tunnel, which climbs 1,200 feet to open air on top of the mountain. For years to come this day's grand visions shall rest many a tired white-ribboner and bring forth anew, "God bless the Denver women and polite conductors and gentlemanly brakemen and other railroad officials who gave us such a good time in the sublime heart of the Rock[illegible]"

FOR CHRIST AND HIS CAUSE.

BY LILLIAN F. LEWIS.

This, the end of my existence:
Unto sin each day, resistance;
In the "fight of faith," persistence;
Nearer Christ in thought and living,
Kinder, truer, more forgiving
Day by day.

This the aim of my profession:
Unto Christ more heart-possession;
Of His saving power, confession;
In my walk and conversation,
Growth of grace, and consecration
To His way.

This the vow of my endeavor:
Nothing must from Christ dissever;
Total abstinence forever
From all form of liquor-drinking,
And what evils interlinking,
Lead astray.

This my plan of reformation:
Through Christ's grace, regeneration;
Through the law, removed temptation;
For the God bought, gospel mission;
For the grog-shop, prohibition;
Work and pray.

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH.*

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

CHAPTER XIII.

"Your nose is out of joint, Nathan," said Miss Malvina, with an upward look from the strip of carpet she sat darning, at the tall figure of her brother, who was at this moment engaged in rubbing off the dried flakes of mud gathered in a thirty miles course in the rain.

"Well?" he said interrogatively, aware that some form of question was expected of him, but looking toward the library where Dr. Martha's fair little head was plainly to be seen against the dark leather of his favorite chair. She was not alone. Johnny, armed with a small and rather inefficient microscope sat at her side, intent upon counting the legs of an uneasy bug, distrustful of the drop of honey at his command, and anxiously endeavoring to make his way from these strange precincts to more familiar ground. That something huge and imperative blocked the way, made matters more complicated for the bug, but did not aid the cause of science, and Johnny, in despair at last, looked about for something warranted to bring about more docility.

"He ought to know I ain't going to hurt him," he said with a final fling of bug, slide, thread and all the other means of suasion or coercion he had been bringing to bear.

"Now see," said Dr. Martha argumentatively. "Just as we have spent all this time and I had just thought how we could do it, you have spilled everything. Here is the bug, though. Now come here and be counted," and before bug or Johnny could make further objection to the state of things, Dr. Martha had taken her subject delicately between her thumb and finger and made her count.

"It's six. I thought he hadn't any more than that," she said. "I'm sure that's enough, anyhow. Why does anything want more than that?"

"I don't know," said Johnny, judicially. "It's lucky bugs don't have to buy shoes and stockings or leggins. Hush, Martha. What is Aunt Malvina talking about? Her voice is 'way up."

"It's 'most always 'way up. She won't learn to talk any other way," Dr. Martha replied. "Don't let's listen. We don't care."

"But we do. What makes her say his nose is out of joint?"

The doctor's deep voice was plainly heard from the back kitchen, to which he had retreated for a final brush.

"A woman doctor? Well, there is room enough for her. I don't object."

"But you ought to object, Nathan. Coming in and taking the bread out of your mouth."

"If she does that or can she will do what no other doctor has done yet," said Dr. Scarborough, calmly. "Nonsense, Malvina!" for Miss Malvina, alarmed at the picture her own mind presented, proceeded to sob dolefully. "Malvina, be quiet. You are as bad as any child. Let the woman come. Where is she coming from, who is she, and what does she intend to do?"

Three questions at once! Never since his earliest youth had Dr. Scarborough so far indulged her tendencies or sought to gratify any latent curiosity that might still flicker dimly in the wind of gossip that swept from year's end to year's end up and down Linborough valley.

"Her name is Althea Manning; she comes from Philadelphia, and she is going to have a cure or something in the old Perkins place."

"Heaven help her if she is going to wrestle with the concentrated indigestion left behind by two generations of dead and gone Perkinses," said Dr. Scarborough, and disappeared in the library.

"It's something to have made him ask a question at all," said Miss Malvina triumphantly, returning to her mending with a sense of victory most unusual and most uplifting. But at supper her further remarks fell unnoted, and she relapsed into the dejection which the thought of any medical rival always induced, and after an attempt to fire Miss Prissy, went to bed in tears.

"'A woman doctor,'" Dr. Martha repeated the words as she climbed into her father's lap, Johnny leaning against his knees and looking adoringly into the face that had come to mean to him all the good things of life. "A woman doctor. That is what I am going to be, isn't it? But it sounds queer somehow, now that Aunt Malvina has said it. Perhaps it's because all her words sound queer. What will she do, father?"

"Help us all, I hope," Dr. Scarborough made answer, his arm a little closer about the child who seemed almost as she spoke, slipping away from him into that larger life of work, daily nearer, yet with all his desire to see its accomplishment dreaded as the end of this daily and hourly companionship. With each week she seemed nearer. How could he part with her for the necessary work of preparation? Who could fill her place?

"Not one. Not one on the whole wide earth," he muttered under his breath and caught her to him with a sudden jealous pang. What work could ever mean so much as this relation of father and daughter, well nigh as precious as that he once had known and lost.

Dr. Martha looked at him a moment, her clear eyes searching his troubled face and then she laid her head again on his shoulder, her little fingers straying through his beard and resting for a moment on his lips. He kissed them and closed his eyes. It was her mother's very motion, and he sat silent, too moved for words till Johnny spoke.

"Doctor, old Potter says that folks used to live longer than they do now."

"Your great grandmother lived to be a hundred and three," said the Doctor, rousing from his abstraction. "But then, she belonged to the longest lived family in the township. That generation was a clear case of survival of the fittest. The weakly ones all died off, and only the strong survived. In actual fact, life is longer now for everybody than it was fifty years ago. You may tell old Potter so, though it will not make any difference in his arrangement of facts, I am afraid."

"Why don't folks believe what other folks say if other folks know what they are talking about?" said Johnny discontentedly. "Old Potter only laughs when I say I know something, and tells me to wait till the three Sundays come together and he'll believe me."

"They did once, Johnny, boy. I will tell you the tale some day. Now Aunt Malvina is ringing the bell and I must run over to the wing a moment before I go in."

"Peach shortcake and broiled oysters," said Miss Malvina, "and both ought to be eaten hot and there he goes. I don't suppose he could hear a bell without starting in just the direction you wouldn't want him to."

"It's his house," Johnny began, defiantly, always ready to oppose Miss Malvina's strictures, but Dr. Martha gave him a sudden hug as she heard the word "oysters," a fact so unusual, that in returning it he forgot all grievances, and took his place, ready for any amicable overtures in the way of extra portions of shortcake that Miss Malvina might make.

Lanesborough, Mass.

(To be continued.)

*Copyrighted

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN DENMARK, FINLAND AND NORWAY.

BY REV. CARL F. ELTZHOLTZ.

DENMARK.

The Denmark Temperance Society held its annual general meeting in Aarhus, July 11–13, 1892. The local unions were represented by two hundred and fifty delegates—some of whom were ladies. The president, Hon. Kl. Johannsen, said in his report to the general meeting that during the year there had been an increase in the membership of about two thousand persons. The Danish government had last year granted an appropriation of four thousand crowns for the support of the temperance movement. There are, it is estimated, about five hundred local temperance unions in Denmark.

The highly esteemed temperance dean, the Rev. Th. Sorensen, moved that the genera meeting should make an application to the proper authorities asking that the right of local option—local prohibition—might be given to each country community so that they could stamp out the liquor traffic in the parish if they so desired. The motion was adopted. The Hon. Kl. Johannsen, formerly a member of the Danish parliament, was reëlected by acclamation as president of the Denmark Temperance Society. Mr. Johannsen has been the active president of that society for many years. The Danish temperance movement is gaining ground rapidly. Even the king of Denmark, according to the report of the president, spoke with very high appreciation about the temperance work, when the board of managers congratulated him in connection with his golden wedding.

The Scandinavian congress of physicians was this year held at Copenhagen. Drs. J. Hinding, E. M. Haff, Mich. Larsen and H. Selmer, who are well known Danish physicians, laid a paper before that congress, asking their colleagues to avoid as much as possible the use of alcohol in their practice. The subject was introduced to the congress in an able speech by that active temperance worker, Dr. H. Selmer. A very interesting discussion followed his remarks. At the close of the discussion, Dr. Selmer thanked the physicians from Sweden and Norway, who had taken part in it, but he regretted that none of his Danish colleagues (outside of the four signers of the paper) had taken part in the discussion.

In this connection I am pleased to notice the fact that although there are comparatively few physicians and clergymen that are in possession of wisdom and courage enough to come out openly and squarely as friends of and workers for the temperance cause, there are a few noble hearted men in both these professions who stand as leaders in the front rank of the Danish temperance army.

FINLAND.

"The Temperance Friends" in Finland held their annual general meeting at Tavastehus, Finland, July 7–9, 1892. A large number of temperance people from many different parts of the country were, according to the published report, present, and sixty-three of the local unions were represented at the general meeting by ninety-six delegates. The meeting was as usual opened with public worship (I call special attention to the fact, and I do it with great pleasure, wishing our friends in Norway and Denmark to follow the example). "The Temperance Friends"* of Finland has a membership in 1892 of 10,217 persons in nine districts and one hundred and sixty-two local unions. As the membership was only 8,786 in 1891, it is evident that our friends in Finland have had good success during the year. The well known Finnish temperance worker, Dr. A. A. Granfelt, was reëlected president of the society. That the temperance friends of Finland know the value of printer's ink will be seen from the fact that this active society has printed 82,000 copies of twenty-four different tracts and books—periodical papers not included.

The members of the society had been called upon to mourn the loss of their true friend and co-laborer, Major-General J. A. Frey, whose warm heart and burning zeal so often had encouraged them whenever they had the privilege to be in his esteemed company. He died June 19, 1891.

NORWAY.

Old Norway is still in the front rank of the temperance army. The good work is prospering gloriously. "The Norwegian Total Abstinence Society" held its twenty-fifth general meeting at Frederikshald, August 4-6, 1892. The local unions were represented at that meeting by 150 delegates. I draw the following statistics from the official report to the general meeting by the Board of Managers: The Norwegian Total Abstinence Society has about 100,000 members in 853 local unions. The membership is divided as follows: 43,000 women, 42,000 men, and 15,000 children under the age of sixteen years. Many of the public schools in Norway have decided to instruct the children about the nature and effect of alcohol. The temperance people in Norway will not be satisfied before they can lay their loving hand on the coming generation and give it the blessing of temperance, love and liberty.

According to the published report of the meeting we find that one whole forenoon session was taken up with an exhausting and able discussion about the use of naphtha. The substance of the question was: Do we have any reason to believe that the success of the temperance movement has caused our people to use more naphtha than formerly? The first delegate from each local union was called upon to answer this question; but after a lengthy discussion the conclusion was reached that there was no reason to believe that the success of the temperance movement had brought the Norwegians to the use of more naphtha than formerly.

It is evident that our Norwegian friends are in earnest, and that they are wonderfully successful in their efforts to promote temperance among their countrymen. The Hon. Sven Aarrestad, member of the Norwegian parliament, was reëlected president of the Norwegian Total Abstinence Society.

*The name of the Finland temperance society.

I regret that I am not able to give any information about the other successful temperance organizations in Norway, but as there are several such the reader will kindly remember that there are in Norway many more than the 100,000 temperance people that belong to the Norway Total Abstinence Society. When we recall the fact that Norway has only about two million inhabitants we will see that the temperance army is comparatively very strong in that country. I still believe that Norway is destined to be the first prohibition country in Europe. May the Lord hasten that time for Jesus' sake. Amen.

University Place, Neb.

HELEN MORTON BARKER.

Member of the Ladies' Board of Managers of the Columbian Exposition by recommendation of President T. W. Palmer.

White-ribboners everywhere are proud of the part borne by their leaders in the great enterprise of the World's Columbian Exposition. Among them all none is quite so near the very "pulse of the machine" as Mrs. Barker, whose steadfast kindness and practical common sense, in face, word and deed, speedily certified her fitness for responsibility, and caused her to be chosen as one of the helpers and counsellors of that rare woman, the chieftain of the ladies' directory, Mrs. Bertha Honoré Palmer.

Mrs. Barker came to this position of power and usefulness directly from eight years of work as president of the W. C. T U. of the state of Dakota, all but one of them before its subdivision. One of her chief coadjutors wrote of her thus:

She is a providential leader; a leader born, not made. Where and what was our organization in that great area best known as the "Land of the Dakotas" until her cheery, vigorous, mother-hearted personality afforded us a captain around whom the best Christian and home forces of the prairies could rally in the New Northwest! What epoch is more heroic in all our annals than this intrepid woman's trip to the Black Hills? Was ever the seed of home protection sown to better purpose, or in a kindlier soil than in the hearts of those rough miners by this sisterly hand? It is not often given to one woman to be as wise in the cabinet as she is invincible on the field, and as true and tender at heart as she is witty and eloquent in tongue; but Mrs. Barker fills the bill in all of these details, while her earnest spirit, progressive views, and staunch physical health predict years of beneficent success in the great and constantly extending work to which she has received the two-fold call of adaptation and success.

The mother of Mrs. Barker was a Brown, related to the family from which descended John Brown, of Harper's Ferry. Her grandfather, Amos Brown, was for forty years pastor of the old Baptist Church, of Hartford, N. Y. The father and mother of Mrs. Barker were both teachers, and her mother is to-day a bright, intelligent woman, a white-ribboner, of course, thoroughly alive to all the issues of the time, well versed in history, and able to give any ordinary reader reliable information as to current events, both foreign and domestic. Mrs. Barker's father died at the age of eighty-five, and he had never tasted a spoonful of liquor in his life, and, what was unusual in those days, he was opposed to prescribing it as a medicine, taking the ground that alcohol was never a curative agent. He was in many particulars far ahead of his time, advocating the same physical training for girls as for boys, and was very desirous that his wide-awake daughter Helen should become a physician.

Helen Morton Barker was born amid the limestone hills of St. Lawrence county, in the state of New York, the 8th of December, 1834. Writing, study and teaching were the early pursuits of her life, her father superintending her studies and being much of the time her teacher. He especially delighted in her love of mathematics and the natural sciences. Her academic course was taken at the Gouverneur Wesleyan Seminary, where she was always at or near, the head of her classes. When eighteen years of age she became principal of one of the schools in the city of Oswego. At twenty-three she married a young Baptist minister, Rev. Moses Barker, a graduate of Madison University.

As a pastor's wife she entered into active sympathy with old and young, and was confidant, adviser and friend of every member of the church. She is still remembered with love by the half dozen churches in western New York, served by her husband in the twenty-five years of pastoral life in the state of New York.

In 1884, for her health (she was an invalid for two years) the removal to Dakota took place. Here a great work awaited her. As a state organizer for the W. C. T. U. in New York, she had developed strength as an organizer, and acquired a reputation as a speaker. While she "proposed" rest in Dakota, the Lord "disposed" for her the greatest work of her life. She found a little handful of earnest women, and a few unions. Her health was restored and she entered the field, traveling thirteen to fifteen thousand miles each year with no stated salary the first few and hardest years. She was richly endowed in both ancestral lines, and the Browns and Mortons were both noted for brain-power, and purity of character and name.

One who had known Mrs. Barker long wrote thus in response to the inquiry of her biographer:

Of Mrs. Barker I can only speak good words, for none other are consonant with what I know of her. Mrs. Barker's father ranked for more than a third of a century as the leading physician in her town of northern New York. Heredity has salient illustration in her case, for he father was a man of keen intelligence, wide information, sound judgment, a man cautious in his opinions, but firm in defending them, a loved and trusted adviser in many a home. Her mother was a woman of decision, a helpmate to her husband in his calling, as many a sick sufferer could testify. She was the hub in the family wheel; in short, a true mother (what can one say more?) whose children still turn to her with love and reverence. Mrs. Barker—her friends yet delight to call her Helen Morton—largely inherits the good qualities of both her parents. She was my teacher in early boyhood, and I yet recall her aptness with the "young idea," her quiet dignity and discipline, and the thoroughness that characterized her work. Every country school district cherishes the memory of a few who have wielded the rod in the years gone by, and in the lengthened line of teachers who presided in the little weather-beaten schoolhouse on the hill where my boyish days were passed, no name stands out so brightly as that of Helen Morton. More than thirty years have passed since then, affording ample time in which to cool a boy's affection, and temper manhood's judgment, still this is the memory which I cherish of her.

Concerning her later life others can speak better than I, for the privilege and pleasure of listening to her from the platform has not been mine, but knowing her ability I am not surprised at what I hear concerning her power and success. It is natural and fit that such as she should be champions in a glorious cause, and I am glad and proud that we can count her as a leader—and a worthy one—in the grand army of woman that war against rum.

The foregoing is the judgment of a successful manufacturer in Canada. It is good to hear a good man praise a good woman after the above fashion. It helps one's faith in human nature. Here is another from the president of the state normal school at Oswego, N. Y., Pres. E. A. Sheldon, who says:

HELEN MORTON BARKER

Miss Helen Morton was for many years a teacher in our public schools when I was superintendent. She did excellent work for us, and made a strong impression upon all who came in contact with her. I am not at all surprised by what you say about her influence in the great West, for she was a woman of marked ability, and strong and decided Christian influence; indeed, I might say a woman of great spiritual as well as intellectual power.

Another writes:

Her educational advantages have been excellent for the times in which her youth was passed. At eighteen years she was graduated from Gouverneur Wesleyan Seminary, and soon became principal of one of the city schools of Oswego, from which she went forth as the wife of a young Baptist minister worthy of her and her faithful companion during all the years since then. For twenty-five years she figured as an ideal pastor's wife, during which five children came to bless her home. Throughout the great campaign, during which the eyes of the nation were turned toward the Dakotas, because the question "to be or not to be," so far as the saloon was concerned, came squarely before her voting population, Mrs. Barker led the forces with the wisdom of a Wellington and the patience of a saint. The prohibitory amendment was carried by a good majority, and everybody said that the white ribbon brigade was to the fight what the "old guard," that could "die but could never surrender," was to the great leader of the French.

Mrs. Barker is in the prime of her years, a woman of growing power and reputation. She guards our interests in the World's Exposition wisely, kindly and well. As a member of the executive committee of the workers who are preparing a Woman's Dormitory, so that women of moderate means can in safety and comfort attend the Exposition, she is a leading spirit. She is secretary of the Woman's Committee of the World's Temperance Congresses, of which Miss Willard is chairman. Besides all the other work with which she is connected in the bee-hive at the Rand-McNally building, where the "World's Women" most do congregate, Mrs. Barker is gathering material from every corner of Christendom for a complete record of the work of women, a task that has become herculean. so widely and so well have women wrought in these last days, and none more well and wisely than Helen Morton Barker, of white-ribbon fame.

THE MARGARET LOUISE HOME.

BY MARGARET W. RAVENHILL.

"Woman's Restaurant," on a small sign over the door of a magnificent building in Sixteenth street, has probably puzzled the men not a little.

It is the "Margaret Louise Home," built by Mrs. Elliott Shepard, for the self-sustaining women of New York, and no monument of sculptured beauty can ever do her the honor this beautiful home for the weary workers does. It is a woman's hotel, luxurious as any in New York, exquisite in design, in architecture harmonious as a strain of music, in furnishings and sanitary equipment absolutely perfect, and a poem in color. And what is of more importance, in its charges within the reach of all.

There are two entrances, one to the Home for guests, the other to the restaurant open to non residents as well as those in the Home. The main hall to the house is of magnificent dimensions, with a floor laid in small tiles of beautiful color, wainscoted in native oak, a fine, broad stairway of polished oak, an elevator with a neat, colored boy in livery, a parlor furnished in lovely shades of gray and blue, with an antique mantel holding the finest bric-a-brac, and a clock with cathedral chimes tells off the hours in musical tones.

A center-table, on which is a drop-light, holds the daily papers and magazines, and a group of well-dressed women sit around it making a cozy, home-like picture: a desk filled with dainty stationery, over which a fair girl bends in communion with the home friends. Off the parlor is the pretty library, with shelves of choice books, a piano, a music rack filled with music, a center-table covered with an artistic cloth, and the parlor groups repeated. In a corner a lady in quiet converse with a gentleman adds variety to the picture. The gong sounds, and the guests throng the two lovely dining rooms to their utmost capacity.

The entrance to the restaurant from the street is through a hall different in construction to the one described. To the right as you enter is a pretty waiting room, with every toilet requirement, finest damask towels, and a neat maid in snowy cap and apron in attendance. Your umbrella, wraps, etc., can here be checked, leaving you free of all incumbrances while at meals.

The dining room is as elegantly appointed as that of any first class hotel in New York—fine thick damask table linen, artistic china and silver from the best houses in New York, the maids as neat and pretty as any girls you could find anywhere, and as attentive and solicitous for the comfort of the guests as if they were personal friends. The food is plain, but of the best quality, and the cooking leaves nothing to be desired. You can obtain four dinner tickets for one dollar and six breakfast or lunch tickets for the same sum.

The bedrooms are exquisite with white enameled bedsteads, oak dresser and stand, pretty lace curtains drape the windows, a Bible on a little table and a silk banner on the wall add to its beauty and homelikeness. The bath rooms are of the latest sanitary designs; the house is lighted by both gas and electricity, and heated by steam.

The requisite for admission are two references, and the limit of your stay one month—when you must turn out and make room for some one else, as it is designed for a stopping place while you can arrange for a permanent one, or for women who come for shopping or a short stay. The price of rooms to women workers is three dollars and fifty cents a week and there are no other charges, no fees, or tips allowed. There are authors who have brought their wares to market, young medical or art students, newspaper women, etc. If you are not one of the workers the price of the room is six dollars a week. The dining room prices are uniform to all.

There is a fine lounging place in summer on the roof, furnished with seats, and canopied from the sun. A pretty garden with choice plants divides the house from the Young Women's Christian Association on Fifteenth street. Both houses are under the management of the Y. W. C. A., but in the home are no restrictions or rules, except the ones necessary in any well regulated home or hotel.

How many weary teachers, writers and students have laid down their tasks and found rest here for a few weeks, and the crowds that fill up the dining room show the need of a dozen such places for women's exclusive use. There are other places of the sort, and for the same purpose, but they lack the refinement and elegance of the Margaret Louise Home. What a grand benefaction from a good woman to her less fortunate sisters!

New York.

JESUS AND REFORM.

BY HENRY ADELBERT DELANO.

[The following were the closing words of Evanston's Baptist preacher in rounding up a series of sermons upon the reforms of the day.]

The Lord Jesus accepted physical being from a woman, and from the day she cradled Him she has been climbing ever upward. She has gone up "new Calvaries" it is true, bearing some stupendous crosses, but from Bethlehem, Calvary, and the garden tomb she has come steadily forward.

He who promised rest to the labored and heavy-laden, must have sympathy with the weary wage-toiler of to-day. Their cause is one. He who preached "deliverance to the captives" and the "opening of prison doors," must, of a certainty, be upon the side of every honest worker who diligently strives to further the emancipation of his race from modes of bondage whatsoever.

He who watched the all-night fruitless toil of the humble fishermen, must watch with serious interest the process of the sweat shop where pale women and starving little children toil in the exasperating clutch of the inhuman taskmaster.

He who fed the hungry multitudes and broke the bread of compassion for the shepherdless crowd, must feel the deepest interest in the inarticulate moans of the starved and dying of the submerged tenths of our great cities.

He who said "woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink," must look with eye of pity and soul of love upon the feeblest efforts of those who are trying to heal the world's fiery and galling drink hurt.

Jesus Christ? By His toil and poverty He allied himself with the sons of toil, and made the workshop the home of aspiration, noble and fraternal endeavor for the sons of men.

Oh, toilers, artisans, mechanics, tillers of the soil, husbandmen, where does not Jesus touch your lives? Not by a cold philosophy but by actual identity of interest, love and hope.

Oh, woman, born to bear, to suffer and eat the bread of anguish, the hands that toyed with Mary's hair or lay helpless upon her neck now sceptre the empire and kingdom of your worthiest and noblest ambitions.

Whatever and all else men see in Jesus Christ, let them not fail to see this sure identity of His with progress and reform.

Evanston, Ill.

LIQUOR VERSUS LITERATURE.

BY CHAPLAIN C. C. BATEMAN.

[The most brilliant flashes of oratory, the most splendid passages of poetry the keenest specimens of philosophical analysis, and even the most powerful sermons, have been given to the world under the inspiration of alcoholic stimulants.—Extract from editorial in newspaper.]

Who shall judge of that word "most"? It is not often that I take a lie for a text, but the above is one and as such I wish to examine its astonishing declarations. There are falsehoods told with unblushing, brazen-faced audacity, and unless one be fortified with exact information on the point in question, the truth is likely to suffer a temporary defeat. The sentence quoted at the head of this article is an example of such fabrication.

The supporters of the drinking custom and the liquor traffic are in these days at their wits' ends to find some justification which will disarm wrath and stupefy a partially awakened public conscience. Beaten by the testimony of the best physiologists in the world, overthrown by the ablest decisions of the highest courts of this and other lands, whipped of justice in ninety per cent of all criminal cases in Christendon, ignominiously routed by the annual reports of penal institutions and insane asylums, baffled in every debate, the minions of the rumseller, undaunted, continue to thrust forth the same old broken weapons of ignoble warfare. This last flourish of a rusty sabre should deceive no one, and yet I doubt not some young man has already read the above abominable falsehood to his loss if not to his ruin. According to the reckoning of some minds, the first step toward nobility is an act of meanness, and to such minds the first step toward sobriety is drunkenness.

An uninformed youth will read the array of names in literature claimed by the drink fraternity, and conclude that necessarily the list must include about all of any real prominence. He will be quite innocent of the fact, in the face of the sweeping generalization, that there may be a longer list of the world's real benefactors, known to the republic of letters, whose whole influence is even now thrown squarely against drink and its kindred vices. As I read and re-read this libel, I mused while the fires of my righteous rage burned brighter and hotter. Are the good forgotten in the land of the living? Shall iniquity not be silent? What lessons does literature teach for temperance? Ah! at once sad and glorious lessons. Sad, in that the vilest, most God-defying and soul-destroying productions have been written by men who were drinkers or drunkards and profligates. Glorious, in that the purest, most godly and soul-inspiring works have been produced by men who were strangers to the glass which inebriates.

Among orators, has the world forgotten so quickly Robert Hall, the author of that expression "distilled damnation," as applied to strong drink? Where may we find Wendell Phillips and John B. Gough? Among poets, witness John Milton, with sightless eyes, treading the stellar pathways in his supernal visions, second only to the Divine John on the Isle of Patmos. Think of Milton, who is called "the sublime," writing "Paradise Lost," and in sheer want selling the same for sixteen pounds. And what shall we do with Cowper, that Christian poet who lived and wrote in an age when a true poet was expected to be more than half scoundrel? Or our own Whittier, who walked with God as an ancient prophet and "was not, for God took him," what shall become of him in this generalization which would claim the best literature as the product of liquor?

Among philosophers, what shall become of Locke, the sage? or Edwards who wrote his treatise on the human will, using in lieu of stationary because too poor to buy, bits of leather, shingles, chips and the coarsest wrapping paper? It was sober poverty. And time would fail me if I should speak of that illustrious host of great preachers who required no art of the brew or still in proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ. Witness John Bunyan, "the inspired tinker," the soldier saint, the prophet of Bedford jail, the Job of English literature, the Shakespeare of spiritual Christianity. Bunyan ate plain, prison food and drank cold water. His inspiration came from God and not from gin; from the Bible and not from the beer. Witness the Wesleys and George Whitfield, the pioneers in the cause of total abstinence; and all the mighty men of our own time, from Spurgeon of recent translation to the end of the list.

Look out for the next liquor men's lie. We may soon expect to have the discovery of America attributed to an old Spanish saloon-keeper. The determination to conduct the World's Fair as a vast beer-garden must somehow possess the garb of respectability. How can this be brought about except the liquor men set up the claim that Columbus was a beer bummer?

Satan will put on a saint's coat, hat and shoes every time he gets a chance; and when once caught, he at once sets up the claim that the articles in question are his property.

Assinniboine, Mon.

WASHINGTON'S SPLENDID TESTIMONY FOR WOMAN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have been asked to give to the public a word of truth concerning the success of the women of Washington Territory while they exercised the privileges of citizenship for three and one half years. This I am glad to do, and feel some competency to do so because I repeatedly visited every portion of Washington during the time of woman's enfranchisement and afterward.

I shall not write in reply to Dr. Buckley's address at Chautauqua, August 9, in which he ignorantly, I believe, reported falsely of the women of Washington and a multitude of other women. I only desire to set the truth against his misrepresentation when he said, "Suffrage was tried in the territory of Washington. There no particular interest was taken in it. The female vote was always light." I hope no woman will reply to him.

Chautauqua could not be without women, but I wonder if its "magnificent development" and "general education" consists in such utterances upon the platform as belittle their character and work and in being told that "the Mormons were the first to grant women suffrage, for they knew that women would stand up for polygamy"—and that "there is a great similarity between women and music; both will help a circus, a cathedral or an army."

In the fall of '84 I was at every voting place in Seattle and there saw the practical refutation of many arguments brought against woman suffrage. Bad women were not present, but women of intelligence and the highest moral and social standing; and they were all there with hardly an exception. Men were manly and women were womanly. Men consulted with women and women consulted with men. Husbands and wives differed in choice of candidates. But there was "understanding" and "affection" well balanced in the "masculine soul," and "affection" and "understanding" well balanced in the "feminine soul," and there was harmony with all; independence, to the utter exclusion of discord and divorce. Drunkenness was not seen and profanity was not heard.

It was a successful success. Many converts to the justice and expediency of woman's ballot were made amongst the hitherto ignorant and prejudiced. All this was true throughout the territory, and remained true during the time woman was permitted to exercise the privilege. The good women of Washington exercised their political privileges because they had "understanding" to know that in such way they could the more easily and speedily remove the legislative safeguards builded about wrongs and secure protection for what is sacredly true and good.

They had also "understanding" sufficient to believe that by keeping company with man, even into political life where he is now most easily corrupted and unmanned, they could best accomplish the "purifying, spiritualizing and humanizing of society." And good men had "affection" enough to approve and encourage.

Women voted intelligently, having thoroughly investigated candidates and questions. And because they were so interested, so intelligent and so conscientiously true to the reforms demanded by justice and necessity, the liquor traffic with its allies—a solid force of gamblers, prostitutes and pimps—entered the legislature and with powerful voice raised the cry of unconstitutional.

This voice was heeded because there were millions in it from all along the liquor line. The friends of the law appealed to the highest tribunal, when the Supreme Court of the United States bravely set aside the decision given in the territorial judgment hall, and sustained the women.

But the power of liquordom made its shrewdness and influence felt in another direction, and before the answer came from the United States Court, it had pushed the territory into statehood, with a constitution shutting out women! Thus were they disfranchised, not because they were not a success in political life, but because they had succeeded so well.

Chief Justice Roger S. Greene said:

Twelve terms of court I have now held in which women have served as grand and petit jurors, and it is a fact beyond dispute that no other twelve terms so salutary for the restraint of crime have ever been held in this territory.

At another time he said:

Many ladies have already sat on juries, grand and petit. They have pretty generally, after their time was over, expressed to me freely their impressions. With remarkable unanimity they have told me that jury duty had been maligned to them, and that while they shrank from the task and its publicity, they were now glad they had served, and were convinced that women were needed on juries and in the courts.

This just man said at another time after woman had been fairly tried in politics:

She is qualified and entitled to share with man all liberalizing and ennobling exercises of mind and heart. She ought and has a right to meet and confer with other men and women on a broad, sympathetic, human basis, outside the cramping walls of set and etiquette and at some sacrifice of taste and habit. To condemn her utterly to one of two alternatives, to lip and toe her life away in the salon of fashion or to dishwash it away in the kitchen, while man engrosses to himself all that is lordly and masterful in society and the state, is but one remove from that barbarism which makes of woman either a dancing girl or a slave.

Hon. B. F. Dennison, a lawyer of high standing, said:

With one united voice, judges, attorneys and the people have joined in praising the manner in which women have performed jury duty and obeyed the process of the courts in that behalf ever since the law was enacted.

Hon. J. R. Kinnear said in a public address at Seattle:

I maintain that the woman suffrage law of this territory after a practical test of three and a half years has proven a success.

Such splendid proof might be multiplied many times but it is unnecessary. Testimony coming from the best manhood of the state is certainly more convincing than that which comes from a resident of New York and one who is opposed to woman's enfranchisement, because, as he says, among other reasons:

If women are entitled to vote, all the Roman Catholic women of the country will be entitled to the right. What will become of our public schools under these circumstances, in all the cities and towns where there is a large Catholic population? All of the colored women of the South will have a vote, and there are millions of them. All of the foreigners that come here will have the right to vote as soon as they are naturalized. All your domestics and servant girls will have the right to vote.

When I can be convinced that Catholic women, colored women, foreign women or servant girls are any worse than men who are Catholics, colored, foreign or domestic servants, or who are sometimes white and Protestant and American, then I will say no more in defense of woman suffrage in Washington or elsewhere. There are differences in women as there are differences in men, differences as distinctly defined, as frequently existing and as extreme. What a difference between the poet of peace, Whittier, and the product of beer and passion, John L. Sullivan! And yet both exercised the ballot and engaged in government making. And did political power make the one less gentle or less the gentleman? Or the other more sport of the ring or more the animal?

What a difference between the "fish-women of London in the Billingsgate market whose terrific fights and frightful language have been famous for hundreds of years," and Elizabeth Fry, mother of a large and estimable family who spent so large a portion of her life in degraded London and in the most public life, in political life, we may well say, for she was constantly in conference with prison and police authorities.

Political power in her own hands would not have made her less a minister and a philanthropist with less strength and beauty of character, but it would have multiplied her ability to act more quickly and abundantly for the public good.

There's a wide difference between David Swing, so lovely in his living and in his gospel teaching, and Chicago's anarchist throwing the deadly bomb! The political power possessed by both does not make the one less saintly or the other less diabolical.

Yours for truth and justice to all men and women,

Springfield, O. HENRIETTA G. MOORE.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In my last I told you of our late general election and of the part our crusade had in it. Now we are looking forward to the action of our Parliament and government, pledged as they are and intending, as we believe they are, to give the temperance party a substantial and tangible installment of prohibition, by enacting that the people shall be given the power of a direct popular veto on all liquor licensing.

On the whole, however, the fortunes of the direct veto are for this present Parliament wrapped up in those of the Gladstonian party, and the great question is, What will the government do? Well, there are many indications that they will endeavor to deal drastically with the whole licensing system, but if they do so they will certainly include in the measure the direct veto power. They can do no other. The government majority in the popular chamber, on which the life of a government depends, is forty, and it is beyond question the fact that in more than that many elections the direct veto was the determining factor.

Further, it must be the direct veto, without compensation. In 1888 and again in 1890 the party now in power helped the temperance forces to defeat their political opponents, when they proposed compensation clauses. Should they now go back on that action and propound any kind or degree of compensation, the whole of the temperance batteries will be turned upon them, and it is safe to say with as decisive results as in the former cases. It may be believed they know this and may be trusted to avoid such a disaster.

These, then, are the two essentials for effectively dealing with the matter—the direct veto and no compensation. On both points the demand of the temperance party is clear, uncompromising, and with only one exception, that of the Church of England temperance society, is made with a united voice.

These twin principles stood with us for prohibition. On the one hand the veto is to enable our people to come to close quarters with the liquor traffic, and to make the will of the people once expressed adversely to the issue of liquor license mandatory to the licensing authority—whatever that may be. At present it is a bench of magistrates for each locality, and the favorite scheme of politicians is to take the power away from the magistrates and transfer it to popularly elected bodies. But the Prohibitionists answer, You shall not do that except you give the people the veto outside and independent of any elected body and apart from any other question.

Then no compensation is essential to secure prohibition, because had compensation to be paid there would be great reluctance on the part of the people to vote the traffic down—on account of the cost. That very thing is happening to-day in Victoria, the only country where compensation is given to liquor sellers. Many liquor shops have been closed by vote of the people, but because of the large amounts awarded as compensation, cautious people in places where polls have recently been taken, refuse to vote out the saloon, fearing that heavy awards will be made, and additions made to the monetary burdens falling to be borne by the localities.

The proportion of liquor shops to population in this country is one to 201 people, and that is a smaller proportion than existed some years ago. The tendency has long been toward lessening the number, and the reduction has come about chiefly through closings for want of success, forfeiture through criminal offenses, and concurrently, the reluctance in many cases on the part of magistrates to grant new licenses. During two recent years, in addition, over 500 licenses in England were refused to be renewed, generally on the ground that they were not required for the public convenience—refusals rendered possible by the decision of our highest courts in a celebrated test case which settled the power of the magistrates to so decree.

Once more the annual licensing courts are being held. For the most part there is an absence of the keen interest conspicuous the two past years. Memorials of temperance people, recommendations of police officials, evidence of increased drunkenness, and pressure of various kinds—all has been, in too many cases, ignored and "all the licenses renewed," as the newspaper reports put it. Probably the main reason, expressed in some instances, is the expectation of parliamentary action at an early date and on a scale and of a kind that is quite outside the province of the licensing authority as at present constituted.

In the meantime, the second portion of the licensing sessions—adjourned meetings which deal exclusively with cases postponed for further consideration—is giving more satisfactory results. For instance, yesterday at Liverpool, renewal was refused to twelve licenses, a fact that is most striking in view of the former condition and history of a city with respect to the drink traffic. And to take an example from an opposite extreme, at St. Ives, a small borough in Cornwall, the magistrates the other day compelled closing of all the liquor shops on Sundays, by refusing to grant any but six day licenses, and refusing altogether the applications of those who refused to comply with that condition.

These are not the only instances—they are but typical of others which, if far from what temperance reformers desire to see, yet indicate the trend of public opinion. That trend is distinctly against the liquor traffic, and is a hopeful augury of a success of prohibitory enactments when these shall have been secured. This old country is extremely slow to adopt new systems and to make large changes in its laws; but the delay helps always (and so in this case) to prepare the public mind for their reception and operation, and we never go back on a good system of law once adopted. H. J. OSBORN.

London, E. C., 112 Fleet St.

A CRYING NEED IN THE AMERICAN NAVY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—May I bring before you the great need of organized temperance work on board the American war-ships? Nothing exists in that service at the present time that can be called temperance work, and the need is very great. For some ten years past I have sent my monthly letters (the same as issued to the British Navy) to the American ships of war, at their own request; and by order of the Secretary of the Navy, they are distributed officially. We have also held meetings on board the training ships Portsmouth, Saratoga and Jamestown, and have taken a considerable number of pledges, but all this is quite insufficient; the work should be taken up in America, by those knowing the traditions, habits and language of the American blue-jackets, and in whose work the American board, answering to our admiralty, would have confidence. I always feel, both in speaking on board the American war ships, and writing the letters for monthly distribution, that I am much too English for the work. In our own navy we have a society with branches on board every ship of war, and a thorough organization, supported by commanding officers all through our service, and we calculate roughly, that about one man out of every six is a total abstainer in our navy. I should be very pleased to send our rules, organization, etc., to any one whom you could depute, to take this up, and to work it if possible in your navy. I have not found much enthusiasm upon the subject among captains or chaplains, and the shore service system would be a difficulty. I am sure that you will pardon my writing frankly and freely, and will give the matter your kind and prayerful consideration. AGNES E. WESTON.

Portsmouth, Sailors' Rest.

THE WORKING CLASSES IN GERMANY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The condition of the working class in the old country is something dreadful. Born in that class, my heart turns tenderly and anxiously towards them. To such a low grade have these people fallen, that there is no hope for them except as it shall come from without.

In Germania, my native country, all men drink more or less. The family lives in a back chamber of only one room. The mother is off to work every day. The father spends his nights and scanty wages in the saloons. He comes home the next day, drunk, and beats his wife and children, and then drives them into the street. The little ones often go breakfastless to school, and are obliged to beg for their dinner and supper. By the age of nine or ten the education they have gained in this sorry manner is considered completed and they are sent out into the world to earn their own living.

Poor as the working-class is, and with no religious restraints, their hard-earned money is spent for drink. Two persons cannot meet without going to a saloon, that at almost every turn stands ready to welcome them. But this "treating" curse extends to the higher circles as well.

In the home they prepare a drink called punch. It consists of half a glass of coffee and a little sugar, filled with whisky. This drink is almost as common with them as water with Americans. The little two or three year old sitting on his father's knee learns thus early to sip the poisoned sugar that settles in the bottom of the glass. They soon love it and with increasing years the taste deepens. It is no unusual sight to see a mere child of three or four tender years reeling about the street or lying in a heap "dead drunk"! Think of it, my sisters of America, and pray God to send forth more noble women to proclaim the glad tidings of protection for the children in every land.

These children, thus early trained to drink at their own firesides, it is hardly necessary to say, are, before they reach the age of fourteen, wrecks, mentally and physically, and they fall lower and lower until death mercifully parts them from this world.

I am so glad our blessed white-ribboners have visited Germania and many other lands of the old world, carrying the light of a new and better life to them, so long bound down by ignorance and superstition. This means help and salvation for America as well; for coming to this country—this land of "personal liberty," they will increase by the thousands our already large army of drunkards, if they come with their present drinking notions and habits established. That God may crown with abundant success all work for my native country, is my earnest prayer.

One of the white-ribboners,

ANNA SWENSON.

Belmond, Ia.

AMONG THE SAILORS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Allow me to furnish one or two items that are of special significance in my department and, I feel sure, will also gratify all temperance people.

"The flag-ship of the new white squadron, The Chicago, has excluded beer from its list of beverages for the blue-jackets, by vote of a majority of the seamen."

Miss Antoinette Jones, of Falmouth, Mass., one of our white-ribboners, found delight not long since in visiting the Sailors' Snug-Harbor and the navy yards. By invitation of the resident chaplain at the Brooklyn Navy Yards, Miss Jones, who represents the floating societies, and myself addressed a splendid set of young men belonging to the receiving-ship Vermont. It was an impressive service—giving promise of good results. One man, at the close, signified his desire to lead a better life, and four others signed the pledge. Chaplain McLaren read the Word with serious comments, a recently converted seaman spoke and prayed fervently and a Christian Hollander, in broken English, urged his ship-mates to come to Christ. The sailors joined heartily in the singing service led by a young Christian lady, who for many years has given her fine voice at the religious and temperance meetings at the Cob-Dock. The Holy Spirit's presence was manifest, and I trust there will be a great awakening among those who man the war-ships of our new navy.

In my work of supplying the ships of the Wilson line of steamers with loan libraries, I saw, during one of the recent hot days, a boy carrying a tin pail of some beverage along the docks. He was serving it out very rapidly from one to another workman, who drank the cooling draught with great gusto. Hastening my steps to gratify my curiosity, and, perchance, get an opportunity to deliver an accustomed temperance lecture, what was my pleasant surprise to see a pailful of iced milk. "Oh," I said to the heated laborer, as he showed his sense of refreshment, "how much better that is than beer!" No further remarks were needed, as he smiled and said: "Yes, Madam," but I turned to the boy with questions, which brought this gratifying information: "Well, you see this line does not allow beer sold on its docks. I make four dollars a day selling my milk, using sixty quarts every day." A profitable business this, which I throw out as a hint to our enterprising temperance boys. SARAH A. MCCLEES.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

A PLEA FOR THE BIRDS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Since writing the letter "to those who love the birds," which appeared in your columns of September 22, my attention has been called by the editor of the Youth's Companion to an article which has appeared in his paper, discouraging any attempt on the part of young people to compete for prize exhibits of living birds. This appears to end the matter so far as the Youth's Companion is concerned, but it will not prevent the exhibits of live birds which the World's Columbian Commission decided to have. I hope that for the reasons I have already given a strong sentiment of opposition will be aroused and freely expressed. MARY F. LOVELL,

Nat. Supt. Dept. of Mercy.

Bryn Mawr, Pa.

THE Supreme Court of the United States, as the organized conscience of the Republic, declares that no man has the right to sell intoxicating liquors by retail. Unless Congress and the Executive (the other co ordinate branches of the government) legislate and govern in accordance with this decision, the nation, as a moral organism, is as culpable before the God of Nations as is an individual man, who, having pronounced a proposed course of action definitely wrong, should deliberately pursue it, for the sake of the money in it.—G. M. Hammell.

THE MOTHER-HEART.

BY MRS. E. M. ADAMS.

The sky-lark sang for heart's delight,
Like happy spirits heaven-born,
Flooding the rosy fields of light
With waves of music to the morn.

I listened long that wondrous song,
Till 'mid its echoes soft and sweet
She sank to rest, with brooding breast
Among the grasses at my feet.

"How like the mother-heart!" I cried,
"That sings and soars, but cannot roam,"
She cares not that the world is wide,
She only lives for heaven and home.

The poem "The Mother-heart." was suggested by reading in a British book of Natural History, that the lark that sang the sky song, was the female, and that she always rose directly above her own nest, into which she dropped when the sky-song was ended.—THE AUTHOR.

Mound City, Kan.

DAVID DOUGLAS AND HIS WIFE.*

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

CHAPTER XI.

April had come again with its fickle fairness, and in the handsome new church at Hilltop the ——— conference was assembled.

On the morning of which we write the usual air of interest marked the proceedings. There was much quiet tip-toeing in and out of the audience-room and many whispered consultations among the ministers, who, as is well known, do not make exemplary listeners. The back part of the room was filled with laymen, and, pending decisions, women as well as men are included in this term. Among these were many who came to represent distant parishes and some whose business it was to select a pastor.

Mr. Pettigrew was of the latter class. He was watching proceedings and at the same time comparing notes with a minister who sat beside him. This friend of his, Dr. Jarvis by name, was a self appointed supervisor of the brethren. It seemed to be utterly impossible for him to refrain from interfering with other people's affairs. If the advice he gave away so freely had had length, breadth and thickness, he would have needed a special train to transport it. The Chesport "difficulty" was exactly in his line of business, and after a brief conversation with Rev. Mr. Snow, he was prepared to shake his pepper-box of opinions in every direction.

Such a man was a poor counselor, but Mr. Pettigrew was not ready to give a reason for changing pastors to every one. Could he meet Mr. Ludlow's searching eyes? Was he prepared to advise with honest Mr. Strong or Father Leeds? No, nor would he go to his presiding elder, who, wishing to avoid trouble, had endeavored to forestall such action. Dr. Jarvis had a young nephew whose advancement he happened to think might prove a personal advantage, and through his recommendation, Bryan Haskell was invited to dine with Mr. Pettigrew at a restaurant, where they might have an opportunity to converse on business. Mr. Haskell was an earnest fellow, who was still on the lowest round of that traditional "ladder," up which he would climb if he did not find another man's foot in the place where his belonged by the law of progression, and another man's hand ready to hold him back.

He had been serving the Stony Brook people with excellent results for two years and was hoping to step up a little higher if he were offered another charge.

His salary had been pitiably small; but, having a natural talent for economizing, and being blest with a docile little wife, and two small children whose raiment thus far was simply a matter of "making over," he had succeeded in paying his bills and bringing a surplus fund of ten dollars to Conference! How much of this he would carry home remained to be seen, as whenever one of the great benevolences of the church was presented, his hand gravitated toward his pocket as did his zealous young heart toward the "cause." Having a fair share of modesty with his other good traits, he was surprised and somewhat embarrassed when through his uncle's instrumentality, seldom exercised in his behalf, he found himself seated in the restaurant opposite the "committee" from Chesport.

But Mr. Pettigrew was in rare good humor; and, as soon as was practicable, began in a low, confidential tone to narrate some events with which we are already familiar, closing with: "So we couldn't agree to keep Brother Douglas another year, good as he is in many ways, because of this political crankiness."

"He preached real partisan sermons, did he?" asked Mr. Haskell.

"No-o, not exactly, but he offered prayer at the Prohibition rally, and made a speech at their flag raising, and we've men in our church who wouldn't stand that. No, sir! If he had preached like the Angel Gabriel, he couldn't have held those men," and Mr. Pettigrew smote the table to emphasize his remark.

"But he arraigned the old parties severely in some of his sermons, did he?" persisted the young man.

"Why, no, he kept calm and cool and soared, you know. Took this awful high stand for conscience in politics, vote-as you-pray style; and he brought in the women folks, and young men and boys and babies and generations to come enough to make you dizzy. All right in itself, you understand, as an abstract thing; but utterly impracticable, in the kind of a world we live in. Well, when I saw how things were going, I just washed my hands of the whole matter. I hate church quarrels and I told my family to just keep clear of the parsonage," and Mr. Pettigrew wiped his lips virtuously.

"Had you been good friends before?" inquired Mr. Haskell.

"Yes, indeed, lived next door—in and out any time."

"It must have been hard for him to have lost your friendship in that way."

"Perhaps so, perhaps so!" and Mr. Pettigrew, for the first time thought of that phase of the subject; "but it's all over now—and I am very sure you're the man we want at Chesport."

"I fear you are making a mistake," replied the young minister, his face betraying deep feeling.

It was natural that Mr. Pettigrew, well aware of the financial status of Stony Brook, should admire the modesty which questioned the possibility of this sudden advancement, and he said, not without emotion, "My dear brother, trust my judgment for the choice and thank the Lord for a larger field of usefulness."

Men who follow Christ wholly, "enter into" His temptations as into His triumphs; and sitting there at the little table, Bryan Haskell felt the same strain upon his humanity—the same in kind—as came to his Master, when in the wilderness Satan offered Him "the whole world." A position among his brethren, such as he looked for only after years of service, a salary which would remove the haunting fear of debt—which would open to him possibilities in the way of books and travel. Ah! was it not "all the world" to him?

Mr. Pettigrew could not understand why the young man's face flushed until the veins on his forehead were plainly visible and then suddenly paled as he said, "I mean you are mistaken in me politically."

"How's that! I inquired particularly and was told you were a straight party man!"

The look of blank surprise and consternation upon the worthy layman's face caused a revulsion of feeling on the part of his opposite. He laughed out like a boy as he replied: "And so I am. I belong to the only 'straight party' there is. Don't you know the old parties have so much liquor aboard they can't walk straight to save their lives?"

Mr. Pettigrew had no words to express his feelings. "Julius Cæsar!" said he in a concentrated whisper, "are all the ministers going crazy?"

"If you mean are they all Prohibitionists—no, indeed! Some are such openly, some 'secretly for fear of the Jews'; but many are still voting for license."

Something in this frank statement annoyed the already disturbed gentleman. "Now see here, young man! I'm just as good a temperance man as you are—just as good as Brother Douglas is, but—well, I'm no hobbyist—I think—I don't think—" and just then to his great relief, Dr. Jarvis came bustling in, carrying the world, as usual, upon his shoulders: "Mr. Pettigrew had finished eating?" "Oh, yes, some time since!" and after paying his bill, he made hasty adieus; leaving his "candidate" to pick his teeth alone, and wonder just what this experience might mean.

But the movements of these two had been noted, and it was not long before Mr. Ludlow met and greeted Bryan Haskell with: "Shall I congratulate you—and Chesport?"

"No, sir!" was the reply, "I had to tell him that my politics wouldn't please them. I cannot say it was easy."

"I understand. It was a great temptation, thank the Lord that you had strength to resist it!" said Mr. Ludlow, holding the young man's hand with a firm grasp.

"What have you found to thank the Lord for now, Brother Ludlow?" inquired Mr. Strong, who as pastor of Hilltop church and host of the conference, had had scant time for thanksgiving for some days. He smoothed his beard thoughtfully as he listened to a brief résumé of the facts. Several other ministers gathered around until a little group was discussing what was called the "Chesport difficulty."

Other men had had differences with their churches, and had moved or been "removed" at the end of one year. Why, then, was this case so noticeable? Simply because it touched a vital and volcanic subject.

"Chesport is a good place to make Prohibitionists," said Mr. Ludlow. "I can thank my friend, Mr. Sloan, for giving me my last dose of toleration for license, but this sending a man off under a cloud is bad."

"Yes, I think it is about time to protest against anything that savors of persecution," added Mr. Strong, "but it is going on in other denominations as well as ours. The pastor of the Congregational church here in Hilltop has been a third party man for several years, and while he was in Europe last fall, his church gave him a polite invitation to resign. One of his deacons told me that their only complaint against him was his temperance fanaticism."

"There's another up our way," said a brother just behind the last speaker; "he went for some of his members who used wine on their tables, and that stirred them up; but when he voted the Prohibition ticket last fall they rose and put him out of the synagogue."

"Good enough for him! He could have accomplished just as much if he had stayed in the old party," remarked another.

"And avoided persecution!" added Mr. Haskell dryly.

"Our church has so declared itself that every minister ought to feel justified in taking the most radical stand against the saloon. If the liquor traffic 'can never be legalized without sin,' there is no place for one of us in a license party, brethren," said Father Leeds, whose saintly character and years of service entitled him to great respect.

"That wasn't intended to bind anybody's conscience," interposed Dr. Jarvis in his most peppery tone.

"Surely not, unless one has a conscience large enough to go beyond the letter and adopt the spirit of that noble utterance," Father Leeds replied.

"If all of us stood by it, there would be no more 'removals' to please church members who vote for license," said Mr. Ludlow.

Then Father Leeds lifted his hand impressively as he added: "And if all Christians of all denominations 'stood by it,' the awful drink problem would be settled, and settled right."

"But there's another side to this temperance question," interrupted Dr. Jarvis, pressing forward to the old man's side.

"Yes, there are two sides, and only two; either it is right for Christians to perpetuate the murderous business of dram-selling, or it is wrong; and between the two there isn't room to run a line fence strong enough to hold a single Pharisee."

"Yes, yes, yes," cried the doctor, "but there are other questions a party must consider."

"Brother Jarvis," and Father Leed's voice trembled with emotion, "once in a while God turns His electric light upon one sin, and tells us to destroy it. He can take care of these 'other questions' long enough for us to obey Him. If we won't, then He will take it in hand Himself, and when He does—look out!"

"Brethren, do you want to see our pulpits turned into political platforms?" cried the irrepressible Dr. Jarvis, in a tragic tone.

"Read the Sermon on the Mount and you'll find that Christ made both pulpit and political platform of the mountain top. He gave us the political science that this country is perishing for. The trouble is, we ministers have put asunder what God joined together," said Father Leeds.

What the outcome of this impromptu discussion would have been it is impossible to state, for the bell rang, and two by two, still conversing in whispers, the group passed into the church.

During this same noon hour, Mr. Douglas met his presiding elder. The office whose incumbent is thus designated, is one of peculiar power and responsibility in the church of which we write, and a man needs the wisdom of a Solomon, and the disposition of an angel to discharge its duties satisfactorily; to lay aside all prejudice, and treat with absolute impartiality the men—his equals—whose fate is in his hands. Ah! who is sufficient for these things?

This man—Dr. Beverly—was disposed to be kind and just; but Dr. Jarvis had been talking with him and already the influence of his narrow-minded dislike had been made manifest. A "committee" from one of the larger churches, whose "first choice" had decided not to make a change, had been to him that very morning to inquire if there was any reason why Mr. Douglas could not become their pastor. And Dr. Beverly had said, with a meaning smile: "N-o-o, not if you can risk taking a political crank."

The "committee" had bowed and passed on to find the "right man." How little it takes to change a man's life history! Under these circumstances it is not strange that Dr. Beverly was under some constraint when Mr. Douglas asked for information as to his future. "Well, the best places have been filled for some time," was the reply. "I think we can give you Elliott's Mills, a fairly good church, but not as good as you have had. You hardly expected that, I suppose."

*Copyrighted.

Mr. Douglas bowed. "I understand," said he; "but, Doctor, how am I to support my family and keep my boy in college on the salary they pay there?"

Dr. Beverly laughed uneasily. "A large family is a luxury ministers can hardly afford," he replied; "but I shall have to go back now, and I'll see what can be done."

God knows a great many things about even His good children not altogether to their credit, and David Douglas was glad—the next day—that no one but the all pitying Father read the bitter, rebellious thoughts which filled his mind as he paced his room for the next hour.

Norwich, Conn.

(To be continued.)

THE CHILD—A FORECAST.

BY CHARLOTTE PERKIN STETSON.

The child comes into this world of men a living representative of earlier ages, an epitome of human progress. In his one short life, infancy, childhood, youth, he passes all our centuries of earlier growth, all our temptations, all our triumphs, and comes out adult, abreast of his age.

How strangely sweet and tender is the relation of us, the modern, full-grown, civilized man to this man of past years—our progenitor! We, knowing all that has passed, having taken his steps before him, can show every pitfall, every slough, every precipice, can point unerringly to the shortest paths, the easiest ways. We can, and, remembering our own struggles and failures, how glad we are to help the new one, the fresh trial-life, to a more perfect growth than ours!

And, also, in our pity is a great and growing reverence. This child, who lives in the past, will live in the future. We are beyond our fathers, so will he be beyond us. On overlapping links the chain of life glides on, and we can help to move it.

The child suffers a little always from his undeveloped state. He does not fit the world he is born into, he represents an earlier stage of life. But year by year he comes closer into full harmony, until at last, in perfect manhood, he is with his age. And then, lives he rightly, he must pass it and help lead—he who has been led so long.

This suffering of inharmonious nature is counterbalanced by the keen joy of growing; the glories of seeing, hearing, feeling, understanding, broadening out forever into fuller touch with his human kin. One with nature herself he is from the beginning—peace and health are always awaiting for us in our mother's bosom—his struggle is to assimilate with his kind.

But what a heaven for the young, unfolding soul to find around him a world of creatures nobler, better, stronger, wiser, kinder, unerringly just and true, loving always and patient, full of high courage, splendid skill, glorious usefulness. No wonder he longs to be like them stretches his arms, lifts his face and runs, stumbling, to catch their skirts and pray, "Take me with you! Let me help."

And so the endless poem of life is reënacted, the rhythmic music of growth and progress. Tenderly, strongly, surely, the full grown human bends to help the little one; bends with a smiling pity, recognizing his own age-long, stormy past in this young life; bends with deep love; waiting for his equal, his strong friend; bends with a mighty awe; recognizing in this unformed youth the man who is to come!

Blessed is full daylight, the high sun which has risen and has yet to set. But more blessed is the coming dawn whose freshness breathes of heaven, whose mid-glory is unknown, whose setting marks another day.

Oakland, Cal.

SIDE LIGHTS—THE PERSONAL EQUATION.

A Weak Brother's Plea.

BY HELENA H. THOMAS.

Many readers of this paper have doubtless read in a recent issue of the Housekeeper's Weekly, an article from the gifted pen of "Marion Harland" entitled, "Showing her Hand." For the benefit of those not having had that pleasure I will give a clue to it by the following opening lines.

She says, "A correspondent makes this request: 'Will Marion Harland show her hand upon the temperance question?' As the mention of wine, brandy, etc., in her cookery books may pre-dispose many to doubt her soundness as to the apostle's injunction to be 'temperate in all things,'" she writes of the article, then "shows her hand" in a way that surely does her credit, as she tells of a life-long hatred of strong drink as a beverage, etc.

But I am sure many of us will and do regret that she draws the line at cooking as follows: "I hold that there is no sin or even danger, unless the taste be already enkindled, in the occasional use of them in the kitchen as one would handle vanilla, lemon or bitter-almond flavoring extracts. I do not believe that a single drunkard was ever made by the tablespoonful of wine that goes into the pudding sauce. Every house-mother knows for whom she is catering. If one of her family or guests already loves and craves the stimulant it is prudent to omit it," etc.

Far be it from me to sit in judgment on Marion Harland, but I must take exceptions to at least one sentence in her article, and that is, "Every house-mother knows for whom she is catering." In giving orders for dinner or preparing it ourselves, we may plan only for our own loved ones, but how can we feel sure but that a chance guest may be ushered in to partake of the brandied pudding-sauce, pie or fruit-cake of whose "craving for the stimulant" we are in ignorance?

When I read that sentence I recalled, with a shudder, what opened my eyes to my seeming duty in this direction, when the "red-ribbon" movement brought us in contact with many reformed men. At one time it was my privilege to entertain a temperance speaker of considerable fame, but physically he was a sad wreck from strong drink. I considered myself a temperance woman, disliking spirituous draughts of all kinds. I "tasted not" but I did "handle" when it came to mince pies. I prided myself on those pies, and thought it needed "just a little" to give them the desired flavor; but being a "temperance (?) woman" I used so very little I did not dream that it could ever be detected. So, when dinner-time came, with no small degree of pride, I served mince pie.

But great was my surprise to see my guest, the speaker, push back the plate containing it, and abruptly leave the table and the house. He was gone two or three hours; when he returned it was evident that he had been going through a struggle, he looked so wan and pale, poor man, that as I observed his face, I readily forgave his seeming rudeness. Reaching out his hand, he said very humbly, "Can you pardon my abrupt leave-taking—but," he added, "my conduct calls for an explanation, though I shrink from telling any one how weak I am."

Then, walking across the room as if to nerve himself for an unpleasant duty, he turned and with tears in his eyes, said, "Madam, I pray God that none of your loved ones may ever know what it is to struggle as I have done since I left this house. Some boast that the love of strong drink is taken from them, but you will realize to some extent my weakness when I tell you that the faint odor of it I detected in your pie nearly overcame me. I rushed out into the air and walked like a wild man away from saloons and what my appetite craved, and getting off alone I prayed as only such a helpless one knows how to pray, that God would save me from myself. He alone is my strength, and yet I fear I never can in safety sit at His table where fermented wine is used. You may say, a little brandy or wine will tempt none of my loved ones, "but some chance guest, weak like myself, may be sent to perdition by your thoughtlessness."

Do I hear some of my readers say, "that is an extreme case"? Yes, it is, but I have sometimes wondered if it were not to make our duty clear in such, that we have that passage in Romans, "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

This little incident made such an impression upon me that I never shall forget it while life and reason last. Fifteen years have passed since then, and not a drop of anything that can intoxicate has gone into my cooking. I will admit that I have more than once been tempted to give to it the old time flavor, but each temptation has been met by "For God's sake, don't," seemingly uttered by that pleading face that I gazed into so remorsefully long ago. And now, dear sisters, I think I am even beyond the temptation to thus make my brother weak. Are you?

Grand Rapids, Mich.

"Be as the bird that chancing to alight
Upon a bough too slight,
Feels it give way beneath her and yet sings,
Knowing that she hath wings."

"God may have other Words for other worlds,
But for this world the Word of God is Christ;
And when we come to die, we shall not find
The day has been too long for any of us
To have fulfilled the perfect law of Christ.
Who is there that can say, 'My part is done
In this; now I am ready for a law
More wide, more perfect, for the rest of life'?
Is any living that has not come short?
Has any died that was not short at last?"

"Thank God it is not all vexed confusion, thank God for the hope of the world shining through all these mists of evil. We must indeed be blind if we cannot discern progress, and not least has it been brought about by the quiet, prayerful work of women, who, recognizing their responsibility with regard to the tone of social life, and how much devolves upon them in the furtherance of good from the larger leisure won for them by husbands and fathers, are dealing with these questions as God gives them opportunity."

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Oh, woman, great is thy faith!

PART OF TEMPLE REPORT AT CONVENTION.

First the vision, or dream, next the plan, then the foundation laid, followed by the superstructure; now the occupied and completed building. That has been the history of the Temple as reported to you by me year after year, as I have come up to the great autumn gatherings of the National W. C. T. U., since that memorable one held at Nashville, Tenn., in 1887, when you first so kindly listened to my plan and sent me onward rejoicing with your blessing and pledges of financial aid. Never was the outlook for the Temple so promising as it is to-day.

The prayer which ascended for days at the outset of the work for the architect, Mr. Root, that he would design a building for beauty and fitness such as the world never before has seen, has been fully realized. It is the delight of artists and architects alike. There is something in its exquisite proportion and noble dignity of expression that commands the admiration of all who look upon it. Not only do Americans say it is the finest building of the kind on this continent, but those who dwell beyond the seas tell us they know of no building of like order that will compare with it in any land for beauty of design. As far, therefore, as architecture goes, it is an undoubted success. In regard to situation, from a business point of view, it is admitted by real estate experts to be the finest business corner in Chicago for an office building. The manner in which it has rented shows this; it commands the highest rents, with the exception of the Rookery building (which is on a par with the Temple in this respect), of any in the city. It has only been occupied six months and the rent roll is already over $150,000. This too, in the face of the fact that no office in it is rented for a term of less than three years, and many are rented for five and ten years. Our agent thinks by May next every office in the building will be taken, as some large corporations have now the refusal of a large amount of space which will be decided upon soon. When the building is all rented the gross income from it will be over $200,000 yearly. Even the amount of space now rented will pay a fair dividend on the capital stock, as the expense of running the building, machinery, ground rent and interest on bonds amount to $117,000; and the rental the first year is $150,000. From a financial point of view, therefore, it must be admitted the Temple is a marvelous success. The vital point to us white-ribboners, however, is what is the prospect of our trustees getting control of the stock and holding it for the W. C. T. U. until such times as through gifts and rentals the building will be entirely paid for. In regard to this the outlook is most promising, the contract being entered into the first of last February with Marshall Field, who is the largest stockholder, to purchase his entire block of stock, amounting to $251,000, the terms being $50,000 down February first, and $10,000 every three months thereafter. This, as you will see, gives us about two years to pay it in. Eight months of the time has not yet elapsed, and we have paid Mr. Field up to present date in round figures $163,000. We expect to pay him the balance soon, probably by February 1st, if not sooner. We will then have the controlling interest of the stock; $301,000 would give us this, but we will have by that time about $350,000.

The question will be asked, where did we get the money to pay Mr. Field? A small part of it comes from gifts, but the larger proportion of it came from the sale of Temple trust bonds, of which we have but $50,000 of our issue of $300,000 left unsold. The next question which will logically follow is if these bonds mature in ten years and must be paid, how are you going to meet them? From gifts and rentals, even if we depend entirely on the income from the building we would have enough from this source alone in ten years to pay off the bonds with interest, beside sufficient to pay for the balance of the capital stock. We do not expect nor intend to be driven to such an alternative, as it would keep the National and state unions from receiving any benefit from the income from the building during all these years. We would be glad by the time another year revolves, if they might enter into their rich heritage, so that a more effectual work for temperance might be done throughout the land, in which money would prove a large factor. If all unions and individuals would do as some have so nobly done, the work of paying for the Temple would be accomplished in a year. We hear a great deal said by some about taxing so heavily the unions to raise $100 for the Temple. How many do you think of the eight thousand in this country have raised that amount? Only 117.

In justice, however, I must say there are scores of unions bravely at work raising their quota of $100, and the panels of the different states in Willard Hall bearing the names of individual donors will have more names upon them than those that have been set aside for the gifts of unions to be inserted upon them as, 189 persons have given $100 each. The amount so far received in gifts as taken from Miss Pugh's books amount to $75,618. Besides this there has been received $1,000 from Mr. Schumaker, of Akron, Ohio, and $1,000 from Mr. Austin, of Chicago, Illinois, in stock which does not appear on Miss Pugh's books, making a grand total of $77,618. While this seems a large sum it is nothing in comparison to what such a constituency for such a cause should have given. If there had been concerted action in each state in this matter there would have been no need of issuing our Temple trust bonds, but there was no other course open, as sufficient money had to be secured in some way to get control of the stock. The marvel, however, is that under existing circumstances where there is so much misunderstanding, misstatement and ignorance in regard to the plan of the Temple so large a sum could have been received.

(To be continued.)

The Union Signal AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPEARNCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH, Office: The Tempie, Chicago, Ill.

Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, Rejoice.—Phil. 4: 4.

A CONTRAST.

Among the gatherings in Chicago during the dedication week two are especially noteworthy and suggestive. The first, in order of time, was the reception and ball at the Auditorium. The second, the opening exercises of the World's Auxiliary Congress.

It seems the proper, or at least the popular thing, to have in connection with every important occasion, a ball. Women can take part in a ball. They cannot vote, but they can be exhibited in such costume as Paris dictates as "the thing." As nearly as we can ascertain this ball was something gigantic in its way. If the Chicago papers are to be believed it surpassed anything of its kind ever attempted on the American continent. The numbers, the gorgeous dresses of the ladies, the blaze of diamonds, the shimmer of pearls, the glorious beauty of the women, the presence in magnificent costume of exalted functionaries of church and state from many lands; all gave their quota to the bewildering grandeur of the occasion. Rare and costly viands tempted to indulgence. Champagne flowed freely, diffusing its recklessness and glamour. Music lent its bewitching power.

We doubt if Belshazzer ever looked on such a scene as the Auditorium presented that night. A crowd of men and women meeting on the same level of familiarity, gorged with stimulating food, and excited with wine, proceeding to enact the dance of modern society. "It was a spectacle to gods and men."

Of these people, a very large part had solemnly in the house of God "renounced the devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so as not to follow or be led by them." Yet here they are part of an occasion, which, if not a sample of the "vain pomp and glory of the world," then there is no vain pomp, and the words of the baptismal formula in all Christendom are meaningless. It was the direct pride and boast of the participants and their sympathizers that the world never saw anything richer, grander, in more perfect form. As a world product, with a high flavoring of the flesh, it was an unquestionable success.

On Friday night, October 21, another gathering took place at the Auditorium, the opening service of the World's Auxiliary Congress. There was no crush of carriages in the streets leading to the Auditorium, no mass of admiring citizens watching the dainty children of luxury guarded and guided by obsequious ushers to their predestined places. Serious, plainly dressed men and women made their way quietly to the place of meeting with no blare or demonstration. There was nothing to attract the eye, or, indeed, any of the senses. It was the antipodes of the ball.

The first great characteristic of the Congress is its benevolence. In all that assembly the dominant idea was the good of others. The burdens on human shoulders, ignorance, superstition, doubt and whatever else enthralls humanity, were the subjects of study with a view to its removal. Taking advantage of the occasion when a great exhibit of the products of our times was to be made, the world's benefactors are asked to assemble in congress. Their initial assembly is in sharp contrast with that which represents the material and the selfish. From the standpoint of the world, the Congress was distressingly weak.

The next peculiarity was the faith of the company. They were not alarmed or disconcerted at the want of enthusiasm exhibited. There was no proposition to abandon the effort. Time was when one might have met in England a fair skinned man on whose forehead was branded the words, "Gurth, born thrall of Edric, the Saxon." Later on one might have found in this country, black men and women held in a web of law to a servitude as hopeless and degrading as ever crushed the soul in the darkest age; all that is usually meant by slavery in Anglo-Saxon countries is gone now, but its going was never hastened by the elegant and dainty creatures of the ball-room. They and their kind in all the ages have been too intent on convenience, comfort, success, rights, to give much effort to the uplifting of humanity. Doubtless there are many who suppose themselves to be in sympathy with reform because tales of woe, artistically recited, move them to a momentary ripple of sensibility. They may even go so far as to consent to serve on a committee for some semi-benevolent cause.

But the reformers who staid away from the fireworks to attend the Congress are made of different material or in a different way. And strangely enough, somehow, the things the reformers stand for, sooner or later come to pass.

CHRISTIANITY SIMPLIFIED.

Even as the Quakers have not greater grown as a sect and yet have sent helpful and uplifting ideas out into all other sects, so the church union and the men and women who are actively at work to heal the wounds in that dissevered body of Christ which we call the church universal, are building better than they know. Never was there a day when party allegiance, whether political or ecclesiastical, was less a binding force than now.

The great congress of all religions to be held at the World's Columbian Exposition in June of 1893 promises to afford a rallying point from which is sure to radiate the light of knowledge, the warmth of love and the actinic ray of practical results in favor of one creed—and that one largely creedless, except as we make Christ's life and words and work without man's note of commentary, one great kind family of man enrolled as the loyal and loving family of God. Whoever contributes by a single utterance to such a heavenly consummation has not lived in vain; whoever by emphasizing the difference that separates the groups in political or church life into antagonistic factions, has lived by that much to curse and not bless his race. We are but children groping towards the light. Our only rational attitude is that pathetic one shown by the artist when the boy stands with the shell at his ear, his eyes uplifted, his lips parted with a smile of hope—he is the immortal inquirer and the universe the shell. In the Bible we have a sufficient rule of faith and practice; the wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein, but he continually does so. If he did not stop at every opening in the woods to erect a guide-board he would get more rapidly over the ground. Men have set themselves to limit the word and works of God; they have tried to pour the ocean into the little shallow cup of their own skulls, but the heart is so great that if only we could once for all accept the truth that religion is an affair of the heart, these brawling controversies would be at an end.

The world is a unit in accepting the work of Christ as the highest expression this globe has seen of the ideal in conduct. "No man ever spake like this man," and none ever acted like Him, but in the proportion that any one speaks kindly he has by that much approached the words of Christ, and in the proportion that his deeds are considerate and tender he has put himself in parallel with that great light that lights up history.

Let us, then, converge the gaze of our multitudinous minds on that lambent ray that gleams along the common pathway of the humblest, taking up our daily toil, even as He did, and saying, "By His grace who walked this path before me, it shall be more true to-day than yesterday that I do always the things that please Him." This simplifies Christianity, brings it to the level of the loving little child, and yet makes it great enough for the wide-brained statesman, orator, philosopher; makes it practical enough for the scientist and inventor, and ideal enough for the romancer and poet, comprehensive enough for the wisest, simple enough for the most ignorant.

A MAGNIFICENT OBJECT LESSON.

More thrilling than any tale of the days of chivalry is the story of the great prize fight that did not occur at St. Paul. The brutal exhibition was to take place on a certain Wednesday evening; mayor and police were pledged not to interfere and the affair was blazoned all over the country. The Saturday evening previous, a handful of law abiding, but despairing, citizens met for consultation. They entertained no hope of preventing the disgraceful affair but decided to call an indignation meeting for the next Monday evening, that respectable citizens might at least enter their protest. To their joyful surprise the large hall in which the meeting was called was full. Enthusiastic resolutions were adopted denouncing the mayor as a rebel against state law and appealing to the governor for protection.

By appointment, the governor met a delegation of the citizens the next morning. He was a sporting man himself and generally believed to be not opposed to the fight. However that may be, he attempted no opposition to the storm of public opinion but issued a proclamation calling upon the sheriff, as the superior of the mayor, to enforce the state laws against fighting which the mayor had refused to enforce. The proclamation was reënforced by the information given the sheriff that if he failed to obey he would lose his position. When questioned Wednesday morning as to what he intended to do, the sheriff said, "I would not dare to stop the fight without the protection of a thousand men." "You shall have them," replied the governor, and at once ordered out the militia. In the meantime, preparations for the fight went defiantly forward until the news was brought to the leaders that the militia all over the city were receiving orders to report for duty. Then it was decided without waste of words to declare the fight off and return the gate money. But the governor was determined to make sure work, and at twilight, according to the program, the militia marched through the streets and took possession of the arena.

A more magnificent object lesson was never presented to the world. "Prohibition does not prohibit, therefore let us compromise with vice," is the world's motto, and, alas, a few Rainsfords echo the cry from the pulpit. Prohibitory laws alone do not indeed prohibit, but that force of 1,000 militia taking possession of that empty arena proves forever that prohibitory laws with the voters who enacted them back of them will enforce anything. It proves also that there is not a lack of moral conviction in the land, but only a lack of opportunity for that conviction to make itself felt. Therefore come back from the wilderness, ye fearful Elijahs; cease calling upon Jehovah for death; call, rather, upon the worshippers of Jehovah to rally to your side. The result will astound you and your enemies, for not seven thousand alone, but seventy times seven thousand shall answer to your call.

GOOD WORDS.

Perhaps nothing truer was ever said concerning those whom the world had forsaken than the following, which has been called one of the greatest lines in our literature. Somebody was commenting harshly on an outcast whereupon Walt Whitman exclaimed to this unfortunate: "Not until the sun excludes you will I exclude you." Few of us have reached a charity like that. We cannot claim to be so great that we rise above the greatest without arrogance, or speak to the lowest without conscious condescension, but even as he did, white ribboners have placed "upon the brow of crime the kiss of human sympathy." There is one thing, however, that it is, perhaps, even more difficult to do, and that is, to have patience with our equals. It is easy to be obsequious to those above us, it is not difficult to be kind to those beneath us, but to hold a steady good will toward those who are running with us the race of life, to keep sacredly to emulation and rigidly to bar out envy, that is the problem, and it comes to us even in the pleasant precincts of the W. C. T. U., though we thoroughly believe there is less of it there than in almost any other guild—no thanks to us that this is true, but thanks to the divine impulse of the Crusade to which we owe our being. Should we not dwell more than we do upon the tendencies of character in those about us? Should we not love them, not for the women that they are, but for the angels that they would become? This is an age in which there is so much refinement of thought that tendencies are taken great account of as in no other epoch. We honor the note drawn on the bank of character not wholly because of the capital already in the vaults, but in the expectation that more is being, perhaps slowly, at least steadily, added to the capital stock.

Drummond has well said in his chapter on "The Alchemy of Influence," that "those who surround themselves with the highest will be those who change into the highest; there are some men and some women in whose company we are always at our best; while with them we cannot think mean thoughts or speak ungenerous words; their mere presence is elevation, purification, sanctity."

We ought to look at each other ideally, to try to see in those about us that statue of perfectness that Michael Angelo saw in the block of marble. If we persist in doing this we shall no doubt be considered guilty of overestimating those whom we praise, but let us bear this for the sake of the good that comes of generous expectation exercised toward those who walk with us the path of life, who share its march and bivouac, its dangers and rewards.

LIQUOR AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

We find the following in the News-Record, Oct. 27, 1892.

From the latest issue of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular we take the following:

"It is reasonable to suppose that all the civilized nations of the world will be sufficiently represented at the World's Fair in Chicago next year to make an exhibition of fine Kentucky whisky a profitable venture, and it seems to us that here is one opportunity, at least, that the more ambitious of our distillers should not neglect. Such an exhibition, if a number of distillers should combine, would not be expensive and might be made very effective. The best matured goods only should be exhibited; small souvenir bottles should be given away or sold at a nominal price, and literature should be distributed in several foreign languages, but especially in the Spanish. The direct benefits to be derived from such an exhibit would come from the United States, of course, but the seed would be sown by which a large trade, if properly worked, could undoubtedly be built up in the Spanish countries south of us, and especially in the republic of Mexico."

If any one has wondered at the determination shown by the friends of prohibition to prevent the sale of liquor at Jackson Park he should be able to get a glimpse from the above of the large possibilities which the dealers in spirits see before them in the Exposition. Of course the thing to be attained by each party to the contention is very important from their respective points of view.

This being the case, the managers of the World's Fair have no small responsibility resting on their shoulders in determining what course they shall take in the matter.

Few genuine Prohibitionists have not had convincing experience of the methods of the alcohol syndicate, sufficient to open their eyes, and to stir their blood. Even those Prohibitionists who are content to march with the democratic, republican or populist procession, one would think might be roused to some activity in view of what is contemplated. California will seek to outbid Europe with wine and brandy. The "brewing interest" will make an astonishing exhibit. The enterprising distillers will not be behind. Their "goods" will be pressed with all the infernal ingenuity born of decades of practice on the unsophisticated heathen, and this land, the land of the Christians, will appear, and so far as the Columbian exhibit goes will be, a drunken land.

How long, oh, Lord! how long

A COURT LESSON.

A young woman who is an expert stenographer and a friend of ours has recently been called in the course of her duties to be present at a morning session of the police court in Chicago. She says:

"The first prisoner was a young man about thirty who had been arrested for wandering around the tracks of the railroad yard in dangerous places while under the influence of liquor. He had learned to drink at his father's table. He had a wife and two children, had never been arrested before and said that if the judge would let him off he would try never to be arrested again. The same old cry of weak humanity praying to be delivered not from sin but from its consequences.

"The next was a poor fellow so unnerved from drink that he was trembling in every limb. His small, restless eyes glanced furtively at everything and everybody with the most hunted look on his miserable, thin face that I ever saw on a human being. It was like an expression I have noticed in the eyes of some poor, outcast dog. He was arrested for disturbing the peace, had been a hard working man, had accumulated enough to build some flats but was so diseased and poisoned by drink that he was on the verge of delirium tremens. The captain of police suggested that he be sent to some place where he would be out of the reach of liquor. The court took his case under advisement so I did not learn what was finally done, but I afterward found out that the police magistrate himself had been the proprietor of a saloon and gambling den of notorious reputation some years ago and from his appearance I should not judge him to have reformed to any considerable extent.

"The scenes of that police court made my heart ache and I really felt almost unable to do the work I had gone to attempt. To see that poor, weak creature scarcely above an animal in intelligence and yet denied that protection given to animals, distressed me unspeakably. I knew that any one guilty of maliciously or willfully hurting or killing a dog is, by the statutes of the state, liable to a fine or imprisonment, yet that oft cursed man was to be punished for disturbing the peace of the community while the men who furnished the liquor that brought him to that condition are not only allowed to do it, but protected in their work. I determined, while sitting in that court room, that if God would help me lift humanity nearer to Himself I would do so. I do not know what I can accomplish but something, I hope; so please send me a W. C. T. U. pledge and by God's help I will try."

A QUESTION-BOX.

The Rev. Dr. Gambrell, of Mississippi, was asked to open the question-box at the recent meeting of the Baptist Young People's Union, of America, held in Detroit. The question was asked: "What is gumption?" and the learned D. D. made the following answer:

"Gumption is a kind of ointment made of brains and information boiled down to the consistency of a salve; there ought to be a box in every family; and a little of it rubbed on the forehead of a young man will keep him from courting a girl who is running away from him; a little rubbed under the bangs of a young lady will teach her how to spread her net. A little of it will prevent a dog from barking in an empty barrel because there was a mouse in it last year. A little of it properly applied will prevent the secretary of a mission board from planting a church by the side of a country graveyard instead of in a village where folks live. A little of it properly applied will make a man know that he has answered questions enough."

Another question was this: "If the Creator had intended women to be public speakers, would he not have given them a suitable voice?" Dr. Gambrell said: "This was evidently sent us by an old bachelor. I think it would help him to have some of that salve rubbed on his head. The sweetest voices that I have ever heard were women's, and the clearest and dearest voice that ever came to me was that of my mother at prayer."

It is said that women were not heard at this convention. If so, it was because they were not practiced speakers We have been in the largest auditoriums the country affords and have heard women in perfectly womanly tones speak so as to be heard just as clearly as men. Anybody who will think, knows from the nature of the case this must be true; the soprano voice is always the carrying voice. Out in a back lot, a woman has no trouble to make her boy hear her if she wants him to come home, and that right quickly. The only trouble is, that women who never developed their voices have been put forward to speak, which is always a great pity. There is about as much sense in doing this as there would be in setting a lot of Chinese women to run a race with their poor little bound up feet. It is a significant and sad commentary upon the pastors who have not brought out the voices of the women in their respective churches. The white-ribbon women have been drilled, schooled, and everybody knows that they can be heard. So can the suffrage women. So can the women in concert and theatre. There is no trouble about their natural gifts; and what with Delsarte, the schools of oratory, and other schools of method now in use, it will be as a tale that is told in generations to come that any one asked the question: "Ought women to speak when they have not the voice?"

At the church congress recently held in England, one day was given to the temperance reform. The men and women convened separately, the wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury presiding over the women's meeting. Lady Frederick Cavendish said that nothing less than a revolution had taken place within the last sixty years in the habits of what is conventionally called "the best society." She had been lately staying in a country house where some stoutly made, roomy old dining-room chairs are still in use of which the seats are made in a deep groove so as to save gentlemen from falling out of them after dinner. But times have changed since then, and it would certainly be a most pointless insult nowadays to say of any tippler, "he is as drunk as a lord." A gentleman, even an officer, may give up wine with just as much freedom from remark as if he gave up pepper or mustard, and there are plenty of water drinkers at London dinner tables. Lady Frederick took a strong stand for total abstinence, and lamented the fact that so few women in England have reached the point of relinquishing alcoholics as a beverage. The Duchess of Bedford, sister of Lady Henry Somerset, herself a total abstainer, read an excellent essay in which she urged the women present to seize every opportunity to win others to their view and to persuade them to adopt the practice which she firmly believed was the soundest method of preserving bodily and mental health, as well as a practical witness against one of the most destructive evils of our time. Her Grace's remarks were frequently applauded.

In his admirable comments on the Sabbath school lesson for October 16, the vision in which Peter learned that henceforth no man was common or unclean, Dr. McLaren says, "Life is the best commentator upon God's word. The three men down at the door poured light on the vision at the housetop." This is the pith of the argument for woman in the pulpit, and in the legislative bodies of the church, put in the tersest, strongest form by one of the leading divines of this age. Turn the light of Dr. McLaren's clear exposition of Scripture truth upon the following: A missionary in India writing to the Western Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal), says that if she had had authority to baptize a converted Indian widow the chains of an intolerable bondage would have been broken at once, but, while the woman missionary was gone seeking a man to perform the ceremony, the widow's relatives, learning what was going on, carried her off and sent her to a distant city, where she was undoubtedly doomed to a life of enforced infamy. And yet, when, to meet such exigencies, women urge that they be admitted to a participation in all of the privileges of the Christian church, they are met with the sneer that they are seeking place and position. Oh, men, oh, brothers! one tithe of the respect you profess for womanhood would save you from that unworthy sneer. And if by the prince of devils your daughters are inspired to ask for power and position, by whom are your sons inspired? Ye yourselves accept the highest positions "in the gift of the church," and expect to be believed when you say that you do it, not for personal ends, but because of the greater opportunities for usefulness afforded. Would it be strange if your refusal to accept frankly similar statements from us should make us hesitate to put full faith in yours?

Flowers are Love's true language; they do pray,
Like the divining rods of Magi, old,
Where precious wealth lies buried, not of gold,
But love—strong love, that never can decay!

—Benjamin.

***

Woman's vote will yet be the enacting clause of prohibitory statutes.

***

There are 110,242 females at the national capital, and 100,000 males. This is largely attributable to the employment of women as clerks in the national departments.

***

The Zenana Association for the education of high caste India women has been formed in London, with Miss Ellen Pash, president; Mrs. Warner Snoad, vice president; Lady Henry Somerset, treasurer; Miss A. C. Welds, secretary. Its headquarters are 47 Victoria street, Westminster, S. W. London, Eng.

***

Man is the only animal that turns night into day except the fiercest orders of the carnivora. The most denaturalizing thing in civilization is that its methods almost universally imply the loss of sleep, and in the circles of kings and of aristocrats this loss is more emphasized than in any other ranks. Probably from this fact it results that the yeomanry and dwellers in the country generally, must in alternate generations by the infusion of their stronger blood recruit the deteriorating ranks of those on whom civilization has reeked her power, her luxury, and afterwards her vengeance.

***

Charles Lamb, one of the brightest spirits extinguished by drink, wrote mournfully, looking back upon his childhood: "Could the youth to whom the flavor of his first glass was delicious, look into my desolation and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is when a man feels himself going down a precipice with open eye and a passive will, to see his destruction, and not to have power of will to stop it, and yet to feel it all the way emanating from himself, to perceive all goodness emptied out of him, and yet not be able to forget the time when it was otherwise—how he would avoid the first temptation to drink!"

***

Canon Farrar makes an admirable point in a recent address. He says Mr. Herbert Spencer, the philosopher, has recently stated that by no political alchemy can you educe golden conduct from leaden instincts. My answer is that just as by the alchemy of nature you can turn the soot into the diamond and the clay into the sapphire, so by the action of Christian legislation which is the alchemy of Christ, you can transmute those leaden instincts into the golden instincts which produce virtue and prosperity. Another sophistry was stated by an English archbishop, who, in an evil hour was left to say: "We prefer England free to England sober." Canon Farrar says in relation to this: "A more deplorable epigram there could not be As if an England sober could be anything but an England free, and as if an England drunk could be anything else than an England degraded, enslaved and debased." The worst of it is that no epigram has been more quoted by the enemy; as Canon Farrar says: "It has been used as a sort of poisoned rapier to stab many a noble effort."

***

Woman has almost ceased to recognize herself. So recently as the sixteenth century Shakespeare makes Petruchio say of her: "She is my goods, my chattel: she is my house, my household stuff, my field, my barn, my anything." The formula of her degradation was the one phrase that all nations seem to know, taken from Holy Writ: "Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." The London Times of July 18, 1797, has the following paragraph: "On Friday a butcher exposed his wife for sale in Smithfield market with a halter about her neck and a rope around her person. A drover was the purchaser for three guineas and a crown." Nothing encourages the reform so much as to know the splendid march of progress, and to feel that no mortal man can by any possibility arrest its progress. She who has been brought from such degradation to be lifted up, not only as queen of the home and of society, but whom the world is rapidly endowing as queen of every realm that it contains in her divine right of motherhood, need have no fear about the future—"the flowing tide is with us"—the heights are almost gained.

On Duty

IOWA.

A BANNER CONVENTION.

The third annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the state of Iowa was held in the Congregational church at Burlington, October 4-7. Among the decorations were vases of cosmos and dahlias. This being a banner state, there were banners and banners, among them the Y banner, and the National one given by Miss Willard at Boston, for the largest per cent of increase in membership, L. T. L. banners and a new white silken one presented by our state president. In the center of the last one will be painted the wild rose which was chosen as our state flower for its beauty and fragrance, and in admiration of its ability to live and flourish in waste and desert places.

There was a good attendance of delegates. District presidents and superintendents of departments reported constantly increasing interest and much good solid work done during the year.

The treasurer's report showed an increase of five hundred and sixty seven new members, making our total membership two thousand two hundred and forty two. A dozen or more new unions were organized too near the close of our fiscal year to be included in the report. It is a matter of rejoicing that our organization has made this great gain in twenty two months.

Our president's address was rich with information, encouragement and timely suggestions. In regard to political work she mentioned having sent out a circular last fall asking our women to pray and labor for the election to our general assembly of Republican candidates pledged to vote against the repeal of our prohibitory law, adding that this was and could be only a request or a recommendation; that under our constitution we are attached to no political party, and no political work can be required of us, either as individuals or societies, while at the same time we are perfectly free to take such action as we choose. She also said, "this year the Republican party not only tables a resolution merely reaffirming the position of the party in past years, but makes as its chairman a man who is a pronounced friend of the liquor traffic, and had even left the party because of its prohibitory action, and explains this startling inconsistency by saying that 'prohibition is not an issue this year.'" In view of all this and much more, she added, "I lately sent out a circular briefly stating the reasons for my belief that national prohibition is necessary for complete state prohibition and asking you to give your prayers and influence in this campaign to the only party that advocates the cause we are organized to promote. I again urge you during the short time that remains to do what you can to gain votes for it." Mrs. Clara Hoffman, president of Missouri W. C. T. U., commanded intense interest while discussing the dominant political issue which she declared to be the liquor traffic.

The Y's charmingly filled one evening. Among the speakers were Miss Laura McLean, of Burlington, Miss Gertrude Minard, of Rock Valley, Miss Cecilia Probert, of Sumner, and Miss Addie Estey, of Des Moines. Miss Estey is our state superintendent of Y work. The Episcopalian boy-choir favored the audience with a sweetly-rendered hymn. Mr. A. C. Weaver, of Des Moines, son of presidential candidate General Weaver, gave a whistling solo, which called forth a stirring encore.

A Demorest grand gold medal contest was held on Thursday evening. The eight contestants came from different parts of the state. Master Clifford Thorne of Mt. Pleasant, was the successful contestant, and competed for the diamond medal at the National Convention at Denver.

Rev. W. F. Crafts, editor of the Christian Statesman, was present one afternoon, and spoke earnestly against the sale of intoxicants on the World's Fair grounds, urging his hearers to take speedy action for its prevention.

A resolution to lend prayers and influence to the only party that upholds our sacred cause was passed without a dissenting vote. Two new departments were added to our list, viz.: Systematic giving and school savings banks. Mrs. Mary E. McMillan read an inspiring paper on "Systematic Giving." She has done faithful service as our recording secretary, but positively declining a reëlection to this office was made superintendent of the department of systematic giving.

Mrs. M. H. Dunham was unanimously reëlected president. Miss Belle A. Mix, of Danville, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Sadette S. Harrington, of Rock Valley, recording secretary; Mrs. L. D. Carhart, of Marion, was reëlected treasurer. A most excellent address from Mrs. Helen M. Barker, ex-president of South Dakota W. C. T. U., on the last evening completed our choice feast of good things.

The following delegates were elected to the National Convention: Mother Benedict, Mrs. R. S. Lichtenwalter, Mrs. D. C. Evans, Mrs. J. B. Shesler and Miss Clara A. Stephens.

NOTES.

The Bible expositions by our evangelist, Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, were truly seasons of sweet spiritual refreshment.

We are rejoicing over our two new general officers, young, consecrated, gifted women.

Our retiring corresponding secretary removed to another state months ago, yet faithfully discharged the duties of her office until the year closed.

Among the many good reports may be noted that of Mrs. Laura R. Eaton, state superintendent of Band of Mercy work. Surely after hearing that, one cannot view "a bird upon a lady's bonnet," without realizing there is "blood upon it."

To Mrs. Thera B. True, president of Clayton county W. C. T. U., has been accorded the honor of being elected to "set on conference" of the Free Baptists at Lowell, Mass. She was also invited to read a paper before this great triennial gathering of her church people.

Mrs. S. F. Grubb, of Kansas, spent several days in the western part of the state, and spoke most acceptably at ten or twelve places.

Our state president addressed a delighted audience on Woman's Day at our state fair.

The Middletown union had a social recently to earn money for the Temple, and also a fine medal contest, at which over seventeen dollars were taken. Miss Belle Bomersock won the silver medal. Arrangements are being made by this wide-awake union to hold another soon.

CLARA P. WHITE,
State Reporter, Volga.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

"Be of good cheer; your cause belongs
To Him who can avenge your wrongs;
Leave all to Him, your Lord!
Though hidden yet from mortal eyes,
Salvation shall for you arise;
He girdeth on his sword!"

Never before did the white-ribbon army of Illinois march up to their annual Harvest Home with heavier burdens or with stronger faith than they did on the third day of October, when they set their faces toward Danville, the seat of the state convention.

The burdens in addition to those that are ever with us—the general departments of work, were: Shall the gates of the World's great exposition be opened on the Sabbath and our sacred day of rest be trampled under foot? The other great burden bore relation to the first: Shall the laws of the state which prohibit intoxicating liquors being sold upon grounds commonly called "fair grounds" be set at naught, and the vile traffic establish its hateful presence upon the grounds of the great Columbian Exposition? These questions hung heavy upon our hearts, but still we came up singing, and with brave spirits.

"Though hidden yet from mortal eyes,
Salvation shall for you arise;
He girdeth on His sword!"

Tuesday morning at nine o'clock, as is our custom, the state executive committee went into private session in the large and commodious parlors of the church, while at the same hour in the main audience room our always glorious all day prayer and praise meeting began with Mrs. F. C. Hathaway as leader, and Miss Annie Downey, of Greencastle, Indiana, one of our National evangelists, as helper.

Wednesday morning the beautiful auditorium of the church witnessed a cheery scene; on the platform stood the state president, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds with gavel in hand, watching for the "stroke of nine" which would be the signal for that well-known gavel in that well-known hand to fall with no uncertain sound. On the floor, delegates were hurrying to their respective standards, for twenty blue banneretts lifted up their numbers in proud significance of the occasion.

Fully three hundred delegates were enrolled, and the convention swung into "business step" with wonderful celerity. Song and prayer preceded by a "grand voluntary" from the great organ, opened the business exercises, and our beloved Mrs. Hathaway took charge of all the devotional meetings of the convention, with full liberty to press into service whomsoever she pleased.

Miss Annie Downey was warmly welcomed by the convention and gave most blessed assistance all along during the convention days.

Through the thoughtfulness of Mrs. Hathaway, our state evangelistic superintendent, Miss Inez McClung and Miss Robinson, of Monmouth, were secured for the day sessions to lead in the music, and no one who heard Miss McClung's fine soprano voice will ever forget how thrilling were her tones. Miss Robinson acted as pianist and together they lifted our thoughts very often to the heavenly choir who sing around the throne. After roll-call came the "welcomes"—three of them—one from the local union, one from the young women and one from the churches—voiced in their order by Mrs. M. V. S. Woods, Miss Frances Pierson and the Rev. Chas. A. Crane. To the gracious words which fell from the lips of these comrades, Mrs. Hibben, Miss Cowen and Mrs. Hathaway responded in most fitting and tender terms.

Reports of superintendents of departments and the introduction of visitors consumed the remainder of the forenoon, and just before adjournment the delegates rose and sang that grand, inspiring hymn beginning:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord."

The afternoon session of Wednesday opened with devotional exercises as usual, and then followed reports of district presidents. The chief feature of the afternoon was a paper prepared and read by Miss M. Lena Morrow, the newly elected president of the sixth district. She presented some strong points, and the paper was listened to with marked attention. The great stress of business—which is a feature of all our state conventions—prevented as full a discussion of the papers brought before the delegates as was desired, and the thought arises that the district conventions ought to make a note of this and make room on their programs for "discussions." Miss Morrow struck the first keynote in the convention on the subject of franchise, for the simple reason that her paper came before the report of the superintendent of that department of our work.

Mrs. Ella M. Orr, the superintendent just alluded to, presented a magnificent report, and the "question of woman suffrage" was a question no longer, but was for the first time in Illinois state W. C. T. U. conventions a fixed fact, with an enthusiasm all its own, for be it known to you, dear white ribboners of states still in bondage, the Illinois women this year reported as having actually voted, and their heads are accordingly high; to stand higher when the full and complete ballot is in our hands. Mrs. Kepley with her usual enthusiasm and zeal started a proposition which resulted in the printing of 100,000 circulars instructing the women how to proceed in the matter of voting for trustees of the state university located at Champaign. These circulars, by vote of the convention, were ordered and paid for by the delegates and their constituency. It was a master stroke of wisdom and good policy to thus flood our state with "How To Do It." A man opposed to women having the ballot would not have found the Illinois state convention a very congenial clime.

Thursday morning a half hour prayer and song service prepared the way for a crowded day of business. With clock like regularity the reports were given of superintendents and district presidents, until about eleven o'clock, when the delegates gave close attention to the report on our state paper, The Illinois Watch-Tower, by its able editor, Mrs. A. E. Sanford. This child of our hopes and, sometimes, fears, was brought forward and introduced as not quite two years old, and yet had entirely "paid for its keep." The report was loudly cheered and forthwith Mrs. Rounds began soliciting for its future welfare by asking all who wanted to give one dollar to stand up. Instantly a goodly number sprang to their feet, but the "dollars" were held in abeyance until some who wanted to give more could speak, and several larger donations were recorded and then the single dollars began to roll in. After that, subscribers were called for, and Mrs. Sanford reports one hundred added to the list. Thus our paper is strongly entrenched in the hearts of the women of our state.

The election of officers was the chief feature of the afternoon of Thursday, resulting in the reëlection of Mrs. Rounds as president, Mrs. Grout as recording secretary and Mrs. Sanford as treasurer.

Miss Helen L. Hood having expressed a wish not to be again honored with the office of corresponding secretary, as her work in the Providence of God seems for the present to be in England, she was accorded her wish with many deep regrets and tears that would have their way, and Miss Mary C. Gregory was elected to the office.

Our beloved Miss West having left us, in "foreign lands to roam," and not knowing the time when we might reasonably expect her home, her name was reluctantly dropped from the list of "general officers" and Mrs. Daisy H. Carlock elected to the position of vice president. To both of our beloved co-workers, Miss West and Miss Hood, the convention ordered messages sent, which were prepared by Mrs. Clara Gould in most beautiful and earnest words, read and accepted by the convention.

Friday morning at nine o'clock was held the "memorial service." From the pages of the beautiful memorial card, beamed the dear face of the mother of our National President, the "Saint Courageous" of Rest Cottage. She seemed to wear an upward glance, as if "the other country" had appeared in sight. The long list of "promoted soldiers" shows 220 names of those who have "gone up higher."

The routine work of the day went on, and the report of the state treasurer, Mrs. Sanford, filled all our hearts with gratitude to God. Her showing of members and money was grand. It read like a poem, as she took us over the weary road of the disasters and discouragements of the early part of the year, and brought us step by step until we swung "over the line" of sixteen thousand members, and while we didn't "demonstrate" as our brothers do when they receive good news—by throwing up our bonnets and stamping our feet and screaming—we, more orderly, but just as glad, rose and sang the doxology! What better could we do than to give praise to God who had so wonderfully blessed us? The committee on resolutions made us all resolve to be and do several things which met our hearty approval, and then after a few more reports, a strong resolution against Sunday opening of the Columbian Exposition was unanimously passed and two of our delegates were commissioned to go to Chicago to present it that evening to the great ratification Sunday closing meeting. Then came "The conclusion of the whole matter," by Mrs. Carlock, in a strong and yet tender paper, in which she gave pure words of wisdom and helpfulness to us all, and after some miscellaneous business, the farewell service began, and the president, after a few parting words, called Rev. Mr. Little, pastor of the Presbyterian church, to the platform to offer the closing prayer.

We then sang "God be with you till we meet again," and in the midst of a most solemn hush, while all thoughts were turned upon the future of another year and the work before us, the gavel fell, and Mrs. Rounds pronounced the nineteenth convention of the Illinois Woman's Christian Temperance Union adjourned!

THE EVENING SESSIONS.

On Tuesday evening the Grand Opera House was well filled with an enthusiastic audience, who listened to the nine contestants for the Demorest diamond medal. Miss Emma Norton, president of the fifth district, presided with dignity; to Miss Minnie Hassett, of Aurora, was awarded the prize, which was presented to her with appropriate words by Mrs. Rounds, who was also commissioned to give to each of the other contestants "Glimpses of Fifty Years."

Wednesday evening the church where the convention was held was crowded to its utmost capacity to hear the annual address of the state president. She was received with applause, and after most exquisite music had been rendered by the choir, Mrs. Sanford, who presided with great dignity and grace, introduced Mrs. Rounds, who at once proceeded to read her address.

Thurday evening the Y's, under the leadership of their state superintendent, Miss Mary T. Cowen, marched into the church one hundred strong to the seats that had been reserved for them, the only vacant ones in the church. The young ladies remained standing while Mrs. Rounds led from a side room to the platform the speaker of the evening, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York, National superintendent of Y work. The girls then gave the Chautauqua salute, and the exercises begun. Mrs. Barnes' address was listened to with marked attention. After the exercises closed a reception was given in the church parlors by the Y's, which was a very enjoyable occasion.

Friday evening we were fortunate enough to secure the services of Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, who was introduced to the convention in the afternoon and was immediately reminded by the president that he did not have on our badge. Such a grave offense was not to be overlooked, therefore Miss Morrow hastened to prepare a dainty bow of "ribbon white" and it was pinned on Dr. Crafts' coat by the president who admonished him never to be caught again with it off. His lecture in the evening was grand and forceful, and inspired all hearts to do battle for our Sabbath and the rights of the people to clean, wholesome laws.

Thus closed an ever memorable convention, grand and helpful from beginning to end.

CONVENTION REPORTER.

NEBRASKA.

AN INSPIRING CONVENTION.

The eighteenth annual convention of Nebraska W. C. T. U. was held in Grand Island, October 4–8, Mrs. Hitchcock presiding. The First Baptist church in which we met was beautifully decorated with flowers, pictures, banners and ripened grain. This last was most encouraging to tired workers, reminding them that there is a harvest time, even "though it tarry." But the decoration that elicited most remark was the 10,000 pledge cards, red, white and blue, each bearing the name of a Nebraska boy or girl. These were tied together with white ribbons and festooned the church, row upon row, about the walls, pulpit and gallery, an object lesson worth noting.

The first evening was given to welcoming addresses by his honor, Mayor Boyden, Rev. H. L. Hause, of the First Baptist church and Mrs. Lydia M. Boehne, for the W. C. T. U. These were responded to by the state vice president, Mrs. C. M. Woodward, after which Mrs. Hitchcock gave her annual address, full of good thoughts, plans and aims for the future. Very fine music was furnished by the Episcopal choir.

Wednesday morning, the 5th, devotions were conducted by Mrs. M. S. Putnam, our oldest white ribbon worker, her theme being "Praise." Mrs. Carscadden, superintendent of the Milford Home, and for several years our state superintendent of scientific instruction, spoke of the work of the Home, which not only helps the girls, but does all it can to bring to justice the men who are equally guilty, which elicited hearty applause. The report of the vice-president showed untiring work throughout the year. Reports were also read from the corresponding secretary and treasurer, each of which showed a prosperous condition of the work. After the noontide hour of prayer the convention adjourned to a neighboring church where they were each day served with a substantial and appetizing lunch.

The afternoon session was opened with a Bible reading by Mrs. Clark, of Omaha, subject, "The Holy Spirit." One hundred and twenty six voting members were reported. A report of the Union Worker was given, which showed a gain during the last year. The subscription list is larger than ever before and the paper is better. The recommendation that it be enlarged to an eight-page paper and the price increased to fifty cents, was approved by the convention.

The evening session was devoted to reports from superintendents. Miss Ripley, of scientific temperance instruction, is a most indefatigable worker, whose motto is, "Pursue your teachers." The plan of holding temperance school exhibitions in every school district once or twice a year, is a thought for L. T. L. workers everywhere. Mrs. Clark, of Omaha, gave her report as superintendent of social purity, and of the Open Door. During the past year there have been one hundred and thirty-two girls cared for, and of this number eighty two were American born. Mrs. Clark urged the unions to use prevention as well as cure, and declared the great need of our country to be intelligent, educated mothers. Mrs. Wilson, of Lincoln, reported the department of franchise, giving her plans for work the coming winter, and reasons for asking for municipal suffrage only.

Mrs. Bittenbender, state commissioner for Columbian Exposition, reported the progress of her work and explained her plans whereby Nebraska W. C. T. U. shall be suitably represented at the World's Fair. Mrs. Bittenbender's plans set all the unions at work and there will be many busy fingers and brains in the next three months. Mrs. Kate Northrup reported for the Temple over nine hundred dollars raised in Nebraska last year. Two tablets, one for Mrs. Holmes and one for Mrs. Hitchcock, are nearly completed. The Omaha unions have completed the amount for a tablet to the memory of Watson B. Smith.

On the morning of the 6th, devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Greenslit of Surprise, the theme being, "Thankfulness." Many delegates from the extreme borders of the state expressed their thankfulness at being able to attend a state convention. Greetings were sent to Kansas W. C. T. U. in convention at Pittsburg, also to the Iowa union assembled at Burlington. A telegram of greeting was received from Mrs. Fitch of Harriman, Tenn., formerly our recording secretary.

The election of officers resulted in the reëlection of the former ones: Mrs. Hitchcock, Fremont, president; Mrs. Woodward, Seward, vice-president; Mrs. Jones, Hastings, corresponding secretary; Miss Watson, Bellwood, recording secretary; Mrs. Lantry, Omaha, treasurer. The treasurer's books showed a membership in the state of 3,099, entitling Nebraska union to seven regular delegates to the National Convention, and one delegate-at-large. Mrs. Luce, of Fullerton, having been chosen by the fourth district to represent them—they having over 500 members—the remaining delegates were elected as follows: Miss Ripley, Kearney; Mrs. Leader, Chadron; Mrs. Wheelock, Beatrice; Mrs. Bigelow, Lincoln; Mrs. Brakefield, Red Cloud; Mrs. Clark, Omaha; Mrs. Walker, Surprise, delegate at-large.

In response to an invitation given by the mayor, the convention adjourned and were given a most delightful drive about the city, visiting the college where they were welcomed with songs and short speeches, responded to by several of the women. The drive was continued through the grounds of the Soldiers' Home, then on to the beet sugar factory, where the ladies were kindly permitted to enter and see the various processes from washing the beets to the sacking of the white granulated product.

The evening of the 6th was young folks' evening, and given up to the Loyal Temperance Legion work and the Y's. Mrs. Bittenbender presided. The children, in charge of Mrs. Flora Cassel, of Hastings, came marching in with banners, singing, and took the front seats. Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Dr. Bryant, of Omaha. Little Myrtle Denny sang a solo very sweetly, accompanying herself upon the autoharp. Greetings were given by Clyde Curtis, a boy of ten years, response by Mrs. McDougal. Mrs. Blair then gave a chalk-talk to the children which greatly pleased them. The L. T. L. banner went to the seventeenth district for largest increase in membership. As the banner had not been sent, it was presented, in imagination, by Miss Ripley, in a humorous little speech to Mrs. Davenport representing that district. A very thrilling recitation was given by Hattie Sam, a delegate from the Hastings Y's, who came before the audience wearing her silver, gold and grand-gold Demorest medals. We think it must have been the verdict of the audience that the medals were most worthily bestowed. After music by Trinity M. E. church choir, Miss Ida Clothier, of Manitou, national organizer of the Y's, gave a short address, which was very earnest and pointed. She urged the mothers to give the girls some of the hard work of reform, instead of only the pretty, ornamental work, while they themselves performed the unpleasant tasks.

Friday morning, the 7th, telegrams were received from Kansas W. C. T. U. and from New York state convention. Mrs. Charlotte Grey, of Albany, N. Y., was introduced, and made some very affecting remarks. Reports were read from superintendents of evangelistic work, work among soldiers, press, railroad work, Sabbath observance, narcotics, work among foreigners and legislation and petitions. In the afternoon Mrs. Dr. Bryant, of Omaha, gave her report of work among the Chinese. At 2:30 a memorial service was held, conducted by Mrs. Clark, with music by Mrs. Cassel. Thirty-five names were reported as having "gone home" during the year. The beautiful, original song, "Gone Home," sung by Mrs. Cassel and the loving words of the leader were indeed a fitting memorial for our departed sisters, who will be "ever remembered by what they have done."

Resolutions, strong and decisive, were read and discussed, and most of them adopted. A resolution was handed in by a cooper of Grand Island, in regard to convict labor and the injury it worked upon the honest working man. While this resolution was not adopted, it was recommended the unions to study and inform themselves upon the subject that they may intelligently act upon it at another time. Reports of district presidents were given, plan of work and finance committee.

In the evening, the students from the Baptist college were seated together in the body of the church, and listened to the earnest words of Miss Ida Clothier, inciting the young people to a higher spiritual life. After the address the state banner was presented to the eleventh district for largest proportionate increase of membership.

At noon, on the 7th, a meeting was held at the car shops under the leadership of Mrs. Smith, superintendent of railroad work. A very interesting meeting was also held the same afternoon at the Soldiers' Home, conducted by Mrs. Leader, of work among soldiers. Those present speak of the meetings as being blessed and helpful to all. The sweet voice of Mrs. Cassel was heard in both of these meetings as it was at all the sessions of the convention. Mrs. Cassel was music director, using her own book, the very popular "White Ribbon Vibrations." Several changes were made in superintendents.

The convention was most harmonious and will be an inspiring influence through the year to come.

Dora V. Wheelock,
State Reporter, Beatrice.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

PALMETTO LEAVES.

Early in the spring a plan, quite unique, was suggested by Mr. S. A. Nettles, of Manning, to try the strength of prohibition in the state by having a vote taken at the primaries for or against prohibition. When this was first mentioned, numbers of the best temperance people felt little hope of much good being effected by it. But they worked for it, and temperance picnics and mass-meetings were the summer craze. Men and women stood side by side in the work. Candidates had to answer the question: "Do you favor prohibition, and will you work for it?" A vote was taken at the Democratic primaries which resulted in favor of prohibition by a majority of 10,000 votes. The question now is: Will the Democratic party carry out the will of this overwhelming majority, and will the candidates who made such fair promises before election be true to their pledges?

The temperance Sunday-school in Spartanburg sent two delegates to the county Sunday school convention and although they were not allowed "to speak out in meeting," being only women, they were kindly received and the W. C. T. U. was well represented by them. The outlook for the union in Spartanburg is not so bright as it generally is at this season, owing to the continued ill health of the president.

The L. T. L. is a real live little body. They have sent out numbers of calendars, put up wall pockets at different points, have charge of a column in one of the local papers and with their mite boxes are gathering up their contribution to the Southern assembly at Waynesville, North Carolina. Too much cannot be said of the tireless young worker who has for years had charge of this truly Loyal Temperance Legion. Her faithful, consecrated life is a sermon which has for its text, "Go thou and do likewise."

Mrs. Chapin stopped for a few days in Spartanburg on her way from the school of methods in Waynesville. She met with the ladies one afternoon in the Central Methodist church, and all were glad to be there. At the earnest solicitation of one of the good brothers in law an appointment was made for her at Cherokee Springs. Although the day was raw and cloudy a large crowd assembled. A Baptist minister gave her his hour and said at the close of her address, "I wish all my hours were as well filled as this one has been." Many had gone out of curiosity to hear a woman speak; the church was crowded, even to standing room, but she was listened to with deepest interest. When she sat down some one started the song, "We'll work, we'll work till Jesus comes." It was caught up by many earnest voices and sung with the spirit. When the song was finished the pastor said, "Let us all remember the words we have listened to here when we go to the polls with our votes."

From Spartanburg, Mrs. Chapin went to Laurens. From there to the dear, quaint, old town of Newberry, rendered sacred to the hearts of the South Carolina W. C. T. U. by sweet and tender associations with one who has passed over to the other side, "her sun gone down whilst it was yet day." In the death of Mrs. Mower, our union felt that we were indeed bereaved. Mrs. Redus is now the president of the union, the L. T. L., numbering over two hundred and the L. T. L. and the W. C. T. U at the factory, a mile from town. Mrs. Chapin says of her: "She is a model president, a frail, delicate, little creature and she carries on a large business beside." Mr. Mower has furnished the union a room in which to hold their meetings, and has had a fine portrait of his mother taken to hang on the wall. Mrs. Chapin spoke to both unions and despite the intense heat had crowded houses. She then proceeded to Columbia, and was invited to speak at the tabernacle. Eleven ladies joined the union.

The Charleston unions seem wide awake and working on many lines. One special feature of their work strikes me as being something new, and I will speak of it that others may profit by the suggestion. The street car shops stand in the midst of bar-rooms, the W. C. T. U. sends some one to meet the cars and give to the drivers a glass of iced buttermilk or iced tea. The men take it in preference to the fiery drinks which the saloons are so anxious to sell them. Another good work conducted by these earnest hearted women, is the Home which they have kept open since the fall of 1890. After much prayer and consultation and with a treasury almost empty, they rented or leased, the old Planters' Hotel. It was in a very dilapidated condition and very nearly in a state of ruin, but what will not prayer and faith and a few resolute women accomplish? The Home is to-day an established institution and has accomplished much good. At present they have about thirty rooms occupied, some are rented very low, some are given free. The union will try to arrange a part of the building for a working girls' home. Some of them will have to have rent free as their wages are so small, and this Home may prove a means of salvation to many a homel one. Any of our South Carolina women who wish to assist in this noble work, can gain further information by writing to Mrs. S. M. Whitney, the president of Charleston W. C. T. U., No. 1.

Mrs. McCown, an officer in union No 2, holds evangelistic meetings twice a week among the factory people in the suburbs of the city. She commenced with five, but now has a crowded house. On a late occasion, Mrs. Chapin went with her to the meeting. The room was packed, and some were standing out in the street eager for the word of life. Many had not been in church for years. Just before the late election, Mrs. Chapin went, at the request of Mrs. Traxler, to a temperance rally at Cartersville. She spoke at the picnic in the morning and then she and Colonel Brunson had a rousing meeting with the colored people at Timmonsville.

We trust that Miss Willard will soon be at home again, and that when others gather about her in her sad home coming, she will remember her South Carolina women are with her in their sympathy and love. The beautiful life that has just closed was not shut in inside the walls of Rest Cottage, but it reached far out and touched us all, and somehow drew us into closer kinship with one another.

Nettie P. Farron,
State Reporter, Spartanburg.

MASSACHUSETTS.

FIRST FRUITS.

Our clans were gathered for an opening mass meeting in Tremont Temple on the afternoon of September 4. The exercises consisted of the vesper service, compiled by Mrs. Harris and already chronicled in News from the Field. Mrs. Fessenden presided on this occasion, the speakers being herself, Dr. Plumb and Mrs. Stevenson, while the music was in charge of Mrs. Harris, with an able corps of helpers. It was an inspiring occasion, and formed a delightful connecting link between the rest of vacation and the bustle of the ensuing days, for work began with a rush this year. Between September 6 and October 11 were crowded thirteen county conventions, several of which entailed many miles of stage or carriage driving. The president and corresponding secretary were granted a most delightful outing in a trip to the convention of Hampshire county, held in West Cummington, September 6. The convention itself was a most enthusiastic one, the little hill-walled town just overflowing with hospitality and W. C. T. U. zeal. Delegates from the newly organized unions of Cummington and Plainfield were present, and in their enthusiasm showed that their organizer, Miss Gordon, had left a strong impression.

Hardly less delightful was the trip of the corresponding secretary to the convention of Franklin county, held in Conway. Franklin county has a new president, Mrs. H. N. Hartzler, wife of one of the professors in Mr. Moody's school at Mt. Hermon, and a veteran W. C. T. U. worker in Pennsylvania and other states. We are sure that Franklin county must soon feel the power of her wise leadership.

Several of our conventions have introduced new features this fall, notably among which was the colloquy on cider at the Middlesex county convention in Bedford. Many interesting facts upon cider were brought to light, and the presence of alcohol in cider but recently manufactured, was proven by aid of a chemical retort.

The conventions of Plymouth and Norfolk counties held memorial services for Madam Willard. There are thirty-five unions in Massachusetts to-day, which were not of our number at this time last year; while at least a dozen plans are ready, and will be organized as soon as the officers at headquarters can find time for the work. Several of the new unions already show signs of strong vitality—two have entertained the conventions of their respective counties, while others have shown themselves no less willing to take up aggressive lines of work. By the way, permit me to correct a typographical error in the last Massachusetts' report. In that you make me say "Unions have been organized in all counties save Worcester, Norfolk and Nantucket." It should read Worcester North, and Nantucket. For purposes of convenience we divide the large area of Worcester county into north and south, each having separate W. C. T. U. organizations.

It will be hardly possible for Nantucket county to organize a new union, unless it takes on new territory, or evolves a Y, but the fatal defect of Worcester North has already been remedied by the organization of a Y at West Boylston.

Headquarters kept open house on the afternoon of September 29. A number of fancy articles being left over from our Easter fair, they were tastefully arranged upon two tables, in charge of our faithful sisters, Mrs. M. B.

Blackmore and Mrs. C. E. Withington, together with our always devoted treasurer, Mrs. Amelin Wood. The rooms were filled at an early hour, and our guests all seemed in the cheeriest of moods.

Light refreshments of chocolate, cake and wafers were served, but the "feast of reason and flow of soul" was by no means interrupted by the more substantial viands. Mrs. Fessenden took the chair as presiding officer, and with her usual graceful dignity, introduced the various speakers. There was no formal speech-making, just a series of bright, breezy reminiscences from old friends and old workers throughout the state. Music was furnished in the form of several charming selections by the Cirillo quartette, a solo by Mr. Wm. B. Blakemore, while Mrs. Harris raised your correspondent to the pinnacle of pride by rendering her song in the World's SIGNAL, "Some Glad Day." It was decreed by Mrs. Fessenden, and joyfully accepted by all present, that henceforth an "open house" shall be an established feature in our year's work, as a reunion after the scattering of our forces during vacation.

Our superintendent of narcotics, Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, has gone to Missouri for a month of engagements, before the convening of the National Convention. We are delighted to find that another of our Massachusetts women is acquiring a national reputation, and congratulate Missouri upon having so able an ally. Mrs. Gleason has recently been licensed as a local preacher by the Baptist church of Roslindale.

A number of our unions have taken up fair work quite vigorously this fall. Clinton, in Worcester N. County, reports a gain to the treasury of $150 through the sale of refreshments during their fair, to say nothing of the good accomplished by the distribution of literature. This same union recently netted fifty eight dollars at a "dollar experience tea."

Worcester Y raised over four hundred dollars this summer for its "fresh air fund" and expended the same most judiciously in sending poor children for longer or shorter periods out into the blessed country. Our state president has been working with almost superhuman force during the past month. In addition to her labors manifold in this state, she has made two flying trips into Connecticut and now goes for several engagements into New York state.

Then comes our state convention, which is in quite too close proximity to the National, it being necessary for Mrs. Fessenden to start for Denver on the day following its close in order to be present at the first meeting of the executive board. We are all proud of the ability of our state president, and do not wonder that every one wants to hear her speak; we only trust we may not tax her beyond human powers of endurance.

State convention is to be held in Brockton, October 18, 19 and 20. Look out for a full report immediately thereafter.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON,
State Reporter, Boston.

MISSISSIPPI.

EVERYDAY WORK.

I will wait no longer for "some great thing" to write you, but will give such facts as I have concerning our everyday work. We are told, "It is in the every day of life that all the world's best work is done," therefore

> "Let us be content in work
> To do the thing we can, and not presume
> To fret because it's little."

For some time past our devoted women in anti-prohibition towns have been engaged in earnest effort to defeat petitions for high license saloons. The stringent liquor laws embodied in our new constitution have now gone into effect. These laws not only oblige the saloonist to pay a very high license, but they are also fenced about with many trying and embarrassing conditions, the violation of any one of which makes the privileged (?) owner liable to fine, imprisonment and forfeiture of license. Public sentiment is rapidly growing stronger and stronger throughout our state against the sale of intoxicants. Many of the licenses taken out under the old law have expired, and as they make the effort to renew, our W. C. T. U. sisters go forward to defeat them.

Last winter during the session of the legislature the Greenville union decided that they would contest liquor petitions until the high license law should take effect. They have continued to do this; were successful in defeating five petitions, and have six carried to the circuit court. Of the five defeated, two were renewed in proper form and were granted, the others were not renewed.

At Greenwood, the W. C. T. U. has worked valiantly and succeeded in closing one of their "first class" saloons. Our Columbus sisters have had a hard fight, and have not yet been successful; but the light of promise is breaking upon them also. It is predicted that this beautiful city will soon be among the "dry" places, as the petitioners for license are failing in their attempts to gain signatures. Our state and National evangelist, Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, resides here. She has delivered some stirring, unanswerable addresses to them of late, which have no doubt carried much weight.

The Tupelo union has recently defeated two petitions for license. It is the only town in Lee county where liquor is legally sold, and it will doubtless be free in a few months more. The union there reports a new degree of interest.

Our Indianola sisters are now rejoicing in the fact that their town has no longer a saloon, not even a "blind tiger." They have endured much in the contest, and we rejoice with them in their deliverance. They have six departments of work, all filled by good superintendents. They sustain a column in the county paper, which has proven a great advantage to them, but perhaps the most unique and hopeful feature of their work lies in the fact that they have under their fostering care a young man's union. May God's blessing especially rest upon it and the noble young men who constitute its membership!

The Crystal Springs union is doing good work in holding Demorest medal contests, distributing literature and in trying to suppress the illicit sale of whisky and cigarettes. It is now against the law of Mississippi to sell cigarettes to minors.

Our Moss Point sisters gave a remunerative entertainment, the proceeds of which enabled them to give fifty dollars to the prohibition work and also to subscribe for ten copies of the Mississippi Leader for free distribution. This journal is a stanch, temperance paper published weekly in Jackson. It is the official organ of our state union, and since last May two of its columns have been regularly filled by our W. C. T. U. women.

The Iuka Y has a large membership of which one third or more are young men. The Iuka W. C. T. U. is one of our best working societies.

The report of the Starkville union is so gratifying and interesting that I give it just as it was furnished me by its devoted president, Miss Madge L. Montgomery:

"This union was never more flourishing, and never accomplished more efficient work than for the past five months. A column in each of two county papers has been weekly supplied with temperance news. Wall pockets filled with temperance literature are kept in the M. and O. and I. C. depots. Sunday-school work, chiefly in securing signatures to pledge cards for use in decorating W. C. T. U. headquarters at the World's Fair are being circulated. The department of flower mission has oftimes interpreted (in a way which we cannot, to the prejudiced) our own mission of uplifting humanity. Literature is sent to the jail; work among the colored people has recently been added. At the meeting of the State Alliance we distributed considerable literature, and have also circulated the World's and million-voter petition. October 5 the W. C. T. U. and Prohibitionists were made happy by a visit from Mr. Cranfill. The court house was decorated with flowers, appropriate mottoes, and pictures of the Prohibition candidates. Prohibition music was furnished. The children marched and sang, 'Saloons Must Go,' holding aloft banners bearing the inscriptions, 'Tremble, King Alcohol,' 'We Shall Grow Up.' In spite of a heavy rainfall, everything was a success."

Our Corinth workers visit the county jail, hold religious services with the inmates and distribute literature among them. A column is being sustained in one of our town papers, and we try to keep alive an L. T. L. The best educating work done by this union is through the monthly public meetings which are held in rotation at each of the five churches. These meetings are well attended.

On the night of World's day, they held a public meeting, following quite closely the program given in THE UNION SIGNAL. The church was tastefully decorated with flowers, graceful vines and white ribbon. A good audience was in attendance, much instruction was given and a deeper interest was awakened, especially in the work of temperance in foreign countries. The Oxford union held a meeting on that day to pray for the world's work, and for the closing of the gates on the Sabbath at the great Exposition.

We hope it is not too late to say that we in Mississippi feel a deep sympathy for "our chieftain" in her great bereavement. A sympathy which is measured only by the strength of our love for the lonely daughter, and by our admiration for the noble mother, who in leaving the world, has left it so much richer, because of the life which she lived while in it.

LAURA A. STOUT,
State Reporter, Corinth.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

California—Santa Rosa: L. T. L., $3.65; Pomona: W. C. T. U. $5; Hydesville: W. C. T. U., $100; Arroyo Grande: Mary Records, $1; Santa Barbara: W. C. T. U., $5.

Colorado—Crested Butte: W. C. T. U., $11.65.

Connecticut—Rockville: Mrs. H. C. Gaines and Mrs. R. E. Dart, $8; East Morris: Mrs. H. R. Stockbridge, $1.

Dakota, South—Fuller: W. C. T. U., $3.23; Aberdeen: W. C. T. U., $2; Valley Springs: Chas. Briggs, 50 cts; Roscoe: Mrs. Bickelhaupt, $3; Yankton: W. C. T. U., $49.60.

Delaware—Wilmington: Annie T. Hillis, $1.

Florida—DeLand: A white-ribboner, $1; St. Augustine: L. T. L., $1.

Illinois—Elizabeth: W. C. T. U., $8.26: River Forest: W. C. T. U., $25; Girard: Mrs. T. E. Carter, $4; Marissa: W. C. T. U., $26.31; Moline: Mrs. A. B. Ferges, $5; Brighton: Mrs. M. A. Brown, $15; Freeport: W. C. T. U., $5: Chester: Willard W. C. T. U., $1.20; Rockford. Mrs. M. J. Ashton, $3.03: Coleta: W. C. T. U., $5.15; Eagle Point: W. C. T. U., $1; Belvidere: Mrs. T. L. B. Hadley, $1; Chicago: West Side W. C. T. U., $2.75; Mrs. Shipman, $14.25; Mrs. Carse, $10; Englewood: Miss Kolloch, $5: Springfield: Lucy DuBois, $5; Central W. C. T. U., $6; Evanston: W. C. T. U., $9.15; Austin: L. T. L., $7.84; El Dorado: Baby Band, $1.50; Elgin: W. C. T. U., $29.48; Rochelle: Baby Band, $6; Dixon: L. T. L., $20; Murphysboro: Babies, 20 cents; Ridgefield: W. C. T. U., $1.10; Dundee: W. C. T. U., $1; Oquawka: Mrs. Alice Woodville, $1; Streator: per Nancy C. Herriman, 30 cents; Stillman Valley: Mrs. Ann Freeman, $5; West Peotone: W. C. T. U., $18; White Heath: Y. W. C. T. U., $1; Chicago Lawn: W. C. T. U. $5.75; Dalton City: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Farina: W. C. T. U., $1; Gillespie: W. C. T. U., $1; Hagarstown: W. C. T. U., $1.26; Hillsboro: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Lake City: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Litchfield: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Sullivan: W. C. T. U., $2.50; Jordan: W. C. T. U., $35.10; Van Orin: W. C. T. U., $20; Grant Park: W. C. T. U., $41.07; Morrisonville: Geo. Louis, $10.

Indiana—Crown Point: W. C. T. U., $15; Brazil: Mrs. Emily Crawford, $1; a friend, $20; La Porte: W. C. T. U. 75 cents; Nappanee: Mary Swartz, $1; Fairmount: E. Harriet Howe, $5.

Iowa—Swaledale: Julia Quackenboss, $1; LeMars: Mrs. Mudge, $2; Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Ricketts, Mrs. Bunt, Mrs. Garner, Mrs. Clagg, Mrs. Hinds, Ray Garner, W. C. T. U., $1 each; Scotch Grove: W. C. T. U., $9; Edgewood: Mrs. Thera True, $2.50; Oxford: Mrs. Y. M. Coats, $2; Susan O'Brien, 52 cents; Waterloo: Hattie Clapp, $1; Sumner: W. C. T. U., $6.70; Council Bluffs: Mrs. Roxanna Rice, $100; Wayne: S. A. Laird, $3.75.

Kansas—Winfield: W. C. T. U., $37.82; Cottage Hill: Willard W. C. T. U., $16; Barclay: Lydia Butler: $1; Kingman: Temple Band, $1.53; Hutchinson: W. C. T. U., $10.

Kentucky—Bellevue: Mary Trotter, $5; Carrollton: W. C. T. U., $41.37.

Louisiana—New Orleans: W. C. T. U., $7.30.

Maryland—Philopolis: L, $4.

Massachusetts—Cambridge: E. M. Harvey, $13; Hinsdale: P. A. Frissell, 65 cents; Oxford: Mary Ricker, $3.65: North Attleboro: Mrs. C. W. Blackwell, $3.65; Boston: Miss M. R. Paukman, $3.65; Attleboro: I. P. Fink, $6; Williamstown: Mrs. I. R. Rexford, $3.65; Brookline: W. C. T. U., $100; East Pepperell, Frances Pierce, $4.

Michigan—Mattawan: W. C. T. U., $5; Sparta: Mary Rogers, $1.85; Howell: Mrs. C. H. Morgan, $3.65; St. Helen: W. C. T. U., $6.50; Grand Rapids: Mrs. Kellogg, $2; Romeo: W. C. T. U., $10.95; Vermontville: W. C. T. U., $7; Lexington: Frances V. Hayward, $7.34; Wixom: A. M. Lee, $3; Chippewa: C. B. Brigham, $2.

Minnesota—Winnebago City: M. J. Thatcher, $3.65; Caledonia: Y. W. C. T. U., $5; St. Paul: Lady Henry Somerset W. C. T. U., $25; Hutchinson: W. C. T. U., $17; Minneapolis: Lucy Hayes W. C. T. U., $35; Le Sueur: W. C. T. U., $11.50.

Missouri—Hamilton: Mrs. Amy Houghton, $3.65; Holden: Bostwick W. C. T. U., $2.40; Thayer: Mrs. Hopkins, Mrs. Durst, Mrs. Buck. Mrs. Morse, Mrs. Luther, Mrs. Rawlings, $1 each; Grace Hall, 87 cents; B. M. Hall, 76 cents; Gladys Hopkins, 40 cents; Kansas City: A temperance worker, $2; Hannibal: W. C. T. U., $5; Clarksville: Mrs. Lucy Carroll, $1.

Montana—Anaconda: W. C. T. U., $25; Livingston: W. C. T. U., $50.

Nebraska—Holdredge: Mrs. M. E. Randolph, $3.65; Waterbury: W. C. T. U., $2; Ponca: Mrs. Graves, $1; Per state superintendent, $25; Nelson: Mrs. May Schwab, $2; Plainview: Mrs. Kate Folsom, $1; Willow Creek and Pleasant Ridge: Children, $2.64.

New Hampshire—W. Manchester: E. J. Hazelton, $4; Hillsboro Bridge: Mrs. N. G. Moore, $5; Derry Depot: Mrs. T. M. Holmes, $4.15; Lancaster: Miss E. Beattie, $3.50.

New Jersey—Port Monmouth: M. C. Carter, $1; Moorestown: Y. W. C. T. U., $1; Mrs. Louise Downs Quigley, $500; Plainfield: M. B. Dietrich, $3.65.

New York—New Haven: W. C. T. U., $2; Monroe: Mrs. F. E. Griffin, $2.50; Addison: R. A. Griffiths, $4.25; White Plains: Mary Flood: $3; Silver Creek: Mrs. W. Sackett, $3.65; Syracuse: Mrs. S. M. Clark, $5; Rochester: Baby Band, ninth ward W. C. T. U., $5; Willard: W. C. T. U. eighteenth ward, $5; Boy's union, per Mrs. Morley, $10.55; North Germantown: W. C. T. U., $33.10; Booneville: L. T. L., $4.53; Akron: W. C. T. U., $10; Cortland: W. C. T. U., $15; Farmington: Mrs. H. J. Herendeen, $3; Waterport: W. C. T. U., $3.65; Apalachin: W. C. T. U., $1.35; Sodus: Mrs. Case, $3.65; W. C. T. U., $6.35; Locust Grove: Mrs. Merriam, $3.67; Spencerport: Mrs. F. W. Nichols, $3.65; New York: Baby Band, 60 cents; Watertown: W. C. T. U., $5; Plattsburg: Y. W. C. T. U., $30; Chautauqua Co., $60.83.

Ohio—Oberlin: Mrs. S. Coates, $4.65; Jefferson: Mrs. Crosby, 25 cents; Mansfield: Mrs. S. L. Funk, $1; Columbus; Jane A. Miner, $100; Cleveland: Mrs. M. B. Ingham, $1; North Baltimore: W. C. T. U., $5; Tallmadge: W. C. T. U., $5; Kenilworth: Mrs. E. W. Bascom, $3.65; Zanesfield: W. C. T. U., $17.05; Canton: W. C. T. U., $36.70; Marietta: W. C. T. U., $6.20; Medina Co., W C. T. U., $30.38; Wellsville: W. C. T. U., $45.

Oregon—Mc Minnville: Mrs. J. Hanback, $1; Ashland: W. C. T. U., $50; Portland: W. C. T. U., $3.65.

Pennsylvania—Uniontown: W. C. T. U., $11.10; Philadelphia: Mrs. Clements, $50; McVeytown: W. C. T. U., $1; Scranton: W. C. T. U., North End, $5; Honeybrook: L. T. L., $2; Hanover: W. C. T. U., $5; Farmer's Valley: W. C. T. U., $11.25.

Rhode Island—Washington: W. C. T. U., $5; Temperance Builders, $1.

Utah—Ogden: W. C. T. U., $5; Foster Curry, $2.

Virginia—Riverton: Y. W. C. T. U., $5.

Washington—West Tacoma: Ori Garlick, $50; Olympia Mrs. H. C. Brown, $10.

Wyoming—Laramie: W. C. T. U., $4.75; state W. C. T. U., $4.80.

Wisconsin—Bayfield: Mrs. Irish, $4; Kenosha: W. C. T. U., $25; Gilman: Miss Lomas, Mrs. Maxgood and Miss Margood, $1 each: Lake Mills: W. C. T. U., $1; W. Superior· Mrs. Selfridge, W. C. T. U., $3.65; West Salem: Miss Olive Leonard, $1; Rosendale: Mrs. Lyman, $5; Sales models, $94.11. For month of August.

ESTHER PUGH,
Treasurer Gift Fund.

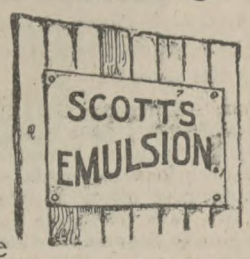
THE Montana W. C. T. U. which held its ninth annual convention in Bozeman, from October 4th to 6th, received telegrams of greeting from Kentucky, New York, Illinois and Tennessee. Their kindly messages were accepted by the convention with hearts full of love and appreciation. The gathering was a delightful one and Bozeman did herself proud. Mrs. M. S. Cummins, Helena, was reëlected president; Mrs. Maggie Templeton, Helena, corresponding secretary; Mrs. H. E. Harmon, Livingston, treasurer. The office of recording secretary will be filled the coming year by Mrs. C. O. Price, Helena.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

Signs of Health.

You don't have to look twice to detect them—bright eyes, bright color, bright smiles, bright in every action.



Disease is overcome only when weak tissue is replaced by the healthy kind. Scott's Emulsion of cod liver oil effects cure by building up sound flesh. It is agreeable to taste and easy of assimilation.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

WOMAN'S CANNING & PRESERVING CO.

MAKERS OF CHOICE PUDDINGS, LUNCH TONGUES, FRUIT PRESERVES AND GENERAL CANNED GOODS.

All put up by competent women. Neatness and care exercised, insuring a perfect product.

Our business is "woman's work for women;" we supply table necessities and luxuries ready for use.

Secure our price list (sent free to any address) before making purchases. It is a revelation.

Our stockholders are requested to insist upon having our goods. By so doing they will further their own financial interests, by increasing the demand for our products, and at the same time secure the best in the market.

Woman's Canning and Preserving Co.,
19 Michigan Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

AGENTS WANTED New Topical History of United States
Memorial Story of America
—From 1492 to 1892—
By HAMILTON W. MABIE, Editor of Christian Union, With chapters by Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, Senator DAWES, Congressman BRECKENRIDGE, Col. A. K. MCCLURE, Bishop VINCENT, D. D., FRANCES E. WILLARD, and others equally prominent. Full of new illustrations, and intensely interesting. Every word written this year.
Outsells all other books. Write to-day.
JOHN C. WINSTON & CO 6th & Arch Sts., Philada.

TOKOLOGY A COMPLETE LADIES' GUIDE In Health and Disease, By ALICE B. STOCKHAM, M. D., OVER 25 YEARS PRACTICE.

Agents write: "I sincerely thank you for this avenue of self-support which you have opened for women in canvassing for TOKOLOGY." "I love TOKOLOGY and am delighted to be in its service. I can sell just as well in territory that has been canvassed." "At least 1 out of every 6 have subscribed." "Worked 10 days and have 61 orders." Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison-st. Chicago.

Do you want to buy a
PIANO OR ORGAN?
If so you will save money by addressing
BEETHOVEN CO., P. O. Box 701 WASHINGTON, Warren Co., New Jersey. Information FREE.

MAGIC LANTERNS
And STEREOPTICONS, all prices. Views illustrating every subject for PUBLIC EXHIBITIONS, etc. A profitable business for a man with small capital. Also Lanterns for Home Amusement. 256 page Catalogue free.
McALLISTER, Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Are made in A VARIETY OF SHAPES—to fit SHORT, MEDIUM, and LONG Waists.

CARDS FOR 1893. 50 SAMPLE STYLES AND LIST OF 500 PREMIUM ARTICLES FREE. HAVERFIELD PUB. CO., CADIZ, OHIO.

Publisher's Dep't.

OUR DAY,
A Record and Review of Current Reform.
JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

Price: Single numbers, - - $ .25
Yearly subscription, - - 2.50

Published by
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS WANTED

For our books, which are unexcelled. We have the following list:

THE JUNIOR PARTNERS, by Abel M. Rawson, a new book of wonderful interest and power. Rev. Dr. Thompson writes concerning it. "I am enthused and uplifted." All who read commend it. It is a fascinating story, showing the temptations which come to business men. It also shows the relation of insanity to the drink traffic.

A YOUNG WOMAN JOURNALIST, edited by Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, which is rapidly growing in favor. The success of one young life is portrayed in a manner that will stimulate others to like effort.

THE STORY OF A CLASSIC TOWN, by Frances E. Willard. A book for all interested in ascertaining how towns founded on temperance principles become safe places for the homes of intelligent, progressive people.

GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS, the autobiography of Frances E. Willard. It is enough to say that 50,000 copies of this book have already been sold to indicate its popularity.

CHILDHOOD, ITS CARE AND CULTURE, by Mary Allen West. This is a help every mother and every teacher should own. Highly spoken of by all.

FOR TERMS, address Subscription Book Department.
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A DEFENSE OF THE JERICHO ROBBERS.

Do you want a pleasing satire?

Do you want an argument which is not in the form of an argument against high license?

Do you want the attitude of license men toward the liquor traffic portrayed with power?

Then send for

A Defense of the Jericho Robbers

and learn how the types of the saloon men of to day were defended before the court of the Sanhedrim. How the parties to the cause, Achan Sneakthief, Ishmael Bacchus, Cain Adam, Haman Hangman, Demetrius Silversmith, Herman Gambrinus, Isaac Longface, Simon Barabbas, Democritus Balaam, Ahab Dives, Esau Soddom, Simon Magus and Levi Priest argued the case, and a committee was appointed to report a plan of action and a bill was framed entitled:

An Act to legalize and regulate the business of stealing, robbing and murdering between Jerusalem and Jericho.

It will do much good wherever read.

Price 20 cents.

Address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE HANDY MANUAL.

This little book of 440 pages is a perfect encyclopedia of information. It answers almost every question that you might ask, whether of law, history or concerning mercantile business or farm interests. Social matters have due attention. It also contains fifty maps. The price of this manual has been 50c. We will send it to any address for 25c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

"Sweet Bells Out of Tune,"

Copyright, 1892, by The Century Co.

"HE IS WAITING FOR ME."
From "Sweet Bells Out of Tune," in "The Century."

The Novel of New York Society, by Mrs. Burton Harrison, is one of the great fiction features of the new volume of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE which begins with the November number. Mrs. Harrison wrote "The Anglomaniacs," and her new story even excels that in interest. It opens with a fashionable wedding. The illustrations are as striking as the text.

The November "Century"

is one of the best numbers of a magazine ever issued. In it begins the great series on "The Bible and Science," opening with "Does the Bible contain Scientific Errors?" by Prof. Shields. Bishop Potter's article on Sunday and the World's Fair is here; also three complete stories. The contributors include Lowell, Eggleston, T. B. Aldrich, Rudyard Kipling, General and Senator Sherman (a series of hitherto unpublished letters which passed between the brothers), Archibald Forbes, and other famous people. See this November number. Begin a year's subscription with it—price, $4.00. December will be the great Christmas Number.

THE CENTURY CO.,
33 East 17th Street, New York.

THE

Total Abstinence Life Association

OF AMERICA.

WOULD YOU LIKE

To attend the World's Fair at our expense, and to read, free of charge, for one year, our paper, the "TOTAL ABSTAINER"? If so, please send your name and address to this office for further particulars

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg.,
165-173 Jackson Street,
CHICAGO, ILL.

GEN. W. F. SINGLETON, - President.
REV. A. J. JUTKINS, - Vice-President.
A. BONNELL, - - - - Secretary.
S. M. SINGLETON, - - Treasurer.
E. S. ATWOOD, - - - Medical Director.
J. D. KNAPP, - - - Supt. Agencies.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Every policy holder is positively a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.
This is the ONLY Company that does not insure the drinker.
And is, therefore, the only Company in which teetotalers should be insured.
Its risks are unquestionably the best.
Its death-rate for 1891 was over 50 per cent below the average mortality of all other companies.
It has the lowest expenses—only $2.20 per $1,000 insurance for 1891.
It has the lowest average premium charge.
No premiums are required in old age.
Policy contract simple, definite, equitable and limited as to cost.
Its life policies have cash and paid-up values after probable life.
It has an adequate reserve fund.
Expenses of management limited to $3.00 per $1,000 insurance per annum.

FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Number of policy holders,	5,500
Guarantee Fund,	$ 92,000.00
Amount paid to beneficiaries,	210,000.00
Insurance in force,	11,000,000.00

COMPARISON FOR 1891.

All old Line Companies averaged per $1,000 insurance,	Death Claims $14.55	Expenses $15.07
Total Abstinence Life Ass'n averaged per $1,000 insurance,	" 5.65	" 2.20

AGENTS WANTED

Address A. BONNELL, Secretary.

DESIRED INFORMATION.

We desire to impress upon the minds of the public the superiority of the service offered by the Wisconsin Central Lines between Chicago and Milwaukee and St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and all points in the Northwest. Two fast trains leave Chicago daily for St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth with Pullman Vestibuled Drawing-Room Sleepers and Coaches of latest design. Its Dining Car Service is unsurpassed. This the public is invited to judge for itself. It is the only route to the Pacific Coast over which both Pullman Vestibuled, first-class and Pullman Tourist Cars are operated from Chicago via St. Paul without change.

Pamphlets giving valuable information can be obtained free upon application to your nearest ticket agent, or to JAS. C. POND, General Passenger and Ticket Agent. Chicago, Ill.

THE CHAUTAUQUA SYSTEM

Of Education offers a great variety of carefully directed courses of home reading and study. The special subjects for 1892–3 are American Diplomatic History, Greek History, Literature and Art. The course is definite, the books carefully chosen, and the reading apportioned by the week. More than two hundred thousand earnest people have found the Chautauqua Circle wonderfully inspiring and helpful. Persons, no matter how isolated, may enjoy all the privileges of membership. Address The Chautauqua Office, Drawer 194, [illegible]

Save Money By Buying BICYCLES WINTER PRICES.

To reduce '91 stock we offer | FORMERLY | NOW
Ormonde Safety 1¼ cushion tires $140 | $90
'90 Juno, (91 make) lady or man, all ball.... 75 | 42
Mercury Diamond Safety, all steel " .... 100 | 57
40 in. Victor Jr. ball bgs. tangent [also other sizes] 37 | 17
50 other styles, & 200 2d hd wheels greatly reduced.
Cata. free. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 G St. Peoria, Ill

$25 FREE
To Every Reader of This Paper.
No Money Required.
Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address and we will send you this elegant stem wind watch for examination, and if you think it equal to any $100.00 watch pay our sample price, $2.75, and express charges, and it is yours. We send with the watch our guarantee that you can return it at any time within one year if not [illegible] as represented, or if you [illegible] we will give you a new watch free. Write at once as we shall send out samples for 60 days only.
Address
—THE—
NATIONAL MFG. AND IMPORTING CO.,
334 Dearborn St.

AN OBJECT LESSON ON TEMPERANCE.

BY S. JENNIE SMITH.

School is out, and homeward
The little ones are bound;
Their shouts and joyous laughter
The distant hills resound.

Some running, skipping, jumping,
Enjoy with all their might
The freedom that's been given
To those who've done the right.

Some linger by the roadside—
Five little lads are they;
And all as bright and winsome
As you meet any day.

They chatter of their lessons,
Compare their slates and books,
And criticise quite freely
Their new instructor's looks.

Now questions blue-eyed Jamie:
"What work will you do, Dan?
Or rather, what will you be
When you're a great, big man?"

"Why, I shall be a sailor
And never land at all,
But live right on the water
When I have grown up tall.

"My sons shall go in swimming,
Yes, twice a day, I bet,
And no one dare to scold 'em,
And no one think to fret."

"I mean to be a doctor,"
Said fragile Neddie Hay,
"For then my pa will never Have doctor's bills to pay."

"I'd rather be a druggist,
And tend the soda stand;
Oh, my! what drinks I'd have then!"
Cried thirsty Fred Durand.

"I b'lieve I'd be a baker,"
This from wee, chubby Joe;
"'Cause all the pies we'd eat, boys,
We'd have them free, you know."

Now, while these lads are talking,
A man comes staggering nigh;
His face is red and swollen,
And bleared and dim his eye.

He fills the air with curses,
And makes us grieve to see
That one of God's own creatures
Could fall so low as he.

The boys in haste stepped backward;
Dan whispers, "Drunk again!"
And Joe gasps, "He's so scarey,
That wicked Mr. Flynn."

He slowly staggers onward,
At last is out of sight;
With long-drawn breath Dan whispers,
"I was 'fraid he'd want to fight."

"Now what would you be, Jamie?
You haven't told us yet,"
And Jamie's face grows thoughtful,
His eyes with tears are wet.

"I don't know what I'll do, boys;
I haven't any plan—
But one thing I'm determined,
I'll be a temperance man."

East Norwich, N. Y.

HOW THREE TOTS WARMED THE CAR.

It was a very cold, raw, foggy morning, and the passengers on No. 12, west bound, were shivering in coat-collars turned up to their ears, and some of them trying to warm their bodies by the hotness of their temper against the brakeman and the railroad company for having no fire in the car heater.

Everybody looked very glum and all out of humor, and when the fat traveling man tipped the fashionably-dressed young fellow's silk hat down over his eyes in lifting his luggage into his seat, the latter turned and glared at him angrily, at which the traveling man said, "Beg your pardon," in a tone icy enough to congeal his breath and a straggling beam of sunshine that had thought of trying to shine in darted back behind a cloud. I just know neither one would have acted so on a balmly June morning and I know that the lady behind the mother with a sickly, fretting babe would not have snatched her things up so impatiently and banged them down in another seat as far up the aisle as she could get, or the old gentleman in white tie and glasses would not have said "Go 'way!" so roughly to the newsboy, or the brother and sister would not have quarreled and pushed over their seat, or the through passenger piled his luggage up in one end of his seat to keep others out. May be not.

But pretty soon the car got warmer, and in a very funny way. The door pushed open slowly and by spasms, as though very weak, small hands were behind it. It creaked and stuck as though it were mad, too.

"You just have to storm this fort to take it," piped a shrill, cheery voice. "Hurry right in, Maysie and Edie, and I'll shut the door quick and keep Jack Frost out. My! what a nice place this is! Don't the red cushions make it look warm enough?" And a wee mite of a red-cheeked boy gallantly held open the door for two rosy little travelers in the cunningest of cloaks and hoods, beaming with the exercise and fun of a brisk walk, the smaller of the two holding fast a bisque doll, almost as large as herself, with one arm and the other hand tight in her sister's clasp.

"And wasn't it more fun to come all alone than to have Aunt Rachel bring us and bother her morning's work so when her girl's gone?" laughed the little tot called Maysie.

"Pshaw! we don't need no auntie to go 'long and take care of us," said the little fellow, manfully; "the conductor'll take care of us."

"And these nice people won't let us get hurt," put in Maysie.

"An' Dod," suggested Edie, reverently.

The fastidious lady thawed out enough to smile a faint smile of amusement. The man in the white necktie lowered his homiletic magazine, elevated his eyebrows and stared over his glasses.

"Here, you take the window seat, Maysie; it's nicest. Edie can sit between."

"An' I'll hold dolly on my wap, so's see won't crowd Ned."

"And we'll be as snug as a bug in a rug in this nice big seat," said Ned.

"And Aunt Rachel fixed us such a nice lunch; and isn't this the loveliest morning!" cried Maysie.

"Such soft cushions," added Ned, springing up and down to try them; "so comfortable!"

"Ess, so tumf'leble," piped Edie. "Evysing so tumf'leble when children's is dood an' woves evybody, ain't it?" and the little philosopher settled back to enjoy precisely what other people had been thinking hard thoughts about.

And the brother and sister in the rear stopped crowding and nagging, and looked on in shamefaced wonder; and the fat traveling man began to look jolly as he ought to; and the fashionable young fellow turned around and winked at him and nodded good-naturedly toward the three little tots cuddled up together, chattering like sparrows; and the through passenger lifted his luggage on to the floor and made room for a lady who had just come in; and the poor mother's eye glistened with something wet at something or other it made her think of; and the fastidious lady became very motherly in her look, and said, half aloud, "Bless the dear little things! They make me homesick to see my own." And then she came back to the seat behind the mother to hunt her rubbers she had left, and she clicked at the fretting babe and offered it a bon-bon.

Then the moist eyed mother smiled such a sweet smile as she thanked her for the babe, that she wondered she had not noticed before what a neat, pleasant faced woman she was; and she finally reached over, half hesitatingly, and offered to hold the baby, asking:

"Is this your only child? She seems so poorly."

"The only one left," replied the mother, audibly. "But the little darlings over there make me think of my own sweet Nora and Aleen, just their sizes, that we buried last week," and she gulped back a big sob.

Then the fat traveling man had to blow his nose, and the old man in a white necktie said "Ahem" very loud and remarked to the through passenger that he believed 'twas going to clear away.

Just then a faint streak of sunshine did straggle in, and it was not scared this time, for it saw a car full of pleasant-faced passengers.

"Nice morning, after all," they said, one to another; "pretty comfortable traveling; bright children, those little tots."

And so the car got warm; but the ray of sunshine didn't do it.—Selected.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Many of you have seen Ethel Stout's cunning little paper, The Midget, and will be glad to read this very nice letter from her:

Dear Aunt Jane:—I like our Cozy Corner very much, and thought I would write a little letter, too. I have not seen a letter from the "Land of Flowers."

I am doing all I can for temperance. I edit a little paper, The Midget, and give one-tenth of the subscriptions to the Temple. We have raised one hundred dollars to put a tablet for Mother Stewart in Willard Hall, and will soon have one finished for Mrs. Trego.

Indian River is one hundred and twenty miles long, and there is not a saloon on it, but a few in one town. There is not any at Melbourne.

I am ten years old; I will go to school in a row-boat when it commences.

I have a little sister who died June 19, 1892. She was buried near the shore of pretty Lake Worth. I miss her so much. We were visiting at Juno, Fla., when she was taken sick with brain fever; she was born May 5, 1891.

My mamma and I belong to the W. C. T. U., and my papa is a Prohibitionist. Your loving niece,

ETHEL STOUT.

Melbourne, Fla.

You all join with me in extending warmest sympathy to Ethel, do you not, children? And we all know God will bless the little temperance worker in all she tries to do "In His Name." Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

I will be eight next December. My mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. I have two brothers, Ernest and Clyde. I like to read the Cozy Corner letters. We are a temperance family. I take The Midget and like it very much.

Edgewood, Iowa. MABEL TRUE.

You are at home, little niece, in the big temperance family, too.

I am a little boy ten years old, and a temperance boy, too, and I live way out in the Rocky Mountains where there is lots of need of temperance.

Crested Butte, Col. WILLIE WILSON.

I hope there will be thousands of temperance children in the Rockies who will vote away strong drink when they grow up.

I suppose almost all the children who read THE UNION SIGNAL are soldiers of the Loyal Temperance Legion, or like my little brother and sisters and I, have one at home, because we are too far away to belong to any other.

Woolwich, Me. VIDA J. THOMPSON.

Isn't that a good idea, children who want to belong to an L. T. L., can't you, too, have one at home?

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

119.

CHARADE.

My first a prefix which conveys
The meaning that we're for
And not against the cause in which
We wage a peaceful war.

My second well describes our aim,
And surely this is so;
For votes men often try my third
When to the polls they go.

If every one would do my fourth
Towards tobacco, rum and gin,
My whole would reign all o'er our land
The better times begin!

120.

CROSSWORD ENIGMA.

In trust not in pay,
In week not in day,
In money not in purse,
In poetry not in verse,
In love not in hate,
In tackle not in bait,
Dear children for my whole if the pennies you supply,
We'll own the lofty edifice that towers toward the sky.

M. GRAY FOX.

121.

DECAPITATIONS.

1. Behead and curtail to punish and leave to hurry.
2. Behead and curtail not clear and leave shrill.
3. Behead a tropical tree and leave gifts obtained by begging.
4. Behead to clamber and leave a part of the body.
5. Behead a small piece of wood and leave an organ of the body.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED OCTOBER 20.

110. Frances Willard.

111. Bidwell, Cranfill, Harrison, Reid, Cleveland, Stevenson, Weaver.

112. 1. Toe, tore, toast; 2, bee, beer, beast; 3, hay, hair, haste; 4, fee, fear, feast; 5, pay, pair, paste.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Why do you continue to use an inferior table water, when you can obtain the best at the same price? By chemical analysis the is shown to contain a larger number of digestive and corrective properties than any other table water extant, and as it is by far the most refreshing, being absolutely pure and unadulterated, you should at least sample it before continuing in old methods.

Manitou Table Water

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints.
Convenient forms for Dealer and Consumer
Address for literature
Manitou Mineral Water Co., Manitou Springs, Colo.
Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists.

YOSE & SONS PIANOS! ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue.

170 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.,
OR
LYON, POTTER & CO.,
176 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILL.

GOING TO BUILD

SEE THESE NEW 1892 DESIGNS IN BOOKS 4 and 5, "HOUSES and COTTAGES."

Size, 8 x 10 inches. Contains new designs, new styles. No. 4 has 35 designs, classified from $150 up to $1500, about half under $1000. No. 5, contains 59 designs of dwellings costing over $1 500, many $1800 to $3000. $1 each, or the two $1.50.

D. S. HOPKINS, Architect
72 Ottawa Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.

Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town. Send 2ct. stamp for Catal'ge.

THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB Co.
180 S. Canal St. Chicago.

How TO MAKE A Fortune

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser; patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen to whom we give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new, will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., 184 Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.

NEW MAGIC LANTERN

STEREOPTICONS AND LANTERN SLIDES

For Amateurs. Public Lectures, and the Home Circle. PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENTS ARE PROFITABLE. J. B. COLT & CO., manfrs., 16 Beekman St., New York 189 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. Mention this paper.

☞ See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

Publisher's Notes.

HOW KNOWLEDGE IS OBTAINED.

"Why, you are a perfect Encyclopedia!"

"How is that?"

"Why, last week, when baby was sick, you told us just what was the matter with her, and suggested a simple remedy that cured her at once. A short time ago when Willie brought a strange plant in from the woods, you examined it carefully and from your knowledge of botany, told us exactly what its name was and what it was useful for.

"When the kitchen boiler went wrong and the house was in an uproar, you said you had studied house plumbing a little, and you stopped the rumbling and straightened the whole thing out in a jiffy. Do you remember the day you mended the broken gas meter for us and uuderstood how to read it, which knowledge caused the gas company to take $15 off the bill? And then again, do you remember the night when there was tons of water on the roof, which was beginning to soak through and threatened to ruin all the furniture and drown us in our beds? You said you knew a little about tin roofs and went up with a broom handle, and soon had all the water drawn off through the proper channel just in time to save us all from ruin. I should say you were an Encyclopedia!"

"But—"

"Then there was the day the canary broke its leg and you remembered a little about surgery and set the leg just like a doctor and now the little bird is all right again."

"But, Madam,—"

"Oh, yes, and you showed us how to empty the aquarium without moving it, and told us what kind of plants to put in to keep the water fresh and pure, and you mended the piano, because you understood how it was made, and freed the house from roaches, rats and mice. When Willie was poisoned with ivy you had the proper antidote which cured him. You also cured Carlo when he had the distemper and taught us how to hatch chickens in an incubator which you made yourself."

"I was going to explain—"

"Don't I remember how you purified the cistern water and told us how to cure chickens when they had the pip. The very same night you taught Willie the 15th proposition in the second book of Euclid, and explained to me the theory of music. You also told us who invented gunpowder and printing, and when the coffee gave out recommended an excellent substitute. Yes, indeed, I should say you were a perfect Encyclopedia!"

"My dear Madam—"

"Then there were the flowers, too. How did you know what temperature orchids required in order to thrive, and what kind of soil to plant the cactus in? And how did you know that Willie's bicycle had a ball joint, and where on earth did you learn those lovely mythological stories that you told us the night you took the parlor rifle to pieces and mended the lock? I say again that a man that can quote St. Thomas Aquinas in the original, solve a problem in algebra, make hydrogen gas so that it will burn, and make baby's perambulator as good as new, all in one evening, is a perfect Encyclopedia!"

"I was about to say, my dear Madam, that these little things that you mention, to carry in my memory, I learned them all from the wonderful Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, and they form but an infinitesimal part of the store of knowledge in that marvelous work. It should form a part of every household, for it contains useful and interesting facts on every subject. The family who possess it need not travel in order to learn the useful inventions or devices of all lands, nor need they spend time and money in colleges, for the Britannica is a great college in itself. When Toodles, in the good old farce of that name, supplied himself with a coffin because it was handy to have in the house, he made a bad investment. He should have bought the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica—which in the United States he could have done at an outlay of only ten cents a day for a short time, for that work is not only handy to have in the house, but it is indispensable in every home."

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS WANTED

For

The Junior Partners,
A Young Woman Journalist,
Childhood, Its Care and Culture,
Glimpses of Fifty Years,

and other books.

For particulars address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

"The advance over all that had preceded for a century has proven so important as to raise the inventor,

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SHAW,

of America, to distinction as the compeer of William Lee, of England, the inventor of the first stocking-frame."—London Illustrated News.

Shawknit
TRADE MARK.

THE ONLY HALF-HOSE THAT FIT WELL, LOOK WELL, WEAR WELL.

They are the only half-hose that fit well because they are the only half-hose that are

SO KNITTED AS TO FIT.

They are the only half-hose that look well and wear well because they are the only half-hose that fit well and last because they are made in the

MOST ATTRACTIVE COLOR-EFFECTS and of the BEST YARNS.

Look for the trade-mark on the toe. Send for Descriptive Price-List.

SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass.

FREE EXTRAORDINARY INDUCEMENT FOR THE NEXT SIXTY DAYS.

OUR FREE GIFT.

1st. Any one of McCall's Celebrated Bazar Glove-fitting Patterns. Value 25 to 40 cents—say..... .40
2d. Any novel (Sea Side Library Series) Selected from a list of 120 which we will forward.....Price .20
3d. A copy of "The Kitchen, John and I, or Leaves from a Young Housekeeper's Journal," by Belle Olcott. Price .35

An order for the above, good at any time, will be mailed to you if you send us 30 cents for one year's subscription to

THE QUEEN OF FASHION.

The Cheapest and Most Reliable Fashion Magazine in the World.

OBJECT OF THIS GREAT OFFER.

We Want a Million Subscribers.

OUR PRESENT CIRCULATION IS 300,000.

GEO. H. BLADWORTH & CO., 46 East 14th St. (Union Square), New York.

YPSILANTI DRESS REFORM UNDERWEAR

[For FALL and WINTER WEAR.]

NEW IMPROVEMENTS —IN— YPSILANTI EQUESTRIENNE TIGHTS.

O. N. S.

"Our New Shape" Combination Suit are now on sale. See new Fall Catalogue for particulars.

DON'T BE DECEIVED!

See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark—

"Ypsilanti Health Underwear."

Ypsilanti Underwear is warranted perfect by the manufacturers, when stamped with the above trade-mark, and sold at regular prices

☞ Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Price List. Where we have no Agent, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.

HAY & TODD MFG. CO., YPSILANTI, MICH.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for rade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10 cts. to intending agents, F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St. Chicago, Ill.

A NEW Twilled Lace Thread FOR CROCHETING. BEST in the world! Send 10c. for sample spool.

Crocheting Book No. 3 50 Illustrated Patterns. TEN CENTS.

Series of 24 Beautiful Illus. Tidy and Bed Spread Patterns from London and Paris, 5 cents each, or 60 cents a dozen including copy of above Book—No. 3.

GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D. W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid.

Keeps the hair in curl for days Innocent as cologne. A toilet necessity. Not sent on trial.

80,000 Ladies Have Endorsed It

At druggists, or prepaid, 50c.

LADY AGENTS wanted.

DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (½) LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of

DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.

Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.

DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. L. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble, Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Pier, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

Enameline STOVE POLISH

Ready for use. Applied with a Cloth. LITTLE Labor, NO Dust, NO Odor. The BEST and MOST ECONOMICAL Stove Polish in the World. Sold everywhere. Sample mailed FREE. J. L. Prescott & Co., Box B, No. Berwick, Me.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c. per dozen, post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞ A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

DARKNESS & DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction

By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. ☞ We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND
Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.

CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.

References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont.

Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

DON'T CHEW TOBACCO.

Beeman's Pepsin Gum

Helps to overcome the Habit.

CAUTION—See that the name Beeman is on each wrapper.

Each tablet contains one grain pure pepsin, sufficient to digest 1,000 grains of food. If it cannot be obtained from dealers, send five cents in stamps for sample package to

BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 64 Lake St., Cleveland, O.
ORIGINATORS OF PEPSIN CHEWING GUM.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis

DEAFNESS CURED

BY ELECTRICITY.

Send 10 cents for our 100 page "Electro-Medical Theory and Practice."

B. B. BLISS, Iowa Falls, Iowa.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS

CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.

Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.

N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,

163-165 DEARBORN ST. - CHICAGO, ILL.
New York. Boston.

BEATTY Piano, Organ, $23 up. Want agents. Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " 3 months	.25
" " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15
Per 100 copies	1.00

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

THE UNION SIGNAL'S SPECIAL FIVE DOLLAR PREMIUM.

To any person sending a new subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL who may indicate a desire to secure the advantage here offered, remitting $1 to pay for the paper, we will send a paid-up scholarship for one month's instruction in the Phillips Home Study Business College, Syracuse, N. Y., with a choice of studies in either shorthand, bookkeeping or penmanship. The instruction is suited to young people of either sex, and its special features are: Rapid advancement, thorough qualification, saving of time and money. Distance is no objection, the work being done by mail. The regular price of a month's tuition is $5 for each study taken, but by special arrangement with the Phillips College, we are enabled to make this very liberal offer, presenting a remarkable opportunity whereby any young man or woman may, without any expense whatever, secure a month's instruction at home, thereby laying the foundation for a business education which will undoubtedly lead to success in life. Every energetic young reader of THE UNION SIGNAL will at once set to work and secure the name of the subscriber required; this will be easily done, for your friends will assist you in so laudable an undertaking. The offer is limited to one month's instruction, but those desiring to continue the course after the expiration of this scholarship can make satisfactory arrangements with the college to do so.

Every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL should call the attention of young people to this offer, and all members of the W. C. T. U. who have not secured a business training should realize what a good opportunity is now offered at small cost.

The price of home instruction is $5 per month.

To repeat:

The price of THE UNION SIGNAL is $1 per year.

Send one new subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and we will send an order entitling you to one month's instruction from the Phillips Business College without extra charge.

A letter just received says:

"I am arranging to offer a new one hundred dollar type writer as a prize to the student who shall make the greatest progress during a given time."

Do not delay. Send one new name and $1 without delay and enroll yourself in the home instruction class now being organized. State the study desired.

Address,
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FOR EVERY HOME.

The book recently issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, entitled THE JUNIOR PARTNERS, should be in every home. It is very entertaining and exceedingly instructive. The purpose of the book is to illustrate the dangers that beset business men, and to show the relation between the drink habit and insanity. All who have read the book testify to its merits. It is written with remarkable power.

Dr. Thompson writes: "I am fascinated and uplifted."

A prominent physician writes: "I regard it as a beacon light on the stormy sea of ignorance, intemperance and vice. It bristles with jewels of invaluable truth respecting social relations. Its scientific thought couched in the most fascinating story comes as a glad evangel to suffering humanity."

Buy it for your homes.
Place it in your library.
It will do good everywhere.
Price: Cloth, $2; morocco, $3.
Agents wanted everywhere.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THIS LOT COST 60 CENTS.

LARGER QUANTITY, BETTER QUALITY, ONLY 25 CENTS.

No Sane Woman

would pay 12 cents a pound for Powdered Soap when she could buy it in bars for 6 cents, though every woman knows that Powdered soap is handier and better than soap in bars or cakes. But when a woman can buy Powdered soap for the SAME PRICE as bar soap, of course she takes the Powdered soap for it does ½ her work and the other ½ is no work at all.

Gold Dust WASHING POWDER

IS POWDERED SOAP AT BAR SOAP PRICES. It is sold by every enterprising grocer in wholesale packages (4 lbs.) for 25 CENTS.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,

CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

GENUINE ROGERS' KNIVES, FORKS, SPOONS, ETC.

THIS SAME BRAND WAS USED BY OUR GRANDPARENTS AND ARE THE ONLY

ROGERS GOODS

WHICH HAVE BEEN IN USE SINCE THE YEAR

·1847·

FICTITIOUS BRANDS OF ROGERS SPOONS ETC. WERE UNKNOWN UNTIL MANY YEARS LATER.

THE QUESTION "WILL THEY WEAR"? need never be asked if your goods bear this TRADE MARK as it guarantees THE QUALITY.

BE SURE THE PREFIX "1847" IS STAMPED ON EVERY ARTICLE

FOR SALE BY THE PRINCIPAL DEALERS.

If you are not sure where the genuine 1847 Rogers Goods can be obtained, address THE MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO., Meriden, Conn. Illustrations of latest designs and valuable information will be mailed you. (MENTION THIS PAPER.)

TOBACCO HABIT

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.

EASILY CURED

For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others. Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

ESTABLISHED 1850.

"Out of each nook by dingle and brook
The Healing blossoms leak and look."

A POT OF PRECIOUS OINTMENT | Dr. C. P. Brown's HERBAL OINTMENT (Great External Remedy) reaches disease through the pores, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25cts. Druggists or by mail. J. Gibson Brown, 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

A COMPLETE LINE OF

DRESS REFORM GOODS,

including the famous EQUIPOISE and DELSARTE Waists, Jenness-Miller Specialties, &c., &c. Send stamp for free illustrated pamphlet on healthful dress. Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 75 Madison St., Chicago.

Bickford Family Knitter.

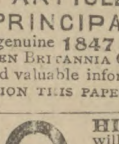
Knits everything required by the household, of any quality, texture and weight desired. A. M. LAWSON, 783 Broadway, N. Y.

Beware of cheap and worthless knitters.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.

St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS



MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE. OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

AGENTS Coin Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Every woman buys. Best and cheapest cooker sold. Big Profits to good workers, male or female. Sample's weight 12 oz. Adv'g matter furnished For circulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

THIS SOLID GOLD GENUINE DIAMOND RING

FREE to any girl who will do a few hours work showing our new goods to their friends. Send No Money.

I. M. ASSOCIATION, 269 Dearborn St. Chicago, Ill.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.

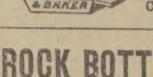
Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets, Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY

or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.



HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, November 17, 1892. Number 46

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Severe gales swept over the great lakes last week.

Political interests in Germany this week center around the proposed army bill.

Several persons were seriously injured by shots during a riot at Homestead, Pa., last Sabbath.

The annual convention of the Knights of Labor commenced its sessions at St. Louis, Tuesday.

Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Gordon sailed on Wednesday for England on the steamship Majestic. They plan to return next May.

Anarchists held anniversary meetings in New York and Chicago last Friday, waving the red flag in memory of the execution of their leaders five years ago.

Trafalgar Square, London, was occupied by a vast army of laborers, Sunday, who gathered to celebrate the increased freedom and liberty of utterance accorded them since the "Bloody Sunday" of 1887.

The World's Fair directory at its meeting November 11, put itself upon record as opposed to Sabbath observance by the passage of a resolution requesting Congress to rescind its action fatiging the gates Sunday.

THE illness of Mrs. Eva C. Higgins, president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., was deeply deplored by the entire Convention. The one hundred local unions in the Silver State tell of her untiring work.

"WE Belong," the new white ribbon song, by Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, sung at the Convention, was a decided hit. It will become a favorite the world over with the W. C. T. U. Miss Gordon will at once add it to her White Ribbon Hymnal.

THE disposition of the $5,000 presented by Mr. Crittenton to Miss Willard for use in the purity department has been referred to Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine, who will institute a bureau of correspondence in the interest of the fund, with a view to its fair apportionment.

WITHIN a fortnight after the close of the great Convention we issue this complete Convention number. Its contents are of infinite and enduring value. And in order to spread this representative edition far and wide, our business manager has made arrangements special and important to our readers, whose attention is directed to the Publisher's Notes on another page.

AFTER Edna Dean Proctor's poetic coloring in an October number, THE UNION SIGNAL must "acknowledge the corn" as the most representative blossom of our country. Its universality surely makes it "of all our wealth the best," and white-ribboners not being able "to find its like elsewhere" may send in their votes without hesitation for the national emblem, and perhaps "the shield of the great republic shall bear a stalk of the tasseled corn."

MISS WILLARD felt constrained by her growing cares to resign the superintendency of purity work, and at her request Dr. Mary Wood Allen, of Toledo, O., takes this important position. Dr. Allen is a special student of this work and a remarkably fine speaker. She is author of "The Man Wonderful in the House Beautiful," and well known to white-ribboners through pen and voice. Mr. O. H. Miller, a Denver millionaire, gave Miss Willard $500 for this department, which now goes to Dr. Allen.

WILLIAM T. STEAD, the great editor, forwarded one hundred copies of The Review of Reviews, containing his remarkable sketch of our National President, as a gift to the National W. C. T. U. Convention. These were presented by Lady Henry Somerset, who spoke most highly of the influence for good exerted by Mr. Stead and of the battle he had fought for the protection of women, which had earned for him their deepest gratitude. A rising vote of thanks to Mr. Stead was given with enthusiasm.

AS A result of the conference of the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. and those in charge of the World's Congresses, it has been decided to hold the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Chicago, June 8 and 9. Prominent speakers from all countries will address the meetings, which will be truly cosmopolitan. Our annual National Convention will also be held in Chicago in connection with the Columbian Exposition. It will begin October 16, and will occupy the usual length of time.

"PROHIBITION and liquor selling are natural enemies," declares the Wine and Spirit Gazette. We are rejoiced to find at last one point of agreement between ourselves and the liquor party. We have long held the opinion quoted above, but hitherto the liquor organs have been unanimous in declaring that we were deceived, and have insisted that prohibition was the very life of the liquor traffic, the fertile soil in which it reached its most luxurious development, though there has been at times a perceptible discrepancy between their actions and their professed opinions on the matter.

A PRICELESS testimony to the character and influence of the members of the Denver Convention came from an unexpected source. A waiter at a hotel said to a group of departing guests: "We are distressed to see the ladies of the W. C. T. U. leaving; we do not often have the pleasure of waiting on ladies like yourselves; we find you best of all; you have done us good." This was spontaneous evidence that the human brotherhood preached by the W. C. T. U. as an inward grace has material correspondence. The perfect woman is that one whose manner shows an equal courtesy toward prince and peasant. Her true photograph is, "Is not puffed up, doth not behave unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil."

THE fraternal delegates who were present at the National Convention were: Mr. Singletary, of Denver, from the Prohibition party of Colorado; Mrs. John McFarland, of St. Johns, New Brunswick, from the Dominion W. C. T. U.; Mrs. McLaughlin, of Canada, from the Provincial union; W. H. Crampton, from the Royal Templars; Mrs. Esther Frame, from the Yearly Meeting of Friends; Miss Schuff, of Madras, India, from the Foreign Mission Society; Mrs. McDowell, of the Home Missionary Society; Miss Morley, representing the Kindergartens of Chicago: Mrs. Carey N. Dove, of Denver, from the Grand Lodge; Mrs. Annie Steele, representing the Knights of Labor, who came with a special message from Mr. Powderly asking our help to establish the Saturday half holiday; Dr. Anna Shaw, with credentials from the American National Suffrage Association; and Mrs. S. E. V. Emery, who in representation of the labor organizations, made one of the ablest addresses of the Convention on its closing night.

THE elections have come and gone and the Democrats are in power. Eight years ago the country learned that as between two parties—both of which are at the beck and call of the liquor traffic—it does not matter which wins the Presidency. Probably out of the present political chaos re combinations of the better elements are more likely to occur than if the Republicans had retained the "throne of empire." If now the best men and women would make a diligent and earnest effort to combine the leadership of the dismantled Republican party, the inchoate Labor party and the persistent Prohibition party into a larger, better and more practicable movement under a new name, we firmly believe that the cause of universal brotherhood would be immeasurably advanced. But who has the foresight, the tolerance, the charity to lead on these disunited hosts? Who shall come unto the kingdom for such a time as this? The columns of THE UNION SIGNAL are open to the utterances of leaders on this subject, for to-day it is the "bell sheep" only that keeps the flocks in different paths.

IT was touching to hear the Convention sing "There is a land of pure delight" in place of its usual telegram to Madam Willard, announcing the reëlection of her daughter. One was sent instead to Mrs. Mary Bannister Willard, Berlin, and another to the inmates of Rest Cottage.

IF all who doubt the existence of the Temperance Temple in Chicago could have peeked into Willard Hall Monday, November 14, their doubts would have turned into joyful assurance. For six months people by the thousands have come in and gone out at the wide portals of the Temple proper, but only a favored few have been permitted to see the inmost shrine—Willard Hall. This was not from any desire of exclusiveness, but because the hall was full of workmen and their tools. Early Monday morning the scene began to change. The workmen were turned into house-cleaners; scrubbing brushes were substituted for trowels and feather dusters for engravers' knives. High up on the beautiful ceiling, on which the monogram W. C. T. U. is frescoed in blue and gold, experts were rapidly hanging electric light bulbs. Down in the aisles men were tacking canvas, as a temporary substitute for carpet. A beautiful covering was hastily fitted to the platform, upon which a piano and chairs were quickly rolled. Mrs. Carse was happily engaged in arranging flowers and flags as the audience began to assemble. No surprise was depicted upon their faces because of the unfinished interior and the busy preparations. White ribbons gleamed upon the garments of all the women and not a few of the men, and a light of holy joy flashed from every eye as the heart swelled with gratitude to God for His wonderful goodness to the white ribbon cause in granting it such a beautiful meeting place in the heart of this great city. Shortly after twelve o'clock the piano struck the chords of "America," and the audience sang as one great voice,

"My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing."

As music seemed the natural outlet of the happy souls assembled, "More love to Thee, oh, Christ" and "Jesus keep me near the cross" were rendered without intermission. By that time Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset had arrived. The former was invited to take charge of the service and the latter to read the Crusade Psalm and lead in prayer. It was natural that Miss Willard should call immediately after for the Crusade hymn—

"Give to the winds thy fears.
Hope, and be undismayed."

Amanda Smith, whose voice was the first to be lifted up in praise and prayer in Willard Hall, was invited to the platform, and led in singing "Coronation" and "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy." After introductory remarks by Miss Willard, which were by way of happy reminiscences of early temperance work in Chicago, Lady Henry delivered the informal address of dedication. This was purely a gospel talk, setting the keynote to the noon meetings which will begin here in about two weeks and continue thereafter. Space alone forbids the publication of her address, which was so beautiful in its truth and simplicity that every heart was touched. At its close, Miss Willard added some words, setting forth the "daily walk" of Lady Henry and the wondrous faith and executive ability of Mrs. Carse, whom she styled "the builder in Israel" and without whom this beautiful Temple and sacred hall would never have found being. As this was the last meeting in this country at which Miss Willard and Lady Somerset would be present for six months it was most appropriate to sing in closing, "God be with you till we meet again" and to clasp their hands in a warm parting embrace as they hurried down the aisle to attend yet another meeting before their departure on the afternoon train. Such was the first temperance meeting in Willard Hall, and may every succeeding one be as full of the pure gospel of Jesus Christ.

AFTERMATH.

BY ADA C. BOWLES.

"God be with you till we meet again."

Gone are the days of Convention,
Only a memory now,
Dear to the heart of each woman

Bound by the white-ribbon vow.
England gave of her choicest,

Winning and wise and strong
In the strength of the Master's fullness
To forward His cause along.
How to the side of our leader

Yearning to fold in her care,
Over the wide-spreading ocean
Urgent her sorrow to share,

Traveled this most faithful sister
Intent her burden to bear.
Long may their friendship continue,
Loyal our hearts unto each,

Won to a closer communion,
Eager to learn as to teach.

Many the gifts on the altar,
Even the least has a place.
Ever the dear God awaiteth
To add His own blessing of grace.

All must be one in endeavor,
Giving "In His Name" the best;
Although it seemed poor and worthless,
In giving the giver is blest—
None doubting God for the rest.

NINETEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRIDAY MORNING.

The Nineteenth Annual Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union opened its first session in Trinity M. E. church, Denver, Col., Friday morning, Oct. 28, 1892.

The wondrous perfection of the Colorado climate left nothing to be desired as happy delegates and visitors greeted each other at the Convention door at 9 o'clock a. m. Trinity church is one of the handsomest in America. The beauty of its interior with its polished oak furnishings and carved rails, its frescoed walls and handsome stained glass windows demanded but little further embellishment. With true artistic taste the decorating committee added only such touches as indicated the character of the important gathering. Suspended from the high ceiling directly over the platform hung the famous globe, encircled by the white ribbon which made its first appearance at the initial gathering of the World's W. C. T. U., at Boston, last year. Beautiful white silk banners on brass standards, prominent among which was that of the Lady Henry Somerset Union of St. Paul, Minn., and pictured upon this were the well known features of our gracious English leader. Stripes of yellow and white were woven through the chancel rails most effectively, the same thought carried out in red, white and blue, being in the balcony railing circling the auditorium. Upon the platform, just sufficient decoration was introduced to allow perfect freedom to the occupants, a stand of magnificent palms being the main feature. Flanking the rostrum on either side were the large and attractive banners of the Colorado and the Missouri W. C. T. U. The English and American flags appeared frequently in juxtaposition. The right balcony loge and side wall overlooking the platform told the story of woman suffrage with Wyoming's large lone star flag, the colors of white and gold and the motto "No Sex in Citizenship." On the left were the special decorations of the National W. C. T. U., its beautiful starry banner with the motto "The Child of the Crusade," and a suspended snow white dove carrying the white ribbon in its beak. The large flags dependent from the balcony, have each a history; those upon either side of the auditorium came from St. Patrick's Total Abstinence Society and are very valuable. The beautiful dark blue ensign and the American flag at the center of the gallery were sent by the governor of Colorado; the former bears the state arms and was prepared especially for the dedicatory exercises in Chicago where it was carried by the governor and staff. The local and state W. C. T. U. banners overhung the gallery, the National motto was displayed, and festooned around the church were loops of our red, white and blue children's signed pledge cards. The whole combined to form a decoration at once significant and attractive, reflecting much credit upon the committee.

The great audience was called to order soon after nine o'clock by the president, Miss Frances E. Willard, as follows:

The Convention will please come to order. We have always begun our meetings by a reading of the Crusade Psalm. The old Crusade Bible has been in charge of Mrs. Thompson, who lives in Hillsboro, Ohio, but her increasing age and infirmities have prevented her coming, and I do not think they would intrust this old Presbyterian bible with any one else. But we can read our Crusade Psalm from some other bible, and Lady Henry Somerset will do so. Then we will join in singing the Crusade hymn, after which she will lead us in prayer, closing with the Lord's Prayer.

The Crusade Psalm 146, was read, followed by singing of Crusade Hymn, "Give to the Winds thy Fears."

Roll call of officers, vice presidents, superintendents and ex-officio members was made by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge.

On motion, the chair appointed the following committee on credentials: Mrs. Buell, chairman; Miss Henderson, Texas; Miss Morris, Missouri, and Mrs. Stevenson, Massachusetts.

The Convention proceeded to the appointment of the following committees:

Finance—Mrs. Buell, chairman; Mrs. Purdum, Ohio, and Mrs. Abernathy, Tennessee.

Publications—Mrs. Fanny H. Rastall and Miss Esther Pugh.

Courtesies—Mrs. Mary T. Burt, New York, chairman; Mrs. Benjamin, Michigan, and Mrs. Golliday, Missouri.

After singing "Blest be the Tie that Binds," Miss Willard said: "As an act of international courtesy, the Vice-President at Large of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and President of the British Women's Temperance Association, Lady Henry Somerset, will please take the chair during the reading of the Annual Address."

Want of space compels the giving of a résumé only of the President's Annual Address.

Beloved Comrades of the White-Ribbon Army:

It has been stated by military experts that forty well-trained soldiers are able to resist ten thousand who have had no discipline. If the temperance army, compared with the great army of the world, is as small as this comparison between the figures forty and ten thousand would indicate, and no doubt it is, we must remember that those who have their hearts set as a flint, those whose eyes look straight on and who have caught step one with another so that they march as an unbroken host, must in the nature of things, make mighty inroads on the great mobocracy of thoughtless, ignorant, careless opponents who, except when they are drinkers and sellers of drink, need but the arrest of thought to bring them to our ranks. It is for this reason that I regard the women's temperance movement as without a parallel and without a peer because it does not expect to win through any sleight of hand, it does not expect to surprise the enemy by skirmishes or night attacks, but in the strong daylight of reason, conscience, faith, it does expect to put to rout the armies of aliens—those aliens of appetite, ignorance and greed which form the only hope of whisky makers and beer politicians.

We are to encourage our hearts by the remembrance that the Master said, "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," and though our work seems small when compared with the great world-work of the good, still, if it brings about the wondrous transformation from thoughtlessness to thoughtfulness, everything else that we desire must surely follow.

There are tens of thousands of women to-day who think themselves a little too good to be white-ribboners—a little too cultivated, perhaps a trifle too critical—in short, "they do not see their way." They prefer to trip along in their trim shoes on the sidewalk with the better cared-for procession of the average well-to do. But we who have taken to the street and are marching along in the dust with the rank and file, sing many a time as we go forward in the difficult way, a song whose meaning is well described in the old Scotch rhyme:

"And ye'll tak' the byeway,
And I'll tak' the highway,
And I'll be in Scotland afore ye."

It has been well said:

How is a soldier made? Whence comes the soldier of a man? A lad taken out of your street, dressed in a soldier's uniform, fed on a soldier's rations, carrying a soldier's weapon and marching to a soldier's music is not a soldier; he is only a lad, clothed, fed, armed, marched like a soldier. But the soldier in a man, generated by fiercer processes, it is worried in by long marches, it is pressed in by long watches on the picket line, it is filtered in by the dews of night, it is washed in by the rains of heaven, it is starved in by half a biscuit a day, it is baked in by the fever in the hospital cot, it is blown in by shot and shell, it is thrust in by sabre and bayonet:—that is where the soldier comes from.

In the great spiritual army where the weapons are not carnal it is equally true that a soldier is made as well as born, and the white-ribbon host has as truly gone through the processes described as any patriot who ever exchanged the softness of home life for the rigors of the field. It is this discipline alone has made us comrades: it is the "slings of arrows of outrageous fortune" that have compressed the lines that might have wavered; it is the bivouac out under the dark skies of apathy, the steadfast watch maintained in the trenches of the long adverse campaign; it is the cannonade of criticism; it is the slow march retarded at every step by the ingenious attacks of an enemy unrelenting and that never sleeps;—all these have made us soldiers, and the touch of comradeship means more to many of us than the tie of kindred or the companionship of years. It is this that draws us across wide seas and wearisome stretches of land that we may stand face to face once more; may catch the glance of welcome and the light of loving smiles.

Life is full of compensations and the white ribbon army in all nations knows already the compensation of a love stronger than death for our Divine Leader who has passed into the heavens but sheds forth His power upon the earth as steadily as falls His sunshine; for our divine cause, worthy of any sacrifice that we can make even unto death; and for each other, the sturdy veterans and radiant young recruits of one great patient army wherein each loves the other, "for the dangers she has passed."

It would seem as if the figures of the year are, on the whole, depressing. The total product of beer for the revenue from April 30th, 1891, to the same date 1892, amounts to 31,475,000 barrels, a net increase of 1,000,453 barrels over the product of a former year, or a little less than one-half a barrel for every man, woman and child in the United States. On the principle that misery loves company we may recall the fact that England, with her thirty-seven millions of population, has a much larger drink bill this year than America with her sixty-three millions. But it is not upon figures that we base our hopes. We know the darkest hour is just before the dawn; we have learned not to expect too much success in our own lifetime, but just to keep "pegging away," building ourselves into that wondrous dyke made up of educated thought, purpose, and affection, that shall yet shut out the tawny, seething, foaming tide, not only from the land we love the best, but from every nation under heaven.

Thus saith the Lord: "Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."

The true reformer is the one who sits at the prow and sees only God. But evermore God works by means.

The brain has the hand as its instrument. The individual has an organized society as his most cogent weapon and most powerful ally. The hand can do but little without a tool through which it may employ and diversify its power; he who holds the strongest instrument and handles it most skillfully accomplishes the most. We women are more fortunate than we can at all comprehend in having at hand such an instrument as the W. C. T. U., to which we can carry our best inspirations and see them wrought into deeds, a warm home-center of progressive ideas and achievements. I cannot express to you my growing sense of the power that dwells in these groups of faithful and true women in every quarter of the world, animated by one spirit, attentive in mind, motherly in heart, helpful in hand, and hospitable in soul; ready to respond to every appeal that comes to them from the bugle notes of their great fireside camps where the conventions plan the work of the year that lies ahead.

Looking out over the great world-picture where humanity struggles against the dragon in God's name, we see that a white banner, lifted in gentle hands, is at the very center of the onmoving force. "Our flag is there." Thank God.

In the last analysis we want what every church and philanthropic movement has wanted since the world began, and this is power. It is the one cry—"give us power." The engine is useless to the engineer until its valves are filled with steam. The telegraph is but so much dead metal until the electric flash makes it a thing of life. Even a human being without vitality is but so much avoirdupois. Perhaps all power is a unit. We cannot tell. Perhaps it flows out from that reservoir behind all life that we call God. At all events, until the splendid engine of the W. C. T. U. is filled with those manifestations of God in Jesus Christ that we call "the Spirit's power," it stands idle on the track, no matter how well that track is ballasted, nor how strong the steel of its straight road. Power—we know what it is—we have had it—we have it still—we may have more of it just for the asking, we may have all of it that we will. God grant us power from on high—the giving of heaven's own steam into the engine, of Christ's own electric light of love into the telegraphic network of organization that we have spread over the whole world and most of all into your heart and mine. More than for any other object we meet here to concentrate thought, purpose and affection in the consecration that evokes and brings down from heaven the power of God.

The will is the king-bolt of the faculties—the keystone in the arch of character—the engine that trains after it the remainder of what we suppose ourselves to be. To hesitate is to be lost. We must make up "what we are pleased to call our minds," but we must set our wills as a switchman does his brake. The best and briefest formula was given us by our English leader, and came to her in a heavenly voice at the parting of the ways seven years ago when she resolved to be a Christian. "Act as if God were, and you shall know He is." We must begin by doing, that is the changeless law. Do His will and you shall know of the doctrine. A river is not judged by its shoals but by its current, and in like manner a life is not judged by its eddies of temptation but by its tendency, its direction, its goal; if our life is headed toward God and immortality people will know it, we shall know it, God will know it; and we must not be discouraged by any instance on our part of failure, if we fall we must just get up and try again. We are not here to float the float of faith but to fight the fight of faith.

The will is the final factor of our life. We cannot make the weak excuse that we are unable to believe, it is our business to believe the best things we have heard and known—the things from which the best character has been evolved. Scientists, inventors, explorers all go forward by a working hypothesis; they lay down a certain plan of supposition and fill that in by action. The architect goes by his working plan in building; and the Christian goes by his, in building that noblest of all edifices—character. To my mind the whole primer of Christian living may be condensed into these words: "Act as if God were and you shall know He is." If force is the nearest approach we make to God in the material universe, may not force of will approach Him closest in the spiritual realm? The difference between a man and a mollusk is that one has resolute aim, and the other, for all we know, has aimless reverie. The German poet, Hoffman, pitifully said with his last breath, "We must then think of God also." Happy is he who early determines not to put God among the "also's," but to make Him the keystone of the arch. Often the most discursive and speculative minds are the very best at choosing, and so we must go out saying to them—"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

"Why do not women open their great and successful societies to men?" is a question we begin to hear asked by the best and most liberal-minded among our brethren. The answer is that these organized movements are, as we think, God's great recruiting stations for the new war in which He is enrolling, drilling and disciplining. If men were at the front in these societies, as they would necessarily be if there at all, women would not develop so rapidly, or become so self-respecting and individual in character; they need to learn how to use the weapons with which the future is certain to equip them.

When men open the widest doors of all, those that lead to Municipal Council Hall, Congress and Parliament, and invite women to enter with them side by side, these temporary moulds will be quickly hewn from the then completed and majestic face of the new republic,—but we hope not till then.

We work alone in order to become experts so that we can hold our own when we go into societies with men. That is the short of it. They would not have received us on terms of equality if we had come to them before we could bring assorted minds and well-seasoned experience. We must first show power, for power is always respected whether it comes in the form of a cyclone or dewdrop, and generally, alas! in proportion to the announced method of its coming is the quota of respect accorded to it.

The great denominations have never classified women except as hewers of wood and drawers of water, and the same is true of some great missionary and temperance societies that could be named, because these movements like to utilize the ability of women but to keep the dimes and the distinctions to themselves.

DANGERS.

Two dangers confront our Christian workers, first: that they will have less spiritual; and secondly, that they will have less physical health as the years go on. The steady grind of their routine, the constant tendency to work at second rather than at first hand with those in need, in order that we may set forces going that shall eventually bring in a hundred helpers where but one now kneels beside the needy, this in itself tends toward spiritual lethargy; not that it ought or needs to do so, but because of the limitations of our minds and hearts. The unrelenting call of a work that grows so fast makes great demands upon physical as well as spiritual vigor; it is a wonder to me that more of us have not fallen under the awful spell of nervous prostration. Some one has described this visitation in terms so forcible that I have pondered them and set them here that you might do the same.

Nervous prostration is as much to be dreaded as any disease which does not threaten speedy death. It is most treacherous producing a condition more painful than pain, a weakness weaker than extreme fatigue, despondency more dejected than the lowest of low spirits, an instability of self-control destructive of confidence; making work, mental and physical, more distasteful to the once energetic nature than to the constitutionally lazy: and yet the exterior aspect is one of health, and the only consolation the poor victim has who has thus foolishly mortgaged his future, is this: "Oh, he is suffering from mere nervous prostration."

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

What we need beyond all things else is a crusade for total abstinence; there are still too many people among us who twang away on their one Paganini string saying: "God made alcohol." They might say with just as much force God made the devil. What we must do is to get them to let the devil alone whether in the form of alcohol or any other. As temperance specialists it is our work to close as many mouths as possible from being the drains through which this king of poisons finds its way into the organisms of mankind, where it debases, disintegrates, destroys. In one year over thirty thousand White Cross pledges were ordered from our publishing house; I wish I knew how many total abstinence pledges had been sent for in any given year,—not so many I am afraid. The circulation of the pledge is falling into disuse for which we must all be sincerely sorry, but let us console ourselves by the certainty that the temperance tide is rising; the progress of inventions which require clear brains for their handling; the competition among manufacturers which makes it essential that steady hands shall work their factories and forges; the dangers of locomotion on land and sea which require clear heads to steer the engine and the ship; the splendid development of athletic sports and the constantly increasing practice of physical culture, the reducing of hygiene to a science, and sanitation to a public governmental department, the experiments of chemists, the verdicts of physicians; all these are mightier levers for lifting people out of the sodden quagmire of strong drink than all the pledge-signing that has ever been sought or secured. It is this view of mighty forces arrayed to push the mightiest of reforms which must give us perpetual courage; we are the forty experts against ten thousand of our fellow beings, who, though all of them expert in other things, have not studied and practiced total abstinence. We are the torch-bearers moving ahead of the column, but we must remember that the mass presses on us, by the slow but steady lift of the experiences and interest to which I have referred.

HOME FOR INEBRIATES.

With a reiteration that may have seemed wearisome I have insisted for many years that our state unions ought to petition their legislatures to build homes for men who are under the drink hallucination and to pass laws compelling the detention of drunkards within these friendly walls where work should be provided for them, and every effort made to give them back the self-control which they have as thoroughly lost as any wild, bewildered steed that runs amuck along the streets with the bit in his teeth and his driver overthrown. Nothing less than this will help us over the emergency of drunkenness in which we find ourselves, so that the homes of the English-speaking world may not be transformed by the presence of a drunkard into what I have heard them called namely, "small compacts of perdition." There is no outrage greater than the continued presence of a drunkard in the midst of a home. Not only on account of the incalculable misery that such a presence continually creates, but for the sake of future generations deteriorated by the awful inheritance of drunken parentage. If it were any other disease, the person manifesting the disgusting and terrifying symptoms of drunkenness would be speedily removed by the order of the state to a place prepared for him, and nothing but the heart-breaking familiarity that the centuries have wrought with this form of human misery, and its diabolical effects, holds the civilized world from rising en masse and placing the drunkard beyond the reach of the man who makes him drunk and beyond the power of cursing every home of which he is a part.

Just before I left England a report was published in the London papers of a meeting held by experts in the study of inebriates, presided over by Norman Kerr whose name has long been familiar to us. The Daily Telegraph has been publishing for some weeks a series of articles entitled "A National Shame" in which in trenchant terms it deals with the terrible increase of intemperance among women, of which it is believed that the causes are the grocers' license, under which they can send written orders for liquor describing it as "goods," or even designating it under the ghastly head of "ditto."

It was the opinion of the meeting to which I have referred that English legislators should be up and doing not something only but a great deal toward removing the foul blot of the drunkard in the home. One of the physicians said:

I have no hesitation in declaring that the habitual drunkard is a lunatic to all intents and purposes, and as a lunatic should be dealt with; on the mere ground of the preservation of health the inebriate should be given some chance of reforming.

We have no business to go on enduring the presence of a drunkard, going on day by day in his drunkenness without let or hindrance and making of himself a focus for everything in the world that is bad.

All this we steadfastly believe, and I wish we might act accordingly by seeking the establishment of these industrial refuges for drunkards by which the homes of the nation should be relieved of their incumbency. But our great work is not only to remove the man from the liquor but most of all to remove the liquor from the man, and while we strive in varied ways for that great consummation, let us not commit the irretrievable mistake of forsaking the trail of the wolf for the trail of the rabbit; it is the liquor wolf we have gone forth to hunt and no power on earth can beguile us from the track of home's most deadly foe.

WOMEN AND DRINK IN ENGLAND.

It is an astounding fact that 8,373 women have been arrested in the streets of London within the last year for being what the police call "drunk and disorderly." The worst of it is that this number does not at all reveal the actual enormity of the situation, for it is almost wholly the lower classes that these figures represent. There are regular sets of drinking women who club together and treat each other and do not allow themselves to fall into the hands of the police, while the secret drinking of the most aristocratic classes swells still further the pitiable army, wholly from the mother sex, who are giving themselves to the devil through the voluntary insanity of alcohol.

The precautions with which our country has this year guarded the people from the ravages of Asiatic cholera have been peremptory in the extreme, and although we must ever deeply regret that a panic-stricken population behaved with inhumanity to helpless and unprotected travelers, we applaud the foresight that has thus guarded our shores. Is it unreasonable therefore, to hope that the same protecting care may some day be extended to a disease more devastating than the dreaded contagion—transmitted as it is by the laws of heredity and the miasmatic conditions of impure homes?

Last year a saloon-keeper made the attempt to import barmaids from London. Twenty four hours after this announcement was made, telegrams and letters had gone to the white-ribboners urging them to concentrate against this new outrage upon woman. Their petitions were immediately drawn up and issued by Mrs. Mary T. Burt and her sturdy clan—22,000 women of the Empire State concentrated their efforts upon Albany and a law was passed prohibiting the hire of women in the dram-shops of the commonwealth.

SCIENTIFIC CURES FOR DRUNKENNESS.

Again I reiterate that the white ribboners are among the most earnest helpers of such scientific cures as commend themselves by their results. We are held from the specific indorsement of any, because there are several so similar and among them there is such vigorous rivalry that we do not deem it wise to take sides. But we are continually helping men who are willing to try what these cures can effect in their individual cases.

It seems to me that it would be well to establish an institution of our own entirely superior in its motive to any of those just referred to, because its income over and above expenses would be used in the prosecution of our temperance work, and the entire management would be in the hands of competent women physicians who were philanthropists as well as specialists.

During the last year we have had recommended to us on excellent authority Dr. Susan Nivison, of New York, whose plans will be brought before the Executive Committee.

REST ISLAND.

Our brother, John G. Woolley, is having marked success with his Gospel enterprise for reformed men. (The postoffice address is Rest Island, Minnesota.) The W. C. T. U. has from the first been his helper and friend, because we know him to be true and tried. Lady Henry Somerset did no greater service for us than when she helped to bring this mission magnificently before the public.

I feel free and glad to urge white-ribboners everywhere to do the utmost for this restful home, in which the powers of God working in the human soul and body are the only remedy proposed. Not that we object to scientific remedies; we think all should be tried, but we well know that this is as much the best of all as God in a man is better than man's medicine.

PROHIBITION.

There is no object that we white-ribboners so much desire to photograph upon the brain of every voter as the American saloon. It is a larger picture in this country than it can be in any other, because we are the largest of republics. The most portentous factor in American politics is the saloon. It has been recently stated that there are nine thousand saloons in New York City, and that on these saloons there are four thousand chattel mortgages, held almost wholly by twenty wholesale dealers, brewers and distillers. These saloons control the votes of forty thousand men and these forty thousand constitute the balance of power, so that we have twenty men who can swing the vote of New York City; but as the city goes so goes the state; and as the state, so goes the nation. We want the saloon photographed with this shadow in the picture. Whoever speaks of it as an isolated institution, speaks ignorantly. It is an institution, the character of which becomes each year more clearly defined, and one that, because of our form of government, exposes us more than any other people to political corruption. Because these things are true the temperance women of America have gone into politics, and have taken sides with the men who first, last, and all the time cast their ballots against candidates for office who are pledged to the saloon. We could not do less; if we could we would do more.

We found our faith in prohibition upon no surface reasons, but upon principles that are settled as gravitation. Every rational mind knows that in all controversies by which mankind has been advanced along the path of progress there are three mile-stones. The first is set up in the camp of the savage when the theory of personal rights is propounded, the right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Some more progressive mind has a dim vision that these things ought to be and states it to his kinsmen, but his principle is laughed at and his practice trodden under foot. The second mile-stone is set in the midst of what we call society, as contra-distinguished from a tribe; men have now become developed sufficiently to recognize the law of meum et tuum and to say, "Thou shalt and thou shalt not." But the only way in which they can establish this principle is by formulating it in law and punishing those by whom the law is disregarded. The third mile stone is set up in the midst of a Christian state wherein development has reached such a point that in a fashion, rough, but recognizable, the Golden Rule prevails. Here government by law is exchanged for that mightiest of all governments—public sentiment. The moral tone of society declares by resistless common consent what the law demanded by fines and penalties. In this third stage the law has become written on the hearts of the people.

The path along which woman is daily moving to her destined goal is marked by these three mile-stones. The first ought to be shrouded in mourning, the second crowned with flowers, the third illumined by torches of victory. At first she furnished the spoils and booty of the tribe; in the second the law established her as a human being, with certain inalienable rights, and is rapidly declaring that her rights shall be limited only by her powers; but the third mile-stone is even now outlined before us in its gleaming beauty, for the time is not far distant when it shall be as a tale that is told that artificial inequalities were ever permitted as between men and women. Dwelling in her heritage of rights, limited only by powers, the moral consensus of opinion among the people will be a law stronger than Bessemer steel, more impregnable than adamant.

Precisely through these stages we are passing in the evolution of the prohibition movement; it is the changeless law for the education of the race—first barbarism in the use of drink, everybody making it and using it according to their stolid notions; next the liquor traffic segregated from all other forms of trade because its miasma harms all others and its necessary state is isolation, for the reason that mankind, through the consequences they have reaped from its use, have in the best survivals of the race become the foes of alcohol. Now the law deals with it and says that it is not a commodity, it is not a producer of wealth, it is simply a form of investment, and a false form at that, for it gives no equivalent for value received, and that, judged by its results, it must be classed with other poisons, and its sale hedged round by the legal safeguards through which we are protected from the indiscriminate use of poisons as articles of commerce. But all the while the modern temperance movement is spending itself to so implant in every brain the arrest of thought that some day there shall be a consensus of opinion so resistless that no law shall be needed as a dyke to protect humanity against the inroads of intoxicating drink.

It is idle to say that the prohibition movement is not one of continual progress. We admit that we have passed the stage of enthusiasm and are now advancing with the sturdy steps of veterans. The province of Manitoba by a plebiscite has recently declared by a large majority in favor of prohibition, and its next legislature is practically certain to pass a law to that effect. South Carolina has shown its colors in similar fashion, though by a different method, and is likely to be the next state falling into line for freedom from the sway of the saloon.

The presidential campaign will soon be over, and from the legislators of 1893 we think there is much to hope. The great danger is as always when sentiment has been made and is crystallizing into conviction and ballots, that a compromise will be foisted upon the temperance people. The royal commission appointed in Canada to investigate the liquor traffic furnishes a salient illustration of such compromise. The temperance people by immense exertions had gathered up one of the largest petitions known in the Dominion asking for prohibition, that was the bread for which they were hungering, but Parliament gave them the stone of a so called royal commission to investigate the liquor traffic, but which was really what it has often been called—"A committee for the prevention of cruelty to saloon-keepers." In like manner the temperance people of the United States will be urged to accept the nationalizing of the traffic as a compromise, because prohibition is the direst nightmare and the waking dread of the brewer and distiller.

So far as ascertained no white ribboner has been deflected in her onward march by the cry of nationalism. We have studied the outcome in Sweden and Norway; we do not deny that some good results have been realized since those terrible days when if a man were seen rolling in the streets of Gothenburg the only question concerning him was whether he was rolling from too much drink or too little food! But the conditions in the Scandinavian peninsula and in the Great Republic are altogether different. We have already tested prohibition for well-nigh half a century and we do not propose such a right about-face as shall make the government itself a monopolist in alcoholic drinks. We are experts and not A B C D arians; we know that prohibition does more to arrest drunkenness, wife-beating and murder than any other one law on our statute books. We know that pro hibition cities have more empty jails and fewer locked up criminals in proportion to their population than any other cities. We know that when women have the ballot they help to choose such officers in a state and municipality as will enforce the law.

Concerning prohibition by woman's ballot a noted British writer who has widely observed the conditions of our American life, gives the following clear cut statement of opinion as he studied it in Kansas:

The Kansas people argue that if you were told that there existed in some ideal country two great sections of a race, the members of the one often gross, often vicious, often given to loud talking, to swearing, to drinking, spitting, chewing, not infrequently corrupt; those of the other branch, mild, kind, quiet, pure, devout, with none of the habitual vices of the first named state, and if you were also told that one of these branches was alone to elect rulers and to govern, you would at once say: "Tell us where this happy country is that basks in the rule of such a God-like people." "Stop a minute," says your informant, "it is the creatures that I described first, it is the men who rule, the others are only women, poor, silly fools, imperfect men, I assure you, nothing more."

Kansas Republicans have come out nobly for a constitutional amendment that shall give women the full ballot. That means prohibition universally enforced. May the movement become general. If so it will be warmly supported by the W. C. T. U.

WYOMING.

The question is often asked, Why has not Wyoming, the only free state in the world, where women have every legal privilege enjoyed by men—why has not Wyoming a prohibitory law? The answer is not far to seek. Wyoming is a mountainous state, most of whose towns are isolated from railroads, and whose population is tran sient, as must be the case when mining and grazing are the two chief employments. No two classes of the population are so little likely to hear a voice behind them saying, "move on" in reform work, as are these two (the isolated and the transient), hence Wyoming's population lacks cohesion and esprit de corps, and has not yet asserted itself along religious or philanthropic lines, these naturally coming later than the lines of power indicated by political parties and financial trusts. A roving and well-nigh inaccessible population furnishes the most discouraging field to the reformer. Then we must remember that in the population of Wyoming, women form but one-fifth; the temperance movement has had no such leadership and attention as it has received in older states, nor, I am frank to say, as it should have received from us. Wyoming has been urged as a strategic position on the National W. C. T. U., year after year and it is my earnest hope that on this western soil and in this inspiring atmosphere we may gain a truer rapport with our sisters in the gigantic young commonwealths that have sprung up amid the clear air of the mountains, and that we may solemnly declare that "the strength of the hills is His also," who sent forth our Crusade mothers to the peaceful war.

It is also true that the Republican party gave women the ballot in Wyoming; all honor to them for this action. And President Harrison signed the bill establishing statehood; all honor to him, a conservative Presbyterian elder, for taking this position. Women are above all things grateful, and in Wyoming they naturally stand by the great political organization to which they owe their freedom. But unhappily that organization is committed to high license, as its favorite method of handling the liquor traffic, hence high license prevails and curses the beautiful, free state. But it will not always be, nor need it be so, long. A thorough organization of the women involves the coöperation of the best men; the women of Wyoming have become a proverb by reason of their opposition to candidates of known impurity of life, so that their moral efficiency in that state stands far higher than that of women in any other of equally heterogeneous and transitory population. With this as a solid basis on which to build, be it ours to help the women of Wyoming to realize and act so that the protection of their homes shall be "the first concern of their good government."

POLITICS.

The rationale of the recruiting process that adds each year to the political contingent of the prohibition movement (but, alas, adds not largely) is illustrated by an incident that recently occurred in a Massachusetts high school, where a vote was taken as to the candidates for governor. In the room where the oldest boys were gathered many stood up for Republican and a goodly number for the Democratic candidate, but one arose to declare himself a Prohibitionist. When I thanked this boy, who is a young friend of mine, for acting as he did, he said—"And there was another boy who would have stood up if he had not thought he would be all alone." The Prohibition army is made up of men who have stood up for their principles without turning their heads on a pivot to look round and see whether anybody else stood up or not; they are the band of forty opposed to the ten thousand, even as are we their friends and allies. The question is only a question of time; the battering ram is getting in its work on the mossy ramparts of the old political fortress, its steady thump, thump, thump will never cease until a breach is made in those frowning walls, and a temperance Joshua heads the imperial guard as it leaps over the ramparts and takes possession of the guns of power.

"After all, character is the jewel that God and the angels are seeking on this planet."

It is glorious to be in the minority when it is right, and infamous to be in the majority when it is wrong.

One of our most brilliant leaders, who as much as any other traverses the country, said to me in a private letter recently:

"I think in steady purpose and method that reaches out into the future, the W. C. T. U. is stronger to-day than ever. This is shown by plans, investments and organizations that mean an outlook on the work yet to be done, rather than living on the glories of the past. The state conventions which I attended this year were larger and better than those of other years. The political campaign touches our organization very lightly in 1892. Our women are interested and intelligent upon the situation, but not to the degree that they were in 1884 and 1888. I am at a loss to account for some things I see and others that I do not see."

Why is there so little political enthusiasm? Because a great people can be stirred only by a great cause. Tennyson said that every horse on the highway now a days pounded out by its very trot the word, "property, property, property." In our own land commercialism has held its dollars so close to the average voter's eyes that he seems absolutely hypnotized. No wonder the campaign interests chiefly those who have or who want office. Meanwhile the liquor power stands at the middle of the see saw and adds the balance of its campaign subscription wher ever in either of the two parties, that or its allies, its local interests lead it to deem investments most advantageous to its ascendency.

I do not know how it may be with you, beloved sisters, but for myself I am more than ever a Christian politician. It is a thorny path. Politics is the science of God's goodness applied to man's needs on public lines, and in the most practical manner. Every political party is as good as it dares be. No good—no positive advance has ever been rendered by abusing any party—or any political leader. The more we can keep our principles clean and free from the dross of personalities, the better we shall succeed. I firmly believe it to be our duty, not only not to speak ill, but to say all the good we can of our opponents. My own course has been severely criticised by those whom I respect and love, because at the beginning of the present presidential campaign I expressed (in my capacity of editor of THE UNION SIGNAL) my honest opinion of the good qualities of the candidates, and es pecially mentioned that I was glad Mr. Harrison had secured the nomination as against Mr. Blaine, not because I, as a politician, felt an interest in either of these men, but because I believed it was an unworthy political trick to try to side-track President Harrison and bring forward Mr. Blaine after the public assurances the latter had given that he was not a candidate. The record presented by the four men now in the presidential race has been often commented upon in our columns, and it did not seem to me to be necessary in that article to recount it. For this I suffered the criticism of my friends, but it is "a part of the price," and I am as much as ever determined never to be so much of a partisan that I cannot speak with kindness and good-will of any manly quality possessed by any candidate. While my honest fealty is given to General Bidwell and Rev. J. B. Cranfill—our own ticket—by which I mean the ticket to which the white-ribboners "lend their influence" (having neither money nor ballots to lend), I can still rejoice in the strong help given to the cause of Civil Service Reform by the Democratic candidate, while I grieve to learn, since my arrival, of his sub servience to the tigers of Tammany Hall, and I remember proudly as a patriot the clean, personal record of the present President, while I bemoan his use of wine, and the fact that he can by no means return to power without the liquor vote. None of us at this time, when the shadow of a great bereavement hangs over the head of our chief magistrate, should fail to tender him our sympathy and prayers. Let us do our best to brighten the turbid stream of politics—to plant along its bank sweet flowers and trees whose leaves shall be for the healing of the nations. Women are slowly and surely coming to their own. Their own is to work side by side with men everywhere, for the place in which a pure woman may not work, no man should ever enter. In the illimitable future, I see a long avenue, stately and fair in which through every line of life the two shall go together, blessing and blessed.

But no greater calamity can befall any party than in recognizing the leadership of any man whose name is erased from the records of the pure and good. There is probably not a statesman in England of more brilliant powers than Sir Charles, Dilke, nor one whose views on all public questions, save the mighty question of purity, are more consonant with those of Lady Henry Somerset, but because of his defection and gross disloyalty to woman, she stood up against him on their behalf in the presence of a howling mob of coal miners, ready to utter her protest had they been civilized enough to listen. God grant that should a like calamity fall upon any political party in America, its leader shall not escape a like denunciation from lips as pure as hers.

THE WOMAN QUESTION.

Statisticians report that during the year 1890 there were well nigh 4,000 fewer marriages in France than in 1889. Another companion statement is that in the same year there were over 5,000 divorces in the same country. But be it remembered there is no woman question in France. This is a coincidence that should attract the careful study of certain among our leading men who oppose the advancement of women to the status of individuality as if this most natural and reasonable degree of progress must involve the extinguishment of every fireside hearth.

THE RECENT NATIONAL CENSUS

has facts enough to furnish forth the Temperance, Labor and Suffrage Reforms for the next decade. I wrote recently to the Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, asking him to give me the number of women of foreign and of native birth in the United States. From A. F. Childs, Acting Superintendent of the Census, came the following reply:

DEAR MADAM—In response to your request of the 16th instant to Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, which has been referred to this office for reply, I beg leave to state that the number of females of foreign birth in the United States is four million, one hundred eighty-two thousand, four hundred seventeen (4,182,417), and the number of females of native birth, twenty-six million, three hundred seventy-one thousand, nine hundred fifty-three, (26,371,953), as determined by the first detailed count of the returns made under the Eleventh Census.

Very respectfully,

A. F. CHILDS,
Acting Superintendent of Census.

To my mind these figures are the ultimatum of statistics in our favor because they show that in the Republic, let it be repeated a thousand and a thousand times, the proportion of native to foreign born women is as six to one. We talk about the decadence of the national spirit, the outcrop in our legislation of foreign principles and purposes, the practical sway exerted by nations thousands of miles away upon the politics of city, state and nation—we lament this, and cry out despairingly, "Who shall show us any good?" but all the while we have in America a reserve force of native brain, opinion, education, patriotism, and we have neither the wisdom nor the statesmanship to utilize this mighty mass of power.

To day in the homes of America, among its teachers and its working women are the ballots for which our purblind statesmen imagine themselves to be looking; to-day the captains on the ship of state crying out for help need but to lay to heart the poet's words, "Just drop your bucket where you are."

The W. C. T. U. was originally founded by the inspiration given to some few brave women to take up arms against the drink. That is a splendid genesis, to be sure, but it is only a genesis. If you want to go on to the full revelation you must not stop with genesis. You must go on till you have the whole message, the complete revelation, the gospel itself. Now in our cause the movement against the saloon was the Genesis, and the first formation of that W. C. T. U. was the Exodus. But we did not cross Jordan until we proclaimed the right of women to vote, and we shall not enter into the promised land to possess it until the full right of women to full citizenship is fully recognized in every state in our land and in the Federal government. The more I reflect upon the world, and the way in which its affairs are managed, the more I see that the right to vote in a democratic age is an acknowledgment by the states of the value of the individual, a recognition by the states of the right of the citizen to have an opinion and a right to tender it for the guidance of her fellow citizens whenever the occasion arises. The voteless adult is no where, whose rights, whose individuality, whose common nature even, are all held by sufferance, permitted rather than recognized, and as a consequence, minimized beyond endurance. But we all know that anything that minimizes the self-respect of any class is an offense and injury to that class. We do not propose for the elevation and protection of women, any mere spic and span scheme of our own invention. We have no such presumption. We have a much more simple and direct clue to the mystery of progress. We watch you to see what you consider indispensable for your own defense, for your own amelioration, and as we know that we are weaker and in many respects more backward than men, so much the more do we feel the necessity of demanding for the protection and development of woman the weak, at least all the political privileges which are regarded as indispensable for the protection and development of man the strong. For our own sake we claim the suffrage as an indefeasible human right. The heir to the ages should not be defrauded of her birthright by any new Salic laws of the male monopolist and usurper. We do not ask this with bated breath and whispering sycophancy—we claim it as our natural right. We are human, and we ought to be treated as such. And whenever human society finds out that all of its affairs are really affairs of the family, it will learn that they should be managed not by one sex, but by two. The segregation of the sexes is an offense against nature's first law.

Who shall roll away the stone from the tomb of prejudice and let out the Redeemer of Progress? Women cannot do this alone; they cannot ignore men any more than men can ignore women. So far as the stone has been rolled away, men have had a great deal to do with the rolling.

The sturdy shoulders of the best men are to day set against every stone that shuts in the true and gentle comrades whom God gave to be helpmates unto them, and to morrow men shall come with shouts of rejoicing, bearing from the last sepulchre the latest liberated, entombed by them and by them set free.

I object to the fatuity that sets the woman who would "mother" a state, a nation or a race, over against the one who mothers her own offspring, as if the former lacked the motherly nature and character. Any one broad-minded enough to inquire into the experience of history, and cosmopolitan enough to generalize therefrom, knows that there is no real antagonism between women nobly famous and women heroically obscure.

Men give the ballot to unmarried women and to widows; at most they give it to women who are rate-payers. But when they do so, they strike a direct blow against their own theories, and begin to hew down the very altar of marriage. I hold that the woman who has given sons and daughters to the state should be the first, as she is the trustiest, to have the ballot.

WOMAN'S ECCLESIASTICAL PROGRESS.

No year has witnessed more rapid progress towards the emancipation of women in pulpit and pew. The General Conference of the M. E. Church took such action as will certainly result within a few years in the admission of women to the highest councils. The Methodist Protestant Church admitted four women delegates and agreed that women should, hereafter, be eligible to its chief court. The Cumberland Presbyterian Church voted to admit women as ruling elders, although there was a very lively discussion, in the course of which a good deacon declared that it was a bitter pill, but that he "had no recourse but to swallow it." The United Presbyterian Church admitted a woman to speak before its highest Sanhedrim, and the conservative Presbyterian Church took the preliminary step toward providing for women deaconesses.

Seventeen churches are now built in the United States each day, two-thirds of their members are women and they will come into their kingdom by that steady evolution whose text book is the Bible and whose culmination the Kingdom of Heaven.

LABOR.

Cowper said describing a humble cottage in the England of his day, "Content, though mean." The true poet of this age would rather say: "Not mean, and of a noble discontent."

The two hands are a picture of the contending forces of capital and labor. The left, less skilled, more choice, served often by its fellows, and decked with rings; the right, forceful, ingenious, busy, unadorned. Only by bringing them together can harmony be had and a full day's toil accomplished. If they contend, they work each other's ruin; if they combine, they reach each one its utmost. Met for work and clasped in prayer, these hands of capital and labor shall bring that social compact, which it is their office to develop and defend, up to its best estate. Fighting each other, they will but mar and finally destroy the social fabric—and the left hand of capital will first give away under the pitiless blows of labor's strong right hand.

Carlyle said long ago that "the idle man is a monster"; Rousseau declared that "rich or poor, strong or weak, every idle citizen is a knave." It will hardly be another generation until all education will be based upon the training of the hand, and not to know some useful trade or art will be to confess one's self below the pauper-line in intellect. He who is anointed with God's oil "to wrestle not to reign," has gained "the better part."

Some regard it as a misfortune that this has been a year unparalleled in our country in respect to strikes, lockouts, riots, indeed of every symptom that can confirm the truth of a mighty and growing unrest in the will and purpose of the masses. To me these symptoms are most hopeful. If disease is in the body politic by all means let it come to the surface.

In England, they have, in one particular at least, gone further than we toward a solution of the problem; their boards of conciliation, made up of employés chosen by their fellows and employers in equal numbers, have been able to settle countless disputes without their ever getting to the public at all, and when conciliation fails there stands the board of arbitration, made up of three, one chosen by the employer, one by the employés, and these choosing a third the decision of these three to be final. If this simple method could but be enacted as the required legal method of settling disputes we should have gone a long way toward the adjustment of the mightiest difficulty in the material forces of civilization. It is a most hopeful fact that the president of one of our largest consolidated railway combinations declares that only by profit sharing can strikes be prevented; the employé must feel that he owns part of the road, that he may own all that he will by steadfast industry. Women are peaceable by nature and practice. I sometimes wonder if our department of peace and arbitration might not be more of a felt factor in these great emergencies. We sent our gently expressed protest to the leaders of capital and labor in the great Homestead war, but the pope's bull fired off at a comet had not less efficiency. If this department would put in circulation a petition to Congress and the State legislatures urging that laws be so framed as to require these boards of reconciliation and arbitration, the white ribboners might bring their flag of truce on many a field where wrathful men contend in strife that promises to reach ere long the full dimensions of civil war.

In England the labor question is more simple than with us, because the sturdy working class is made up of native-born men and women who devotedly love the land of their birth, and only wish to see it become more equal in its justice toward all its sons and daughters.

One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the interest taken by men and women of the highest opportunity in England in the progressive movements of the working classes. Lord Rosebery spoke recently at the opening of a new polytechnic institute in London on the dignity of manual labor, and expressed his rejoicing at the decline of prejudice against hand-work. He ranked the artisan above the clerk, saying that he earned more, had a better future before him, and that it was a proud thing for England that she was able to say that to-day beside the first peer of the realm there sits in the London County Council a working man; that the same is true in the government offices; that a working man is a minister in Gladstone's cabinet, and that in the House of Commons there are half a dozen already members. No career is now closed to the artisan. The keynote of the future will be the yoking of head and hand work.

The outcome of all this education is sure to be the rehabilitation of labor, and I fully believe those are now living who will feel disgraced if they have not the power ingeniously to set themselves to some handicraft and prove by their results the skill they have attained. In a socialistic condition, union between head and hand-work will be the chief corner stone.

In Glasgow, Scotland, municipal socialism is a success so far as tried. No city has a better supply of water, and the works are controlled and owned by the citizens. The manufacture and supply of gas, the power of generating and supplying electricity, public markets, and, ere long, street railways, which are already the property of the municipality, will be controlled and worked for the benefit of the citizens.

But while I am heart and soul in sympathy with every movement for the uplifting of labor, even when that movement may not be so "wise and well considered" as our Republican friends desire their temperance movements to be (?), and while I see far more in the question than temperance itself involves, which once I did not see, it remains true that three fourths of the whole labor question is summed up in the following:

"Where are our carriages?" said an anarchist, as some capitalists drove by.

"Why," replied a red-nosed follower, "to tell you the truth, a saloon-keeper is yonder riding in mine."

Upon the earliest flags of the Revolutionary war we find the words, "Unite or die." Well might they be inscribed on the flags of the three great armies now moving with more certain tread than ever hitherto toward a common point of attack upon the plain of that great battle which shall close and consecrate and crown the twentieth century. The Temperance Army, the Labor Army, the Women's Suffrage Army must "unite or die."

The difficult point in the whole controversy is this: capitalists can combine to say that they will not give work to anybody who belongs to a labor association. But this is precisely equivalent to saying that capital declines to give employment to any laborers who are able to utilize the power of association in defense of wages; but this power of association is the only power that labor has; when you take it away you have reduced labor to the grade of serfs, and in every country except a republic, you can hold it in that condition perpetually.

Yet every one of these laborers has a vote, and their highest wisdom will be to combine their ballots: nobody can hinder them from doing that, against capitalism as represented by political parties. For capitalists would like to have a monopoly of combination as well as of everything else. This monopoly, however, they must not be allowed to attain. The employment of mercenary troops to paralyze the laborer's power of combination by putting a Pinkerton rifle in his face, is something that Americans will not permit; this at least has been proved by the outcome of the great strikes of '92. But the surest way out of all these difficulties is, to our vision, the combinations of ballots by temperance men, working men, and woman suffragists, the very first use to be made of such combination being to unclasp the fetters that hold the hands of women from the ballot-box. The time is not yet, but it will come, for the subtle affinities of great reforms, and the dire necessities of reformers will draw their representatives together, whether they will or not.

Alfred Krupp is known as the founder of the greatest steel works in the world at Essen, Germany. He died in 1888, and although the authorities of his own town erected a statue in his memory, the workmen who had been in his employ resolved that this was not sufficient to mark their love and devotion to the man who had ever by his counsel and acts of benevolence been their father and friend. These workmen therefore started a subscription resulting in a noble statue of their beloved employer. On the occasion of the unveiling of this statue, the son of the great steel manufacturer announced with deep feeling that in recognition of the generous appreciation of his father thus manifested by the employés, $100,000 had been set apart by the steel works company for the purpose of erecting on a healthful and convenient spot a sufficient number of cottages with gardens, for the infirm and invalid among his men, and for the widows of all men who had died in his employ. Seventeen thousand working men listened to this announcement with quickly beating hearts. It is no little thing for those who are unable to lay up property if they can feel that in their old age or in invalid estate, or if they pass away in the midst of their years, there is positive security of shelter, food and clothing for their loved ones. Such a scene as that was worthy of a painter, the men generously giving of their earnings, to build a statue of the great capitalist whose brotherly conduct had endeared him to them, and his son signalizing his entrance upon business life by the announcement of such provision as should remove from their minds forever the greatest anxiety that they had ever known relating to matters of this world. It was a fore gleam of the good time coming, toward which the W. C. T. U. so far as it is able, is working, "without haste and without rest."

PURITY WORK.

Mrs. Dr. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Michigan, has been my most helpful associate in the introduction of literature and mothers' meetings. Several lecturers have been developed who are not excelled by any in the world in this difficult department of speech. It seems to me the department should now go into other hands, and I suggest that we place at its head, Dr. Mary Wood Allen, of Toledo, Ohio, who has been with us as a lecturer for many years, and whose work has been highly appreciated and praised by our most thoughtful women. I will do all I can in speaking and writing on this subject, but to organize the National Union thoroughly for this mighty endeavor is an undertaking that should command the entire time and attention of a woman who has been for years a successful specialist.

Charles Crittenton, of New York City, founder of the Florence Midnight Mission, has offered the W. C. T. U. $5,000 to help found five homes for wayward girls, in five cities that we may select. This offer has been considered by the department, and as a result we expect to carry out the purpose of this great-hearted "brother of girls."

The mere concession of justice will do much to remove a great deal of the misery which the habit of degradation inflicts upon women. But if it were possible to have a society of men and women all economically independent and all equal before the law and the ballot box it would still be possible to have a corrupt and immoral society. I do not say that you would have such a society. I hope, pray and believe that you would not. But what is quite obvious to any who reflect is that if you had such a society there would no longer be two standards of morality. There would only be one standard, and the question which we have to help to decide is which standard it must be. Are our girls to be as free to please themselves by indulging in the lawless gratification of every instinct of curiosity and passion as our boys? That is the question which will come home to us more and more with every advance in the emancipation of women from her old conditions of vassalage. We must not blind ourselves to the fact that when woman is recognized as a human being as distinct as man, with equal rights, equal privileges and an equal claim to develop her own nature and to shape her own destiny, she will either accept man's standard of morality, or she will induce him to accept her own. There is much in man's standard which women will do well to accept, but in relation to the question of morality as between men and women, the acceptance of the male standard would be a degradation unspeakable. For instance, there are many men among nominally Christian nations who maintain that the house of shame is a necessary appendage of human society. At present these houses are kept for the satisfaction of the appetites of men. In the future when we have levelled up the inequality between the sexes, we do not think that this will continue to be the case. The purity of snow soon melts. It is only the purity of fire that consumes dross. The fire of woman's ballot will burn out the haunt of infamy and burn in the single standard of a white life for two.

Robert Browning has the true philosophy. Woman must be perpetually wooed;—then will the noble, spirited and spiritual race be born to replace the downward looking drudges born of slave mothers. Financial independence for women alone will solve the problem of her happy marriage and oblige him who would win her to be himself worth having.

This it is which compels us to take up the labor question; this it is which compels us to identify the cause of women with the cause of labor everywhere. Women and labor are but two different sides of the same hard diamond; they have one heritage, they are one life.

JUVENILE WORK.

The work among young people and children is our ever present problem; more has been wrought here than the flesh, the devil and the liquor traffic dream of. But in our Loyal Temperance Legions, to develop the spirit of enthusiasm, to train them from volunteers to veterans, by means of a skillful manual of arms, to keep them in line when the boy begins the folly of feeling that his mother's apron strings are fetters—this is the difficulty. We must meet people on their own plane; we must show at the very beginning our sympathy and appreciation of the different epochs in life's chronology. There is a sense, and not a bad one, in which "boys will be boys," and that girls will be girls is just as true. Let us, then, by the correlation of forces, which is the great principle of change and progress in the world about us, turn the blithesome love of motion that is predominant in our young people into the march, the marking time, the motion, the music of the temperance army.

If we cannot have a military drill, let us have a musical drill, which will do much to effect the same end, namely, the discipline of the body, the ability better to control the wild elements in our towns and cities and to give an impetus to our work among the children. I suggest that we incorporate, as a part of the plan of work, the organization of bands of music in the Loyal Temperance Legions so that the children can march for the cause as well as live for it. I am glad to know that a series of marching movements have been introduced, all of them set to music, into the Loyal Temperance Legions, as one of the features of the opening of the regular local meeting.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

The study of God's word through the Quarterly Temperance Lesson is becoming a settled feature in the churches. Our National superintendent, Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, has received from the Rev. Dr. Warren Randolph, secretary of the lesson committee, the last of the Quarterly Temperance Lessons for 1893, and pronounces them better than those for 1892. Largely has the great and beautiful Sunday school realm been conquered for the cause of a clear brain.

OUR ENTERPRISES.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.—This is the largest publishing society of women in the world. Its postage bill for the past year was over ten thousand dollars, and it pays ten thousand a year for rent. The number of letters received and recorded as containing orders foots up 61,958, which is 6,316 more than for the previous year. The number of pages printed was 135,000,000; several million beyond any previous year. The amount of insurance carried is $65,000. The permanent property of the office is valued at about $79,000. The value of publication on hand is over $21,000, about one third more than the amount sold during the year. The cash receipts for last year, $214,000 in round numbers. This year $230,000 in round numbers. The earnings of the printing department, nearly $79,000.

The National Temperance Hospital, located in Chicago, Illinois, and one of our most important departments, we are happy to report is in a very promising condition. It has outgrown its former quarters, where it was located for six years, and has been removed to 1619 Diversey avenue —only three blocks from Lincoln Park. The present building has forty three rooms, and is delightfully and healthfully situated. The building is not only attractive in appearance, but admirably adapted to the requirements of a hospital.

Non-alcoholic treatment of disease is meeting with great success—only two and a quarter per cent of the patients have died the past year. Our principles are being more generally approved and our influence extended by means of this noble institution.

There are still several unfurnished rooms, and very few endowed beds. It costs only three hundred and fifty dollars annually to endow a bed, and if there were more such, a larger number of free patients could be accommodated and our sick white-ribboners could have the benefit of these beds. A free dispensary is much needed and one thousand dollars would provide it.

This is bed-rock testimony, and whenever we have struck down the use of alcohol as a necessary concomitant of the medical practice, we shall have won our cause before the public.

THE WHITE RIBBON TEMPLE.

Well do I remember the scene in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, Nashville, Tennessee, when in the Convention of 1887, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse stood forward and gave us an account of what she believed women could do if they would arise and build a beautiful temple, which should be a source of revenue to the society, besides furnishing it with attractive headquarters of its own, and a hall for Gospel temperance meetings. Never has a greater enthusiasm been awakened in our National Convention, and subscriptions were then and there made representing nearly every state in the union. Five years have passed, the Temple is the most beautiful office building in the world; this fact has already passed into a proverb, and is as freely conceded in London and Paris as it is freely claimed in the electric city of the West. The building does not yet belong to us in fee simple, nor did we in the least expect that it could so belong when five years ago we resolved it should be built; but everything looks hopeful, the stock is already controlled by us, and we have ten years in which to raise the money that will enable us to call this splendid edifice all our own. We have now the leverage of the rentals to help us in the great enterprise of paying for the Temple. No office building has ever been more popular among business men or rented more readily in its first year.

The mite-boxes have been in great demand this year, and if we could but unify our work a little more, through them would come in the entire sum necessary to be raised. The mite-box system is still the one way out for our Temple enterprise. This comes heavily on none but equally represents all. It is idle to say that this building fund has oppressed the local unions.

When we own the balance of stock I hope we shall call our beautiful mountain of marble and stone the Woman's Temple, or the White Ribbon Temple. It has now, as everybody knows who has seen it, cut in deep letters on the corner-stone and at the entrance, the name of our society; it stands out uncompromisingly before the world as the home of the W. C. T. U., not only of America but of all nations. Having now a local habitation and a name, it remains only to put the two together. I wish the Temple had a beautiful white flag of its own, large enough to be seen from all about where the words "W. C. T. U. Temple" might wave in the eyes of assembled nations throughout the duration of the World's Columbian Exposition.

Nearly thirty years ago when I first entered St. Paul's Cathedral in London, I saw in great letters encircling its dome, this matchless tribute to its architect, Sir Christopher Wren: "Would you behold his monument? Look around you."

Just as fittingly may we place the same declaration after the name of Matilda B. Carse, which shall one day adorn the Temple we have helped her to rear toward heaven under the bright skies of the New World's metropolis.

COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

The World's Fair is bound to be the world's wonder. Women have a hand in it this time and will add the touch of homelikeness that has never been present in any other exhibition of the kind in like degree. The Woman's Building, the Woman's Dormitory, the Children's Pavilion, these are new names, full of suggestions, dear to the heart as well as to the head. It was left for Chicago (a city so young that it is but a few weeks since that a lady died who was the first white girl born within its limits, but which has now nearly a million and a half of people, all of whom have congregated at the head of Lake Michigan within the lifetime of one fragile woman), to present to the world the many-sided possibilities of this mightiest object-lesson. White-ribboners will be out in force at that great gathering of the nations, and the World's W. C. T. U., backed up by the National society can make itself one of the most palpable and ameliorating forces of those gala days.

SUNDAY CLOSING.

This question is between the native and foreign-born people. Americans must be on their guard. State legislatures, so far as they have acted at all, have ordered their state exhibits closed. Petitions to Congress against Sunday opening represent forty millions of our population. The act of Congress authorizing the Exposition requires that the laws of the state in which it is held shall be obeyed: the laws of Illinois forbid Sunday work. No International Fair conducted by English-speaking people has ever opened its doors on Sunday. Out of forty-four states and five territories, all but two have laws against Sunday toil, traffic and turmoil. At least fifty thousand employés would be necessary if the Fair were kept open.

Twenty-five thousand locomotive engineers have petitioned against Sunday opening, and numerous associations of laboring men have done the same. It is unfair to the better element of Chicago to pour in upon them hundreds of thousands of Sunday excursionists during the Exposition. The best exhibition we could make during the Exposition is the American Sabbath. It has universally been considered by our greatest statesmen from the beginning as one of the chief causes of the stability of the Republic. We must make a general attack on state legislatures to cover their state exhibits in case Congress does not continue (after election!) to stand by Sunday closing.

Chicago, Illinois, will be the national battleground for the next year. Every possible attempt will be made to secure from our legislature the repeal of such laws as give us a measure of protection at the World's Fair from the uprising tide of strong drink that is determined to break down every barrier and flow in to take possession of the great Exposition. The same effort will be made in the municipality if dram shop politicians can summon the brain or the "boodle" to bring this about. The utmost power of the W. C. T. U. should be put forth to help the gallant division of the army in Illinois and Chicago, which have from the first "fought with the beasts at Ephesus."

WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

It seems to me, beloved comrades, that it is incumbent upon me to call your attention to the following facts: Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Boston, has invested eight of the best years of her life in the unparalleled work of introducing the W. C. T. U. and polyglot petition to all countries where they were not known; a work which has exhausted her vitality and left her incurably broken in health. In view of this I think we should create a fund, amounting to ten thousand dollars, to be called the Mary Clement Leavitt Fund, which should be invested and only the interest thereof be used, Mrs. Leavitt having at her entire disposal said interest during her lifetime, after which the whole or any part of said interest should be voted for any period that might be designated, to the use of white-ribboners who had distinguished themselves in the work of the World's W. C. T. U. To do less than this is most unjust, and I am confident that our women never have intended to recognize the heroic work of Mrs. Leavitt simply by resolutions and tokens of honor and esteem that had no value at the bank. The world and the devil reward their own; it will be a great day for the kingdom of our Lord when with equal care we remember those who have been faithful to Him who said, "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

SOMERSET W. C. T. U.

Not in years has any plan suggested been received with so much enthusiasm as the one fore-shadowed in the columns of our official organ some months ago, namely the organization of a "Somerset W. C. T. U." Two specimen letters are here inserted, one from Massachusetts:

> Why cannot this suggestion be speedily carried out? I have long been a pronounced total abstinence woman and should esteem it a high honor to belong to the Somerset union; though unable to work, my heart is earnestly with you and THE UNION SIGNAL is valued by me above all price.

Another is from Baltimore:

> I wonder if there are not many in cities who are shut in their homes with care of little ones and the thousand and one duties of the housewife, so that we are practically just as isolated as the farmers' wives? I should like to belong to the Somerset union that I might feel free to wear the white ribbon, and thus show my colors if nothing more. THE UNION SIGNAL is my inspiration; I cannot tell you how welcome it is, nor how eagerly or earnestly read.

Similar letters have come to us from every quarter of the globe, saying, "that is exactly what we want; tell us what are the conditions of membership and they shall be at once complied with."

The plan is very simple. We propose to name in honor of Lady Henry Somerset a union to be made up of members who are not connected with any local auxiliary, either because they live in distant and isolated places, or for some personal reason to themselves sufficient, but whose hearts are warm toward the white-ribbon work in its method, plan and spirit. All such women in joining, send their names to our corresponding secretary, with the name of the state or territory in which they live, and by this act agree to be total abstainers, to wear the white ribbon, to observe the noontide hour of prayer, to pay the sum of fifty cents a year, sending the same to the National treasurer, Miss Esther Pugh, W. C. T. U. Temple, Chicago, and also agree to take one copy of THE UNION SIGNAL, or to secure one new subscriber. Men may join as well as women, being classified as honorary members, and their duties are the same as those of the women, except they are not required, although advised, to wear the white ribbon. To all these the annual leaflet will be sent and our catalogue of publications, the president's annual address, the corresponding secretary's and treasurer's annual reports, that they may know what we are doing, so that there may be reciprocity, help and inspiration. The National treasurer is expected to report annually by states the number of men and women joining the Somerset W. C. T. U. I suggest that we furnish a pretty card of membership to all who join this union.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

The Polyglot Petition has been indorsed and signed this year by 1,112,735 persons. The present prospect is that with the putting down of all the names thus gained, the petition will be over twelve miles long. Names are coming in constantly from all parts of the world. Let it be said to the credit of human nature, that a large proportion have been secured by invalids and women from sixty-five years of age and upwards. The most pathetic phrase is that where women sign with these words: "Homeless from drink," and the most hopeful where a woman signs herself, "Mother of six prohibition voters." There is no "homelessness" in that! All the way through one may find signatures from the trembling hand of old age to the strong, determined stroke of the man and woman in the prime of life. Here an old grandmother signs with the phrase, "aged, 87"; "aged, 90": "aged, 95." Frequently a boy is permitted the honor of putting his name to this "state paper," with the interesting information, "twelve years of age," others follow their signatures with words like these: "Crush the demon." "By one redeemed." "For our homes and our altars." Often a mother places a short petition in connection with her name—"God grant this prayer." The indorsements like those of the Christian Endeavor Society, the Baptist Young People's Union, the Good Templars, the National Temperance Society would make up the twelve miles, were they written out in full. Men sign as indorsers and women as petitioners, this action representing the relative relation to life, alas! of these two halves of the human race.

LEADERS.

The white ribbon host has always insisted on the prime value of helpful leadership. This impetus was doubtless given when groups of Crusaders gathered round the women whom they had chosen to go before them into the place of danger—the saloon, the gambling house, the haunt of infamy; they then learned the value of having one who did not hesitate and was not afraid to take what came of it; who did not seek a position of all others most difficult, but was willing to march to the head of the line if her comrades gave the signal. From those wondrous days to these, hardly less wondrous, possibly even more so, the leader in local unions, the county, district, state and all along the line has been much talked about for good or ill, but (blessed be their generous hearts) mostly for good, not ill. Whether for weal or woe, she is in whatever group she may appear the key-stone of the arch, and they help the cause best who hinder least her utmost helpfulness. She should be providentially chosen or else not chosen at all. The advice of the Apostle Paul repeats itself in the exigencies of our intricate endeavor. "Lay hands on no (wo)man suddenly," but trust the steady, tried and true. Treat them as you would be treated if you were in their places; give them the benefit of doubt, and never give doubt the benefit of them; rally round them with a right good will, tell them wherein they fail or make mistakes. "Tell it out" in a full, kind voice, and do not whisper it behind your hand in the ear of the first comer nor of the last. If there is misunderstanding, if something has been overlooked, if a slight, real or fancied has been incurred, let it come to the surface, not in the whisper to No. 2, but in the frank avowal to No. 1. Go to your leader, tell her all about it, ask her how it came to be, and in nine hundred cases out of a thousand you will find that you two women who have thus holily and highly met in a sisterly effort to understand each other better, will part the best of friends, the warmest of allies.

Above all things, leaders prize loyalty in those who are grouped about them. Without this cohesive power we cannot hold our own, to say nothing of making any advance. In proportion to their solidarity, all movements of the people have succeeded, and if ours is not a movement of the people, for the people, by the people, there has been none in the nineteenth century.

Leaders, like everybody else, have the faults of their qualities and the criticisms that they must endure are in two categories. They are classified as ambitious or incompetent. If they sit back enjoying the distinction of office but doing very little to merit the same, then they are regarded as stupid and inadequate. On the other hand, if they are energetic, individual and progressive, they are certain to be called ambitious and the very efforts they make to serve the cause are ridiculed as having been put forth in their own personal interest. Nor will any fling at them the epithet "ambitious" with more emphasis than those whose greatest desire is to succeed them in the positions that they hold. It is the rank and file alone who make and mar the future of a leader. If they abide faithful to a faithful chief the detraction of competitors will have little effect, but beware of the leader whom the rank and file distrust.

In every progressive movement it is likely to be not so much the force of the enemy that wears upon the forces of the Lord, as the internal envy, jealousy, bickering and backbiting, and all the brood of harpies hatched in the nests of gossip and suspicion. Happily we have been almost miraculously free from this diabolical waste of power. May there come upon us such a Pentecost at this Convention as shall wash in with its mighty tidal wave and clear out every sewer, sink and cesspool of our natures, if there be such, in which the uncanny microbes brood. But besides this hindrance, which is always appreciable, often mighty, and not infrequently overmastering, there is the stone wall built and ever faithfully guarded by a tribe whom we may aptly christen "the Waybackers of Wayback." "Their name betrayeth them," their habitat holds them from taking a single step except it be to the rear.

"All that the Father hath given unto me, shall come to me." This is the great general principle of life. That which we attract to ourselves by our own inherent natures —our reason, affection and faith, is that which the Father hath given to us, and we have no right to expect to draw to ourselves that which we have not followed out in our own natures. It is a true and wise spirit that says, with sweet tranquillity in the presence of much that goes wrong, and when we find ourselves missing many things that we should like to see, "all that the Father hath given unto me, shall come to me;" for in our little plane it is as true of us as it was true of that infinite circle in the midst of which He stood who first uttered these words of incomparable solace and hope.

To every leader present at this Convention (and I am well aware that this is a Convention of leaders), as well as to every white ribbon woman within the sound of my voice, let me repeat the stirring words of a modern poet. They have touched my heart, they will touch yours, they ought to make us each and every one more earnest and determined not to disappoint those who have put us in our places of honor and of trust. The poem is by Matthew Arnold and is entitled "On to the City of God":

> "See, in the rocks of the world,
> Marches the host of mankind,
> A feeble wavering line.
> Where are they tending? A God
> Marshalled them, gave them a goal.
> Ah, but the way is so long!
> Years they have been in the wild;
> Sore thirst plagues them, the rocks,
> Rising all round, overawe;
> Factions divide them, their host
> Threatens to break, to dissolve,
> Ah, keep, keep them combined!
>
> "Then in such hour of need
> Of our fainting, dispirited race,
> Ye leaders of men, ye appear,
> Radiant with ardor divine!
> Beacons of hope, ye appear!
> Ye fill up the gaps in our files,
> Strengthen the wavering line,
> 'Stablish, continue our march
> On, on to the bounds of the waste—
> On to the City of God."

RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Since we have proved beyond a peradventure that seasickness can be greatly ameliorated, the ocean with its splendid greyhounds becomes but a harmless ferry of inconvenient width, across which our white-ribboners will henceforth pass and re-pass in numbers far greater than the past has witnessed. It is well known to you that I did not do a stroke of work to help our cause in England. I did not go for that, but to seek seclusion, recuperation, rest. Nevertheless as President of the World's W. C. T. U. now that no sacred loyalty to the one most near and dear holds me to my native land, I am planning to put in the best strokes of work I can in England for the next few months. Anna Gordon will be of as much service in enlisting the children to help us as I hope to be among their mothers. It rejoices me to know that American white-ribboners will heartily second this plan as an act of reciprocity between the two greatest sections of the white ribbon army. Lady Henry Somerset did a work for us last year that remains on our books as a debt we must try to repay, but I am confident that she will add to her first works several months in our service when she comes to us next spring, heading the British delegation of the World's Congress of Temperance women; so that in the long run we shall be once more debtors to our mother land.

ERSONAL.

> "Rest is not quitting the busy career,
> Rest is the fitting of self to its sphere."

Thirty-five years of work in the fields of education, journalism and philanthropy have brought me to the place where inactivity is irksome and inertia, weariness. And yet as time goes on, I am aware that the ceaseless round of responsibility tells on a spirit that has stood before the chilling blast of its life's greatest sorrow.

I had no wish for change so long as she, whose presence was the completeness of my life, went back and forth from her room to my own through the day's work, but when the sunset came, and the chill twilight crept over our home that told me that the sweet light loved so long had faded, I felt the weariness that bade me seek for rest. Five weeks in England have shown me how much change of scene and action, and the absence of responsibility can restore the weary nerves. During my stay there, at Lady Henry Somerset's earnest request, I consulted two eminent physicians; but while they both assured me that I had no organic disease whatever, they earnestly advocated my staying in Europe for a while to repair lost nerve power. To this I could not consent and felt that the 6,000 miles must be traversed sooner than that one white ribboner should feel I had broken faith by my absence from our annual feast and fellowship, and indeed my whole spirit gravitated towards the spot where those should assemble who are to me sisters and comrades beloved. The opinions of the physicians, however, so impressed Lady Henry Somerset with the necessity of my being spared all strain, that she determined to accompany me, knowing that by this means she could save me much mental and physical fatigue

Economy of bodily strength is a teaching as much needed as any other of the great lessons in God's laws which we of the W. C. T. U. seek to expound; and although I would not heed advice that I considered to militate against active duty, the words have given me pause, and I feel it would be wise to pay some heed to them in these coming months, more especially in view of the fact that the Exposition summer will bring with it an unusual strain.

IN CONCLUSION.

My Comrades: It is life to look into the faces of the women who dared; it is health to know you never hearken backward along the path of progress; it is heavenly inspiration to hear you sing, as did our Crusade mothers, "Give to the wind thy fears." Here beneath these flashing skies in the magic city of man's indomitable power and purpose, on the white altar of these hills of God let us vow undying fealty to the cause of a clear brain and a protected home; to woman's enfranchisement and manhood's exaltation. Wherever these sacred watchwords lead, there let us go. We are explorers sailing on seas unknown; the new world is what we seek; the kingdom of heaven among men. The white ribbon ship has all sails set; its prow points toward the untracked sea. We seek a land fit for the planting of our Saviour's cross. Columbus harassed by his men was the prototype of all adventurous souls, hindered by the scruples of the timid and prejudices of the conservative. Well has the poet of the Sierras put the contrast, and in parting let me give my final message in his words:

Behind him lay the gray Azores,
Behind the gates of Hercules;
Before him not the ghost of shores,
Before him only shoreless seas.
The good mate said. "Now must we pray,
For lo! the very stars are gone;
Brave Admiral, speak; what shall I say?"
"Why, say, 'sail on, sail on, and on.'"

My men grow mutinous day by day;
My men grow ghastly, wan and weak.
The stout mate thought of home; a spray
Of salt wave washed his swarthy cheek.
"What shall I speak, brave Admiral, say,
If we sight naught but seas at dawn?"
"Why, you shall say at break of day,
'Sail on, sail on, sail on, and on.'"

They sailed and sailed, as winds might blow,
Until at last the scared mate said:
"Why, now not even God would know
Should I and all my men fall dead:
These very winds forget their way.
For God from these dread seas is gone.
Now speak, brave Admiral, speak and say!"
He said: "Sail on, sail on, and on."

They sailed—and sailed. Then spoke the mate:
"This mad sea shows his teeth to-night
He curls his lip, he lies in wait,
With lifted teeth, as if to bite;
Brave Admiral, speak but one good word—
What shall we do when hope is gone?
The words leaped as a leaping sword:
"Sail on, sail on, sail on, and on."

Then, pale and worn, he kept his deck,
And peered through darkness. Ah, that night
Of all dark nights. And then a speck—
A light, a light, a light, a light,
It grew: a starlit flag unfurled:
It grew to be Time's burst of dawn.
He gained a world! He gave that world
Its greatest watchword, "On: and on,"

TABULATED SUGGESTIONS.

WHAT NEXT?

What Next was the subject of an excellent symposium in a recent number of THE UNION SIGNAL. Twenty-four of our state presidents answered the question that I sent out to all. Some of the most salient points in their responses were as follows:

"Secure the attention of the average woman; lay down a course of study demonstrating the points most needful for effective legislative work." "Let leaflets be compiled for use in local unions, containing the best laws relating to women and children, to temperance and education."

"Let each state union provide a leaflet embodying existing statutes of its own commonwealth."

"Tell the story of the white-ribboners—nothing rouses the people like that."

"We need some plan which shall keep unions at work after they are organized, some plan which shall be self-operative and in itself life sustaining to the union. We need a better financial scheme, for lack of funds causes lack of energy."

"Urge every son to vote at least once in his life as mother wishes."

"Start a new crusade for the Christian vote of the nation."

ORGANIZATION.

We are in special need of new recruits to go out and organize our work. We ought to have corresponding secretaries in each local union who are floated financially as a return for their work. I sincerely hope that this Convention will make such a declaration, urging our local unions to have paid secretaries; this would open to thousands of well-intentioned and well-taught young women beautiful and noble avocations. The way to find the women most fitted thus to help us would be to do as the foreign missionary women are now doing: namely, visit schools, seminaries, and colleges, speaking before girls and young women, showing them what a broad field there is in the W. C. T. U. for the noble and earnest-hearted who feel in themselves the power to organize, to speak, and to work up the separate departments of which there are now about fifty in our great society. This is done so far as practicable by our untiring general secretary of young woman's work, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, but she ought to have at least a score of helpers in this department, which is as attractive and helpful as any woman could desire.

We especially need to strengthen our work among the colored people. We need speakers and organizers, and I hope the Convention will instruct the Executive Committee to give careful consideration to this field of vital importance, not only in the South but everywhere.

We should, I think, designate a certain number of National organizers, and set aside an organizing fund, leaving presidents of states to select from the list such as they think have proved themselves most efficient in securing new unions and strengthening old ones, and who have rendered explicit account of their work according to our rules, by filling out the blanks sent them by our corresponding secretary.

This Convention might well provide for a World's committee on reforms which should have as its members the presidents of the different philanthropic and reform societies of women throughout the world, carrying on its business by correspondence, so that the different departments of the one great host might thus keep in touch and help each other on.

LECTURE BUREAU.

The Woman's Lecture Bureau should be broadened to include, not only our own country, but the world, and varied in its clientèle to the largest extent possible, consistent with our rules and purposes.

CREDENTIALS.

In view of exigencies that have arisen, it is recommended that only speakers who have received credentials from presidents of National societies at home shall be received by other nations. This is essential to a wise reciprocity of work and workers.

KINDERGARTEN.

It is a thousand pities that the W. C. T. U. does not more largely make itself a felt force in the establishment of the free kindergarten. What we hope is, that it shall become an integral part of the public school system of America as it is already in England. We should try to bring this about wherever practicable and if we fail should found white ribbon kindergartens.

JUVENILE.

The recommendation for a change in our constitution which shall declare a basis of representation for the Loyal Temperance Legion at our National Conventions, meets my warmest approval. When our senior grade L. T. L's have shown their ability to conduct state conventions of their own in Wisconsin and Pennsylvania with a grace and dignity that we, their elders, might well emulate, it is time we invited them to the annual gatherings of the great family circle to which they belong.

The journalistic missing link between children and "grown ups" seems to have been found at last through the ingenuity of our juvenile leaders. That bright little magazine, The Advance Guard, bridges the difficulty.

LITERATURE.

We have now a World's committee on white ribbon literature, Lady Henry Somerset, chairman, and Miss Guernsey, Mrs. Rastall, Miss Pugh and the President as her associates. Some admirable leaflets have been issued in England of which specimens have no doubt reached you, and vastly more will be done in the year that is before us.

SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Miss West has an admirable idea, which I will quote from a recent date:

Now for a plan I have for a session of the World's School of Methods. It is that we should hold a Methods School in Chicago and have it include the time of the World's temperance convention. It seems to me that each would be a valuable object lesson for the other. We should, I think, have half-day sessions, in which the departments should be brought out each by a leading specialist in attendance for that purpose.

Let us arrange to carry out this valuable suggestion if possible.

Let me emphasize the wish that we might establish in Chicago a school to train corresponding secretaries, or might persuade some existing institution to add such a course of study to its curriculum as would enable us to notify local unions that we had trained secretaries whose services they would be glad to secure. If we had one hundred such young women ready now, there would be places for them. May we not have a special committee appointed to bring before the Convention a definite plan on this subject?

NATIONAL EVANGELISTS.

It has long seemed to me that our National evangelists were not properly recognized in the general machinery of our work, and I hereby give notice of a suggested change in the constitution, by which National evangelists, properly accredited and admitted, shall be members of the National Convention. We need the leaven of their presence and their consecrated power. One of my earnest desires is that we might have a school for evangelists in Brooklyn, N. Y., presided over by Miss Elizabeth Greenwood.

NEW DEPARTMENT—THE LOCAL UNION.

The only New Department of which I give notice this year is for the building up of the local auxiliaries. If we could put a capable woman at the head of the department of work for the local W. C. T. U., and this could be carried out into all our borders, we should find that this Convention had not assembled in vain.

The local union is the unit of power, and by its success or failure everything in a movement which is now stretching out to every corner of the globe is determined. I am confident that one of the very best methods that could be employed would be at all our Schools of Methods, Chautauquas and county conventions, to have what we call a model meeting of the local union. We might introduce somewhat of the dramatic, letting the different officers act their parts, and going through all the details of a monthly meeting of a local society. I wish our clear-headed Mary Allen West would write a leaflet on the local union, and that our thorough-going Mrs. Rastall would work up for it a circulation of 250,000 copies; it would mean more in the aggregate to our world-redeeming endeavor than a million of dollars in hand to day. Efforts based on rendered reasons and work done according to a plan, with the spirit of God in every heart uplifted to receive it,—these make success in the truest sense certain—and certainty is what we want.

The president of a local union might do a great amount of good by taking the newspaper with her to the local meeting, marking topics for query and discussion through the question-box or otherwise. The power of the human mind to resist knowledge is well nigh immeasurable, and we as women are not at home in our newspapers as men are, by any means. We need to read with more intelligence and care, and local presidents might do very much in five or ten minutes to cultivate a knowledge of great topics aside from those that specifically employ our thoughts, for he who knows no more than his work requires is after all a fragmentary worker.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

Let us pass a resolution at this Convention explicitly declaring that the W. C. T. U. indorses no business or speculation of any sort, outside its own enterprises duly accredited by the Convention itself.

RED LETTER DAYS.

We have kept pretty well to our Red Letter days this year, better, perhaps, than ever before, though I do not think they have spread to the local unions of other countries, as was expected when the World's W. C. T. U. Convention set them apart.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK, EXTENDING FROM APRIL 17 TO 24.

I am confident that we could make of self-denial week one of the greatest institutions of the W. C. T. U. But we do not yet work it up, and it is a divine law that where we have not sowed we shall not reap. The Salvation Army issues a special number of its magazine entitled, All the World, and with the utmost ingenuity sets forth the meaning, purposes, and advantages of self-denial week. It strikes its key-note at £5, which is higher than I should feel that we could go as yet. I think one dollar is about what we ought to average. In a special issue of All the World a most interesting story is told of the work of a Salvation Army officer, then a statement is made or a question is asked, "Will you pay the expenses of an officer who will toil like the one of whom you have just read for a whole year? Will you deny yourself something to give him the opportunity of denying himself almost all things for the help of the world?" We might very appropriately paraphrase this by saying, "Will you give one dollar to put THE UNIOIN SIGNAL for a single year in a new home, or to send out so many pages of temperance literature, or to pay for so many bricks in the Woman's Temple, or the Woman's Temperance Hospital? About ten dollars will cover the cost of forming a new W. C. T. U. Will you be one of ten to form this group of loving mother hearts and hands, giving each one dollar?" It is plain to me that the self-denial fund has not yet reached its true status in the thoughts of our great host. Let me urge our treasurers from the largest nation to the smallest local auxiliary, to stir their respective constituencies as they have never yet been stirred on the subject, and see what can be done to quadruple the self-denial fund of 1893.

PUNDITA RAMABAI.

I cannot too strongly urge my sisters to help forward the philanthropic work of Pundita Ramabai to the utmost of their power. I am in frequent correspondence with those who are devoted to her school, which is constantly growing and improving, and concerning which any can learn who will write to Pundita, as we love to call her, at Poona, India. Are there not many who will form a Ramabai circle of ten or more securing from each a dollar a year to help lift the high caste Hindoo widows to the level of human kindness and opportunity? Mrs. Judith W. Andrews, of Boston, chairman of the executive committee, is a dear friend of mine, and from her I have learned the situation, which is one of constantly growing encouragement. Nearly thirty-six thousand dollars have been received from the Ramabai circles; nearly fifteen thousand dollars from individuals. A building has been bought and furnished and what is now necessary is to keep the interest up to such a point that the needs of the school will be supplied and its capacities for usefulness steadily enlarged. Remember our beloved Ramabai in your prayers. It is stated in our religious weeklies that a great reinforcement of divine power came to this noblest and greatest of Hindoo women through the preaching of Dr. George Pentecost, the well-known American evangelist, who has been working in India for a year or two past.

CRUSADE ANNIVERSARY.

We are so busy that we might easily overlook the significant fact that "1893" numbers twenty years since the Crusade. I remember esteemed ladies of our movement who early predicted that this whole work "would be completed in twelve years." We all know better now, for the argument of events, the logic of defeat, have schooled us. I wish that this Convention might plan a great camp-fire for the white-ribbon army round the world, to be held as near the Crusade date in 1893 as possible.

Again, and yet again, comes from our general officers, the advice to set apart a fund for the South, for the new Northwest, and especially for the women's free state, Wyoming. Close up the columns, concentrate the forces at these strategic points and march on as good soldiers who have endured hardships without the camp, while, heaven be thanked, there has been love within. Now, though this last can truthfully be said, we cannot shut our eyes to the spectacle of some temperance people on this planet who employ their time in hindering each other rather than in helping on the cause. To some extent, in every country, this is true and grows out of the humanity of the saints and the inhumanity of the sinners. Perhaps the less said about it the better, and more or less we have this miserable friction in the machinery of church and philanthropic guild, and we shall have it always in this world full of children on the way to being cherubs. We must meet it as best we may; emphasize it as little as we can; strengthen the "things that remain," and above all, throw out the life-line of the white ribbon into every nation, state, town and village on the globe. This we have well begun to do, and the moving stream, though somewhat muddy, shall clear itself again by its own onward force, whose impulse is in heaven.

On motion the annual address of the President was adopted.

The mid-day devotional exercises were next in order, conducted by Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, National superintendent of evangelistic work.

Hymn—"Love Divine, all Love Excelling."

On motion the chair appointed the following committee on overflow meetings: Rev. Anna Shaw, Miss Kinnear, Mrs. Bourne, and Mrs. Beck.

The Convention adjourned to meet at two o'clock p. m.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

The second session of the Convention met at two o'clock p. m., pursuant to adjournment; Miss Willard in the chair.

Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese conducted the devotional exercises, reading the third chapter of Malachi. "Nearer, my God, to Thee," was sung by the audience.

The annual report of corresponding secretary was presented by Mrs. C. B. Buell.

In years past I have tried to give you a résumé of the work done during the year, or sometimes to make a little variety I have given you a bird's-eye view of the work that has been accomplished in a certain number of years, taking sometimes the first ten years of our work as an organization, and at other times taking the first fifteen years, or perhaps taking out a decade from the very middle of our life as an organization, and placing before you at other times a comparative review of the temperance reform, giving you some little idea of how it stood years ago, and then showing the statistics of it at the present time; but some of you who are in this audience this afternoon, and perhaps most of you know that this to me, as well as very many others of our state and National officers, has been a sorrowful year, and my heart has been engrossed as well as my head and my hands in thoughts of others. This did not come all at one time. The first of the year was given to watching beside a sickbed, and so was the last of this year, and these two reasons are the ones that I give you this afternoon as an excuse, if that is the word to use, why I have not come before you as in previous years, to give you some little bird's eye view of the work which has been accomplished, and to try and give it in a form that should be pleasing to you, more pleasing than, probably, that which I shall give you this afternoon, for I am just going to give you the bare bones of the report—the statistics. These have been arranged every year in a tabulated statement, but I am afraid that some of you, feeling beforehand that the figures were rather dry reading, have, perhaps, not perused the tabulated statement with any great amount of interest, and so this afternoon I shall take a little time and give you some items by states that I have upon this tabulated sheet, and I trust that they may not be entirely uninteresting to you, because they really show some of the work that has been accomplished by us during this last year, and I am very sure that you will be glad to know in the beginning and see in the ending, that we have gone "on and on and on" this year, as we hope to do in the future, and more rapidly, perhaps, than we have been going this present year. If any of the states lack figures under the sub heads which I shall give, you may set it down to my not having received those figures upon the blank form which I sent out for a tabulated statement from each one of the states.

STATEMENT.

Number Local Unions	7,864
Membership	154,213
Honorary Members	18,860
Y Unions	759
Membership Y's	15,363
Honorary	2,878
Loyal Temperance Legions	2.887
Membership L. T. L.	159.299
Medal Contests	2,588
Coffee Houses	283
Schools of Methods	142
Money raised by Local Unions	$336,244.71
Money received by State Unions	123,879.49

The treasurer's report was printed and distributed through the audience. In introducing it, Miss Pugh said:

There is an increase almost all along the line, there is very little decrease anywhere. Twenty-nine states and territories make the increase this year of five hundred members over last year. The increase is not so large as sometimes, but it is a helpful growth. Southern California changed its treasurer, and the new treasurer did not exactly understand how the matter was, and did not tell all that it was entitled to. It would have brought California along very nicely if the report could have reached me earlier. Louisiana had the misfortune to have a treasurer who is an invalid. New Jersey shows an apparent falling off, although it is not really so. Ohio shows an apparent falling off; it is not really one. Last year's dues paid for new unions and some changes that are made there, did not come up to the whole sum. Oregon found it had paid more dues than it really should.

TABULATED REPORT.

Dues	$15,508.16
World's	65.90
Temple	23,509.52
Hospital	213.61
Other Donations	2,222.79
Total Receipts	22,243.33
Total Expenditures	20,731.20
Balance	$ 1,512.13

The organizers' reports being next in order, Mrs Buell, superintendent of organization, was called to the chair, and presided during the rest of the session, first giving her own report as follows:

At the last National Convention held in Boston, the executive committee voted to appropriate $1,500 for this department to be used as the general officers should deem wise.

At a meeting of the general officers, held immediately after the Convention, it was voted that the money appropriated should be used in the states and territories not heretofore having received help from the National union. The money was apportioned as follows: Alabama, $50; North Carolina (No. 2) $50; Utah, $100; Wyoming, $100; Nevada, $100; Indian Territory, $100; Oklahoma, $100; West Washington, $100; Colorado, $100; Texas, $100; Oregon, $50; making a total of $950, and leaving a margin of $550. This margin was to cover any applications which might be made later in the year.

NEVADA.

At the earnest request of the president of the Nevada W. C. T. U., Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens was detailed for work in that state and left San Francisco early in May, beginning in Nevada at Reno. Forty-four days were spent in the state. One thousand miles were traveled, much of it through desert and sparsely populated country. Owing to the peculiar conditions in the state, Mrs. Stevens was sometimes obliged to pay for the use of a church and where no unions existed she had hotel bills also to pay. Railroad and hotel expenses amounted to $121.15. Collections were $237.50. Forty-four addresses were given, fourteen women's and ten children's meetings were held; six old unions were visited and helped and five unions were organized. Added to this 242 members were added to the unions and 543 pledges were secured. Probably no organizer has ever had a harder field, and Mrs. Stevens put into her work all the strength and zeal she could command and returned to her home worn out and ill. The unions she organized are in Wadsworth, Lovelocks, Winnemucca, Virginia City and Gold Hill.

One difficulty in sending organizers into the field has been that most of those appointed at Boston were far from the field of work and to save, so far as possible, the expense of travel we have tried to use those who were near the points to be organized. This was the case in

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mrs. Ellen R. Denny was sent to the territory for a month of work. She began at Muldrow, May 26th, and concluded her work at Pryor Creek. Twenty addresses were delivered in the twenty days spent in the work; thirteen women's meetings held, two old unions visited and thirteen unions organized. The collections amounted to $39.80; expenses were $36.80. The following are the towns where unions were organized: Muldrow, Chelsea, Claremore, Tulsa, Red Fork, Eufaula, South Canadian, Kiowa, Lehigh, Caddo, Durant, Colbert, Pryor Creek. Twelve subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL were secured.

WEST WASHINGTON.

Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, being a resident of this state, was commissioned to work here. The work done by Mrs. Reese was not consecutive but embraced a part of the time from January to March 30th. During this time she delivered thirty addresses, held fifteen women's and five children's meetings; visited eleven old unions and organized four new ones, securing 116 new members and taking 155 pledges. Two Loyal Temperance Legions were also organized, one among the Indians, number of members not given and the other with 90 members. Expenses, $40.25; collections, $91.95. I am not able to give the names of towns where the new unions are located, as the blanks sent have not been filled and returned.

TEXAS.

Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president of Texas, was detailed to do the work in this state. Number of addresses given, 13; women's meetings held, 9; Loyal Temperance Legions meetings, 3. New members, 25; honorary, 19. Miss Mary D. Hetherington, state superintendent Loyal Temperance Legion work, has made 28 addresses to children, and secured 1,100 members; of these 800 signed the triple pledge. Four Legions have been organized. One new union at Waco is reported. I am unable to give the others as blanks have not been returned.

WYOMING.

Mrs. Dora A. Evans, of Kansas, was secured by Miss Willard to go to Wyoming. Between August 14 and September 14, Mrs. Evans organized ten unions. Her expenses were $115.43, and collections $100.62. Twenty-four lectures were given, 13 women's and 5 children's meetings were held; 9 old unions were visited and helped. Miles traveled by railroad, stage and private conveyance, 3,149. The new unions are situated in the following named places: Sardance, Sheridan, Beckton, Lusk, Douglas, Glen Rock, Rock Springs, and Unita.

ALABAMA

has sent no report.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The appropriation was sent to the president of North Carolina No. 2, but no report has been received.

UTAH.

Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese is at work in Utah. Her report will be incorporated later.

OKLAHOMA.

At the earnest request of the officers of Oklahoma, a part of the appropriation was sent to the president to be used as she deemed wise, and no report has as yet been received, but will come in later.

COLORADO AND OREGON

have neither reported.

Blanks giving space for name of union, date of organization, names and postoffice addresses of officers were sent to each organizer with instructions that two be filled for each union organized, one to be sent to the state corresponding secretary and the other to the National secretary. Also blanks to each, giving space for number of addresses made, amount of collections and expenses, children's meetings, etc., this to be returned to the National treasurer. Each organizer was instructed to draw on the National for help to organize, and to each union reported by the organizer literature has been supplied.

At the Boston Convention organizers were appointed, but as they were not as last year paid a salary, this department had no jurisdiction over them and did not feel that it could call for a report. A place has, however, been given them upon the program of this Convention, and each will doubtless report her work for the year past.

Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y., said: I have a very short report to make. Your appropriation has been made for new fields and progress has been made. At this time no work has been arranged, and so my work has been self-appointed and self-provided. A brief report is as follows:

Addresses	48
Women's meetings	12
Parlor meetings	4
Children's meetings	6
Sunday-schools	8
Conventions	5
Unions organized	4

Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, Baton Rouge, La., was next upon the program and said: I have no report at all to make as a National organizer, except for the first two months of this past year. During that time I did a good deal of organizing in my own state. In the country unions there they have a day that the y call Decoration Day, when they go to the country cemetery and decorate the graves and clean it all out once a year. I got up into that part of the country just about this time; the minister making the appointment with me said, "I don't believe you can get a crowd anywhere unless you speak in the cemeteries." I never had done anything like that, and I felt a little nervous, still when I stood up there where the graves were cleaned off and smooth, not a blade of grass, only a few flowers lay around, I got along very well; indeed I believe I converted some of the ministers in this cemetery into the W. C. T. U. work, one of them saying, "The white ribbon is the greatest preacher in the world." One said, "Put the white ribbon on me, I want to be the greatest minister in the world." I believe I did some good work in South Louisiana during those two months.

The order of exercises was interrupted just at this point by a sweet soprano solo, "Just as I am," by Miss Mattie Miner, following which Mrs. Mary T. Burt, of New York, stepped forward bearing a beautiful basket of flowers which she presented to our National President saying at the close of her happy remarks, "And hidden away among these flowers are the kisses and the love and devotion of 22,000 women!" Miss Frances E. Griffin, of Alabama, was next called on to report and spoke as follows:

I presume I am called for to give an account of my stewardship and to tell what has become of me all these months since you last saw me. I have been in good company part of the time. Part of the time I have meandered with the Democratic convention up in Chicago. Part of the time I went over with the G. A. R's to Philadelphia. Now I have not been organizing so much, but I have been doing other things. The first part of the year after I left you, I took hold with an earnestness that meant more than it accomplished, to see if I could not assist the women who were trying to establish a school of methods in the southern country, that should represent a sectional part of that country, which should be called the Southern School of Methods. I proceeded, speaking always first for the W. C. T. U., and then for the school of methods, whose aim and end and purpose was to advance W. C. T. U. interests. I spoke at many state conventions in this interest. Later on in the year I came into the North feeling that the North needed building up along the same lines, and especially Mrs. Lathrap's magnificent state. Part of the time I have been employed in the state that owns Mrs. Rounds and Miss Willard, known as Illinois. So I have had a very busy year; I have been organizing where I could organize and speaking where I did not organize. At none of our meetings have we gone away fruitless. We have invariably had an expression of a better sentiment than when we came together, so that we may say that we had the fruits of our labors all along.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of Elmira, New York, gave her report, which was in part as follows:

During the year I have given sixty-nine public addresses, held thirty-three parlor meetings, addressed seven county conventions, conducted six schools of methods, organized ten new unions, securing six hundred and nine active and two hundred seventy-seven honorary members, and have traveled seven thousand five hundred and eighty-nine miles.

It has been my privilege several times to speak in the interest of a rescue home for erring girls, and I found in many places even the pastors of the churches were afraid to have that subject presented, lest those who are wrapping their robes around them and passing by on the other side, should criticise. However, I found the people ready to receive this truth when properly presented. . . .

On my way to Denver I visited Fort Russel, Wyo., and accepted an invitation to speak to the soldiers there, but it was a problem to know how to organize a band of soldiers into a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. However, I could not miss the opportunity to enlist those men in the cause of temperance, so organized a society called "The Army and Navy Temperance Union," with a badge of red, white and blue. There were thirty-two members, and we adopted the constitution of our local unions, changing the article providing for a vice-president in each church to a vice-president in each company.

Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese reported as follows: I made a flying trip through South Dakota late in 1891, organizing a promising Loyal Temperance Legion in Deadwood, visiting a number of unions and holding a very profitable and enjoyable meeting with the veterans at the Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs. En route to the Northwest, I reorganized the union at Evanston, Wyo., and on December 2 met with the ladies of Utah in territorial convention, when a permanent organization was effected.

In February I traversed a large portion of my own state, West Washington, where the work was crowned with wonderful success. Some remote, and until recently, almost inaccessible points were visited, unions organized and successful department work was inaugurated. Eight new unions are the result of the trip, one hundred and sixteen accessions to old unions and Y's, and hundreds of pledges signed, with an L. T. L. of one hundred members. During the present year West Washington has gained in membership twenty-five per cent.

The month of October has been spent in southern Utah, where new territory has been preëmpted and three unions organized. I have held meetings in Mormon tabernacles, had the coöperation of their bishops and president of stakes, and been most heartily welcomed by their women, some of whom have joined our organization, two being officers of a local union. I was privileged to represent the National in a fifteen minute speech at a Columbian temperance mass-meeting held in the Salt Lake theatre, under the auspices of the Father Mathew Total Abstinence Society—a wonderful meeting in which Mormons, Catholics and the W. C. T. U. were represented by their respective speakers.

SUMMARY.

Number of addresses	102
Women's meetings	52
Old unions visited	45
Unions organized	22
L. T. L's	3
Recruits to old unions	200
Annual meetings	6
County conventions and counties organized	1
Y's

Miss Ida Clothier, of Manitou Springs, Colo., said: Just one year ago to-day, friends, when the name of one of your organizers among young women was called, there was a silence. That silence was not because she did not want to be with you, not because of miles of travel between that organizer and you, but because she was lying helpless. Between life and death when the word came to me that this great Convention had paused and thousands of hearts had gone up in silent prayer for my recovery, it seemed to me that a new lease of life came to me and I felt that I must consecrate my life anew, and take up the work as I never had before. Out from that illness in answer to the prayers of many hearts that went up, and in direct answer to prayer, I was raised from that sick bed in an hour's time. I have been feeling more and more ever since that surely life must mean more. I bring you the report of ten weeks' work only, a week or two before I left my eastern home and about eight weeks' work done in the west. I have not organized a Y union; I have not done definitely Y work, but I have gone wherever the invitation has come, and have done the best I could in talking at public meetings of all kinds, believing that our young women everywhere are ready to take hold of this work. Forty-one talks have been given, two state conventions have been visited as well as one Christian Endeavor convention, that of Nebraska.

Mrs. Woodbridge then read the notice of the illness of Mrs. Eva Higgins, of Colorado, and by consent of the Convention Mrs. Ellis prayed for the speedy recovery of Mrs. Higgins.

Miss Belle Kearney, of Flora, Miss., being the next organizer called for, the following telegram was read by Mrs. Tyng: "Cordial greetings to the Convention. Read Psalms 98:1."

Miss Kearney's report was read by Mrs. Washington:

On account of the severe and lingering illness of my mother, I was detained at home from the latter part of November, 1891, to March 9, 1892, with the exception of two weeks given to legislative work in Mississippi, during January and February, trying to get a bill passed, giving us a scientific temperance instruction law. We succeeded in securing the enactment, by having the Bill incorporated word for word, as amendments to the different sections of the school law of the new code, which was being revised. The Bill would have been fought bitterly; the amendments passed without any opposition. One of the codifyers, a Prohibitionist, suggested the scheme that proved so successful. We rejoice in having the black veil removed from the fair face of Mississippi! I engaged in a legal crusade against the saloons in Flora, Miss., in the spring. The lawyer employed succeeded in defeating three liquor petitions, and one saloon was closed. A victory was scored for the W. C. T. U., against which the Liquor Dealers' Association of the state had declared war.

I have been engaged in organizing work for three months in Louisiana. Few opportunities were given to organize Y's, as W. C. T. U's were more needed, and in greater demand. I have been sent to many towns where unions already existed, consequently nothing could be done except speaking and holding business meetings to discuss methods. This accounts for the small number of unions reported.

I have delivered addresses to the colored people and organized unions among them whenever practicable; have attended two state conventions of the W. C. T. U. and visited four states in the interest of our cause; also attended the Southern assembly and school of methods at Waynesville, N. C., for two weeks during the month of July.

Addresses delivered	95
W. C. T. U's organized	35
Y. W. C. T. U's organized	8
L. T. L's organized	9
Adult pledge signers secured	1,988
Members to the L. T. L's	348
Business meetings held	40
Amount of money raised	$721.80

Mrs. Delle H. Cox was next, and said: My work has been n Oregon, Washington and Idaho—the land of magnificent distances and beautiful scenery. But, alas, the foe we fight has thrown over this lovely scene his black pall.

. . . . . .

I give as the result the following summary of the year's work:

ADDRESSES.

Lectures in Oregon	59
" " East Washington	32
" " West Washington	7
" " Idaho	17
Total	115

MEETINGS FOR METHOD WORK.

Oregon	19
East Washington	24
West Washington	3
Idaho	8
Total	54

MEMBERS RECEIVED (INCLUDING HONORARY).

Oregon	174
East Washington	387
West Washington	55
Idaho	65
Total	681
New unions organized	13
Defunct unions resuscitated	5
Loyal Legions	2
No. of miles traveled	6,974
" letters written	893
" postals "	103

I have also visited three state penitentiaries, three county jails and two insane asylums, holding services with the inmates of the prisons and jails, have attended and assisted in three state conventions, and one school of methods.

Mrs. E. A. Blair responded in part as follows:

My whole time has been given the past year to the work of the children, either at my desk or in the field. I have spoken in eight different states, given eighty-one chalk talks, organized twenty-three Loyal Temperance Legions and two unions. I have held juvenile conferences at three Chautauqua assemblies and four W. C. T. U. conventions organized one county L. T. L. and aided a new company at Fort Robinson, Neb., which is supposed to have the only union and L. T. L. ever organized at an army post. But it has its canteen, which is often so crowded that the soldiers climb over the shoulders of four lines of men to secure their drinks.

I have sent out a larger number of outline charts for making chalk-talking easy than in any previous year, receiving most encouraging reports of their usefulness. Postage for the year has been over $41, this including the Demorest medal contest work in Nebraska, my own state, where we have used 2,287 medals, 248 gold, 25 large gold, and three diamond medals, also furnishing a contestant for the Cincinnati and Denver diamond medal contests this year—the grandest record of any state thus far, though Illinois is close behind us. I have corresponded with most of the state superintendents, gathering all new plans and suggestions from them possible. This has developed a plan for a circular correspondence among National, state and local superintendents and organizers which if adopted will, we believe, prove mutually helpful.

This year our L. T. L's ask us to allow them representation in our National Conventions. A few states have already done this with good results, and recommend it to the National. Two states have already organized and held L. T. L. conventions. In my seven years' experience as an organizer, I am glad to report 1892 as best of all.

Mrs. Maud L. Green, Manitou Springs, Colo., said: Has any one in this great Convention a doubt that that department of work which has to do with the little men and women of our nation is the most, or one of the most, important? During the past six months I have visited five states for work and have given seventy chalk talks, have attended one state convention, two county conventions and held sixty workers' conferences; written three hundred and fifty letters, distributed twenty-five thousand pages of literature and spoken perhaps to thirty thousand of our little men and women. My work has been varied, not only in the hamlets, but in the towns and in the cities, not only to the L. T. L's and to our Sunday schools, but to missions, in the prisons and in the darker places of our country, wherever I could find a boy or girl—some of you say, "Why, do you find boys and girls in the prisons?" Yes, boys and girls in our prisons. That is the dark picture. Then comes before me the bright picture. In my work with the crayon I have seen little faces brighten, and then at the close of the meeting that which gives me most pleasure is the gathering of the little ones around the platform. They come forward to give me their hands, they come forward to tell me how interested they are, and sometimes they come with floral offerings with the love of the children, and all these things cheer me in the work.

Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Le Roy, Mich., remarked: Because of the fact that I feel that I have been sailing under false colors during the year, I desire to make a little explanation; I have not the time to gather much of a report; perhaps you will remember, however, I was placed on the list as a National organizer for young women. I have not done much. It is not my fault, however, that I have been sailing under false colors. My line happened to fall in other places; under necessity I was obliged to take the upper peninsula of Michigan, which comprises the twelfth district of Michigan. They are mining towns. I can show you towns of two hundred inhabitants that have from twenty to thirty saloons, towns from six to seven hundred inhabitants, have from sixty to seventy saloons, and so on in proportion. Any one who undertakes to lead the poor unfortunate women of those parts have not very much time to spare to other parts. I have been doing all I could at the state convention at the upper state of Michigan to try the strength of the union. I wish you knew more about it than you do know, what the women have to endure to hold up temperance in this state. I have not kept account of all the work done; I have addressed Sunday-schools in various ways, have done what I have been called upon to do when in town. I have kept no account of these meetings; I have endeavored to push the work and have spoken for our National organization wherever I could.

The absence of Mrs. Sallie Chapin, who has worked heroically in the South; of Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, who was ill from overwork; of Mrs. Mary Jewett Telford, who was detained in New York; of Mrs. Nora T. Gause, whose work is to teach the children kindness to animals; of Mrs. Mary Marriage Allen, who has worked among the colored women of Virginia, and has returned to mission work in England; and of Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper, of Philadelphia, also a worker among colored people, was much regretted.

Mrs. Ellen R. Denny, who has worked a month in Indian Territory, was invited to tell of her labors, and did so, saying: It was my privilege in the early spring to attend the convention in the Indian Territory; I never met such earnest women as I met in that convention. When I tell you the cause you will know something of the reason. In ten days two saloons opened in every town of that territory. With willing hearts and praying to God to know what they should do, they sent out an organizer, and thirteen unions were organized in a very short time. They were kneeling before God, asking Him what they should do. The agent of the supplies said he had written to the authorities and could get no response. He said He would resign the commission and start out with the march. You know something of the work of Mrs. Stapler in this regard. I ask you brothers and sisters to pray for us; to pray that in every town there may be a Woman's Christian Temperance Union, whose voice may be heard in every house and whose words may be heard, not only in Indian Territory, but may be heard all over the land.

Mrs. Dora Evans, of Kansas, who has been organizing in Wyoming, was called to the platform and said: I had not expected this privilege. I am really glad I have had the privilege of working in the state of Wyoming, the only state that has the star represented in the corner of the room. It made me feel very proud indeed. The question is asked, "If these women have the ballot why have they the American saloon?" We answer in defense: "In Wyoming, we have only one woman for every five men, and our towns are sometimes one hundred and fifty miles apart. One woman cannot do the work of five men. I have ridden all night in a stage coach, all the next day in the train, and the next night in a stage coach to make an appointment. We have organized in almost every county, and the best women in the country are interested in this work.

The reading of cablegrams from the mayoress of Manchester, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and the World's W. C. T. U. was followed by the introduction of several fraternal delegates, Mrs. Carey N. Dove, Mrs. Annie Steele, Dr. Anna Shaw and Rev. Mr. Blanchard. The committee on resolutions was appointed and after singing the temperance doxology, the meeting adjourned with the benediction pronounced by Mother Stewart.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The first evening session of our National Convention is always a most delightful one, embracing as it does the welcome addresses and responses uttered in an all-pervading atmosphere of geniality and good cheer. The initial evening at the foot of the Rockies was no exception to the rule, and, indeed, it seemed to exceed all others in its cordial manifestations of the true spirit of hospitality. The devotional exercises of the evening were in charge of Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of New York, who read the Thirty-third Psalm, after "How Firm a Foundation" was sung by the audience. Miss Willard introduced Governor Routt, of Colorado, the third governor of a state to welcome the W. C. T. U. during its nineteen gatherings. Governor Routt's remarks were direct, and had the happy ring of sincerity and truth. During his speech he said:

It gives me great pleasure to welcome such a distinguished body of women as you are to our young and beautiful state. I welcome you to everything we have, mountains thrown in, the light, health-giving air; I welcome you to our beautiful homes that were builded by sober men and are presided over by cultured and intellectual women, good women, temperance women. Ladies, we are building a young state, we are making society, we are building for the future, and we are delighted to have you here to help us start our young women and boys in the right direction. We will present you in the next twenty-five years with the grandest body of men and women on this globe. The climatic conditions and everything else are right; we never get tired; we are always looking ahead and going forward. That is the class of people we have; we are capable of doing a great deal of good or an immense amount of harm. We hope that your instruction and teachings here will help to build up and train our young people in the right direction.

If you could only vote now, we would have a good time. The fact is, I have been an advocate of woman's suffrage for twenty years, and I am not ashamed of it. You will never be able to accomplish this grand work you have undertaken until you are allowed the ballot, and if I had it in my power I would give every one of you the ballot before I left my present position. You are engaged in a great work.

This cordial welcome from a governor who used to shove the jack plane, was followed by an eloquent greeting from the pastor of Trinity M. E. Church (one of the finest in the land)—who used to handle the trowel,—Rev. Robert McIntyre. His welcome was a comprehensive one illustrated by word pictures, paying a glowing tribute to our National leader whom he characterized as "an epoch maker" and "the only woman who has ever succeeded in hiving women and setting them to work." He illustrated the latter remark by a story of a "Hoosier bee expert" who could handle bees without gloves, and termed the "hiving faculty"—the organizing instinct—one of the greatest of talents. He further said:

We are glad to welcome the Queen Bee and all the workers; we are likewise glad to welcome the Queen Bee of the British hive. One of our great American orators has spoken eloquently of the measured roll of England's drum, keeping company with the hours and following the rising sun in its course girdling the globe. Beautiful figure, but what is it that follows the roll of the war drum? Listen and you will hear sobs and tears; you will see smoking cities and weeping widows and mourning children. But I will tell you of another belt put around the globe, not the red belt of war, but a belt that goes around the world, the white belt of Gospel temperance, girdling the globe and leaving as it goes no sobbing, no weeping, making no widows, no orphans, no poverty or wounds. This belt goes round the world, binding up bruised hearts and wiping away widows' tears, lifting up the drunkard and whispering hope into his ear, and bidding him brace himself for another trial, another effort to be a man. . . .

And to night we offer you a mountain welcome as generous as the hills, as pure as the snow on yonder mountain, as true as the love we have for you. We pray that no accident may come to you, that you may have a pleasant week with us, strengthened and inspired and encouraged, and go home and remember this as a place where good-will followed you and where they heartily bade you "God speed."

The next salutatory to the Convention was given by the representative of the city, Mayor Rogers, whose earnest and hearty words were uttered to a most attentive audience. He declared himself to be in sympathy with the remarks of the Governor who had preceded him, expressing his faith in the work of the W. C. T. U., whom he termed, "the select of the entire world," and closed by saying:

It is a measure of pride to me, that as the mayor of the city, it is my privilege to welcome you in our midst. We appreciate thoroughly the efficient work that is being done by the women throughout the world. In our own midst are those who are accomplishing great good for humanity. One of your own members, by whose solicitation I came here, has shown in the City Hall that even good can be done for the human race in that place. We greet you heartily and sincerely. The gates of Denver are thrown down, and there is no latch string, because the doors are not closed; our homes are open, we give you a warm and hearty welcome, and I can only say for myself that I sincerely hope that the cause that you have at heart, the mission which you seek to perform will be greatly accelerated by this gathering upon the great desert of America.

The welcome from the press of the city was given in true journalistic style by Mr. J. D. Dillenbach, who said among other good things:

The genuine newspaper worker despises above all things else insincerity and cant. He may not always fully sympathize with your work and your methods—so much the worse for him if he doesn't—but he respects your motives; for down in his heart of hearts he knows them to be good and true.

Some good people fall into a certain degree of cant as a sort of armor against the shafts of ridicule. But you do not find it necessary. You have so clothed yourselves with honesty and purity that the tongue of detraction is dumb in your presence. You are very radical. All your plans are free from the deadly taint of compromise. Standing here to-night, before this assembly and in the sight of God, I assure you that I believe success will yet crown them every one, and that in some glad day, you or your successors in the holy work, will sing songs of rejoicing in a land wherein the people will no more permit a saloon to corrupt its manhood than they would turn a madman loose with a loaded gun and a torch.

> The press that groans and thunders in its might,
> Welcomes you here to-night,
> And to your noble band bids me out-hold
> More hands than had Briareus of old,
> And pledge them at your back to carry forth
> Your message east and west and south and north.

Mrs. Eva Higgins, president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., not being able to be present, sent a warmly worded welcome on behalf of the state organization, which was read by Mrs. Shapleigh, state treasurer. This was followed by the hearty greeting of the local unions which was voiced by Mrs. Cassell, of Denver.

A delightful quartette was rendered by the Lotus Club, after which Lady Henry Somerset was introduced, and made the first response to the salutations, in her usual graceful and felicitous way. She said:

We now have heard your great welcome, and I believe that never in my life have I heard words which were so inspiring, and seemed to make a city so far away from one's native land, so much like home. I am almost afraid in England to allude much to America, because I am told that I am infatuated about this country. If ever a woman had occasion to be infatuated about a country I think I have an excuse, because I have received so many sweet courtesies, so many tender hand-clasps, that when I sailed across the great Atlantic I left a great part of my heart in America. It seems to me it augurs well for our future, not only in our great cause, but for humanity, to see the folds of the Union Jack intermingled with those of the stars and stripes. It is refreshing to look upon this great uprising city of the new West. To see these magnificent buildings glittering in this bright sunshine, and to understand what this magnificent enterprise means that has transferred all this into this glorious city. It seems to fill one's heart with hope, coming as I do, from a land where so much is crushed out, where so many are broken-hearted. . . . The temperance cause is no more national, it is *inter*national. We have clasped hands in this national movement. We in England are fighting the same battle you are here. We are walking the same path, we are meeting with the same difficulties in the suppression of the liquor traffic. There is only one thing which in England I do not wish to adopt, and it is, perhaps, but a little thing. There is only one word which I hope will not become our watchword over there, and which I believe some day you will change here, and that is the word Prohibition. I believe in prohibition, "first and last and all the time," but I would rather you would call it a name that has rung through this land from the lips of one whom we honor to-night, the president of this association, and call it Home Protection. (Applause.)

At the close of Lady Henry's earnest remarks, a solo was sung by Professor Brierly.

On behalf of the National W. C. T. U., two of our eloquent women made responses, the first of whom was Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, of Missouri, whose humorous sallies and genial remarks captured the audience. She began by saying:

We thank you for the cordial and courteously multiplied welcomes you have poured upon us like refreshing showers upon the thirsty earth. We knew it was coming, we breathed it in with the first breath of ozone from your mountains, we felt it in the first clasp of hand with hand, we saw it in the gleam of kindly eyes, and we heard it in the many words from friendliest lips. Our whole hearts were filled, our beings suffused with gladness because we are here, even before these multiplied welcomes were spoken.

After expressing the appreciation of the Convention for the various welcomes received, with ready wit and happy expressions Mrs. Hoffman continued:

We have had a welcome from the state, from the city, the welcome of the church and the welcome of the white-ribbon host, and yet—and yet—with women's daring we ask for more. We ask for a hospitality that is broader and richer and rarer than any of these can give, the hospitality of minds, the hospitality that dares to open wide the gates of understanding; that dares to entertain ideas, charged with truth, even though they antagonize the established order of things. We have got these ideas with us; we did not so much bring them as they brought us, they have taken possession of us, and they are a host, more numerous and more persistent than all the legions of imperial Rome. . . . Dear friends, will you entertain our ideas? Will you let them settle in Colorado?

Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, state president of Illinois, spoke eloquently as follows: To endeavor to catch the warm feelings that are pulsing in every heart to-night would be like trying to gather the rays of the sunshine of these beautiful days. . . Looking into your faces to-night I am thinking of the beautiful words that have passed through my mind:

> "To make a happy fireside clime for bairns and wife,
> That is the true pathos and sublime of human life."

Is it not very true, dear friends, that the W. C. T. U. in its work is to make a happier clime for bairns and wife? As I look into your faces I see some who have come from far eastern shores where the waters of the Atlantic dash against their rocky borders, and others have come from far away toward the west, all meeting here for the one grand, glorious purpose of making happy homes in America. We have not come to say our say and sing our songs and go away, simply for the pleasure of convention days, but we have come with a mighty throbbing purpose in our hearts, every one of us. We have come bearing burdens of those who are outside; we have come with heavy burdens of pain in the echoing of the years that have gone by, and we have come with our eyes set toward the future, when that blessed day shall dawn in which "all men's weal shall be each man's care," and there shall be no legalized saloon in all the land to tempt the defeat of our brothers and our sons. . . . .

Miss Willard then told an amusing story which convulsed the audience with laughter. "Dear Colorado" was sung by the large and well-trained chorus, after which the Convention adjourned its first evening session.

SATURDAY MORNING SESSION.

Mrs. Rounds took charge of the devotional exercises, reading Psalm 67. "Christ for the World We Sing," and "A Charge to Keep I Have," were sung.

On motion of Mrs. Lathrap and after considerable discussion, the time for the reading of the president's annual address in future meetings of this body was fixed at eleven o'clock on the morning of the first session of such conventions.

Mrs. Forbes, of Virginia, offered a change in the constitution, which admits to the executive body the secretary of the Young Woman's Branch, notice having been given a year ago to that effect, and on motion the change was made.

Mrs. Buell presented the report of the committee on credentials, giving the following summary:

Forty-two states, five territories and the District of Columbia are represented, making forty-eight in all. General officers, five; general secretary of the young women's union, one; superintendents, fifteen; organizers, nine; editors, two; publisher of THE UNION SIGNAL, one; president's private secretary, one; chairman of the standing committee, one; vice-presidents, thirty seven; state officers, fifty-three; delegates, two hundred and fifty-four, making a total of three hundred and seventy-nine.

Later eight more superintendents were reported.

Miss Willard remarked: Practically three hundred and eighty; I think that other woman will come in. It is not quite as large a number as we had at Boston, but we will remember this country is divided in fifty sections, and forty-eight are represented in this great Convention.

It seems a propitious moment in which to bring forward one whom we always wish to honor in these Conventions, Mother Stewart, of Ohio.

Mother Stewart made a telling speech, in which she said that the Colorado and Denver welcome had been so cordial, that all that remained was for our entertainers to give us the keys of their homes, whereupon several delegates arose and said that the Denver people had already given them the keys.

The reports of superintendents were introduced by Mrs. Sophia F. Grubb, who began with the following true and startling statement concerning her department of work among foreigners:

Within the next ten days there will stand at the ballot boxes at the various polling places in this country two millions of men, with full privileges of citizenship, who can neither read, write nor speak the language in which their ballots are written. Added to these there are two or three million more of men who can speak the English language only enough to gain their daily living, but who know nothing of our institutions or our government, who have the full privileges of American citizenship and will exercise them. Added to these there are coming to our shores five hundred thousand people every year, the males of over twenty one years of age having the full privileges of citizenship in eighteen states within twelve months after landing, practically citizens when they come. We feel that these facts warrant that we should have this department of work among foreign speaking people, that we may do something toward educating these people in the knowledge of what constitute the institutions of our government and good citizenship.

Mrs. Grubb explained the object of establishing the missionary at Ellis Island, who speaks several languages and is enabled to converse with the newly-arrived immigrants.

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, general secretary of the Y Branch, prefaced her report with graceful words of thanks for making her former department a branch of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Barnes has visited twelve states during the year, most of them at convention time, and has succeeded in arousing the interest and coöperation of the students at Wellesley and Vassar Colleges.

Mrs. Helen G. Rice, superintenden of the juvenile department said, among a host of good things:

We are learning more thorough work in Loyal Legion lines; we are learning to dignify the whole matter. We shall ask for a representation in our National Convention, and I hope the ladies will realize how this will dignify this work with the older boys and girls. We have a great deal to contend with in holding the older boys. So many words come from the state superintendents telling us that our work was never so well organized as it is now. We never had so many efficient and alive superintendents in our local legions, our districts and counties. Our W. C. T. U. women are at last waking up to see the importance of this work. Then among the encouraging features has been the department of our county conventions. There is a place made for the L. T. L. work in various states, and they are broadening out, making our boys and girls just as enthusiastic as they are; they are looking forward to their conventions just as you look forward to going to your state and National Conventions. There have been organized this year so many loyal county L. T. L's with president, secretary and treasurer. We have our committee on resolutions, correspondence and all these things. We copy your work and the little folks are being trained right up into business like methods. Then along the line of these county Loyal Legions and county conventions we have had the department of graduates. Our graduates are already numbering up into the hundreds. We had a most wonderful gathering of the state Legion in Wisconsin; the boys and girls took charge of the convention in the most business-like fashion. Then Pennsylvania wheeled into line with the second state convention of the country. Then we have representation for our Loyal Temperance Legion secured in several conventions already. Some will welcome them this year for the first time to their conventions then; others are moving in this matter and have given notice already of the change of constitution; and some of the states, not wanting to wait until this matter could be got into form by changing the constitution, are already receiving associate delegates until the time when they may be able to receive full delegates through their change of constitution.

After Miss Willard had called special attention to the beautiful decorations of the church, and particularly to the unique banner from the Lady Henry Somerset union of St. Paul and her birthday memorial address presented by the British Women's Temperance Association, numerous telegrams were read and fraternal delegates introduced, mention of which will appear elsewhere.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

This session was one of peculiar interest, being chiefly devoted to a memorial service for Madam Willard, Mrs. Caroline Brown, John Greenleaf Whittier, Miss Julia Ames and Dr. James A. Gordon.

The exercises were introduced by Scripture reading and prayer, conducted by Mrs. Bourne, of New Jersey the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee" and the followin solo rendered by Mrs. Sarah L. Teetor. of Denver.

ON HEIGHTS OF POWER.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

[Memorial Hymn of the White-ribboners.]

> Love's light illumines the pathway ye trod,
> Comrades of yesterday, now saints of God;
> Gracious and great were your souls in their stay,
> Greatest of all in their going away.
> Blessing the world that you loved and you left,
> Soothing the hearts that your going bereft.
> Death did not daunt, and you feared not your fate,—
> Sweet sang your souls "We must love, trust and wait."

CHORUS—

> Born into beauty and born into bloom,
> Victors immortal o'er terror and tomb,
> Fast fall our footsteps—we follow from far,
> Love's light leads heavenward from gates left ajar.

> Faith that makes faithful and Truth that makes true,
> Hallow our hearts from the heights gained by you.
> Happy white-ribboners, homelike is heaven,
> God girds and guides us through help you have given.
> Motherly spirits of sweetness and might,
> We hear your symbol in ribbons of white.
> "Christ and His Kingdom" our watchwords will stand;
> Banners of peace shall enfold every land.

CHORUS

Mrs. Lathrap was requested by Miss Willard to preside during the memorial services and explained that the words of the above song were written by Miss Willard on the ocean and were suggested by her mother's exclamation, "I am not going to die, I am going to be born."

The addresses which followed were all exceptionally inspiring and beautiful and we regret that space alone forbids their publication in full, which was accomplished in THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

Miss Willard spoke for the poet Whittier and Dr. Gordon, father of Anna and Bessie Gordon, and a father to her in deed and word.

Mrs. Lathrap referred briefly but eloquently to the beautiful lives of Miss Julia Ames and Mrs. Downs, and Miss Pugh paid a tender tribute to the beloved mother of Mrs C. B. Buell.

Three gifted speakers, Mrs. Hoffman, Dr. Delano, of Evanston, and Lady Henry Somerset, characterized most fittingly the life of "Saint Courageous," Miss Willard's mother. Mrs. Hoffman's closing thought was this:

Madam Willard's life has been an inspiration to thousands of us. One thought came to me as I was sitting here listening. I have read somewhere that excessive grief is selfishness. We do not see it with our women, but resignation, calm and thankful, hopeful and radiant, which is heroism, and we are tending to that heroism.

Dr. Delano's address contained this golden thought: I feel more and more that the woman who went from us that day is the prophecy of what the Christian woman will be to-morrow, because she looked benignly upon all efforts, upon all churches, upon all forms of organization for the betterment of society and the world. She was so rich towards humanity, because she was so rich towards God.

By the special request of many friends and because the address was not published verbatim in THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL, Lady Henry Somerset's remarks are here given in full:

I can scarcely tell why such an honor should have been accorded me as to be the one privileged to speak to day about a life so grand and beautiful as the one we hold in tender memory. I imagine it must be because it is sometimes easier to appreciate the magnitude of a country or a character when it is seen from a distance. And you, to whom the name of Mrs. Willard has been so loved and so familiar for many years, have doubtless contracted the habit of looking upon her as a woman to be loved and admired. Therefore, no doubt, when this selection was made it was thought that one coming from afar was perhaps more able to judge dispassionately of the magnitude of the character of this great and good woman. Power of appreciation is largely opportunity for comparison, and in the varied life that I have led, the many scenes which have come before me and the different classes of men and women with whom I have associated, I have acquired possibly some discernment as to the really great and noble.

When I came to your shores, a stranger, now just a year ago, the name of Frances Willard was of course as familiar to me as it is to women all over the world who are in any way associated with works of philanthropy or the upbuilding of humanity. I had read her life, and had some knowledge of her work, and with that work, of course, her mother's name was closely associated. But only when I crossed the threshold of Rest Cottage could I realize what a factor that mother had been in her great career. I have mingled with those who are called noble because of hereditary descent; I have talked with queens and princes, empresses and princesses, but when I took the hand of Mrs. Willard and she welcomed me to her heart and home, I knew instantly and instinctively that here was one of the world's great women, a lady of such fine, delicate instinct, a mind so cultivated and so purified by continued aspirations toward the great and noble, a face so serene and so full of all that inherent nobility which came to her through her spotless ancestry and her own natural purity and refinement, that I at once classed her with all the greatest and noblest I had ever met. I need not dwell here upon the way in which that home circle struck me, but as I turn the pages of my Bible, I find a note entered there which I wrote the first night I spent beneath that roof: "October the 28th, 1891,—a day to be remembered in thanksgiving. Rest Cottage, Evanston, Ill."

There is at all times something divinely pathetic about a soul that stands upon the borderland of the great new country beyond. There is always something that strikes a tender key about a life that is so soon to be merged into the fuller life of immortality. It is only when the leaves have left the tree and the bare arms are lifted against the clear winter sky, that you can see how every tendril, every twig turns heavenward, and looking upward through the bleak and bitter blasts waits to be clothed upon with immortality. Such seemed to me to be ever the attitude of the mind of her who has been called "Saint Courageous." Her life was built upon an heroic mould. She was one who knew what it was to bear hardship patiently. To have gone forth from the refinement and intellectual cultivation of one of the first colleges in America to dwell upon a prairie farm; to take into that life all the delicate instincts, all the intellectual cultivation and all the educational enthusiasm and implant them in that new-found home, demanded nothing short of heroic courage. We hear so often of the lives of the mothers of great men, but when the lives of the mothers of great women are written, and Frances Willard's name stands upon those pages, it will be the mother who made her all she is for the cause of woman and humanity that will stand emblazoned in the fore-front of that army.

I understood something of the wonderful power that Mrs. Willard had of detaching herself from the material and living in an atmosphere of poetry and literature, when I learned how on that Wisconsin farm, she, who was obliged to go to her wash-tub every Monday morning, had gained the first prize for the best knowledge of the works of Pope, and was considered to be one of the finest reciters of Shakespeare and other poets.

A picture will always remain in my mind of that peaceful parlor in that sweet and restful home, of Mrs. Willard in her rocking chair with her Wordsworth in her hands, and that voice that seemed to be untouched by the hand of time with its clear, resonant sound, speaking out the words of that glorious ode, "Intimations of Immortality." And it was almost with a prophetic sound that she read those words so familiar yet so ever exquisite:

"Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The soul that rises with us, our life's star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting
And cometh from afar.
Not in entire forgetfulness,
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God who is our home."

Immortality was the key note of her life. It seemed to be breathed through her, the power of the divine in humanity, the evolution of all that was great and good, which was to have its fulfillment in the beyond, and I suppose that no one could have taken a more optimistic view of all the great questions of our day than did this noble soul. I have never met a woman who had attained her years, however great her mind and keen her intellect who did not dwell more readily on questions of the past than on the interests of the immediate present. But Mrs. Willard's mind, so incisive and so clear, seemed to be as keenly alive to everything that was up to date as about anything that had taken place in former years. Her step was ever the first, while yet the household was sleeping, and she it was who read the news before any other had seen the morning papers. Alert, eager, interested in all that affected men and women, it was this wonderful love for humanity which led her to lay aside all her individual interest and merge it in the great cause to which she had dedicated her dearest and her best. And when that one whom she loved more than life was making in a single year pilgrimages to every state and territory throughout this great continent (a feat, I believe, that has never been accomplished, as far as I could learn, by any other), the mother's heart, although it might be throbbing with anxiety, had in it that diviner instinct of womanhood, that made the world her family, and she cared more that this work of mighty rescue should be accomplished than that the daughter whose companionship she prized so much beyond any other earthly joy, should be forced on her account to stay one hour at home.

In the roll-call of the great bye and bye, when the names of those who have borne themselves heroically in the great fight here are called by the great Commander, there will be many of the patient watchers, of the quiet, waiting hearts, who endured anxiety, sorrow and loneliness by their own firesides for the sake of the great work in the world's harvest fields, who will come forward to receive as bright a crown as any that could have been won by those who have toiled for the world's sake.

There was a light and shade about Mrs. Willard's character that rendered her one of the most delightful conversationalists I have ever met. Indeed, I do not believe that any one has true pathos who has not also a keen sense of true humor.

So natural did her passing seem from this life to the fuller life beyond, that as she lay there waiting the summons that was to bid her go out through the great gate of Eternity, she had always a cheery, pleasant word; she looked at life as quietly, as calmly, as sensibly as she had done when she sat by her fireside. She had nothing to change. Her life had always been struck in the key that was set to the songs of immortality. She had nothing to fear, for life to her had always seemed a life hid with Christ in God. And so as she assorted and parted those things that she wished to give to those around, and as her daughter begged her to give with each some little message, she smiled and said, "No, you must do that, for if I were to undertake it, I should simply turn into literature."

And now as I speak about those last days, there are two things that I have it in my heart to say. I know of no trait of character that so endears us to each other as that which will never withhold its best from the selfish motive that "it belongs exclusively to us"; and I think the beautiful generosity that bade Miss Willard give to every white ribbon woman in the ranks of this great army the full beauty of those last hours, reserving nothing, but giving all, was one of the truest pieces of unselfishness that I have ever witnessed. It would be better, I think, for the world and for humanity at large, if all we had and all we knew that brought us closer to the divine, if those moments when the gates ajar seem somehow to be so left open for awhile that the glory from beyond shines through them, we could tell one to the other. Our life is so straitened down here altogether, that I think that all things which make life's path easier and the dark river brighter and the beyond clearer, should be "passed along like bread at sacrament." And therefore I have rejoiced that she withheld nothing from you, but that as her mother's life was consecrated to the interests of this great cause, so the account of that wonderful translation belonged to us all.

In those last moments, she who was so soon to go and leave her child, named me in an especial manner, which has left upon my heart a deep sense of responsibility, and I would like to say that I stand here with a feeling of deep humility about this sacred message. No one knew better than Mrs. Willard that in the rank and file of this great army there is not a white ribbon woman who would not willingly do all she knew to help her leader; that on no life has been poured out more loving devotion, more tender care, than on the president of this union. And I think perhaps the only reason she singled me especially in those last hours was because that standing aloof, as it were, from the work in America, I was thus able in some way to help her and to be restful to her that may have in it possibilities of special helpfulness. And I look upon it as the greatest privilege I know that in this charge I stand not alone but am bound up with every sister of the W. C. T. U. And now this service has almost closed and we linger a moment to look back upon that which is precious and bright; and as we meet here, speaking of her whom we all love, we know that we are out upon the billows of life, and we may be brought into that harbor sooner than we think; but whether tossed upon the billows of life, whether brought through with sails all broken and masts all bent, whether we weather all the storms that the oceans may bring, we know that the evening brings all home. I pray that when that time may come and Heaven's gates are opened, that it may be with all sails set, with all the masts manned, with all the glory of the full breeze blowing through the white sails of our life's ship, that we may enter that harbor with the triumphant and vanquishing glory with which Madam Willard went home some weeks ago.

Mrs. Lathrap announced that about two weeks before Madam Willard's death she talked into a phonograph a message for the Convention, but Miss Willard had concluded that it might be too saddening to have it reproduced there, so it would be omitted. Just then the Loyal Temperance Legions of the city came marching in, and their bright songs turned the attention of the audience from the past to the present and from those "gone before" to those "coming after."

After introductions and presentations, which will be noticed elsewhere, Mr. Crittenton, founder of the Florence missions, delivered an address of great power, which was printed entire in the DAILY and accepted with a rising vote of thanks.

After the presentation of Mother Benedict, of Iowa, and the reading of a number of telegrams, Mrs. Carse made the following personal explanation:

I wish to make an apology to the members of this Convention. You all know that in our Temple in Chicago Willard Hall is placed. We have taken Willard Hall, and we propose to hold gospel meetings there every day in the year and every Sunday afternoon. Our beloved National President has been made superintendent of this work. We have also reserved Thursday morning that we may have our Central W. C. T. U. prayer-meeting. Now this is all to take place when Willard Hall is finished. We hope that before Miss Willard leaves us that the hall can be informally dedicated. The formal dedication will take place next June when the World's Fair meets and when you all come there to attend the National Convention. In the meantime we are anxious to raise money to pay the rental, which is $3,500 a year, and the Republican Club of Chicago, which has been meeting at the Grand Pacific Hotel, came to our agent and said: "We would like to take Willard Hall at the noon hour when the workmen there are eating their lunch and hold our Republican meetings there." They said: "We will give you twenty dollars an hour for each day until election." These men are merchants of Chicago, they are some of them the men who have stood by me like brothers and have taken the stock and are ready to sell it to us whenever we can pay them for it in order that we may get that great building. They are our husbands, our brothers and our fathers many of them, and so we did not see that there was any great harm in this and we rented the hall to them at twenty dollars an hour. Now we did not think we would do any harm. I would not for anything have done it or permitted it, but our executive committee all stood by me, the only lady objecting at that meeting being a Democrat, so I come to ask you to forgive us. We have tried to break and annul our contract, but we could not do it. I went to the president of the club and begged him to find another place, but he looked and could not find another place in the central part of the city which would seat six hundred as Willard Hall does, and he said: "You must be held to this contract," and this is the state of the case. I ask all of your pardons, but we did not mean to offend, and that is all I can say.

As the discussion which followed has been eagerly called for, we give the full stenographic report:

Delegate: I do not think you will ever be able to get the tobacco juice stain out.

Mrs. Carse: Ladies, that is a great mistake. In our contract we have provided that any person who smokes will be turned out of the hall, and that will break the contract. There have been rumors that there is smoking there. It is not so. I even heard to day that the Republicans met there at night and kept up until three o'clock in the morning. That is not so. I have heard they had a meeting in the afternoon. If such a thing occurred it is utterly unknown to me or to our agent, and as the room is full of workmen I don't see how it could be.

A Delegate: It seems to me if Mrs. Carse could get one of our good Prohibition brothers to spend the hour at this meeting of Republicans, she would be able to break that contract, for I am almost sure a Republican club cannot sit in session for one hour without smoking.

Mrs. Carse: I assure you, ladies, there is no smoking. Our agent watches that very closely. There are some workmen who are putting up the marble lining of the Temple who smoke, and we prevent it whenever we see them.

Mrs. Hoffman: I move that it is the sense of this Convention that it was entirely unfitting that the Hall should be rented for the purpose for which it was rented, but inasmuch as the thing has been done, we are willing to forgive our sister, Mrs. Carse, but we do not approve of it.

Motion seconded.

Mrs. Dunham: Let her that never made a mistake cast the first stone.

Mrs. Carse: Before the motion is put I want to say, you will see in THE UNION SIGNAL of this week a full statement of the matter wherein I say that the Central W. C. T. U. will try to do everything they can to atone for our great mistake, and will not hold nor allow to be held, any more political meetings, though that will take in the Prohibitionists, you know.

Mrs. Hoffman: Madam President, I object to that.

The Chairman: Ladies, please keep to the question.

Mrs. Hoffman: This is an entirely different thing from having the Christian men of this country hold even a political meeting in the house. A political party that opens its meetings with prayer and not with curses, a political party that is made up of Christian persons would never advertise and invite an infidel to come and speak.

Mrs. Dodge: I do not approve of the wording of this resolution, and I move that these words shall be so arranged that they shall not convey such condemnation as they now convey.

A member: I think no uncertain sound should go out from this Convention about this matter. The Republican papers are already casting stones against us on account of it.

Mrs. Lathrap: I am anxious that this Convention shall so express itself as to relieve us from the responsibility of what has been done. We are face to face with the fact that we do not control Willard Hall; it is already rented to others, and they have a right to sub-let it to whom they please. With that matter we cannot interfere, but in the presence of the condemnation that has gone out, not only in secular papers and old party papers but in our own Prohibition papers, it seems to me that it is well, as softly and gently as possible, but distinctly, that this body of women should relieve itself of responsibility in this matter. The Inter Ocean printed in its headlines, "The First Meeting in Willard Hall, Republican Rally." I do not care how gently the thing is done, but we ought to let the world know that we are not responsible for it and do not quite approve of it.

On motion of Mrs. Woodbridge, this whole matter was referred to a committee of three to frame a resolution to be brought before the Convention on Monday morning. On motion of Mrs. Fessenden, Mrs. Hoffman was made chairman of that committee, and on motion, the chair added the names of Mrs. Lathrap and Mrs. Buell.

After various introductions and announcements, the Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY EVENING

was devoted to the Young Woman's Branch, Mrs. Barnes, general secretary, presiding in her own happy and graceful way. The varied program embraced musical selections, cordial words of welcome, interesting exhibits of physical culture and club-swinging, addresses by Mrs. Frances Leiter, Miss Ida Clothier and Lady Henry Somerset and the presentation of the National Y banner. The full stenographic report of the evening's proceedings will be found in the December Oak and Ivy Leaf.

SUNDAY.

Appointments were made for our speakers in nearly forty of the Denver churches, and the greatest cordiality was shown by the various ministers. The annual sermon was delivered by Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, National evangelist, in Trinity church at three o'clock. We take pleasure in presenting this excellent sermon in full on another page. Lady Henry Somerset preached to a most attentive audience in the same place in the evening.

MONDAY MORNING SESSION.

The Convention met at nine o'clock on this morning with Miss Willard in the chair. Mrs. Trego, of Ohio, took charge of the devotional exercises, and after the singing of the hymn, "Come, Thou Fount," she read the 103d Psalm.

Under the head of miscellaneous business, due notice having been given, Mrs. Fessenden, of Massachusetts, moved the adoption of an amendment to the constitution whereby each 1,000 members of the Loyal Temperance Legion should be represented in future conventions by a W. C. T. U. woman. Remarks were heard on both sides and Mrs. Benjamin moved that the secretaries be empowered to change the article of the constitution entitled "membership" so as to conform with the amendments adopted during this session of the Convention. The motion carried.

Miss Pugh then gave notice that at the Convention of next year she would move for certain changes in the pre amble and articles of the constitution.

A letter of greeting from Mrs. Higgins, president of Colorado, who was ill and unable to be present, was read by Mrs. Buell, and the president was authorized to return to her a message of love and good cheer.

The Educational Department, whose topic is, "What have the departments in this group done to advance the cause of temperance among the masses?" was next taken up. The report of Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball on Sunday-school work was read in her absence by Mrs. Hunt.

She reported that the temperance lessons being given a place in the regular order of lessons marked a new era in the history of Sunday-school work.

The National superintendent prepared the temperance lesson leaflets for January 17. An appeal was also sent out in behalf of the effort to make that day one whose influence should be felt in all coming time. The response to this appeal was most prompt and enthusiastic. The illustrated leaflet was issued as the supplement to the S. S. edition of The Young Crusader. Over a half million pages of this lesson leaf were used and some late orders could not be filled. Most grateful were the good words received in regard to this special help and the success of the day.

The issue of the lesson supplement of The Young Crusader for January 17, 1892, was 125,000.

The illustrated temperance lesson leaflet issued by the W. T. P. A. on the next quarterly Sunday, May 22, had even a larger sale than that for January 17.

As these lessons for January 17 and May 22 were developed as others, in the S. S. lesson quarterlies, the fact that over one million and a half pages of lesson leaflets were ordered and paid for, surely indicates an interest for which we may well give thanks. "A tidal wave of pledge signing has swept over the country as a result of the study of God's Word, through the quarterly temperance lessons as now given." Many such expressions were reported.

One result of this new departure, as regards Bible study, has been the great awakening and earnest effort along the line of pledge signing. Following the quarterly Sunday of January 17, the National superintendent sent out a second leaflet of appeal and instructions in regard to the autograph pledge cards for the Columbian Exposition. The response to this was as general and resultful as the earlier one. One hundred and thirty-one thousand seven hundred and five of the autograph pledge cards have been ordered directly from the National superintendent and secretary. New York and Maine lead in this effort, New York having ordered twenty-eight thousand five hundred and thirty-one, and Maine nineteen thousand one hundred and seventy. Many have ordered the cards from the W. T. P. A., and some states have issued their own cards. The work will go on for some time to come, and it is hoped that all who have not will unite in this effort. If we must have the national disgrace of alcoholic drinks being sold on the Exposition grounds, let us at least offset it by the silent yet forceful protest of the two hundred and fifty thousand pledged temperance army in our Sunday schools. Last year over a million pages of temperance literature was reported as used in the Sunday-schools—this year several millions. A statistical report by states will be printed later. The department superintendent and secretary have sent out about four hundred thousand pages of temperance literature during the year.

Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent of physical education, spoke in part as follows:

If we give to the children of this nation physical discipline, which they should receive through our public schools, it must come through the medium of this great body of women. And let me tell you why. In the first place, it is the logic of circumstances. Away back in this century in the teens, I think it was in 1817, when this country was re-organizing its militia, there was an effort made in Congress to introduce physical culture in the military schools by law. It failed. Going on through the years until 1860, the war broke out. Then our physical educators, in session assembled at Buffalo, declared that physical education should be incorporated in the public school system by law. Thirty years and more have passed, and what has been everybody's business is nobody's business.

So far as the department is concerned, I will simply say that it is fairly and squarely upon its feet, ready to walk. If we are consistent we must press forward this question of physical education for our children.

The difficulties that stand in the way of this great work I think can be confined to two items. In the first place, it is this conflict of systems which has hindered the work, and I would be glad if I could stand before this great audience of women for one hour and discuss that question of systems. It is no bugbear, it will be solved in coming years. Then our physical educators have said: "Oh, we don't want laws until we have competent teachers." Ladies, would we have succeeded if we had waited to secure temperance education for the children until our teachers were prepared to teach scientific temperance to children? Never. We secure the law and then throw the weight of our influence in securing competent teachers. Now we want such a law.

Dr. Seaver, of Yale, has said: "The state may not be called upon to furnish medical advice for the children of the country, but so long as the state takes upon itself the right to control the bodies of our children for five or six hours of each day the state is bound to see that no physical harm comes to them."

We are to-day realizing that the solution of this great temperance question must be based upon physical as well as temperance education.

Mrs. F. H. Rastall reported her department, temperance literature, which we regret cannot be given publication here, as the manuscript is missing.

Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer, National superintendent of school savings banks, said:

The school savings bank is becoming a valued and recognized educational factor in the United States. Whatever the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union does to spread its establishment fills a double purpose; while decreasing the tendency to intemperance, pauperism and crime, it wins favor for the organization, thus opening avenues for other lines of work. In this age of broad, economic thought, we see with clearer vision into a more harmonious future. We plan wisely when we forward movements which touch the whole people, which rid out the discordant elements, and, without trampling on the corns of prejudice, elevate and clarify moral ideals.

Only last year the department was taken up independently by the National. (Though the year previous it had the privilege of the juvenile department, and Mrs. Rice mothered it very kindly.)

We have state superintendents of the work in Maine, Missouri, Wisconsin, Nevada, Idaho and North Dakota. The hundreds of letters replied to on this subject during the past year were from bankers, school authorities, business people and W. C. T. U. women. From Pennsylvania, my own state, where half the school savings banks in operation in the United States are, I have had more than double the applications for information sent by any other state, and triple the number of school savings banks have been started in Pennsylvania.

The American Academy of Political and Social Science have published and given wide circulation to a paper read for them by your superintendent in Philadelphia, May 13th, 1892. This has perhaps increased already aroused thought on the subject, being extensively noticed at home and abroad.

I have answered three hundred letters of inquiry as to how to institute school savings banks in the United States during the past year and sent as many gifts of literature, independent of those sent officially to state presidents, secretaries and superintendents.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of National and World's movement to secure temperance education in public schools, reported that: This department has secured legislation making the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics in connection with the laws of hygiene and relative physiology a compulsory study for all pupils in all schools in 36 states and in all territories of the United States, including the District of Columbia, our military and naval academies and Indian and colored schools.

There are more than 12,000,000 children in the United States under these laws. Mississippi is the last new state won during the past year. Of the eight states without this legislation, we have high hopes of winning New Jersey this year, and three or four other states south of the Potomac.

But when the law requiring study is enacted and its text-books are ready, only a beginning is made. . . .

We have a directory of every school district in the United States and over against it the name of the local superintendent of this department, where there is one, and where there is not we are searching to find one who will work and watch for the best enforcement of these laws in the schools under her care. Literature showing just how to proceed at every step is prepared and sent out by the National superintendent. Over 25,000 personal letters, postals and packages of literature have gone out to them this year.

A bureau of instruction for the training of teachers is already started. The first volume of normal studies for these is now passing through the press. Besides that there is a monthly circular of advices, containing topical outlines of study, the scientific authorities in support of total abstinence teaching, etc. The National superintendent and others are presenting the topic and methods of teachings to teachers' institutes in all parts of the country.

The great increase in the number of local superintendents shows that our workers are coming to realize that the masses of to-morrow can only be reached through the schools. New Jersey, New York, Illinois, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Dakota all report a considerable increase. Among the states reporting gains in the adoption of text books, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New York, Missouri and Illinois lead. Massachusetts has kept two paid agents in the field; one for the W. C. T. U. to get new local superintendents, the other sent by the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, to labor with school boards; both with good results. The Society of Friends in Philadelphia employed one expert with school boards, Mrs. Ella B. Green, to canvass that state and school directors in the interest of changing the imperfect text-books for the revised and for the adoption of a regular course of study in this branch, with splendid results. We may confidently expect one hundred total abstainers as the result of every dollar expended for the cause of scientific temperance instruction in our public schools.

The devotional hour having arrived, Lady Henry Somerset gave a helpful Bible exposition from the text, Matt. 5 : 47, after which Mrs. Frances J. Barnes offered prayer. A collection was then taken up for the white-ribboners of Newfoundland who have lately suffered from a great conflagration; it amounted to $50.06. Telegrams of greeting were read from Gen. John Bidwell, Prohibition candidate for President; Dr. Chas. G. Davis, of the National Temperance Hospital; the Canadian W. C. T. U.; Kings county, N. Y., and Phoenix, Arizona unions. A delegate from the Prohibition party of Colorado was then introduced and after singing, "Gently, Lord, O Gently Lead Us," the Convention adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

MONDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

The delegates were filing to their places as Mrs. Buell, who was in the chair, called the Convention to order.

Mrs. Rice led in prayer. The secretary was requested to send letters of greeting and affectionate remembrance to our round-the world missionaries, Miss Jessie Ackerman, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, Dr. Kate Bushnell, and Miss Alice Palmer, on motion of Mrs. Benjamin. Other motions to thank the Californian Illustrated Magazine for its present of one hundred copies to the Convention, and in appreciation of the faithful services of the young women pages were unanimously passed. The introduction of an old Crusader, Mrs. Hopkins and her husband, was followed by the singing of the Crusade hymn, "Give to the winds thy fears." At the request of Mrs. Ellis, another old Crusader, all the original Crusaders were asked to rise. Thirty-seven were present. A circular letter, thanking railroad officials and employés for safe carriage to Denver, was ordered sent, on motion of Miss Jennie Smith, who, with Miss Mollie Hay, formed the committee to prepare the letter.

The regular order of business for the afternoon was now taken up: The reports of the National evangelistic department which answers the question, What is each of the departments grouped under the head of evangelistic doing to save the masses, and what progress has been made during the year?

First in order was Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, National superintendent, who called attention to her annual report of twenty pages, and impressed the importance of the noontide hour of prayer, saying:

Our organization was born under a great uplift of the Spirit. The inclination of all organizations is to get away from this devotional spirit, and I claim that unless we put it right in an important part of the day, like eleven o'clock in the morning, when with one consent we all turn towards God, it will be nothing but a misnomer and a burlesque, as it has become in all the other great religious bodies. I want it also because of the L. T. L's, because of our Y's, because of the public school children who are being educated. I want these young people to realize that this great Woman's Christian Temperance Union is first of all spiritual, and our devotion is not a mere introduction to the business meeting, but is part of our great work, when we are all together and in an orderly way turn to worship God.

Another reason that I want to give you is because there is nothing that succeeds like success, and this report, with its twenty pages, represents the spirit of ten thousand local unions, and every letter coming from thirteen states and the territories, as well as letters from forty nations outside of this country says: "Since we introduced the 11 o'clock devotional hour in our convention we have a deepening of spirituality all over our states, our conferences are more harmonious; the friction is removed, our machinery is oiled and our delegates go home feeling that they have received more help than they used to receive from the conventions which they attended." This report contains the reports of our eight National evangelists, and our dear Mrs. Henry sends her report from her sick room, with love and greeting, and asks that you pray for her in her long continued illness.

Then we have also Dean Wright's report. He has sent to us his resignation. . . . . These pages also show, ladies, that there has been a most remarkable enthusiasm in the evangelistic work all through this country during the last year. Every one of these thirty two letters says: "We have held more gospel meetings, and more meetings among the masses, than ever before." Every one of them also says: "We have never distributed as much temperance literature as we have during the last year."

I hope you will consider deeply the facts of this report, and I now move that this be made a standing rule, "That our devotional hour, under the auspices of the evangelistic department, shall be conducted daily from eleven to twelve o'clock, except on the first morning of the Convention, when a brief service shall immediately follow the president's annual address; that the executive committee be requested to define how this hour may be most helpfully spent."

Miss Greenwood also offered a motion thanking Dean Wright for his services and showing an appreciation of the wisdom and self-sacrifice with which he has conducted the W. C. T. U. course of Bible studies.

Both of these motions were carried.

Mrs. R. A. Esmond's report of the department of unfermented wine was read by Mrs. Rice:

The work of this department this year has been more in waste places and on untilled ground than in bringing in the sheaves and gathering up the harvest from well cultivated fields. The "Macedonian Cry" has come to your superintendent from towns, counties and districts never heard from before, and in which no systematic work had ever been done. . . . According to reports given this year, about two-thirds of the churches in our country are using unfermented wine at communion service. The thought may come to some minds, that if two-thirds of the churches have put away alcoholic wine from the table of their Lord, they will have a strong influence in convincing the other third; therefore, the work of this department, as far as the churches are concerned, must be nearly completed. Those who make their estimate after this formula are "reckoning without their host." This one-third are men of iron wills, minds set like flints, prejudices deep and firmly rooted, opinions like the "laws of the Medes and Persians," that changeth not. . . . . Of the leading orthodox denominations, not one as a whole uses unfermented wine at communion service. The Methodist Episcopal church has temperance as a fundamental principle in its creed, and exacts abstinence from alcoholic drinks in its discipline, and yet, there is scarcely a northern state in which there are not to be found M. E. churches using alcoholic wine at sacrament, and a large majority of the M. E. churches South still use it.

The Episcopal church, like every large, conservative body, requires a great amount of lever power to disturb it, but when once started, it makes no retrograde motions. In nearly every state there are Episcopal churches using the unfermented wine at holy communion, and but one Bishop has been reported as opposing it. Others reported as saying that as soon as a pleasant, pure wine could be procured they would recommend it to their people. In some of the western states Episcopal clergymen have spoken in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union conventions, and, in many instances, have thanked the ladies for the stand they have taken upon the sacramental wine question and have promised their coöperation.

There is no denomination in which there has been more time and effort expended and from which so much evidence and corroborative testimony and statistical proof has been required as that of the Presbyterian. At the same time no stronger resolutions have been passed favoring the use of unfermented wine than has been passed by this church in its collective bodies. The fact is that under the pressure of members and the influence of enthusiastic, stirring speeches, men are moved to indorse measures that, when they have again come into their individual responsibilities, they have failed to put into practice.

The Baptist denomination, though conservative and tenacious of its opinions, has not proven as persistent in its opposition, and with but very few exceptions, not severe and personal in its criticisms.

The recipe sent out to all of the states for making unfermented wine has received great favor, and many churches are preparing their own wine. The expounders of Sabbath school lessons, who taught that Christ made intoxicating wine to be drank at a marriage feast, have quite dropped out from our religious papers. A new Sabbath school catechism, by Julia Colman, in which unfermented wine at the sacrament occupies a number of pages, is being introduced into many churches. A Sabbath school lesson leaf, containing questions and answers upon the wine of the Passover Supper, was extensively used in the Sabbath schools. Thus the subject is being brought directly to the teachers and to the knowledge of the children.

The reports were adopted. A beautiful solo entitled, "The Gate of Heaven," was rendered by Mrs. Stanton.

Mrs. Jane M. Kinney, National superintendent of penal work, was next called upon, and responded as follows:

Immediately after my appointment to this office, after the Convention in Boston, I intended to reach every state and territory in the Union and find how many superintendents of penal work, that is, of prison and jail work, there were, and if there were none appointed in the states and territories, to have one appointed for each jail. In this I was greatly assisted by Mrs. J. K. Barney and Mrs. Peets. They both kindly furnished their directories and I have had reports from thirty three states. A great deal of work is done by securing preaching and literature in the prisons and jails. In most of our northern states a chaplain is provided, so that it is not so incumbent upon us to provide that department in the North, although some of them are without chaplains. Still we find many abuses in our state prisons in our states and all the territories where the convicts' camps are situated. We find prisons without women matrons, and men have gained access to the rooms of these women that are not protected by a matron, and we hope that any woman who will go to a state prison, and find it without a matron will go before the meeting of the next legislature, and that such an appointment will be made. You will find men, women and children upon the same corridors, and, wherever this is to be found, the jail is not a reformatory and cannot be in any sense of the word, but will be a school for vice, and you can imagine criminal men and women all huddled together in one small corner, perhaps twelve by fifteen feet, the cell doors entirely open on one small hall, and you can easily tell the result. Now, if you think these things do not exist, go home and visit the jails and see. I found it in my own county once, years ago, when I first became interested in this work. When I wrote and asked the editors of the newspapers myself in regard to this, they entirely refused to publish the article which I had requested, because it would necessitate the building of a new jail. I am very glad we have some place to go when we have this state of affairs. We can go at once to the State Board of Charities, who will look into the matter and remedy it. I prepared and sent out wherever there was a state president, a blank, asking a great many questions as to the plan and work. It will show the women just what we thought we needed done—visiting jails, distributing literature, gathering a library in the jails, where none exists, and having gospel service held at least once a week.

I send a good many copies of THE UNION SIGNAL to some of the jails, and it is one of the most useful papers you could put into the hands of criminal men; men who have not had their trial or who are already condemned to the service in the jail or in the state's prisons.

Mrs. S. A. Morrison, superintendent of the department of charitable work, reported: This department seeks to establish in every almshouse in the land, good library reading, regular Sabbath services and Christian watch-care, carrying the gospel of hope to the outcast.

There are many reasons why the W. C. T. U. should give special prominence and individual support to this work. This department stands and pleads for thousands of God's poor, royal children of the King of Kings, lifting to us helpless hands. Of course, it is largely the result of legalized liquor traffic. We have been encouraged by some Christian men in this noble work. The year has been one of effort, and we have reason to believe of good results also. Last year only nine unions reported work; this year we have more than doubled, as the work has appeared to grow very rapidly. I have received from Maine an interesting report. There is a growing interest in Vermont. Pennsylvania shows a lively interest; Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love, does not belie its name. South Carolina reports one meeting every week at Charleston. Virginia tells us of much interest and effort in behalf of the poor; visits and religious services. Texas has sent out circulars calling attention to the great need of almshouse work. Michigan shows great growth during the past year. The almshouses are well cared for, and the doors are open to our workers. Many have regular Sabbath services and visitation by the clergymen and W. C. T. U. women. Reports from Georgia, New York and Maryland say these states are all doing well. Many cheering words come from the southern sisters, with plans for the coming year; while others report no work and no superintendent.

The report was unanimously adopted, and Mrs. Margaret Anderson Watts next reported for the National department of police matrons:

Articles have been written and publication granted in some of the leading newspapers and magazines, calling attention to the importance of this work. The Louisville Courier-Journal, the Nashville Banner, Lend A Hand, and THE UNION SIGNAL and Woman's Journal, have published articles. At the meeting of the Federation of Woman's Clubs, a letter was addressed to the corresponding secretary of all clubs represented, calling the attention of the women to this department. Early in January, 1892, circulars were prepared, addressed to the presidents of all the states and territories, asking to have the prison and jail work separate from the police station work, by appointing a state superintendent of police station and matron work.

On a separate sheet was printed "An outline of application to be presented to municipal authorities, making it mandatory to appoint police matrons." And suggestions were given just how to go about it. On a third sheet was pictured an ideal matron, who, by her loving, discreet, patient, spiritual-mindedness can draw the hearts of women and children to higher aspirations.

Wishing to reach the largest number, these circulars were placed in the Kellogg W. C. T. U. building at Chautauqua, N. Y., for distribution, and also at other assemblies, where attention was called to them. A large number of letters have been received during the year and not one has been unanswered.

Following this report and its adoption, "Nearer, My God, to Thee" was sung.

Mrs. Margaret T. W. Merrill's report on securing homes for homeless children was presented by Mrs. Stevens; the following is a résumé:

Six states have taken hold of the work, eight speak hopefully and hope to take it up very soon, and eight have declined to appoint superintendents.

Returning to the educational departments, the report on the school of methods in the absence of Miss Mary Allen West, was made by Miss Lodie Reed, of Indiana, who said in part:

The Christian religion was inaugurated by a wonderful benediction, when ignorant fishermen spake with tongues of the Lord, and marvelous results followed their works. But when it came to establishing the new system of religion in the countries round about, carrying it into Macedonia, convincing the debaters on Mars Hill regarding righteousness and temperance to come, it took more than the spirituality of John, more than the earnest boldness of Peter—it took the keen culture, the methodical brain of a Saul of Tarsus.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union had its pentecostal in the Woman's Crusade, and we are all familiar with the wonders of those days, how the women spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and what marvelous results followed. But to establish such a system of Christian work, wide as the world, varied as humanity's needs, requires more than the spirituality and the earnestness of the Crusade. It requires the keenest judgment, the most careful planning, that the work may be advanced in the best way. It needs a St. Paul, and the school of methods is the St. Paul among the departments. . . . I have reports from twenty three states. Four of these report that no special work which can be classed under this department has been done. All of them report work in connection with the county conventions, that this idea is engrafted upon their county and district conventions, and some work only in that way, while others add special schools.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, National superintendent of parliamentary usage, instead of giving a report, answered a number of questions which had been sent her, in an interesting and clearly concise way. These will be given in THE UNION SIGNAL of a later date.

Mrs. H. B. Kells, National press superintendent, read her report which condensed is as follows:

I am not going to talk of the value of the press department, for every woman who uses both hemispheres of her brain at once knows it without waste of breath: but I would like to suggest that a proper self respect should incline every unit of the organization, not only to desire but to demand a place in the daily press for W. C. T. U. current history equal to that granted to politics, to science, to religion, to society and to other philanthropies and reforms. The world is apt to accept you at your own valuation, if a fictitious value is not set.

During my eight months of work I have sent out 350 circular letters to state and county superintendents outlining a plan of work for the department and 200 report blanks; one half of these in March, the other in September, and I found it a paying investment to send these blanks for a reply at close of the first quarter of the year, because they suggest to the superintendents definite currents which they should follow and prevent desultory efforts. I have sent 5,400 pages of press notes in the form of a weekly bulletin of fresh temperance news for the use of the local superintendents who, with few exceptions, have reported them as valuable for their work.

In response I have received the reports from twenty-nine state press superintendents stating there are published in these twenty-nine states, twenty-three papers owned and edited by the W. C. T. U. Beside are reported eighty-two out-and-out Prohibition papers which offer every privilege to white-ribboners; also 366 papers that yield a column controlled and regularly edited by the W. C. T. U., and 193 others that give space whenever requested for notices. In addition Mrs. Edholm, the World's superintendent of press work, has sent out during the year 250 columns of matter to over 700 newspapers in the United States.

The above figures do not by any means represent the total of service by the press in the states reported. Illinois, for instance, is one of them, and publishes a greater number of temperance and prohibition papers than any other state, unless it be New York, but not one of its papers is included in above numbers. Its earnest-hearted superintendent—a most efficient worker—has all the year been beside the couch of suffering and watching one loved one after the other enter within the vail. But 664 papers in about half our area, systematically and with malice aforethought scattering our principles and works, is not by any means a pitiful showing, and means about one-tenth of the American newspapers in our service and a large section of redemption brought into human life.

Besides these four great press associations, the Associated, the City, the United and the Patent Insides have regularly received and sent out our current news all over America and to Canada and London.

Almost all the states heard from report an increase in number of local and district press superintendents and a growing willingness of editors to publish our news, and an encouraging friendliness toward the W. C. T. U. and our principles. Many say it is not the unwilling editor with whom we wrestle but the incompetent, near sighted or unaroused women. The editors, in the main, are willing enough to have our items and articles, if written in such form that they can be used without rewriting. Carelessly prepared articles sent to an editor are a reflection upon the average capacity of the W. C. T. U. or an indiscreet disrespect toward the person of whom a favor is asked. Editors often ask for our news and one of the most hopeful indications is that the large dailies all over the country want it and give it fairer presentation than formerly.

The general verdict of press superintendents is that there is no difference between Republican and Democratic papers in their attitude toward us; but a good many have written that editors often say, "Just wait till this election is over and I'll give you all the space you want," and the greater part refuse any reference to political prohibition.

About the first of October I sent an official letter to two hundred editors-in-chief of papers with a circulation over 5,000 in every state and territory, in which I took for granted their friendliness to all forms of human regeneration and invited them to this Convention. Some of them have acknowledged the courtesy in their columns and have sent reporters here, and the general managers of the Associated press and United press—to whom I also sent a similar letter in the East, at Chicago, and in Denver, have requested full reports, which are going from this Convention even to London—twice a day—for evening and morning dailies.

The summary of the press department is that 1892 has so far great gains to record—even though this be what is called an off year—election year.

Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, of St. Louis, National superintendent of narcotics, said:

The principal work of this department the past year has been to petition Congress for a law forbidding the manufacture of cigarettes; this effort has met with a hearty response everywhere; more than 25,000 names were sent to Congress, and thousands of letters written.

When these petitions were presented by the various congressmen there was quite an interesting debate as to which committee they belonged. It was finally decided that the petition should go to the committee on epidemic diseases. I am very glad Congress has classed the cigarette with dangerous diseases. The bill is slumbering with this committee. We will wake it up this winter, and the question will probably be referred to the states. I hope every state will petition its legislature to pass this law forbidding the manufacture of cigarettes. . . .

Two efforts have been made to increase the license on tobacco, one in Kentucky, which was passed and repealed, and one in Congress. By many people this seems the only way to suppress the cigarette; to this, however, the W. C. T. U. will not lend a hand. Thirty-five states and the District of Columbia have laws forbidding the sale of tobacco or cigarettes to minors. Other states will petition their legislatures this winter.

From every state comes cheering messages of increased interest and better work being done. From nearly every superintendent comes the answer, "Yes, I will." We have seen great increase of interest in this branch of the work.

All superintendents are studying the question and many are acting. One county superintendent in New York addressed the druggists' association and urged them to formulate a bill governing the sale of opium and present it to the next legislature. This will probably be done. A man addicted to the opium habit will present a bill to the legislature of his state asking that a law be passed forbidding the practice by physicians of hypodermically using opium. Women who have become slaves to the opium habit have been placed under medical care, and this disease, which is one of the hardest to treat, is being cured. I wish more of our lecturers would prepare addresses on this very important subject, and warn women of the dangerous drugs that they are constantly using. The paregoric, the different bromides, the chewing gum and many others.

I am amazed at the advance the South has made in this department. It was almost impossible to get an entering wedge, but now they have secured a law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors under eighteen years of age. The Southern States that have secured anti tobacco laws are Maryland, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi and Kentucky, that great tobacco state.

Many religious bodies have been memorialized and have passed strong resolutions condemning the use of tobacco. . . . . A number of district and county W. C. T. U. conventions have passed the following resolution: "We will not aid in the support of a pastor who uses tobacco in any form."

A number of telegrams were read, after which the Convention sang the doxology and adjourned.

MONDAY EVENING

was occupied with two notable sessions—the diamond Demorest contest and the overflow suffrage meeting. Mrs. Virginia Hedges, state superintendent of suffrage for Missouri, presided at the latter, opening the meeting with prayer and hymn and the reading of part of the first chapter of Joshua, which she called the suffrage commission.

Mrs. S. F. Grubb, of Kansas, was the first speaker. She began by saying: You see before you a woman who has voted, and just as quietly as I have dropped a letter into the post-office. Sometimes it was in the company of my husband, sometimes alone. The stock argument against the ballot is, that women will lose their influence if they vote. Notwithstanding Dr. Buckley thinks we would lose our influence, I don't see but that we might just as well lose it as not. Her influence does not amount to anything in the church compared to the great loss the church sustains by woman's spiritual power having no expression in her councils or her life.

Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, the second speaker, was received with a round of applause, and spoke of the educative power of the law to arouse woman to a proper sense of her enslavement.

Miss Ada Ripley, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in Nebraska, demonstrated why women should have the power to help establish in the state the conditions under which she must live and rear her children. The state needs fatherhood and motherhood.

Mrs. Mary McGee Snell narrated some of the disabilities under which women have their being in Mississippi.

Dr. Anna Shaw and Miss Frances Griffin added their brilliant wit and oratorical powers to the success of the evening which scored many a telling hit for the cause of political equality.

The Demorest diamond medal contest was held the same evening in Trinity church and was one of the most enjoyable events of the session. Every seat in the generous auditorium was filled and standing room was at a premium. There were eleven contestants for the prize, representing ten states. The judges decided in favor of Miss Margaret Fitz Gibbon Badger, of Atlanta, Ga., who it seemed had traveled all alone from her distant home to enter the contest.

TUESDAY MORNING.

Despite the stormy weather, a large audience was present when the Convention met at 9 o'clock, Miss Willard presiding. In conducting the devotional exercises, Mrs. E. A. Hill, of Florida, read the 2d chapter of Tim., and the hymn, "A Charge to Keep I Have," was sung.

The first of the session was given to the discussion of matters of minor importance. The following resolution was offered and unanimously passed by a rising vote:

"Resolved, That the tender sympathy of this Convention be extended to Mrs. S. F. Grubb, president of Kansas W. C. T. U., whose son, Arthur Grubb, lost his life in an attempt to investigate an opium den in the interests of our work."

After the reading of some telegrams from various parts of the country, the Convention proceeded to the important duty of the election of officers for the ensuing year. By request Lady Henry Somerset took the chair, while all joined in singing, "Blest be the tie that binds," after which Mrs. Anna Hammer, of Pennsylvania, led in prayer. Another hymn, "Guide me, oh, Thou Great Jehovah," was sung, and the chair appointed two sets of tellers. All persons who did not belong to the delegates were requested to retire to other seats, and the sergeant-at-arms was sent to bring in all the members of the Convention.

